NOTE.

Where evidence has been given with the intention of rebutting, explaining, or supplementing any statement previously made before the Commission, a reference to the Question at which the original statement was made has been inserted in the margin, and where such rebutting, explanatory, or supplementary evidence has been given prior to the final publication of the original statement, a cross reference to the former has also, so far as possible, been inserted in the margin opposite to such original statement.

D. LLEUFER THOMAS,
Secretary.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

The Town Hall, Llangefni, Anglesey, Tuesday, 10th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LLD.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. JOHN MORETON PRICHARD called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

18,525. Do you live at Gors, Holyhead?—Yes.

18,526. Are you a county magistrate?—Yes.

18,527. And a barrister-at-law?—Yes.

18,528. And a farmer of 100 acres of your own freehold?—Yes.

18,529. You wish to give evidence. Will you please proceed to do so?—Would you prefer me to make a statement, or answer your questions?

18,530. Kindly make a statement?—I think I had better say that it is not exactly because I am a barrister-at-law, or a magistrate, that I thought I was able to give the Commission any information which would be of value to them, but because I have been a bank manager in this county for nearly 20 years, and as such probably have had better opportunities than many people to get to know the exact position of farmers, whether they save money or lose it, whether they have to pay high rents or low rents, and whether they have good or bad landlords. I think it well I should say what has induced me to come forward and give evidence, because I am directly interested in the matter only as a small farmer and not as a tenant. I had not the slightest idea of coming here until a fortnight ago, when I read Mr. Bryn Roberts's evidence in the newspaper, and I thought that the tendency of his evidence was calculated to have such disastrous results on the interests of farmers in this county that it was my duty to come and say what I thought was the true and real state of things. He stated, I think, (the Commissioners will have it fresh in their memories) that it would be a remarkably good thing if it could be managed—he did not know how it could be—that the landlords we at present had, and who were chiefly Conservatives and Churchmen, could by any means be changed so that we should have more Nonconformists and Liberals, who would be more in touch with the feelings of the community—that they would make better landlords, and we should be likely to get on better with them. My idea is, and I am quite sure that it is a correct one, and there is no farmer in this room who does not believe that it is correct—my idea is that that would be one of the most disastrous things that could possibly happen to our country.

See 13,240 6.

18,531. What would be disastrous?—That there should be that change which Mr. Bryn Roberts suggested, that some of the Conservatives and Churchmen should be somehow replaced by Nonconformists and Liberals, who would be of the same opinion politically and religiously as their tenants. And the point in my evidence which would bear upon that is this, whether now, when this state of things exists, rents are high or low in Anglesey—have we good or bad landlords? In order to place the matter definitely and in order before the Commission, perhaps they will permit me to divide the landlords of the county, because there is a very strongly defined line of demarcation between them. Everybody knows it. We will call them Class A. and Class B. Class A. are, I believe, Conservatives and Churchmen and Churchwomen, almost all. I do not know of any exception, and they consist of about 15 or 20, not more I think. They own at least three-fourths of this county. I might as well name here those who are the most prominent among them, the Marquis of Anglesey, Lord Stanley of Alderley, Sir Geo. Meyrick, Lord Boston, Sir Richard Bulkeley, and Mr. Frederick Wynne. I should like to mention that they number up to 15 or 20, but I need not trouble perhaps to give more names. Class B. will consist of 200 to 300, not a very few, as Mr. Bryn Roberts said. Of course they are comparatively small owners, but there are 200 to 300 of them, as many as 5 or 10 in some parishes, and they are Nonconformists and Liberals almost all.

Mr. Grove.

18,532. Of course you are speaking of this county purely now?—This county.

Lord Kenyon.

18,533. Do you mean to say that those are landowners in the sense of having tenants?—

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Having tenants. I am now going to make a strong statement, and I will make it cum grano salis, as mildly as I can, but I do not make it without being able to confirm it by facts which I will mention of course. The distinguishing feature of these classes is that Class A. charges a little more than half the rent that Class B. charges. You may take it as a fact that Class B. charges 75 per cent. more rent than Class A., and I am putting it mildly there. Class B. are the Nonconformists and Liberals who Mr. Bryn Roberts wishes to be substituted for the Conservatives and Churchmen. The best proof of this is that whenever it happens that Class A. sell, and unfortunately Class A. are selling very frequently now, they usually sell to Class B., because Class A. do not buy but very seldom now, and Class B. immediately raise the rents. I do not give opinions and inferences, which can be of course of no value to the Commissioners, but these are facts. When Class B. sell and Class A. buy, which very seldom happens now, and which used to happen very frequently, Class A. always reduce the rent. You may take that as a rule. Therefore, if I can give any illustrations and facts to confirm that opinion it appears to me it would be a disastrous thing to get rid of the present landowners, or make the position so uncomfortable and unpleasant for them that they would be selling as Sir Richard Bulkeley has been selling, which is very likely what the witnesses who have been before the Commissioners, and who bemoan what has been taking place, have really been aiming at. We are anxious that the farmers should not be disturbed in their farms, and that the landlords should not be induced to do what would be disastrous to this county, namely, to sell. I think there is not a farmer here to-day who would not say it would cause positive consternation if the announcement was made to-morrow that Sir George Meyrick and Lord Stanley of Alderley had taken what has been said by Mr. Bryn Roberts to heart, and, understanding they were a nuisance to the county, intended to sell their farms. I am not going to bring before you facts that are 25, or 30, or 40 years old. I thought the Welsh race were rather religiously inclined, but I gather from Mr. Bryn Roberts's evidence and Mr. Thomas Ellis's evidence that they are an unforgiving and spiteful race, and that supposed injuries inflicted on their ancestors by men now in their graves still rankle in the minds of our farmers. I have not come across instances of that kind. I think they are rather of a forgiving turn of mind, but apparently those gentlemen think otherwise. I will give you two or three facts in connexion—first of all, with Sir George Meyrick's estate. I do not know so much about it as I do about some of the others, but we will take it first as I happen to have it here. I mention one farm in the parish of Aberffraw. I have the name here, but perhaps it will answer your purpose that I should say I am prepared to give it if required. We may as well leave it at present perhaps, but if the name is wanted by anyone it shall be given.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

There is a farm there surrounded by farms of Sir George Meyrick—Bodfeirig, Bit, Clafdy, Tynrallt, Henllys-fawr, and Penhenllys—all round. So far as my inquiries have elicited, the rent of those farms is about 18*s.* an acre. There is a Class B farm in the middle between them, a class of land necessarily the same, though possibly better farmed. It is very often the case when land is let at a higher rental that it is better farmed. The rent of that farm is 3*l.* an acre. This farm is in the middle of Sir George Meyrick's farms, which are let at 18*s.* an acre. I do not find any fault with the person who lets it at 3*l.* an acre. See 18,589 -95, 22,293.

Mr. Grove.

18,534. What is the acreage of it?—I do not know the acreage, but it is a large farm; it is let in fields or possibly otherwise, but it matters nothing how it is let. Those are the figures; it is let at the highest market value.

Lord Kenyon.

18,535. That is the average rent?—That is the average rent. I do not find the slightest fault with the person who lets it. She is a widow and has to live on the proceeds, and I do not know myself why, when she can get 3*l.* an acre, she should advertise for people to give 2*l.* It would be rather an unbusinesslike proceeding I should think to do so.

18,536. You are prepared to mention that farm if you were asked for it?—Oh, yes, I will give the name. There is another instance on Sir George Meyrick's estate I should like to mention. It is a farm that belonged until recently to a Wesleyan (I am a Wesleyan myself; I am not a Churchman), and he let this farm at a rental which amounted, putting a valuation on the house in which he lived himself, to 100*l.* a year. He lived upon it. He was a cripple and required a man to attend him and required a good deal of attention and nourishment, and he got as much as ever he could from the farm. I do not know of any reason why he should not. He got 100*l.* a year and lived upon it. He died and the farm was sold. It was bought by Sir George Meyrick, and the rent was immediately reduced, practically, —I cannot give you it to a sovereign, but I have it from the tenant himself—to 45*l.* a year. See 18,596.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,537. Was there any land attached to that house?—Yes, it was a farm and a house. The man lived in the house, and the house would be worth about 10*l.* a year perhaps.

Lord Kenyon.

18,538. What was the size of the farm?—About 35 to 40 acres, or about that. Then I will mention another instance in the Aberffraw parish. I am authorised to mention it by Mr. Richards, the rector, who is to-day selling off his stock. He has a small farm; he is going to let it. That farm is surrounded by Sir George Meyrick's land on all sides, and therefore it is necessarily of the same quality, although small farms are constantly farmed better, and consequently get into better tilth. The rent all around is 18*s*. That is the average. Some will be 15*s*. or 17*s*., or perhaps 1*l*. But Mr. Richards was telling me only yesterday that he hardly knew what to do; he had four, five, or six applicants for the land, and they were all offering from 3*l*. to 5*l*. an acre. I was not able to tell him myself what I thought the best, but I suppose the proper thing would be for him to advertise for somebody who would pay 18*s*.

See 18,598. Then I will give you some instances on the estate of Lord Stanley, of Alderley. I know a little more about that because a great part of it is in our immediate neighbourhood. There is a farm in Aberffraw parish called Tynlon, belonging to Lord Stanley of Alderley (in this neighbourhood we have just been talking about) which is let at 16*s*. an acre, as near as I can find out. The person who got the farm for the last tenant when it went vacant told me that he had several tenants wanting him to intercede with Lord Stanley for it, and there was not one among them who would not have given double if it had been required.

See 18,747. Then I will mention Captain King's estate, Presaddfed, near Bodedern. It is a considerable estate, and came into the Stanley family (the Honourable W. O. Stanley) about ten years ago, roughly speaking. It was known as an extremely under-rented estate; it was among the Class A. estates, lower than any of them, and Captain King's idea appeared to be (I lived in the neighbourhood at the time) to live as economically as he could and to charge as little rent as possible, and to make as many improvements as he could. He got very old and died, and there was great lamentation when it was understood that he was seriously ill, and not likely to survive. I remember asking one or two of the tenants at the time, "Well, I suppose when "he dies you expect your rent to be raised; "I understand Mr. Stanley is going to have it"; it was understood in the neighbourhood then that it was bequeathed to Mr. Stanley. They said, "Well, we expect it to be raised a little, "but Mr. Stanley's rents are not high." They said, "It is sure to be raised; it will not be left like it is." I will not say anything more about that, except that it has not been raised by the Hon. W. O. Stanley or Lord Stanley of Alderley since, and I do not think if it had been 3*d*. an acre instead of what it was, that they would have raised it.

Then I wanted to allude to a number of matters that have come before the Commission which struck me especially when I was reading the evidence. I mention them because I find there are suggestions that landlords about 25 or 30 years ago were a very dreadful class of people, that apparently they were like a species of hawk, always watching for the tenant making improvements, and immediately raising the rent. I am going to give you an instance of what landlords were in our neighbourhood about 25 or 30 years ago. The Honourable W. O. Stanley told his agent that, as the rent had not been raised for about 30 years, and it was now a very prosperous time with farmers—as it was about 25 years ago—he thought he had better appoint a proper valuer, which he did, so that he might go around the farms and see if there was any unevenness, and, if necessary, make a slight rise. Necessarily in the course of some 30 or 40 years some farms depreciate and some improve.

On this estate at the time there were about nine or ten farms on which great improvements had been made.

18,539. Which estate is this?—It is the Penrhos estate, near Holyhead, the estate of the predecessor of Lord Stanley of Alderley.

18,540. Was he the uncle of Lord Stanley of Alderley?—Yes, the uncle of Lord Stanley. There were seven, eight, or nine of the tenants who had made great improvements, and the other tenants had made none. There was a little crowing over the tenants who had made the improvements when this valuer began to go round; the time had come now when they would be properly punished for putting their money on another man's land, and they were in considerable trouble about it. The valuer went round and he fixed what he thought were the proper values, and he came to these farms; they were considerably improved, and no doubt his valuation would show an enhanced rent even more than on the other farms. Then the valuation was brought to Mr. Stanley, and Mr. Elliott, his agent, asked him what was to be done. He said he thought the rises were very reasonable only 3*l*., 4*l*., or 5*l*., or something of that kind, and they had better be adhered to except the seven, eight, or nine farms. He said, "Have "not these men been improving the farms?"—he had a good memory about anything relating to the estate—"Yes," said Mr. Elliott, "they have made a great outlay on them." "So I thought," he said, and mentioned them by name. He said, "I tell you what I will do with those; they "shall not be raised one penny;" and those farms have been left to the present day without a farthing rise. In order that the Commissioners may appreciate that, when Mr. Stanley died he had a worthy successor; the same thing is done to-day; one of these farms became vacant not long ago, Gorswen; the person who had made the improvements died; he was about 85 years old, and he left no children. The farm came on Lord Stanley's hands without an applicant of any kind for it. One would think if there should be any rise, this was a very proper opportunity for it. The farm is accommodation land close to the town. I applied for it myself as it adjoined some land of my own. I would certainly have given 2*l*. 10*s*. or 2*l*. 15*s*. an acre, but I did not say so, as I knew that was not the proper way to get it. Everybody expected it to be raised. However, to be brief, it was let to a tenant selected by Lord

Stanley, and it was not raised one farthing, and is the same still.

See 18,602, 18,633. Then I have an instance upon Sir Richard's estate which I heard from a tenant a short time ago, and no doubt it could be confirmed, although it is hearsay so far as it goes. The person who was immediately concerned told me, and he ought to have known. A farm became vacant on Sir Richard's estate not many years ago, six, seven, or perhaps eight years ago, which had been let at 18*s.* an acre, and it was a good farm in a convenient position. There were 45 applicants for it, and as the tenancy terminated in another six or nine months, applications began to come in. There was no claim of any kind by any relative. An old widower lived there, and he left nobody behind. A good deal of time elapsed, during which an applicant called upon Sir Richard, and went to Baron Hill as he thought he would go to the fountain head—and he asked to see Sir Richard. He saw him; he told him he had come about such and such a farm—of course I can give the name of the farm if necessary—and he told him that he understood the rent was only 18*s.* an acre and that he would give him 30*s.* an acre. He was a very substantial man and had the money, and could farm as well probably as any tenant Sir Richard had on his estate. Sir Richard sent for his agent and asked him whether he had told anybody that he was going to let the farm by auction. The agent said he had not. He said, "Give it to such a person, "this man has come to ask for it. The rent of "18*s.* an acre is too much; reduce it to 17*s.*"

See 18,809, 20,559. Then I think we may have another instance illustrating what is the position of affairs on Sir Richard's estate, which unfortunately has been sold to a great extent, and some say in consequence of the agitation that is going on. There was a farm sold the other day with 20 acres taken off it, and immediately it was sold to a Class B. landlord the rent was raised 70*l.* There was another farm sold, 60 acres were taken off it, and it reached such a high figure that the interest which the new owner has to pay (and I was informed he had to pay the interest) is really 48*l.* higher than the rent that he paid for the farm when it was 60 acres larger.

18,541. What was the size of that farm; do you know?—That farm was about 260 acres, it is 200 acres now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,542. Was that farm bought by the sitting tenant?—Yes; it was bought by the sitting tenant. The other was bought by a Class B landlord, as I have called them. Then I may mention incidentally that a small place which was let by Sir Richard for 20*l.* was sold for 840*l.* I point that out as showing how very disastrous to agricultural interests it is for these gentlemen to sell.

18,543. That was bought by the sitting tenant?—That small place was bought by the sitting tenant. Then the next estate I have anything to say about is the estate of Mr. Frederick Wynne, a successor of Lord Newborough. I saw in the evidence given before the Commission the name of a person, Henry Jones, "Prince Arthur," Clynnog. He told the Commission that the rents of Mr. Frederick Wynne were perhaps formerly rather low, "but "they are high enough now," he said. I thought it very necessary that the Commission should know what is the position of things on Mr. Frederick Wynne's estate. There is one farm which is characteristic of every farm he has on this island; they can all be mentioned, and are all illustrative; there is not one exception. The particular farm I am thinking of now is a farm of 170 acres, and the rent of it is 20*l.* less than the rating. You are aware, gentlemen, that the rating is usually about 30 per cent. less than the rent. See 12,778.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,544. It depends upon the different Unions?—In that particular parish the rating is about 30 per cent. less than the rent—from 20 to 30 per cent.

Mr. Grove.

18,545. Was the rent 20*l.* less than the rating, or 20 per cent. less?—20*l.* less than the rating. The farm was 170 acres. Then a good deal was said about the improvements made. I will give the Commission some illustrations of the improvements on Mr. Frederick Wynne's estate, and how they are carried on. Going back 20 years ago, there were four farms which were very rough farms and unimproved, about 150 acres each, making a total acreage of about 600 acres, close to each other, and were let for 30*l.* each, 120*l.* in all. The late Lord Newborough took them in hand, drained them, walled them, built comfortable houses and buildings on them, and did everything a tenant could wish for, and paid 12,000*l.* for the outlay. They cost him 12,000*l.*, and when the improvements were finished his agent came to him to ask what the rents would be, naturally assuming that there was to be some compensation for this outlay, as the farms are totally different in every respect now. Lord Newborough said he did not see how the tenants could pay more rent He did not charge a farthing more, with the result that Mr. Frederick Wynne is now receiving 1 per cent. on the 12,000*l.* as rent for that land, and is giving the farms to the tenants.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,546. Do I understand that the rent has now been raised?—No, it has not been raised at all.

18,547. How can it pay 1 per cent. on the 12,000*l.* outlay?—The rent is 120*l.* a year. Mr. Frederick Wynne is now receiving 1 per cent. on the 12,000*l.*, that is 120*l.* a year, and he is giving the farm for nothing.

18,548. It is not 1 per cent. more?—No, the rent is the same still; it is 120*l.* a year.

Mr. Richard Jones.

It is another way of calculating it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,549. Yes, it is another way of calculating it. I understand your point?—That is it exactly. I may state simply that you can find 15 or 20 farms where the same state of things exists which I am describing now. No percentage is paid at present upon the outlay of the late Lord Newborough, the improvements being given for nothing.

Mr. Grove.

18,550. Where did Henry Jones give his evidence?—At Carnarvon, I believe. That is all I have to say about rents. There is one question which has come before you prominently, and that is the question whether a Land Court would be a good thing. Of course, we are in a great difficulty here to know in the first place what a Land Court is, and what it would try to do. The supposition is that they will endeavour to find a fair rent for the farms. Then in law we do not know of any fair value except market value, and if a Land Court came here to find a fair value, all they would arrive at would be the real market value. I suppose the intention would be that they should find some depreciated market value, something less than the market value. I want to endeavour to show the Commission what would be the effect of taking, say, the standard of the Class A. landlords as a basis for the valuers of the Land Court to proceed upon. The supposition is, I presume, with regard to the tenants of these Class A. landlords, that they would have some reduction if a Land Court came, but if they had any reduction it would be absolutely ruinous to the Class B. landlords. I do not myself see where it should come from. I will give you an instance. Sir George Meyrick has a tenant of 220 acres who pays 180*l.* Those are approximate figures; the acreage may be a little more, and the rent a little more, but they are correct practically. He pays 180*l.* for 220 acres. That tenant has a farm of his own (he is a Class B. landlord himself) in the same district, but it is much poorer land, I am informed on the best authority, than the farm he rents from Sir George. That farm is 86 acres, the rent of it is 150*l.*, so that Sir George charges him 16*s.* 6*d.* per acre, and he charges 1*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* per acre approximately. Now the question which arises with regard to a Land Court is, which of those two standards are they to take. There are a very large number of these Class B. landlords in the island, 200 to 300, and I am afraid it would create a very great row indeed if the Land Court thought of reducing that 1*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* to 16*s.* 6*d.*; in fact, it would be very difficult, as they are all Liberals, and I suppose many of them agitators. If the Land Court would not take that standard, but would put anything higher than Class A. figures, it would be most disastrous to Class A. tenants. Three-fourths of the county is let at those rents by Class A. Class B. only holds one quarter, and if the Land Court took any mean figure between them, it is quite evident that it would do irreparable mischief here, and that the Class A. landlords would get a very good thing by it, although the Class B. landlords would still fare very badly. This is why I fail to see that any positive benefit can arise from a Land Court, because of the position of the rents at present. Then I should like to point out the other class which would be affected besides the Class A. landlord and his tenants. There is the Class B. landlord; take one who charges 1*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* per acre; he will not have any mortgage on his farm, being a man well off, and the only thing a Land Court would do would be to impoverish him a little, and I suppose that for a rich man to be impoverished in order that a poorer man may get the difference, is not a very great sin nowadays. This would be the effect upon that class of man. But then with regard to the larger number of Class B. landlords, their lands are heavily mortgaged, and if you reduced their rents to the standard of Class A. you would ruin them utterly. I suppose that the Commission, above all things, would wish to avoid ruining what we call the yeoman class of farmers, and as the Commission will know, and as I, having a little financial knowledge and experience, can say, the fact that many of these had no tenants but had the land on their hand would no affect the question much. If a mortgagee found that the valuation of the land in that neighbourhood was such that it would not cover his interest he would immediately foreclose, and these people would be ruined. Many of these people are those who are agitating for this Commission; of course, they are doing it ignorantly, because they are urged by others who have no land to lose. I will give an instance:—a farm was sold the other day, it was sold for 2,000*l.*, the rent was 52*l.* and it was a farm belonging to a Class A. landlord. You may say it cost 2,050*l.* with what he paid for his deeds and mortgages and all. I saw this man paying his deposit. There were two of them, and I should think they were going partners for the farm, and had scraped together all their savings, from what I could gather, for a generation almost. They had them there paying 200*l.* deposit down. Of course it goes without saying that if a Land Court comes that 200*l.* is no more; that is non est—there is no doubt about that—it is gone. Those poor people are ruined, and I will show you how. They are going to get a mortgage of 1,200*l.*, which is their first mortgage; that will cost them 48*l.* to begin with. Then they get a second mortgage of 600*l.* at 5 per cent., the first one being at 4 per cent., which costs them 30*l.*; there is 78*l.*, and they will have their own capital of 250*l.* in it. This is the way in which scores of farms have recently been bought and paid for. They will have their own capital of 250*l.* in it, which, at 5 per cent., would require 12*l.* 10*s.*; there is a rent of 90*l.* 10*s.* When this Land Court send their valuers into the neighbourhood, suppose they fix the value of similar farms around there at 52*l.*, which was the rent of this farm before; if they take the standard of Class A., what will be the result? Of course the first mortgagee will at once foreclose; he will see that there is no margin whatever, and he will sell the place; the second mortgagee will immediately foreclose on the stock, and the man is ruined; and, as far as I can see, such will be the effect of a Land Court upon that class—upon Class B., and Class B. only,—that nobody can benefit by a Land Court, except the Class A. landlords, and why they should be against it, I really do not know. I think they would be very much more comfortable and much more at peace if they had one. I ought to mention, before leaving this subject of the Land Court, an item which escaped my attention. A good deal has been said about Land Courts in Ireland, and no doubt Anglesey farmers, as a body, know nothing whatever about it. I had an impression, when Mr. Gladstone passed his Act at first in Ireland, that there was a great deal of nonsense in the grievances we heard of, and very little reality. I went to County Wicklow some years afterwards, now five or six years ago, to buy a few cows for my farm, and I went to two or three farms there, and thinking I would find out some of these hollow Irish grievances I began to inquire, and found I was very much mistaken. I asked one farmer what he paid for his land. It was land that Class A. would let in such a district, a remote country district near a small village there,—land that would be let for, say 1*l.* an acre, putting it at the highest figure. The village was about the size of Aberffraw, or a very little smaller, and Sir George Mayrick lets his land round there at 18*s.* I asked this man how much he paid, and he said, "5*l.* an acre, "but there is Widow So-and-So close by me, "and she is much worse off than I am, she has "to pay 6*l.*" That rather astonished me, and I said, "Why do you not go to the Land Court?" He said, "That would not make a "very great reduction, and the law charges "would be very great, so that we have decided "it is better to leave it alone and have nothing "to do with it." Gentlemen, that is all I have to say about a Land Court.

is already very strongly against it. He finds that the effect of fixity of tenure, say upon a farm like one of Sir George Meyrick's, is that you have two landlords. You have Class A. and Class B., and as Class B. is very likely in many cases to be an improvident man and to get into the hands of money-lenders, the land in Ireland now has not only a landlord like the Duke of Devonshire as representing Class A. landlords, but has also a tenant who is overhead and ears in debt. The money-lender considers he has a 1,500*l.* or 2,000*l.* interest in that farm, and he can no more be shaken off than the old man of the sea. I notice that it has been said that in the case of fixity of tenure there would be some provision that there should not be two rents like that—that nobody should charge a second rent. But that would not improve matters in the least. If I wanted to have a farm of that kind, say I was farming with a small capital of something like an ordinary farmers, not only I would have to deal with a landlord, but if the tenant should not let me his interest, if he was prevented from letting it at say 10*s.* or 15*s.* an acre, I would have to pay a sum down of 1,500*l.* I would have to borrow that very likely from money-lenders, or someone of that class. It would be a great deal better than the tenants having two landlords in that way, however disastrous that was; than to prevent them having it, and to compel the man owning the tenant's interest to demand the whole amount in one sum before a new tenant should go on the farm.

Then there is the subject, which has been brought before the Commission, whether it is not desirable that there should be compensation for improvements, even when they are made without the consent of the landlord. I do not suppose that a provision of that kind would affect these wealthy men to any material extent. If there was any dispute they could go to law, and pay for it, but the effect would be very disastrous indeed upon the small landlords. We will take the case of a widow who has a farm (and we could find numbers of that class in our county) heavily mortgaged; she lets that farm, say of 150 acres at a rent sufficient to clear the mortgage interest, and she gets 60*l.* or 70*l.* a year herself. She gets as much as she can for it, and she has 60*l.* or 70*l.* a year to live on. Then a wealthy butcher comes along and he knows of this new Act which has been passed whereby he can make improvements in defiance of every contract and agreement, and afterwards claim compensation for them. The widow lets him the farm and tells him plainly that he is not to do anything to it, that she cannot afford to pay for any improvements; she then has an agreement drawn up with everything signed properly, and he says, "All right," and he goes into the farm without any lease. He is certain of the farm for that two years, and during that two years he drains it, and pulls down a nice little house, puts another big one up, makes a lot of improvements, walls it, and at the end of the two years he refuses to pay his rent. The supposition, I presume, is that the improvements could only be demanded when an eviction became imminent. This man refuses to pay his rent at the end of the second year, and he says he wants money for his improvements. Of course he cannot claim that if he stops on the farm, but he will not pay any rent, and the widow can do nothing except evict him, and if she evicts him she must pay for all these improvements. I do not understand that, gentlemen; it is beyond me entirely.

Then the question of labourers' cottages arises It has been mentioned several times. I know something of this, and perhaps own as many cottages as anybody in the county. I see Mr. Thomas Ellis, M.P., estimates the cost of a labourer's cottage at about 100*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

See 16,943 –7.

18,551. I do not think he stated any figures?—I think 60*l.* was mentioned to him by somebody.

18,552. He said 60*l.* was no doubt too low?—That was suggested to him, and he thought 100*l.* would be nearer it.

18,553. I do not understand that any figure was mentioned by him?—60*l.* was mentioned to him. Some members of the Commission said: Would not that do," and he thought 100*l.* would be more like it. No doubt labourers' cottages are very desirable, and it is extremely desirable that they should be built in convenient places. As has been mentioned, it should not be necessary for labourers to go to the villages—to go some distance from their farms in order to find cottages. But the agitation that is going on, and the evidence of Mr. Thomas Ellis and others will tend to prevent people who, like myself, do build cottages, from having anything to do with cottages. A person of the name of Colonel Evans Lloyd, I see, has been held up to execration. I do not know him at all. It appears he did not mend the dilapidations of some cottages, and he let a farm of 2 or 3 acres. As I understood from the evidence he let the land and the cottage for a figure which he could get for the land alone; and his argument, which appears to be thought a very wrong one, was that if the woman did not like it she had better leave it. He gave her a cottage for nothing, and he did not see why he should repair it. Of course it would be a very nice thing to order Colonel Evans Lloyd, and everyone like him, to hand over money for the benefit of the poor widow, but the result of that would be that we would have no cottages. That is the immediate reason why cottages have been demolished in scores through the country—because it is supposed that the farmer is to have the rent of the cottages, and the landlord is to repair them. I will give you an instance also that bears upon that, in order to show that this agitation against the Class A. landlords for not repairing these dilapidations, is not based upon equity. I have a four-room cottage with a good back kitchen behind, and a long garden, and I charge 1*s.* 6*d.* a week for it.

It could not have been built for anything to be let at that figure; the poor man who built it lost a lot of money over it, and sold it cheap, so it is let at 1*s.* 6*d.*, and I repair it. The next door to that cottage is owned by a Class A. landlord, and he lets that cottage at 1*s.* I would rather that he should charge 1*s.* 6*d.*, as it is rather awkward he should let next door at 1*s.* But his arrangement is this, that they should repair; there is no agreement to that effect, but that is the understanding. They get the cottage for a cheaper figure, and they must keep it in repair. It cost me perhaps 3*d.* a week, taken on the average, to keep my cottage in repair, so that I get 1*s.* 3*d.* net afterwards. The other landlord gets 1*s.*, and I do not think it an unfair arrangement that his tenant should repair. If a tenant like that old woman down in Merionethshire allowed her cottage to get into a dilapidated state, when there was an understanding that she should keep it in repair——

Professor Rhŷs.

18,554. I do not think you have got that evidence properly before you, so that you need not make any remarks on that evidence?—If I am wrong it is open to correction.

Professor Rhŷs.

I do not recollect its being said that the landlord was not to receive full rent, or that the tenant was supposed to repair at all.

Lord Kenyon.

See 16,790 –1.

See 13,121 –58.

that he would have to send shepherds to pick out his sheep, which would practically be impossible; but that when he had the mountain enclosed he had only to send dogs: the shepherd went up to the mountain to send the dogs, and the dogs collected all the sheep, so that the enclosure was evidently necessary. I made a rough calculation then what the enclosure would come to. I found that there must be one wall of about 1,000 rods there, and that it must cost 7*s.* 6*d.* a rod, and thus the whole cost came to 375*l.* The tenant was only charged 12*l.* a year for the entire mountain.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,557. Is your rod what they call a "rwd" in Welsh?—Eight yards. They call it a "rwd" in Welsh. Of course I estimated it at 7*s.* 6*d.* from my own experience of walling. Shortly afterwards I was in the neighbourhood of Dolgelley and I went round the Precipice Walk, and came across some men repairing a wall on the mountain there. I found then that these walls are situated in places where it was impossible to take a cart to, and these men had, even for a wall five feet high, to raise a very risky sort of a scaffold. I should think that altogether 15*s.* a rod would be much nearer the cost. I remember it because it struck me at the time as a very strange thing—this idiosyncrasy on the part of landlords, enclosing mountains when they could get no possible return for them.

Then I wish to refer to two or three enclosures in Anglesey, and what I have to say on this closes my evidence. There is one enclosure of perhaps 40 or 50 acres which I remember 20 or 25 years ago was waste entirely. There were a few half-starved animals wandering over it, and there were some stagnant pools. It seemed to be heavy, clayey land and sour grass, and it has all been sold in the course of the last 25 years. It was sold by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to the various landlords round about, I think, and all enclosed. There are now, I should think, about 15 or 20 small cottages with a field or two attached to them, and it looks one of the most fertile spots in our country, almost.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,558. Do I understand that that improvement was made by the Woods and Forests?—The Woods and Forests sold the land.

18,559. Did they improve it?—No, the landlords improved it. They sold it to them.

Lord Kenyon.

18,560. Where is that?—That is near Bryn Siencyn. Then there are two wastes we have here now. One is called Towyn Llyn and the other is Towyn Trewan, and are very well known to everyone who knows Anglesey. Towyn Llyn was sold about 20 years ago. It was wild ground with nothing but rushes apparently growing over it, but a few animals used to wander over it, and I suppose it was used as common. It was sold by the supposed owners for some trifle, and the purchaser immediately commenced to build a hotel on it. Before he had finished the hotel, a number of young men, who no doubt were patriots and took a great interest in public affairs, and in the state of the neighbourhood, went there and pulled it down, or pulled down a good deal of it, and unfortunately they were very severely punished—perhaps punished more severely than they need have been. In any case, the hotel was built again. What I was about to mention was, that instead of the enclosure bringing any damage to the public, that hotel has been the means of bringing probably, speaking roughly, a great number of thousands of pounds to that neighbourhood, and the farmers around have in great measure got the benefit of it. It is due to the building of that hotel in a very great measure that Rhosneigir, where now hundreds of visitors come every year, exists at all. No one thought of going to Rhosneigir, until that hotel was built. Then there is the other waste, Towyn Trewan. That is rather an interesting case, and with this I conclude what I have to say to the Commissioners. Towyn Trewan consists of about 700 to 800 acres. It had been a common, and had a few half-starved sheep wandering over it during the year. You would see from the train in going past a number of their corpses during the winter. The grass there is sour; there is very little of it; perhaps as the place is unfenced, many farmers send too many sheep there, but in any case the pasture is very short and scarce. Some years ago Captain Thomas, of Amlwch, bought the whole of this from the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. I believe he gave about 800*l.* for it, which I am informed (I am not very well up about these matters) went somehow into the public purse. He built a house on it at once, and began to enclose; he enclosed a garden. The parishes about, considering that they had a right of common there (and they had, I suppose) at once, or in a short time, went to law with him, the matter came before the Courts, and the result was a compromise. The two sides spent about 2,000*l.* over it; Captain Thomas told me that himself. The compromise was this, that 180 acres or thereabouts, a strip across the middle of this common should be given to Captain Thomas without any dispute, and that the other two strips, one on each side, should be left alone. I suppose we may take it that those two strips now will be left alone. They cost Captain Thomas so much for meddling with them that nobody is ever likely to meddle with them again. The result of it is very apparent, that strip through the middle is beginning to be cultivated at once, and it is not unlikely that in the course of 30 or 50 years we shall see a strip of green through the middle—that strip of 180 acres—and two arid wastes on either side. That is all I have to say, gentlemen.

See 19,369.

See 18,684, 27,728, 27,742.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,561. Did you mention the passage in Mr. Bryn Roberts's evidence which you came to rebut?—Yes, I gave rebutting evidence about it.

18,562. Have you got the passage which you came to rebut?—I have not got the passage with me. but I think it was the cardinal point of his evidence; it was a sort of peroration at the end.

18,563. I have it here before me?—Well, it is sure to be correct; it was in the paper. He said that a change in the class of landlord was desirable; that it would be well if there were fewer Conservative and Churchmen landlords, who were not in touch with the feelings of the tenants; and if landiords who were Nonconformists and Liberal, and whose sentiments tallied with those of the tenants, were more numerous.

18,564. I understood him to have said that they did differ in politics and religion, and it was a misfortune that in language they very often differed also?—I believe Lord Kenyon replied to it. There was a remark of yours, my Lord, in answer to it. You asked whether that was not compensated for when Nonconformists, took farms

Lord Kenyon.

18,565. I asked this at question 13,244: "Do "they balance it in Anglesey by appointing "Nonconformists in preference to Churchmen," and his answer was: "I do not think so "in the least myself, because I think there "are rarely to be found any farmers who are "Churchmen, except very few, except some "of recent years become so for considerations "which are well known"?—Yes, that is the evidence.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,566. You spoke of Sir George Meyrick's estate, and of some other land which was similar, I suppose, in character. I have noticed as I came along that the land varies very much; you may find land worth a certain number of shillings in one place, and at a very short distance you will find land worth as many pounds. I think I noticed that, as I came along, but those farms you speak of are surely similar, are they not?—No, I gave you an instance of a farm that was poorer.

18,567. But before you came to that?—Well, there is not the slightest reason for thinking that the farm is in any way different; but it is a very possible thing that it may be let some time now as pasture. When people let their farms they very often lay them down in grass, and they will not allow a tenant to do many things that Sir George Meyrick does allow, and the result of that strict condition of things is that the land does improve, no doubt. They are not allowed, for instance, to carry hay away, and that, no doubt, will result in the improvement of the land ultimately.

18,568. You have been a bank manager for a good many years. Will you kindly give us what you consider the general state of the tenantry of this district. Are they in a prosperous position at present?—I should say so.

18,569. You think they are?—Yes. If I told you what was the total amount of deposits, roughly, in the banks of this island you would be very much astonished. There is no doubt they fluctuate, and they sometimes go down, and they greatly go down now to lend money on mortgages on these farms that have been purchased; but it is a very small district, and the total amount is a figure that would surprise everybody in this room.

18,570. Why do you suppose that tenants are induced to buy these farms? Do you think they are worse off, and we have had that repeatedly stated. Why should they be induced to buy farms at a loss in this way?—We can only assume that they know their own business, and that it is not a loss. No person who is gifted with ordinary reason will, with his eyes open, buy a farm at a rate which will cost him 30*s.* an acre, when he has been farming for 30 or 40 years, and can judge whether he can make money or not.

18,571. But we find repeatedly that men do buy farms, although they pay so much for them?—Continually, and you will find that those farms improve more than the others do. The fact that they pay a high rent apparently does no harm. The Commissioners have an opportunity of inquiring into the matter. You will find that the high-rented farms in the island improve, on the average, more than the low-rented farms.

18,572. You have had a great deal of experience in building cottages; we should like to have the benefit of your experience. What do you consider a cottage might be built for, where stones are available?—It depends on what you require. I think 60*l.* would put up cottages that would do very nicely for farm labourers.

18,573. Cottages suitable for farm labourers?—I should say so; I should think 60*l.* The Commissioners have had before them a great many figures of improvements. I will give you an instance. I know a tenant here that left a farm two or three years ago; he told me personally that his improvements on that farm were from 1,000*l.* to 1,200*l.*, and he expected to get that money. Valuers were taken there, and an umpire, and everything was done fairly, and it was found that the tenant had only 300*l.* when everything was added up. The figures you have had concerning improvements, and the cost of building cottages, no doubt are exaggerations in a very great measure.

18,574. How many rooms could you have in a cottage built for 60*l.*?—Of course it would not be an ornamental cottage. You would have a kitchen and a back room.

18,575. How many bedrooms?—Two bedrooms at the side. You could only have it on one floor. You could not have two floors if the cottage stood by itself. The evil about these cottages is, that it is assumed that no return is to be obtained for them. No doubt if the landlord built them they would cost 100*l.* every farthing; he would never be able to build them at less than 100*l.* Now if you take 100*l.* for the building, and say 25*l.* only for the land, there is 125*l.*, and if that landlord charged 5 per cent. (and that would be very little, seeing that he would have to pay for dilapidations), it would be 6*l.* 5*s.* a year; and if he charged 6*l.* 5*s.* for a cottage of course he would be execrated.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,576. Do you farm your own land?—Yes, I farm my own land.

18,577. What is the nature of the farming that you pursue on your own land?—I chiefly do dairy farming on mine; it is only a small farm.

18,578. 100 acres, I think you said?—110, I think; about that altogether.

18,579. You say you graze it?—I graze it.

18,580. You do not cultivate any of it?—I do not cultivate any of it now.

18,581. Have you been doing so?—Very little. It is very little I have ever cultivated. I do not profess to know very much about agriculture, though I have been farming for about 20 years.

18,582. What caused you to change your style of cultivation?—I never have cultivated.

18,583. I think you said you have been cultivating, but that you are now grazing?—Oh, I will tell you. No doubt it is because grazing is better; there is no question about that. It was less trouble to me. My farm is, so to speak, at arm's length; it is about 15 or 20 miles away; and it would not do to have many servants there ploughing and that kind of thing when I was at a distance. That is why I graze the farm instead.

18,584. But do you know sufficient about farming to know that all land is not suitable for grazing purposes?—No doubt that is the fact. There is no question about that. Nobody can deny that there is a great difference in the quality of land. I will give you an instance. I bought a part of my farm only two or three years ago. I had four acres of it, of extremely poor land. The first year I had it, it yielded nothing at all, except some sour grass, and the previous holder told me that he had never had anything from it either. I considered that it was no use farming in that way—I must get something from it, and I put down half a ton per acre of basic slag, and about two cwt. per acre of sulphate of ammonia. That was last spring, and I have had the biggest crop of hay on it this year that I have ever had, I think, on any land. So that I think that bad land is often to be improved, at any rate, that was. It looks extremely well now, and that was only with one season.

18,585. Could you supply the Commission with a financial statement of your farming affairs?—Well, I should not like to do it, on this account—that my farming is very profitable indeed. I do not think it would be fair.

18,586. Is it out of consideration to the tenants that you do not present a financial statement?—Well, I do not think it would be fair to farmers in general to suggest that they should make per acre as much as I make. My farm is only a small farm, and I can provide the capital, I have a very large stock. If a farmer of 300 acres had a stock comparable to mine according to the size of the farm, no doubt it would be very profitable. I do not think it would be a fair comparison.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

11,587. Have you been growing cabbage on your farm?—No. What I mean is this. I have, for instance, a small farm of 35 acres at Holyhead. I only carry it on as a dairy farm, quite a small affair; there is nothing artificial about it at all. If I told you that 35 acres cleared after all expenses, and without my troubling myself about it at all, 150*l.* a year, it would hardly be fair, would it? It would hardly be a fair estimate. You could hardly calculate other lands in the county upon that footing. That is why I do not mention it. See 18,768, 20,556.

18,588. But I thought you said you farmed 100 acres. What do you say as to the 100 acres?—This is just a farm that I have at home. The other is a good distance away.

18,589. I think the Commissioners should know these instances that you refer to. Probably we may not know anything about them, but there are others in the room who would like to know these particular farms that you refer to. There is one farm Aberffraw, which is let at 3*l.* an acre, whereas the surrounding farms of Sir George Meyrick are only let at 18*s.* an acre. What farm is that?—I will pass up the name to you. See 18,533–5.

18,590. Have you any objection to mention it in public?—Well, I have none, but I do not think it would answer any purpose.

18,591. Will you kindly mention it?—I think it is objectionable. It is of no moment to me, but I do not know what object it could answer. I will pass up the name.

18,593. I think it is in the interests of the Commission that these names should be announced; we are no respecters of persons, of course?—I do not see what benefit can arise from announcing them, but it may be of some benefit to the Commission to know them, and I am willing that you should know them, and of course it rests with you to put them in your report if you think proper.

Mr. Grove.

18,594. Should not the evidence that you give be open to the criticism of the people in the county who happen to know the facts of the case?—If the Chairman thinks so.

Lord Kenyon.

18,595. I think it will be more satisfactory?—Then I will give the name. Henllyswen is the name of the farm.

Mr. Richard Jones.

See 18,536. 18,596. Then you mentioned another farm that was let at 100*l.*?—That is Bodrwy Golwyn. I think the Commissioners will allow me to say that when facts of this kind are brought to qualify statements which have been made to them—many statements that have been recorded in the evidence before the Commission are as to things that occurred 25, 30, and 35 years ago concerning people who are dead, and statements that cannot be confirmed—I think there is possibly a diffidence in bringing forward the names of people who live to-day. I am showing you that rents are high with a certain class. I do not think it is quite called for, but I am quite willing to submit to the ruling of the Chairman to give the names, and I will give them every one.

18,597. Then let us have that one?—Bodrwy golwyn.

18,598. You mentioned a farm of Lord Stanley's which was let at 16*s.* an acre, and the tenant left, and when he left many would have given double for it?—That is Tynlon.

18,599. If that farm was so cheap what made the tenant leave?—I did not say he left; he might have died for all I know. I merely said the farm was vacant. The farm was on hand—it wanted re-letting.

18,600. You do not know the circumstances under which it was re-let?—The circumstances under which it went vacant?

18,601. Yes?—I do not know the circumstances under which it went vacant; perhaps the tenant died; perhaps he went to a larger farm. In many cases farms get vacant, do they not?

See 18,540, 18,777. 18,602. What was the name of this farm on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate which went vacant seven years ago, was let at 18*s.* an acre, for which there were 45 applicants, and which Sir Richard told his agent to let at 1*s.* an acre cheaper, saying that it was too dear. What is the name of that farm?—Cleifiog fawr. There is another farm that I have mentioned there which, with due respect to the Chairman, I should like to object to name. I told you of one farm that Sir George Meyrick owned, where the tenant paid 16*s.* 6*d.* and he had a farm in the neighbourhood that he let himself at 1*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* an acre—a poorer farm. Well, Sir George Meyrick's agent is here. I do not think it is fair to mention that tenant. I most respectfully protest against it.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

18,603. Of course you can withhold any names you please, but I must point out that it makes your evidence much more valuable where you can give names?—Oh, yes, and I will very gladly give these names to the Commissioners; but what possible good can result from mentioning them publicly?

Lord Kenyon.

The Commissioners think it is not right to accept private information. We think everything should be heard in public as much as possible.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,604. To whose evidence were you referring when you said it was suggested that the tenant should carry out any improvements he liked without having the consent of the landlord?—I was not referring to any case, but to the proposal which has come before the Commission and which has been recommended by the journals.

18,605. From whom did that proposal come?—Well, we see it in the papers every week—that the only effectual remedy for what is said to be the state of things is that the tenants should be able to make improvements without consent and despite any agreement, and that they should be able to demand compensation for them without having had consent to make them.

18,606. But we are not supposed to know anything of proposals that are made in the newspapers; we have only to do with evidence that is given before the Commission?—Exactly, and I have seen it mentioned three or four times before the Commission.

18,607. The only instance I remember is the instance of Mr. Humphreys, of Aberkin, but I do not think he succeeded in making out his case? See 10,486.—Mr. Humphreys of Aberkin did not suggest that there should be compensation where improvements were made without consent; I think it was only in other cases.

Lord Kenyon.

He advised the enlargement of that schedule in which the consent of the landlord is not required.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,608. His argument was this; that no one knew better than the tenant farmer what were the improvements necessary for properly cultivating the farm, and that therefore he should have full liberty to make whatever improvements he liked. I suppose you are acquainted with the first schedule in the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have read it, yes.

18,609. That is inserted as a sort of check upon the tenant carrying out expensive improvements on his own responsibility without having the consent of the landlord—improvements which may not add to the permanent value of the farm?—That is the position at present is it not?

18,610. Yes?—Yes, I understand that.

18,611. Of course I take it that you are in favour of the schedule being carried out in its integrity—that the consent of the landlord should be required for carrying out first-class improvements?—It seems to me absolutely necessary. It will become impossible for small landlords to let their farms otherwise. They will keep them in hand. In a case where a man owned two farms and had not much means to spare—had no money in the bank to spare to pay for these improvements if they were made, he would have to turn out the tenant and take the two farms himself or else he might be ruined by the tenant. It would not affect Sir George Meyrick and Sir Richard Bulkeley and wealthy men like them; no doubt they would get an umpire and get arbitrators, and everything would go on very satisfactorily and they could pay.

18,612. As far as I am personally concerned I quite agree with you, but I think the case which you referred to is rather an extreme one?—Which case?

18,613. The case where a man would go in the course of two years and pull down a house and erect a new house and that sort of thing?—We have houses erected on Sir George Meyrick's estate with parlours that the tenants have never gone into and never put a rag of furniture into. That I think is an unnecessary improvement.

18,614. Erected by the tenants?—By the tenants, yes, and Sir George Meyrick will have to allow for those improvements.

18,615. I should like you to name to me any house of that kind; will you?—No, I object.

18,616. I think it would be a great benefit if you would?—No, I should not like to do that When I have been in a farmhouse to get a cup of tea I should not like to name the tenant here, and say that he has no furniture in his parlour. But I am sure that the Commissioners if they go round the county will find instances. They will find when they knock at the front door, that the lock is rusty, and that they cannot get in there but have to go round another way. The house as well as the buildings are larger than are required.

18,617. If you do not mention it I am afraid the public will take it as a random statement on your part?—I am only making it in answer to what you say. I did not make it as a statement; only in reply to what you said.

18,618. Do you say that you know of instances on Sir George Meyrick's estate where houses have been erected by large farmers?—Where the houses are larger than are required, and that the tenants never use some portions.

18,619. Then I ask you what are the names of those places?—Well, I object to give the names, and I am sure it will be evident to you that there is good reason for the objection.

18,620. I think it would strengthen your case very much if you did mention them?—But I did not put them in my statement. You asked me: "Is it a fact that improvements are "made—is it likely that improvements would "be made—to a greater extent than is ab-"solutely necessary." I say yes, they are made.

18,621. Well, it does not matter whether it was in your statement or not. Of course, your statements vivâ voce, we take it, should be at any rate as straight as those that you have put down in your written statement?—Of course, if it suits you not to take my statement unless I name the place, that is a matter within your discretion, is it not?

18,622. Could you tell the Commissioners over how long a period the cottages have been falling into ruin in Anglesey?—I have been in Anglesey for 30 years, and the cottages, I think, have been growing fewer continually. Suppose there is a farm with three or four cottages upon them (thatched cottages, very likely; as they were formerly), the farmer gets these cottages himself; he pays nothing for them, except that they are included in his rent, and he lets them to his hinds, or if they do not want them, to somebody else. The farmer does not repair them; in these instances, I mean where they have been demolished—the farmer does not repair them, and they get dilapidated and then the tenant leaves—nobody will repair them, and they go into decay because I suppose the return is not sufficient to pay for repairing them. And what I was endeavouring to show the Commission was that if they recommend that the return upon these cottages shall be so small that it is not remunerative to the builders, the result is a foregone conclusion. Everything comes to its logical issue, and that issue is that the cottages will not be built. It is very easy to bully people that own cottages and make them uncomfortable, but it only results in cottages not being built and cottages becoming scarce and rents becoming higher.

18,623. I suppose you in common with everybody else would deplore the depopulation of the country districts?—Yes. There was one thing that I wanted to say which had escaped my memory, and I would like to mention it here. It has been stated that labourers now rather congregate into the villages, and that is to a great extent the result of course of the dilapidation of these cottages and the non-building of others; but one great reason of it is the utter absence of anywhere for labourers to spend their evenings. There is a movement at present, which I do not want directly to find fault with, for doing away with the licenses of public-houses in country places. The farmers who have parlours of their own and every convenience and comfort are against there being public-houses for labourers to go and drink and get drunk, as they say. Well, I am a temperance man myself, and no doubt such habits are objectionable; but I think it is still more objectionable to do away with these public-houses before anything else is substituted for them, and so compel the labourers either to congregate in the villages or to leave the neighbourhood altogether in order that they may go somewhere where they are not obliged to spend their evenings at the back of the hedge in the dark and in the mud. Now Lady Reade has shown an example which I should very much like to see Class A. landlords who are able to afford it, follow. She had three public-houses at Llanfaethlu, and, being a temperance reformer, she did away with two licenses. She thought that one was quite enough, and that is, I think, the policy which is followed now. She did it without appealing to us as magistrates at all. She dropped these two licenses; she wanted to see less drink in the villages. The only result of dropping these two licenses was to create more drinking. The three houses that were there before did not pay at all; you might have bought both licenses for 100*l.* each or 50*l.*, but when there was only one public-house, that house was immediately enlarged and made very comfortable and nice; three or four parlours were added, and the result is there is more business done at that one than was ever done at the three. That, I suppose, did not suit Lady Reade; she naturally did not like to see so much drinking in the neighbourhood, so, near by, she built a coffee-house, which has been a very great success. I think if the landlords would build more of those—not make an attempt at once to do away with the few places that the workmen have to sit down in, but first of all build coffee-houses, or build them some places of entertainment, where they can enjoy themselves of an evening, and afterwards petition the magistrates to do away with the licenses, that would be a good policy.

18,624. Do you think that if village halls and public libraries were erected, advantage would be taken of them by the labourers?—I understand that this coffee-house at Llanfaethlu is a very good house, and that the public-house which is close by, has been almost entirely ruined by it, which, of course, we are not sorry for. The coffee-house has had to be enlarged already. It is in a very desolate district, with a comparatively small population. I think if there was one provided at Llanfachreth and Bodedern and these places, they would prove a very great boon; especially in such a place as Trevor, where the only public-house was done away with two or three years ago. That is a large neighbourhood in Anglesey; I suppose there is not a village of any size nearer than Llangefni. It is about some five or six miles away from Llangefni. This public-house has now been closed, and what the labourers do of an evening I cannot say. It is a very large district, and I suppose 10 miles across without anywhere for a labourer to sit down.

18,626. With regard to cottages do you think the plan would be better if the landlord let the houses direct instead of letting them to the farmer and allowing him afterwards to re-let them to his men?—I have no doubt it would be better—much better for the men.

18,627. It would be better for the men?—No doubt it would. The landlord of course could give an acre or two with it and charge the men only the 1*l.* that he charged to the farmer, and it would be a very great public boon. It would be an open question afterwards to what extent these cottages would be taken, because unless you have some place of entertainment, where these men can spend their evenings—things are different now to what they were about 100 years ago, men did not want to be entertained, I suppose, then—and if they cannot have some privilege of that kind, they will go to the towns and leave the country.

18,628. Are you in favour of cottages having six or seven acres of land attached?—That is too much land. Anything beyond what they will cultivate themselves is unsatisfactory. No doubt they would be taken—a cottage with six or seven acres would be sure to be taken.

18,629. Do you think there would be a demand for such cottages?—There would be a demand for them, but I do not think such labourers would quite suit the farmers. They would be rather too independent with their work perhaps; but there would certainly be a great demand for cottages.

18,630. But could not the cottager's wife do that much work on the land?—Oh, no.

18,631. If the cottager got an occasional day, we will say, to do the bit of cultivating that was required, the wife could do the rest?—Yes. I have a man on my farm at present who is a small farmer like that—I suppose he has about 9 acres. He works for me the greater part of his time, and he is very comfortable, no doubt, and does very well with the farm. He pays a very high rent for it. It belongs to a Class B. landlord, but if he got it from a Class A. landlord at 1*l.* an acre it would be a very great boon to him.

Mr. Grove.

18,632. What rent per acre does he pay for it?—Well, he would pay a high rent. I do not know what it is. The place was bought at a very high figure. 90*l.* an acre was given for it; so there must be a high rent charged.

18,633. You gave the case of a landlord who was offered 30*s.* an acre for his farm; the previous rent was 18*s*, and he then reduced it to 17*s.*, so that the landlord was offered 30*s.*, but was content to accept 17*s.* per acre. Is that correctly stated?—Yes, I obtained that information from the tenant who got the farm, and he got his information direct from the agent.

18,634. You got your information at first hand?—I got it at first hand.

18,635. And you do not doubt the correctness of that?—I do not doubt it at all.

18,636. You put that landlord in Class A.?—Yes; he was Sir Richard Bulkeley.

18,637. I think we might put him in Class A. 1. Now, do you know that Sir Richard Bulkeley has sold many farms lately, during the last few years?—He has sold a great many, unfortunately.

18,638. Do you think it is possible that he sold those farms at higher figures because of the improvements that his tenant farmers had made on them?—Well, as a matter of fact, Sir Richard made an offer first of all to the tenants—of course what I am stating requires no confirmation, everybody in the room knows what occurred. Sir Richard first of all offered the farms to the tenants.

18,639. To the sitting tenants?—To the sitting tenants; and when they were large farms, in almost every case where the sitting tenant refused them; a very large sum, 1,000*l.* to 1,500*l.* more was obtained at the auction.

18,640. Do you know upon what basis the offer was made? Was it on the basis of a valuation for the purpose, or otherwise?—I do not know; what I do know is that a farm which I might mention, Llanllibio Groes, was bought at an astonishingly cheap figure.

Lord Kenyon.

18,641. By the tenant?—By the tenant at first hand. Whatever the improvements were, which had been made; he was certainly five times over compensated for them by the low figure at which the farm was purchased.

Mr. Grove.

18,642. You have had some experience as a banker, and have done a large business with tenant farmers, I suppose?—It was in a great measure with tenant farmers.

18,643. You speak of a great many tenant farmers having deposits; do you say that is so at the present time, or was it in years gone by?—That was in years gone by.

18,644. Do you think it pertains to the present year among farmers generally?—Yes, I am quite sure of it; but there is no question that in times of depression like the present, those deposits are prejudiced; there is no doubt about that.

18,645. But still you think there are deposits to a large extent even now?—There is no doubt about it at all; a very large sum.

18,646. Do you know of any tenant farmers who have failed in any way?—Well, they are remarkably few; I would know as well as anybody; but in the course of my experience I do not remember more than four, five, or six. No doubt it is possible, many became poor, and gave up their farms without failing. I might tell you this, that during all those years I was bank manager I lent money, of course, to tenant farmers, and never lost a farthing.

18,647. Do you suppose that the children of farmers on the smaller farms in the district help them in the farm labour?—Yes; of course they do.

18,648. And do you think unless they had that help from their own families, they would be able to pay the rents?—I am not able to answer that question satisfactorily. I should not like to make any random answer. I know very little about what you are asking now. No one can well estimate what would be the effect of the children refusing to work.

18,649. But in a great many cases I suppose it is the fact that the children of the tenant farmers do help them very considerably in enabling them to battle with the world?—But they help us all; all our children help us while they are at home, whatever they can do.

18,650. No doubt they do in a sense. Now, you have spoken about the interest on building cottages. It occurs to some of us at any rate that the interest is not so much a question of three or four per cent. on the cost of the cottage as it is of getting more labourers settled upon the land, and the general culture of the land being increased by having more labour upon it; therefore if a land owner builds cottages, surely the increased value of his property would be some sort of interest upon his money, would it not?—You see if a landlord built three or four cottages on a farm which you held, you would not allow him afterwards to dictate to you about keeping three or four more labourers. It would be quite impossible to inflict the labourers.

18,651. You say there are a good many agitators amongst Class B. What do you mean by agitators?—I do not remember saying that just in that form.

18,653. You would not go so far I suppose as one of the Carnarvon witnesses went; he said that an agitator was one who tried to make people believe that there were grievances which did not exist. You would not go so far as to say that?—Well, it is quite evident if I think that some of the grievances they mentioned do not exist, that I then believe them to be trying to persuade people that they have grievances, which do not exist.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,654. Do you hold any land at Tantwr?—I do; that is my own land.

18,655. Would you have any objection to tell us what you let it at per acre?—I do not let any.

18,656. You do not?—No.

18,657. Now with regard to the cottages you mentioned just now. 60*l.* I think you mentioned as a possible sum for which a cottage might be built. Do you happen to know anybody who does build such cottages now?—At 60*l.*

18,658. Yes?—Well, if you require us to mention every name——

18,659. I have not asked you for a name. I am asking you if you know of anybody who builds cottages for 60*l.* now?—I know of two cottages at the present moment—I passed them to-day as I drove here—that I could build at 60*l.* a-piece. They did not cost 60*l.* a-piece.

18,660. You build them, do you say?—I say I saw them, and I would build them for 60*l.* a-piece. They did not cost quite 60*l.*, I think.

18,661. That is not quite an answer to my question. Do you know as a fact of anybody who does build cottages for 60*l.* a-piece?—Of course we none of us, when we build cottages, tell anybody else the cost. I do not know what they cost them. It is impossible to say. I merely tell you that I saw two new cottages this morning that were built a short time ago that I know perfectly well I could put up for 60*l.* each. They were built by a tenant.

18,661*a.* Could you purchase all the materials and everything else for that 60*l.*?—That class of cottage, yes.

18,662. What would that cottage consist of?—Mind they are new cottages, they are both inhabited, so evidently suit the present class of tenants.

18,663. There are only two of them, are there?—There are two of them. There is another one adjoining them of the same style, and I suppose they thought there was room for two more, and they have evidently filled both of them up.

18,664. How long ago was that?—I think they were finished some time this last year.

18,665. What rooms would they contain?—I have never been inside; but I will tell you what I should suppose from the general appearance of them. There is only one floor, the ground floor; there would be, I suppose, at one side of the door two bedrooms, with a partition through the middle running the same way as the ridge-piece, and on the other side there would be a kitchen and a back kitchen—just like that.

18,666. That is what I want to know. Are such cottages being built as a rule now-a-days in Anglesey?—Oh, very few of them. I said they are extremely few; but you asked me if I knew of any. I say yes, there are those two. They are the only two I have seen built for years.

18,667. They could be built for 60*l.*?—They were I have no doubt, built for 60*l.* each.

18,668. You would not, according to that, lead one to understand that the sort of cottage that is usually demanded could be built for 60*l.* now-a-days?—It depends altogether on who is demanding. These two cottages were evidently all that those two tenants demanded—the two tenants who are in them.

18,669. Let me put it in another way. Would any respectable landlord build cottages like that now?—Yes, for 60*l.* each, as I have said.

18,670. But would he build such cottages at all?—Oh, yes, for 60*l.* each, without the least difficulty.

18,671. That is not an answer to my question. Would any respectable landlord build such cottages at all?—Well, this was a respectable man; he is a farmer of 300 acres.

18,672. I thought you said that the tenant built these?—Yes, he is a farmer of 300 acres, and he built them.

18,673. But I am asking, would any landlord build such cottages?—It is very likely that the landlord would make them nicer, ornamental, and that kind of thing; but of course he could not expect the tenant to make any return for that—if he made them a little Gothic, or anything of that sort.

18,674. Would he not give them more rooms?—I do not suppose that they would be more roomy. Some of these lodges that you have will not be a bit more roomy than those two cottages.

18,675. Well, I should be very glad to find out how a passable cottage could be built for 60*l.* One landlord who spoke on that subject, I think, did not appear so sanguine about it. Now do you know Holyhead Island very well?—Yes, I know it pretty well.

18,676. Have there been any enclosures there, so far as you know, in recent times?—I do not know of any on Holyhead Island, not in my time.

18,677. You mentioned others; for instance, there is Towyn Llyn. Do you think that Rhosneigir would not have been discovered but for the hotel that you spoke of?—Oh, we all knew Rhosneigir; there was a cottage or two there, and there were sands and rocks of course. See 18,560 22,303.

18,678. But do you say that the place would not have been developed but for the hotel?—No, I do not think so. I do not think it would have been developed as it has been if it were not for the Maelog Lake Hotel.

Professor Rhŷs.

I do not know about that, considering the number of people who are looking out for fine sea shores; I do not suppose that Rhosneigir could have escaped very long. However, that is neither here nor there.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,679. As to those cottages; would you kindly tell us whether the rural sanitary authority approved of them?—I do not know about that at all, but I should think they would.

Professor Rhŷs.

I suppose they would let you build anything.

Sir John Llewelyn

18,680. I should like to ask one or two questions. Mr. Bryn Roberts was asked, at Question 13,241, "Do not you know some Nonconformist "landlords?—Very few. (13,242.) Surely you "know some?—I should say not scarcely any "in Wales here. (13,243.) In Anglesey?—Yes, "there are in Anglesey two or three, but they "are great exceptions." Do you say that there are any Nonconformist landlords in Anglesey?—There would be from 200 to 300 whatever.

18,681. He knows the county perhaps as well as you do, although he is not Member for this county?—He is not.

18,682. You know this county, and you are able to speak?—Oh, yes, I am sure of it. You will find ten in one parish sometimes.

18,683. What do you say about sales that have been made to private individuals by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. That is, Crown land that has been sold by the Crown to private individuals?—So I assume. That is the impression we are under.

18,684. Have there been any sales to any large extent?—I only mentioned one case, that of Towyn Trewan.

18,685. You mentioned two?—Yes, I think I mentioned another. The other was only 40 to 50 acres.

18,686. Has there been much land so sold?—Those are the only two cases in Anglesey that I know of. I think Towyn Llyn belonged to somebody else. I am not sure, but it was supposed to belong to the bishop or some one, for whom he acted as trustee.

18,687. We had put in, at our last sitting at Bala, a statistical abstract of the Inland Revenue Reports, which showed the modern growth of rents in Wales. According to that, the rents had increased in Anglesey in a larger per-centage than in any other county in Wales. Have you seen those returns?—I saw it mentioned. I made a note of it in my book that the rents in Anglesey had increased 126 per cent.

18,688. 128 per cent?—128, whereas the rents in Carnarvonshire and Merionethshire had only increased 35 to 40 per cent. or something of that kind.

18,689. It was 90 per cent. in Carnarvon. I wanted to know whether you could give us any good reasons why the increase of rents had taken place in this county more than in any other county?—What I assume is the reason is this—I suppose we may depend on the truth of this return?

18,690. I do not know. I do not know what it covers?—It quite surprised me that there should be such a figure at all.

18,691. I have no doubt of the truth of the return, but I do not know exactly what it includes?—Well, the reason is quite palpable. Sir Richard Bulkeley has sold about two parishes now and the rent of those parishes would be both materially increased. No doubt the reason for this large increase of rent is the fact that Class A. landlords are selling now.

Mr. Frederick Wynne has been selling some outlying farms. Lord Boston has been selling farms, and what I am afraid of is, that we are making the landlords very uncomfortable and the farmers of Anglesey will see this rise in rent going on still in the future, because the agitators that I have alluded to—whether they are writers in newspapers or anybody else—are making the landlords think that they are really not wanted in the county, and they are gradually slipping out of it. That is the reason no doubt for this increase of rent.

18,692. I understood you to say just now that Class A. landlords if they sold, gave the first chance of buying to the sitting tenants?—Yes.

18,693. Is that so in all the instances you give of what you call Class A. landlords. You have told us of 15 or 16 landlords whom you include under Class A.?—No, that is a privilege that they extend to the tenants in some instances. Sir Richard Bulkeley has done it and I believe Lord Boston has done it, but in some instances I presume Class A. landlords put them up to auction, though the cases are few. I do not know of any, at this present moment, where the farms have been sold without the offer being first given to the tenants.

18,694. Who are the landlords who you say would give the first chance to the tenants?—I was only alluding to Sir Richard and this recent sale. He has sold a number of farms lately and in those cases he gave pre-emption to the tenants.

Lord Kenyon.

18,695. I have a number of questions to put to you which are handed in. The following questions are by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "During "your experience as bank manager have you "not known of many instances where tenant "farmers have borrowed money for the purpose "of paying their rents. In many cases are "tenants becoming surety for another?"—The tenant farmers frequently borrow money to meet their rent.

18,696. In many instances do tenant farmers become sureties?—There are usually sureties for every farm.

18,697. "Are you able to speak as to the preservation of game on Lord Stanley's estate?"—I do not know anything specially, but I have Lord Stanley's estate on two sides of my little farm at Holyhead, and I never was troubled with any game.

18,698. "As a magistrate are you aware that the game prosecutions on Lord Stanley's estate are very numerous?"—I am glad to hear that the number of cases we have is considered an exceptionally great number, because there must be very few in that case in the whole county. I think we have had, speaking roughly, these last two or three years from all estates in our neighbourhood perhaps four, five, or six cases.

18,699. In two or three years?—In the last two or three years.

18,700. What per-centage do they bear to other cases?—Well, we have not had one case of game prosecution at the last four or five Petty Sessions, and we have had scores of others.

18,701. "Have you ever advocated a Land Purchase Scheme for Wales on the lines of the Irish Land Purchase Acts?"—Yes, and I think it would be an extremely good thing.

18,702. "If you have, are you still in favour of such a scheme?" You are, I understand?—Yes, I think it would be a remarkably good thing for the tenants, and I do not know why it should not be granted to the Welsh tenants as well as to the Irish tenants that, instead of borrowing money as they have in many cases on a second mortgage at five per cent., they should get money at three per cent.

18,703. "Are not the cases on Lord Stanley's estate where rents were not raised on improvements exceptional cases?' Do you know of similar cases on other estates? You mentioned some cases on Lord Stanley's estate where the farmers had improved their holdings, and I think you said some seven or eight of them had, and their rent was not raised. Were those exceptional cases?—Those were all the cases on the Penrhos estate at that time. The tenants who had not improved were raised: there was a slight rise in the rent, the tenants who had improved were not raised.

18,704. Do you know of any similar cases on other estates?—No, I do not.

18,705. "Have you ever resided in Clynnog parish?"—No, I have never resided in Clynnog parish.

18,706. "If not, how are you able to give "evidence as to that part of the country?"—Because I am a first cousin of Lord Newborough's agent, and that is why I know.

18,707. "What personal knowledge have you "of the county of Anglesey, except of the dis-"trict near Holyhead?"—First of all, I have some property at one end of the county and another farm at the other end, and I drive through it about once a fortnight both ways. Secondly, our customers when I was bank manager were spread over half the county.

18,708. You consider that you have personal knowledge over the whole of Anglesey?—Not over the whole. You will see that there is a section of it that I have not referred to; with regard to the estates of the Marquis of Anglesey, for instance, or the estates in the Beaumaris neighbourhood. I know very little about that neighbourhood.

18,709. "Do you let any land at Holyhead or district?"—No, I do not let any.

18,710. So that you cannot answer the question what you charge per acre?—I may tell you plainly that if I had land to let I would not let it as Class A. do, because I am a commercial business man. There is a question there which you mentioned, with reference to what I let land at Tantwr at. The previous owner at Tantwr did let land; he let it at 2*l.* 15*s.* to 4*l.* 5*s.* an acre. When he had the land as tenant he got it at 18*s.* an acre. I do not know that I should be so foolish as to let the land at 18*s.* if I wanted to let it.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,711. Is that near Holyhead in the nature of accommodation land?—That is not; it is in a country district.

18,712. It is not accommodation land?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

18,713. "In the cases to which witness refers "of farms being sold to the tenants, were the "latter not compelled to buy their farms or to "leave all the improvements made by them to "other purchasers?"—Where is that?

18,714. I am sure I cannot tell you. The question is, "In the cases to which witness "refers, of farms being sold to the tenants"?—I suppose he must refer to Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,715. You mentioned several cases?—I am not aware of such a condition of things. I presume the Agricultural Holdings Act is in force on Sir Richard's estate.

18,716. Are you in a position to speak as to that?—No, I did not make any remark about it.

Lord Kenyon.

18,717. You cannot answer the question?—What I did say was that whatever claims they had for compensation the prices at which the farms were offered to them, and bought by a great many of them, amply covered those claims.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,718. You would not be surprised to hear that some of them think differently, would you?—We do not know what they think. I have no doubt many of them say differently. Very few of them say what they think. There are several instances where these tenants, although they have not settled, have sold a great part of the farm, and sold it at a figure which shows that Sir Richard sold to them very cheap indeed.

18,719. "How much acquaintance have you with the Irish Land Acts and their operation?"—Very little. Only what I have read in the papers; nothing further than that.

18,720. That is the end of Mr. Llewellyn Jones's questions. Now I have some questions to put to you which are handed in by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Do you condemn the Irish "Land Act on the strength of your conversa-"tion with one Wicklow tenant?"—I think I said when I mentioned that, in connexion with what I stated to you about a Land Court that the great evil in discussing a Land Court as we did discuss it, was that we knew nothing whatever about it. There are farmers in this room probably who think a Land Court would be a good thing, and they are very much in the same position as the frogs that wanted to have a stork for a king, and the stork gobbled them up. They have no idea what a Land Court is, and they want a Land Court.

18,721. You do not condemn the Irish Land Court on the strength of that one illustration. That is what I understand?—No.

18,722. "Are you a judge of rent?"—I am a judge of the market value of rent.

18,723. "Do you consider that his rent of 5*l.* "an acre was a fair rent," that is the rent of the Wicklow tenant, I understand?—It was extremely unfair, that is why I asked him why did not he appeal to the Land Court. I was perfectly appalled at the rent. I have been accustomed to see land of that description let about here at 1*l.* an acre as I say, by these Class A. landlords, and I was astonished to see that such was the state of things in Ireland.

18,724. "You said the land was like land at Aberffraw; do you consider that 5*l.* an acre "would be a fair rent in the neighbourhood of "Aberffraw?"—No, I should say not. I do not think it would be a fair rent anywhere.

See 18,550.

18,725. "Referring you to the instance you "gave of a farm let at 52*l.* and sold at 2,000*l.*; "do you know that when the farm was let at "52*l.* it consisted for the most part of marsh "land. Do you know that it was drained and "the land put in good order by the tenant?"—I know that, instead of being marshy land, it was mountain land, and that nobody drained it.

18,726. "Do you know that the Honourable "Frederick Wynne obtained the advantage of "these improvements when he sold the farm for "2,000*l.*?" There were no improvements, were there?—There were no improvements whatever. The house was of such a description that it had to be rebuilt at once; a pig could not live in it.

18,727. "Did not the 2,000*l.* include the im-"provements by the tenant?"—There were no improvements of any kind. The tenant gave it up. He wished Mr. Frederick Wynne to take it.

18,728. "Do you approve of a land system "under which the tenants' improvements are "thus appropriated by the landlord?" Perhaps you would answer that in a general way?—None of us do.

18,729. "Do you think applicants for farms "who are Churchmen and Tories have a better "chance of success than Nonconformists and "Liberals?"—I will give you an instance on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate. One of his tenants, who was a Tory and a Churchman, spoke to me a short time ago, and complained bitterly that on that estate, Nonconformists and Radicals, especially if they were very prominent in politics, could get favours that they, as Tories, could not get; that he had been trying for one or two things, but could not get them, and that a neighbour of his who has been extremely obnoxious on several occasions, got at once what he asked, when he went to Sir Richard.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,730. Will you name that person?—I object to name him. I do not think it is called for. I am only answering these questions. I will give the names at once to the Commissioners. I cannot say anything more fair.

18,731. I will take it privately?—I will give it to you privately. (The witness wrote the name on a slip of paper.)

Lord Kenyon.

18,732. Do you think you could get the consent of that person to use his name?—You see, Mr. Chairman, you ask me: "Do you know of "instances of such and such a kind?" I say "Yes." I cannot say "No," because I must speak truthfully. Then you say, "Will you give the name?" No, I will not give the name; I object.

18,733. But do you think you could get the consent of that individual, whoever he may be, to your using his name, because, if so, we should be glad to have it?—I have given the name.

18,734. We receive no private communication. As I have said before, we wish everything to be as public as possible, therefore, if you can get the consent of that individual to use his name we shall be glad?—You mean of the person who complained—of the Tory who complained?

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,735. The person who complained and also of this obnoxious Radical?—It is not likely that a person would give permission to use his name under those circumstances. If I thought I had done something obnoxious I would not give permission for anyone to name me.

18,736. If you only called him a Radical, perhaps he might?—"Radical" is not obnoxious.

18,737. If you leave out the expression "obnoxious"?—"Radical" is not obnoxious at all.

18,738. I did not say it was. If you describe a man to his face as "obnoxious" perhaps he would not give the permission to use his name, but if you describe him without that adjective he would?—Yes. What I said about him was that a tenant had received favours after making himself comparatively obnoxious to the landlord, which other tenants had failed to get, although they were Conservatives.

18,739. It is not quite plain to me that the man would give his name on that ground, and give the whole account of that transaction?—I do not think that either of them would like to give their names. I do not suppose so.

Lord Kenyon.

18,740. I will proceed with these questions: "Do you know Llyslew?"—Yes, I know Llyslew.

18,741. "Did you ask to be permitted to "write to the Bishop and Dean of Bangor in "favour of the application of Mrs. Parry, a "Nonconformist and a sister of the late "tenant?"—Yes, I did; not to the Bishop, but to the Dean. I wrote to the Dean, and I respectfully entered a very strong protest against the action in the Llyslew case, because it was, I think, extremely ill-advised, and unkind, and improper.

18,742. "Do you know that Mrs. Parry was "forcibly ejected, and Llyslew was let to a "Tory and a Churchman"?—Yes, it was.

18,743. "You have referred to Gorswen. "When it became vacant, is it not a fact that "several relatives (Nonconformists) of the "deceased tenant applied for the farm?"—He had not any but very distant relatives.

18,744. "Did you, as a Nonconformist, apply "for the farm?"—Yes. I applied for the farm.

18,745. "Was the farm let to Mr. Lewis, of "Bodedern, who was formerly an Independent, "but is now a Churchman?"—He was formerly an Independent He is half an Independent and half a Churchman now.

18,746. Was it let to him when he was an Independent, or was it let to him when he became a Churchman. I suppose that is the drift of the question?—I really do not know where he happened to go on Sunday then.

18,747. "Do you relate the circumstance of "the Honourable W. O. Stanley not raising the "rent on the improved farms as an exceptional "incident. Do you say that this is the "ordinary custom in Anglesey. If so, on "whose estate is the custom?"—I do not think I mentioned it as an ordinary custom I mentioned it as an illustration of what was happening 25 years ago, because there has been a great amount of evidence before the Commission showing up the landlords of 25 or 30 years ago—cases which we cannot investigate, the agents being dead, the landlords being dead, and the tenants too. Those were cases of large improvements that were followed up by the landlords Mr. Thomas Ellis told you of an immense amount of improvement that was done on one farm.

18,748. I must confine you to the question as time is passing?—Very well.

18,749. Am I to understand that "you relate "this circumstance of the Honourable W. O. "Stanley not raising the rent as an exceptional "incident or as something referring to the "past?"—As referring to what happened 25 years ago.

18,750. "Do you say that this is the ordinary custom in Anglesey?"—Not to raise the rent on improvements?

18,751. Yes?—I cannot say what is the ordinary custom. I have not heard an instance of them being raised on those estates—on the Class A. estates.

18,752. "Do you suggest that the fact of his "being a Liberal or Nonconformist makes a land-"lord a worse landlord?"—Not at all.

18,753. "If so, why?"—I will give you the reason exactly why, he charges a higher rent.

18,754. I had better read you out the whole list of questions I think. "Do you suggest that "the fact of his being a Liberal or Nonconformist "makes a landlord a worse landlord? If so, why? "Are you a Nonconformist? Do you consider that "you would be a worse landlord or tenant on that "account?"—In the first place I am a Nonconformist. In the next place I would not let land if I had it—I should not have much, most likely. Say I had two or three or four farms—I would not let land like Class A. would, because I am a business man, a commercial man, so to speak, who wants to keep his family, and not the families of other people, with his own earnings. I should let land according to Class B., no doubt, and I do not find the least fault with Class B. But you will find that the farms of Class B. have cost them a large sum of money, and they want some repayment. They have laid out a lot of money upon them, and they let the land on such terms that they shall have a return

18,755. Then you do not suggest that the fact of his being a Liberal or Nonconformist makes a landlord a worse one?—Not at all.

18,756. "You have spoken of tenants being "willing to offer double the rents now asked? Do "you therefore think that present rents ought to "be doubled?"—I have made my statement as to that.

18,757. Do you think it ought to be doubled?—I think it would be extremely disastrous, and I think the agitation that is going on, is unfortunately bringing us to that end now.

18,758. "If not, how do you account for the fact that the tenants are willing to give this excessive rent" as you suspect they do in some cases?—I cannot answer that question better certainly than the Commission can themselves. I gave you an instance at Aberffraw, where the tenant is a clergyman at present, and he is selling off his stock to day, and he has his little farm to let.

18,759. You cannot account for that?—I cannot answer for that.

18,760. "What disadvantage would there be in "landlords being of the same opinions politically "and religiously as their tenants?" I take it there would be no disadvantage from what you said?—No disadvantage.

18,761. "You say 'consternation' would be "caused if a large estate were put in the market. "Do you not know that that would be caused by "the fact that tenants knew that their improve-"ments would practically be lost to them?" I suppose that is, as a reason for the consternation?—The improvements would not be lost on Sir George Meyrick's estate. I mentioned Sir George Meyrick especially.

18,762. That is not the only reason for the consternation?—That is no reason for consternation.

18,763. Is compensation provided for in the agreements on Sir George Meyrick's estate?—

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Compensation is provided for on Sir George Meyrick's estate. I have heard that from the tenants, not from the agent.

Lord Kenyon.

18,764. All these questions are by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "You have referred to Henllys "Wen in Aberffraw as an expensive farm. Do you "know that Henllys Wen is grazing land?"—I do not know, but I told you it was very likely that not only Henllys Wen was charged a higher rent, but that they had stricter conditions than Sir George Meyrick had, that very likely they would not allow the tenant to carry hay away, so that evidently I was correct in that, it was grazing land apparently.

18,765. "Do you know that Penrhyn in "Aberffraw, belonging to Sir George Meyrick, is "let by fields for grazing purposes?"—Not by Sir George, I expect. I do not know of it, so of course, I cannot say.

18,766. Then you do not know what rents are charged for Penrhyn?—No, I do not.

18,767. "Do you know the rent of the neigh- "bouring farms. If not, how do you calculate "that Henllys Wen is more heavily rented than "surrounding farms?"—It is about 18*s.* I do know it. I have a great many friends on the adjoining farms.

See 11,587, 20,556–9.

18,768. "You have said that you made 150*l.* "clear on a farm of 35 acres. Does this include "your profits made by selling two crops of hay "off the farm? And do you know that this "would not be allowed on the large estates in "Anglesey?"—I never sold any hay off that farm.

18,769. "Does this not include the profits "made by you as manager of a public company "formed for the purpose of selling dairy produce "and milk?"—No, I never had anything to do with the public company that sold dairy produce.

18,770. "Does the 150*l.* profit include the "profit made by you as a pig-breeder on this "farm?"—Pig dealer.

18,771. Pig breeder and, I suppose, pig dealer too?—I have not had any pigs on the farm for seven years.

18,772. "Referring you to the enclosure at "Brynsiencyn, do you know that all the "improvements were made by the tenants?"—I did not make any remark about it. I said I believed the land had been sold originally by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and it was now in a very greatly improved state in consequence of being enclosed. It appeared to me, it suited the agricultural interests of the country better that it should produce the food supply, as it does at present, than that it should produce nothing whatever, as it did before.

18,773. "Do you know that the tenants were "compelled to make the improvements or leave "their holdings?"—No, I do not.

18,774. "Will you give an estimate of the value of this enclosure in 1880 and 1893?"—Which was that—At Brynsiencyn?

18,775. Yes, I suppose so?—I know very little about that.

18,776. "If the land were now sold who would get the benefit of these improvements?"—I do not know. I only made a casual remark about it.

18,777. "You have referred to Cleifogfawr. "Why was the rent reduced? Was it reduced "when the farm was let to a Churchman?"—I cannot tell you why the rent was reduced. The statement of Sir Richard Bulkeley was that he thought it was too high.

See 18,602.

18,778. Was it let to a Churchman?—It was let to a Churchman—the present tenant.

18,779. Do you think that was the reason why it was reduced, or not?—I should think not; I do not think it is at all likely.

18,780. "How many Liberal Nonconformists own more than 1,000 acres of land in Anglesey?"—Very few more than 1,000 acres.

18,781. "Would you give their names? Would you name one?"—There are very few.

18,782. You put them in Class B., did you not?—Yes, Class B.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,783. Will you name one?—Oh, dear me, yes. I could name them, but I respectfully decline to name them. It is not a part of my statement.

18,784. Will you name one who owns more than 1,000 acres of land?—Yes, I have one in my mind now who owns more than 1,000 acres who is a Nonconformist.

Lord Kenyon

18,785. I do not think there would be any objection to giving his name?—I have named pretty well; I think I have named more than anyone else has done, or is likely to do.

18,786. Of course do not name him if you do not wish to, but I do not think it would do the person any harm?—You will understand if they only owned 1,000, or 2,000, or 3,000, or 4,000, or 5,000 acres, they would gradually very likely drift into Class A. from Class B. The fact that they are small owners makes it necessary that they should be somewhat more strict in their financial transactions than if they owned a quarter of a county.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,787. Are you prepared to name one?—Do you mean one landlord?

18,788. Yes, one landlord?—A Nonconformist who owns land in Anglesey?

18,789. Over 1,000 acres?—Yes, I will give you the names with the greatest pleasure.

18,790. Will you name them?—I will not name them publicly. I think I have given names pretty well. I have named sufficient to get me into very hot water.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,791. But you will get into no hot water over this. I think this gentleman who owns 1,000 acres would feel proud of it?—I do not think that, but I may tell you that as their holdings increase their rents grow less. The richer Nonconformists let their lands at a less rental than the poorer ones.

Lord Kenyon.

18,792. The question is this, We want to know whether there are any small Nonconformist landowners, and you say, "Yes," and then we ask you whether there are any big ones, and you say, "Yes." We want to know who they are?—Everyone knows many Nonconformist landowners who own over 1,000 acres. Who is that question written by?

18,793. This is one of Mr. Ellis Jones Griffiths' questions?—Mr. Ellis Jones Griffiths knows them perfectly well.

18,794. I wish you would name them, and it would save us a great deal of trouble. I will put this question to you, which has been handed up by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Are not Messrs. "Richard and Robert Davies large Nonconformist landowners?"—They are large Nonconformist landowners.

18,795. Do they own over 1,000 acres?—Much more.

Mr. E. J. Griffith: My question was, "Liberal Nonconformists."

Lord Kenyon.

18,796. I had better put another question myself: Are Messrs. Richard and Robert Davies Liberals?—Yes, they are old-standing Liberals, not Gladstonians.

18,797. I do not think we need go any further?—They are real Liberals.

18,798. There is another question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Can you tell us anything of the condition of the houses and buildings and of the "rents on the estates of any large Nonconformist landowners in this county?"—No, I cannot.

18,799. This is also by Mr. Wynne: "Could "you mention any case in which a Nonconformist landowner has got a Churchman as a "tenant?"—He would take a Churchman exactly the same as he would take anyone else.

18,800. You say it makes no difference?—That is nothing but running a red herring over the path. Neither Class A. nor Class B. would notice for a second whether they were Liberals or Conservatives, or whether they were Nonconformists or Churchmen.

18,801. I have three questions to put to you which are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Have "you not been rather too sweeping in your condemnation of Class B.? Have you, for "example, any reason to suppose that the "estates of Mr. Lloyd, of Tregaian; Mr. Warren "Evans, of Henblas; Mr. Clegg, of Plas Llanfair; "and many others I could name, are rented "highly?"—Is Mr. Lloyd, of Tregaian, a Nonconformist and a Liberal?

18,802. No, but I think you included in Class B. all small landowners?—I did not include all small landowners in Class B.

18,803. I beg your pardon; that was the impression on my mind. What was the distinction between Class A. and Class B.?—The distinction was this: Class A. comprised the old nobility and the county families of the island.

18,804. Irrespective of the size of their estates?—Yes. For instance, we may mention Lady Neave. I do not think I gave you her name. She is a member of Class A. that everybody is proud of, but I do not think she has a very large acreage.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,805. Did you tell the Commission that three-fourths of the land in Anglesey was in the hands of the Class A. party?—Yes, I did. That is about correct, I think.

18,806. Then consequently all the small landowners would be in Class B.?—Not necessarily. They may be in the three-fourths, may they not? There may be some among the three-fourths that only have one farm.

18,807. If they were all large farms?—I did not say they were all large ones; but I told you that Class A. would cover three-fourths of our county, and that they were almost all Conservatives and Churchmen, that is what I said.

Lord Kenyon.

18,808. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent: "What is the name of the Class B. "landlord who bought from Sir Richard and "raised the rent 70*l.*; when was the sale, and "what is the name of the farm?"—Owen Williams, Tyn-y-Buarth. See 18,540, 20,559, 20,639, 20,659.

18,809. What is the name of the farm?—The name of the farm is Fferamuchaf. I give it to you as being raised about that amount.

18,810. "As a banker, have you known cases "in which men who had considerable deposits "have borrowed money to pay their rents?"—Yes, almost everybody borrows money at times nowadays in business.

18,811. Whether they have considerable deposits or not?—Whether they have considerable deposits or not.

18,812. To pay their rents?—Yes, and it is a funny thing to do, but I have known a man borrow money at 6 per cent., when he was getting only 2½ per cent. on deposit.

18,813. "It is suggested that tenant farmers "could not pay their rents unless they had the "unpaid help of their children. Do you know "cases in which bachelors or widowers without "children have carried on farms?"—Oh, yes; we all know cases of that kind.

18,814. "Do you know cases in which farmers "have established their sons on the farms, or in "other kinds of business?"—Yes, many.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,815. You have refered several times to the Baron Hill estate, on which lands have been sold lately. Portions of the estate of Sir Richard Bulkeley have been sold lately?—Yes.

18,816. When did these sales begin?—I trace the sales——

18,817. No, I do not want you to trace them. I want the dates?—I am just going to tell you. You ask me when they began.

18,818. Yes?—I trace the time of the sales in Class A. (Class A. hardly ever purchasing) as commencing about the 1880 election. The agitation at that time, which I believe resulted in a great measure in the Settled Land Act of 1888, enabled the landowners to sell their farms—that is the life tenants—to sell. That was about the time.

18,819. Were there any large portions of the Baron Hill estate sold soon after 1880?—A very large portion.

18,820. About what rent would that cover?—I am not able to say; some thousands, no doubt.

18,821. Of rent?—Of rental, I should think.

18,822. What other estates have sold to a large extent since 1880?—There have been sales to a large extent. Some estates have been cleared out.

18,823. Have there been any large sales of great estates in Anglesey since 1880 besides the Baron Hill?—There are sales, I believe, almost continually now, a thing that never used to happen.

18,824. I ask you to any large extent besides the Baron Hill?—Yes; and I should like permission to make this remark. Many farmers may think that my evidence is something against the farming class. I say that my reason for coming forward was that the agitation at present was resulting in these sales, which is the most serious disaster that could occur to the farmers of this county.

18,825. I understand that perfectly; but I want to know from you what is the extent of these sales that you are speaking of?—Well, you see, nobody knows. Nobody can tell that. Lord Boston, I believe, has sold a great many farms privately to the tenants. Mr. Frederick Wynne has sold.

18,826. What proportion would the rent of these estates bear to the whole of Anglesey, could you tell me?—I could not tell you.

18,827. Could you give me some idea?—No, I could not venture on an idea, or I should have a question directly to give items.

18,828. I am in the dark, you see; I want to know to what extent these sales have been going on? To what extent they could affect the total rent of the whole of the island, roughly?—They would affect it very seriously. We have one parish yonder that was cleared out, the parish of Llanynghenedl. Speaking roughly—someone here I am sure could correct me—I do not suppose there is less in Llanynghenedl alone than 5,000 to 7,000 acres. I should think not.

18,829. Then you were shown a schedule of rentals just now by Sir John Llewelyn. You may have noticed, perhaps, that the Anglesey rental had gone down since 1880?—I did not notice that. You showed me an increase of 128 per cent.

18,830. Since 1814?—Yes.

18,831. But since 1880 the figures go down about 7,000*l.*?—I do not know what is the reason of that.

18,832. What I want you to tell me is, what proportion of the rental of the Island of Anglesey, or the county of Anglesey, you say is covered. You can tell me that?—You see you want statistics from me that require a good deal of investigation to get.

18,833. What do you suppose?—I should not like to suppose anything at random, for of course I should have to prove my statement, and I should be very far astray.

18,834. But you have led us to a question which is very important, namely, that of the sales having produced to a large extent an increase in the rental of the county?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

I fail to see how you make that out.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,835. Arising out of that the point that I asked you was whether your attention had been called to the statistical abstracts of the Inland Revenue Report. You said, I think, that you had heard of them?—You showed me an abstract just now.

18,836. But it was stated that that was a modern growth of rents, whereas it is in fact the income tax figures under Schedule B. Do you appreciate the difference? That I take it would include a great deal more than agricultural rents?—Yes, no doubt, it would.

18,837. The question that I asked you was whether you were able to explain those figures in any way?—I am not able to explain it; except no doubt there would be an increase in the way I have stated, but I cannot conceive such an increase as 128 per cent. I anticipate that in that case, that 128 per cent. would include the profits of all the businesses in the island.

18,838 Very much more than agricultural business?—Yes, and I should think it would include the profits of the railways too.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. John Thomas called and examined (through an Interpreter).

Lord Kenyon.

18,839. You have been examined by Professor Rhŷs, and this is the evidence you wish to give to the Commissioners?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of John Thomas, Ty Wian, Llanfairynghornwy.

"I am a farmer, occupying the above farm, and having recently bought it. I have spent a large sum on the farm in improvements since the year 1857, and I produce a statement of the expenditure. The first work I did was clearing, fencing, and draining two plots of waste land, on which were growing gorse, so tall that scores of crows built their nests in them. The gorse was also a shelter to scores of foxes, polecats, and snakes. The repayment I had for this was an increase of 8*l.* in my rent, and 14*l.* in my rateable value. For some years after this, I went on with the work of draining, opening water-courses, cultivating marsh land, filling peat holes, making new hedges, planting thorns, making a water mill, building, &c. I worked so hard that according to the testimony of the late Dr. Jones, Caergeiliog, inflammation set in in the muscles of my left hand. I was for two years unable to work at all. In less than a year after this, Mr. Edwards, Pwllheli, was sent round to re-value the land, which resulted in my rent being raised by 18*l.*, so that it was much too high, viz., 106*l.* for 90 acres. Between everything I was treated very badly.

"In March of this year the farm was sold by public auction. When I found that it was on sale I sent to Sir Richard a list of what I had spent on the place after the death of my father. I was asked to send in my offer of what I should be ready to give for the farm. I replied that I would give 2,000*l.*, and that I would not expect anything as compensation for the improvements from that amount. The reply I received was to the effect that I only offered about half what the farm was worth, and that I might as well stop at home unless I was prepared to give many hundreds more than that. I purchased the farm at the public auction for 2,820*l.* I was thus compelled to pay twice over for the improvements I had made, besides having had for many years to pay higher rent on my own improvements. See 21,794.

"Sir Richard had once promised a trip to his tenants, but instead of that he afterwards allowed them an abatement of 10 per cent. However, he only allowed me 5 per cent. as I had a lease. I should not have applied for a lease only that my rent was repeatedly advanced.

"We were lately in litigation with Lady Neave and Sir George Meyrick (but nominally the Board of Trade) with regard to the right of carting gravel and sand from the foreshore. We have had our rights in this subject, but have had to pay dearly for them." See 18,926, 18,932–41, 20,006, 27,956.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,840. What was the date of the sale of the farm?—Last March.

18,841. What was the date at which you last made any permanent improvements upon the farm?—About the year 1890.

18,842. The last figure given here is 1889. Is that correct?—I began at that time.

18,843. That is 600*l.* for the house and outbuildings?—Yes.

18,844. Did you give your landlord any notice, or ask for any permission to make that outlay?—No, I did not, but he knew it.

18,845. Do you know of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, I know there is such an Act, but I never got anything from it.

18,846. Do not you think it fair that the landlord should have some control of the expenditure?—Yes, I consider it fair.

18,847. Do I understand you made an application and that it was refused?—I did not make any special application.

18,848. Do you consider the sum you paid, 2,820*l.*, a high price for the farm?—I do not consider the price too high, taking the state of the farm as it is at present, but it is my labour that has made it so valuable.

18,849. In your evidence in chief you said you were compelled to pay twice over for the improvements?—Yes, I did.

18,850. How do you calculate the twice over?—My rent had been increased in consequence of the improvements I made, and I have to pay a high price afterwards.

18,851. You calculate your improvements at 2,000*l.*?—Yes, I do.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,852. I suppose you mean you paid for the work and materials. That would be the first payment?—Yes, and I worked there myself almost day and night.

18,853. And the second time you paid for them in buying the farm?—Yes, that is it exactly.

18,854. How much do you consider the farm would have sold at if your improvements had not been made?—From 1,500*l.* to 2,000*l.* would have been ample for it.

18,855. I do not understand that you have studied the Agricultural Holdings Act much. Is that so?—Very little.

18,856. Do your neighbours read that Act?—Very little.

18,857. Why do they not read it. Does it not interest them?—Some do and others do not take much interest in it.

18,858. In any case they do not feel as much interest in it as they would if it was somewhat different from what it is. They are not satisfied?—No, they are not.

Mr. Grove.

18,859. Do we understand that you spent 2,000*l.* in improvements during the time you were there?—Yes, that is so.

18,860. Without any assistance by way of compensation from the landlord?—Not one penny at any time.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,861. What was the rent of your farm when you took the lease?—It was 106*l.* when I got the lease.

18,862. After all, it was considered cheap or else you would not have taken the lease?—I consider it was too high, but I took the lease so that they might not advance the rent any more, and so that I might have peace to go on farming.

18,863. I find you are only allowed five per cent. while other tenants had ten per cent. Was that because your farm was considered cheap?—The reason they gave was that I had a lease of the farm.

18,864. But is it not generally considered if a man wants to get a lease upon his farm that that farm is considered to be reasonable or cheap?—That does happen sometimes, but in my opinion my farm was higher in proportion than any other farm on the estate. It was 24*s.* per acre at that time.

18,865. How much a perch did it cost you to build the wall which you speak of on your farm. You give the total amount; I should like to know how much a rood it cost you to build the walls?—They vary from 10*s.* or 15*s.* to 1*l.* per rood (of 8 yards).

18,866. What did it cost to put the thorn alongside the fence? About one shilling a rood.

18,867. And you say you never had a penny for it?—Not a penny.

Lord Kenyon.

18,868. These are questions put by Mr. Llewelyn Jones. "Do you know whether Mr. "Edwards, of Pwllheli, has made any valuations "in Anglesey except the valuation of your farm." Yes, I do.

18,869. "If so, did his valuations result in an increase or reduction of rent?"—Increase of rents in every case.

18,870. "Did you ever request your landlord to build a new house and buildings?"—No.

18,871. You did not?—No.

18,872. Then it was not owing to his failure to make any buildings that you did so?—Because I could not live without the buildings.

18,873. But you never asked him to put up the buildings?—He would not build for any one.

18,874. Did you yourself ever ask him?—No, I never asked him.

18,875. These are questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith. "What is your opinion of the "way in which land generally is cultivated or "farmed in Anglesey?"—There are some very good farmers in Anglesey, and some very poor farmers, and during the last 10 years land has been very much more neglected than was the case during the preceding 10 years.

18,876. "Are there any, and what circum-"stances which militate against the proper "cultivation of land?"—For one thing, the land is too dear, and there is no security of tenure.

18,877. "What remedy do you suggest to meet the complaints which you have made in respect of your farm?"—I have no remedy in my own case, but I would suggest as a remedy for the country generally that a Land Court should be formed.

18,878. You have no remedy to suggest in respect of your own case, you say?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,879. Would it be a good thing if the Government advanced money as they do in Ireland, for others to become landed proprietors on their own farms, as you are?—If we could get the money at a reasonable rate of interest it would.

Lord Kenyon.

18,880. A question by Mr. Vincent, "Do you produce your lease?"—I have not brought it to-day. I have it at home. I could bring it to-morrow, if you like.

18,881. Please do so?—Very well.

18,882. "Was the lease given in consideration "of improvements made by you?"—I do not think I should have had it if I had not done so.

18,883. I take the answer to be "Yes." Then "Were you at the time satisfied with the lease "and its provisions as compensation for your "improvements?"—I thought nothing at all about the lease, but I took it so that I might have peace there for 21 years at least.

18,884. "Was the lease prepared by your own solicitor, Mr. Roberts?"—He was not my solicitor, but he prepared it.

18,885. "Was the lease as drawn by Mr. "Roberts agreed to on behalf of Sir Richard "Bulkeley without alteration?"—Yes, Mr. Laurie, as agent, accepted it as it was.

18,886. "What is the present selling value of "your farm? Could you make a profit of a few "hundreds if you wished to sell?"—I do not think I should at present, but if things improved I might be able to make a little out of it.

18,887. This is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you mean to say that the gorse "was so high on your farm that the rooks "made their nests in it"?—Yes, I do. I was there scores of times when I was a boy, in my father's time, gathering scores of rooks' eggs.

18,888. In the gorse?—Yes, I have been in the gorse doing it many times.

18,889. Which do you mean, rooks or crows?—Crows.

18,890. Then these are questions by Mr. Vincent: "You say your farm was rented too "highly. Have you not been able to afford a "good deal of litigation? Did you not, besides "the law-suit you have mentioned, fight your "neighbour John Owen at Beaumaris Assizes; "in the Divisional Court; and in the Court of "Appeal?"—Yes, he came against me. I entered him in the Llangefni County Court for damages.

18,891. Your first answer is, "I did not "prosecute him; he brought an action against "me"?—Yes, and then I entered him in the Llangefni Court for damages, and for removing stones from the highway after I had been there repairing it.

Lord Kenyon.

18,892. And in the Court of Appeal?—He took it to the Court of Appeal.

18,893. Another question by Mr. Vincent: "Why do you think the rateable value was "raised 6*l.* more than the rent was. Does not "that tend to show that the rent was not "raised entirely on improvements"?—The rateable value was not increased 6*l.* more than the rent. The rent was 106*l.*, and the rateable value 75*l.* I should like to say that I have had a prize for being the best farmer in Anglesey and Carnarvonshire.

18,894. For the best managed farm?—Yes, the best managed farm.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,895. The best cultivated, do you say? Tell us again what it was for, exactly?—I received a prize for the improvements I had made on the farm during my lifetime for draining and walling, and planting thorns and buildings, and keeping everything in repair, so that I need not be afraid of the farm being seen.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD HUGHES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

18,896. Are you Mr. Richard Hughes, of Cefn Mawr, Gaerwen, Anglesey?—Yes.

18,897. Have you been appointed by the Anglesey County Council to give ovidence at Llangefni before the Commissioners?—Yes.

18,898. Will you kindly state what you have to say?—I consider that the poor rate as levied at present is very unfair. In the year 1885, that being the date of the latest statistics I have, the expenditure for the relief of the poor amounted to 8,491,600*l.*, these rates falling entirely upon tenant farmers, landed proprietors, and the owners and occupiers of houses. About 1847 free trade was established, and although I am myself an ardent free trader, I firmly believe that free trade more than any other cause has made the calling of the agriculturist a most unprofitable one, while upon the other hand it has been of inestimable value to the rest of the community. What therefore I would respectfully suggest is, that the poor rates should be levied on the whole community, and not on the owners and tenants only. It seems to me extremely unjust that merchants, manufacturers, &c. should be free from the payment of poor rates unless they belong to the class I have enumerated. My suggestion is that a national tax should be enforced for the relief of the poor

on some such basis, say, as the income tax; this would only amount to 3*d.* and 4*d.* in the pound, while it would be a relief of fully 35 per cent. to the tenant farmers of the Kingdom. If a Government passes one law which nearly ruins one class while it benefits another, it is still more unjust that the class which has suffered should be compelled to pay the whole of a rate from which those who are prospering are free.

18,899. Have you anything more to say?—No, I only speak upon that point.

18,900. Have you worked out those figures at all, of 35 per cent.?—Yes, I did it in the best way I could.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,901. Are you supposed to represent the opinion of the county council on this question, or is it your own private view?—It is my own private view, although I told many farmers, and I had the advantage of making it known in public meetings as well, that I looked at it in that way—that it would be fairly just if the poor rates were levied as national rates, instead of on one class of the community. I think all I have been conversing with, agree with me on the subject, only that they were afraid (I must say this) that the landed proprietors would take advantage of it by advancing our rents; but, of course, I do not share that opinion. I do not think there is a landed proprietor in Anglesey that would take advantage of it.

18,902. Will you admit he has the power of doing so?—Certainly.

18,903. If the nation was to pay the poor rate, do you think that the number of paupers would increase or decrease?—I cannot say that. It depends upon how things would be governed.

18,904. What is the tendency of things?—I do not know indeed what it would be. I think the paupers decrease more than anything now; that is my opinion.

18,905. Owing to the generally improved times?—Yes.

18,906. You are a man of experience?—Well, a little.

18,907. What is your experience on this question; when things are locally managed, is there greater economy practised, as a rule, than when managed, say, by the Government?—Well, they say so. They say that tenant farmers are the best managers; they are not so extravagant in salaries and those sort of things as the Government.

18,908. Do you not think that persons who are on the spot, and acquainted with every detail, are able to manage things of this kind better than Government officials?—Yes, but I do not think that it is fair that all the burthen of the taxes should fall upon two or three classes, and other parties who have the most income not be taxed at all.

18,909. Have you no other means of localising personal property except having the nation to pay the poor's rate?—I think that it should be a national rate. That has been my candid opinion for years. Now we are obliged to pay to educate the children, and everything. Why should the tenant farmer pay to educate poor children, and the merchants, shipowners, and all those that receive large profits be exempted altogether and not pay. They are supported by the children and men. They cannot manage their businesses without men and without children, and the burthen of educating and everything rests on the tenant farmers and owners and occupiers of houses.

18,910. Would you go so far as to say this, that the working classes pay nothing at all towards the national exchequer?—No, certainly they pay on their cottages, but suppose they pay 4*d.* in the pound, there is no cottage in England, say 3*l.* rent, paying only 1*s.* rate, but if this system be adopted, I do not think the poor cottager would have to pay more than 1*s.* 6*d.*, while now they pay 5*s.* to 6*s.*

Mr. Grove.

18,911. I suppose, although the money might be paid by the Government, still the responsibility of expending that money might be put upon the local people, might it not?—I think not. Why make it national? Have them on the very same basis as the income tax.

18,912. The assessment of the income tax is upon the income?—Yes.

18,913. But now some of our large manufacturers pay of course the local rates, but very often they make no profit, year after year it may be; they still pay the rates, whereas if it was to be put upon the income they would pay nothing at all?—They would only be placed in the same position as the tenant farmers are now.

18,914. You mean the machinery of the income tax might be used?—Oh, yes, the machinery.

18,915. That is simply the machinery for collecting the money?—Yes. I think every human being who has the means to pay ought to pay towards the poor, and not one class.

18,916. You would put upon the local people the responsibility of expending the money whilst the machinery of the Government is used for collecting it. For instance, could not the Board of Guardians send a precept to the Government for so much money and say, "We find our expen-"diture is so much for this quarter or this half "year"?—Our districts could manage the affair as well.

18,917. So that while you get money from Imperial sources the responsibility for expending the money might be applied locally?—Yes, quite so.

Professor Rhŷs.

18,918. If you expend the money locally and simply send a precept to the Government for so much money to expend in your parish, would it not be rather a temptation to say, "Now we "will have a good share, a good slice, of this "money, because such and such a parish has so "much"?—Well, we have auditors to audit those affairs, and we trust them.

18,919. Yes, but we know what auditors can do, and we know what can be done in spite of the auditors. Do you not think there might be a temptation to a larger portion of the population to rely upon that remedy?—Well, I do not know that, but what we want is what I have said.

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,920. You suggest personal property escapes local taxation?—Yes.

18,921. Can you suggest that any other property escapes which ought now, in your opinion, to be caught for local purposes?—Oh, yes, clerks in office should pay upon their salaries and so on, like they do in proportion with respect to the income tax.

18,922. Is there any form of land or houses which now escapes local taxation which you suggest might be taxed?—No.

18,923. That is the work of the assessment committee. They see that justice is done so far as land and houses are concerned?—Yes.

18,924. I take it probably your real grievance is that personal property escapes local taxation?—Yes, quite so.

18,925. Can you suggest any other property?—No, I cannot.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. OWEN WILLIAMS called and examined (through an Interpreter).

Lord Kenyon.

18,926. Has this statement been read over to you, and do you say that it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"The evidence of Owen Williams, Caerdegog Uchaf, Llanfechell.

"I am a farmer, and shall offer evidence with regard to my own and other holdings in the neighbourhood of Llanfechell.

"Caerdegog has for ages belonged to the Bodfaen estate and belongs to the family of Glyn Llifon. It was formerly owned by Lord Newborough, and is now owned by his son the Honourable Frederick Wynne.

"My ancestors have occupied Caerdegog for over 200 years. I have in my possession receipts for rents 160 years ago, showing that the rent at that time was 4*l.* The place was very unproductive, with much marsh land, and pools of water in the winter. My ancestors opened watercourses and drained the land. I have also drained over 1,000 roods (8 yards) during the last 15 years, at an expense of at least 3*s.* per rood (8 yards), which amounted to 150*l.* for drainage alone, and I was never allowed anything towards it by my landlord. I have also done much walling in the fields, and have never had anything towards the expense. Nine years ago the house was in a very dilapidated condition, and was unfit for human habitation. I went to the agent to ask whether they would build a new house, as it was dangerous to live in the old house. He promised to speak to the landlord about the matter. The reply was that he would build a house, but that the rent would be advanced, so as to bring him interest for his money; or, that he would give slates and lime and timber without interest, if I would build a good house, and undertake all the other expense. Also he promised to see that my rent would not be advanced, and that if the place was sold, he would take the expense into consideration. I accepted those terms, simply relying upon his word, and I erected a new house. I spent close upon 300*l.* myself, beside receiving 96*l.* from my landlord. I also made several out-buildings, with the consent of my landlord, which buildings cost me over 100*l.*, so that I may say I have spent in all over 500*l.* on about 50 acres of land, and that during the last 14 years, trusting that I would receive justice at the hands of my landlord as he had promised. Two years after I had finished the improvements at such an expense, I received a letter from the sub-agent stating that the place was on sale, and that the price was 2,000*l.*, or 40*l.* an acre. He said, I should have the first offer at that price, and if I did not give it, that there was another person in the neighbourhood ready to do so. As I had spent so much labour and money on the place, I purchased it at that price rather than lose my holding. Its rent was 33*l.* before I bought it, but according to the price I was obliged to pay or lose it, the rent is now 80*l.* According to the value of land in this neighbourhood, my landlord took 500*l.* too much from me at the very least, which money it would have been but fair for me to have to bring up my children. This is but a common occurrence in Anglesey.

"About two years ago an attempt was made to deprive the public of the foreshore at Cemlyn. The attempt was made by the agents of Sir George Meyrick and Lady Neave in the name of the Board of Trade. I had a bill for 2*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.* from the court for trespass for carting a load of sand from the place, which was a custom from time immemorial. It cost me a deal of time and money to prove our title.

See 18,839, 20,006, 27,956.

"Land agents in many instances are a source of trouble to people in Anglesey. Several instances in my neighbourhood have occurred which prove this. In one case a family was turned off a farm simply because the tenant (a widow) married a man whom the agent did not approve of, although he was an able and competent man with all farm work, and they had plenty of capital to carry on the work of the farm in the best manner.

"Another instance on the same estate occurred owing to the simplicity of the tenant. He had failed to get the rent ready in time, and in his fear he went to America, leaving his wife and six little children. Three of the tenant's relatives came forward to pay the rent—the three being respectable farmers. They offered to become sureties for the rent, but were refused, although the tenant had returned, and the family was sent off the farm.

"The tenant of another farm on the same estate died on the 8th March 1871, and the son came into possession. The rent previous to this was 47*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, but it was advanced to 60*l.* for the son, and he was obliged to pay the increase of 12*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* for the year during which his father's tenancy continued.

"There is another small holding of 4¾ acres on another estate in this neighbourhood. When the present tenant entered it would not nearly keep a cow. His rent was 6*l.* He worked hard early and late to improve his holding, but two years ago the rent was advanced to 9*l.*, an increase of 3*l.* on the tenant's own improvements.

"Another tenant on another estate was similarly dealt with. She was an old maid, and in comfortable circumstances, and her nephew was there as a farm bailiff. The tenant died, and the nephew was positively refused the place, although he offered the same rent as it was let to the new tenant.

"I shall be prepared to name all the places mentioned if necessary.

"Labourers' cottages are very scarce in these districts, and those that do exist are very unfit to be dwelling-places, and are very far from the farm houses. The distance is about 1½ or 2 miles on an average. The men are obliged to walk that distance morning and night to and from their work.

"Additional Evidence.

"Cafnan Farm, which is about 160 acres in extent, is situated in the parish of Llanfechell, in the county of Anglesey. The nominal owner is Lady Reade, who was formerly Miss Emma Maria Elizabeth Conway-Griffith, of Garreglwyd, Llanfaethlu, Anglesey. As Miss Griffith, Lady Reade succeeded to the estate upon the death of her father, Mr. Richard Trygarn-Griffith.

"Mr. Trygarn-Griffith had granted to Mr. Owen Price and his heirs a lease, dated 1863, of Cafnan for 21 years, at an annual rent of 80*l.*, but owing to a legal defect in the execution of the deed, which was not discovered until Miss Griffith had come into possession, the rent was increased to 105*l.* per annum for the remainder of the term.

"The Prices and the Turners were tenants of Cafnan for a period of about 150 years, Mr. Turner's son being the fourth generation actually born at Cafnan. Rice Price, who originally took Cafnan, came there from Pary's Farm, near Amlwch. He was the father of Richard Pryce, who was the father of Owen Pryce, Mrs. Turner being the niece and legal representative of Owen Price. The late tenant, Mr. Owen Price, used to say that he had laid out quite 4,000*l.* in farm buildings, house, offices, planting, walling, fencing, draining, reclaiming, and other permanent improvements. Mr. Owen Price died in 1875, during the construction of Cestyll House, which is situated on Cafnan land, and now forms a separate holding, the same house having been completed after his decease by his widow and executrix, the late Mrs. Margaret Price, at a total cost of about 700*l.* The residue of the Cafnan lease passed by the will of Mrs. Price to her niece, Mrs. Ann Turner, the said lease expiring in 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Turner were definitely told by Lady Reade that they would not be disturbed at the expiration of the lease, and in fact they remained at Cafnan for 13 months after the lease had run out upon the same terms as before, and then a notice to quit was served. A remonstrance was made to Lady Reade, but to no purpose. The place was subsequently advertised in the 'Carnarvon and Denbigh Herald' and other local papers, and was let to the highest bidder. The place had previously been 'hawked' well over the county by Mr. Robert Lewis, Plas-y-mynydd, who also spoke to me as to my taking the farm. Since the present agent has been in power the same system of competition has been followed on the Garreglwyd estate, notably in the cases of Cefndu and Aberalaw. As a remarkable instance of the system of rack rent adopted on the Garreglwyd estate, the rent of Cafnan Farm, in 1863, was 80*l.*, subsequently increased to 105*l.*, the present rent being 220*l.*, being an advance of 275*l.* per cent. in 34 years, a phenomenal increase, from which latter rent an abatement of 5 per cent. has been made at the last two audits. Upon leaving Cafnan, Mr. and Mrs. Turner instituted a claim against Lady Reade for unexhausted improvements, which claim was adjudicated as falling under the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, by which it is incumbent to obtain the written consent of the landlord before performing any permanent improvement in order to be able to claim compensation. They were also debarred under the Act, as they had not given up possession at the expiration of the tenancy. However, Lady Reade's then agent had accepted two half-years' rent after the expiration of the lease, and the tenants had relied upon Lady Reade's assurances from time to time. On the technical points the award went against the tenants, and they lost all the benefits of their improvements. This case shows the danger of relying upon the verbal promise of landlord, and is an instance of letting farms to the highest bidder."

Sir John Llewelyn.

18,927. When did you lay out money in draining?—In the course of the last 15 years, before I bought the farm.

18,928. Was any of it during the last 10 years?—Yes, during the last year before I bought it.

18,929. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, I do.

18,930. Do you know if you had given notice to your landlord you would have recovered the expenditure?—Yes, I know that.

18,931. Did you recover anything in respect of your drainage?—No, not a penny.

Mr. Grove.

18,932. You have spoken about the foreshore at Cemlyn. Who was it that took action? First of all you were doing what had been the custom of the country, you say, for a long time?—Yes, for centuries.

18,933. And what was it you did?—I went for a load of sand from the foreshore.

18,934. In the usual way?—Yes, as usual.

18,935. Then what process was taken against you, and by whom?—The agent of Sir George Meyrick and Lady Neave, in the name of the Board of Trade.

18,936. In the name of the Board of Trade?—They had got the consent of the Board of Trade to use their name, on the condition that they paid the whole of the costs.

18,937. Will you explain now what took place afterwards?—I received a claim through the county court for damages for trespass.

18,938. What did you do with it?—I resisted the claim. I defended the action in the county court, and the judge decided in my favour and allowed costs on the higher scale; but I had to pay a sum of money for costs which I could not recover from the plaintiffs.

18,939. Did that end the matter so far as you were concerned?—Yes, that ended it. They found they could do nothing further.

18,940. Do the inhabitants in that part still avail themselves of the custom of taking the sand away?—Yes, they do continually.

18,941. And no further claim has been made on any of them since your action was tried?—No, no one has done so and no one had even done so before that, except that one occasion.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,942. When did Lady Reade succeed to the property?—On the death of her father, about the year 1864.

18,943. About what time was this legal defect in the lease discovered and the rent increased from 80*l.* to 105*l.*?—As soon as ever Lady Reade had come into possession of the farm.

18,944. Was that about the year 1864?—Yes, about that time. I cannot be certain.

18,945. If the lease was not followed why did the tenant submit to have his rent increased from 80*l.* to 105*l.*?—It has always been said in the neighbourhood that Mr. Price consented to the advance rather than have any trouble.

18,946. Had he started to make any improvements on the land?—Yes, he had spent more than the farm was worth at that time.

18,947. And of course if he had left it at that time he would have left the money which he had expended on these improvements behind him?—Yes, quite so; the money is still there.

18,948. I see that after the lease expired the farm was advertised in the local papers?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

18,949. Is it a general habit to advertise farms in the local papers when they are to let?—No, fortunately it is not so.

18,950. I suppose they advertise in the papers after they have failed to get tenants locally. Is that so?—It was not so with regard to Cafnan.

18,951. Do you think that they advertise in the papers in order to get at the highest bidder?—Yes, according to all appearances at the time.

18,952. I see in your statement that you state that the place had been previously well hawked over the the county by Mr. Robert O. Lewis, of Plas y mynydd. Has any permanent reduction been made in the rent of Cafnan?—I am not aware; I cannot pledge my word.

18,953. Have there been any abatements made?—I think 5*l.* has been returned each of the last two rent audits.

18,954. Do you know the rateable value of Cafnan now?—No, I do not.

Mr. Griffiths.

18,955. I think you said that your family lived at Caerdegog Uchaf for some centuries?—Yes.

18,956. And the rent was than 4*l.*?—Yes.

18,957. I suppose they must have built the walls and other buildings?—Yes, that was done quite recently.

18,958. How was the rent advanced from 4*l.*?—That was before my time; I cannot say.

18,959. Do you not suppose that it is owing to the buildings and the walls which had been built?—There were no walls in my time

18,960. How much was the amount of money which you considered you had expended yourself?—I have spent 500*l.*, to say nothing of my own labour.

18,961. You received a sum of 96*l.*?—Yes I did receive 96*l.*, but I did not include that in the 500*l.*

18,962. You consider you lost 500*l.* yourself without?—Yes, I do.

18,963. Is it a common occurrence in the neighbourhood for people to lose money in their farms in that way by improvements?—It has happened frequently when the farm has come to be sold and the tenants come to buy the farm so as not to lose their money.

18,964. What is the general custom of the country when tenants leave?—Arbitrators are fixed upon and valuation takes place, and the outgoing tenant receives the money.

18,965. Have cottages always been scarce in your district?—There are only seven cottages to 2,500 acres, and only two cottages out of the seven are fit to live in.

18,966. Do you remember the time when there were more?—Yes, I do; a good many have fallen down here and there.

18,967. What do you consider the cause?—They were not repaired and kept in order. It was never the custom to repair the cottages and keep them in order, and the farmers let them tumble down.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

18,968. Then I suppose the farmers did not want them?—They wanted the men to work.

18,969. Then why did not they repair the cottages?—I cannot say.

Lord Kenyon.

18,970. These are questions put in by Mr. Vincent. "Do you know anything of the "Cafnan case except by hearsay"?—No, I do not, except what the family have sent me now.

18,971. "Is it not the fact that the tenant of "Cafnan Farm absolutely refused to quit until "an action of ejectment had been brought against "him"?—Mr. Turner's contention is that Lady Reade had told him that he would not be disturbed, and that is the reason why he declined to leave.

18,972. The answer to that is "Yes," that he declined to quit until an action had been brought against him?—Yes, he declined to leave, for that reason.

18,973. "Was not his claim under the Agri-"cultural Holdings Act a failure because he had "not left at the expiration of his tenancy?"—Yes, it was a failure, but it was the greatest injustice that was ever perpetrated.

18,974. That was the reason of his failure?—Yes, that was so.

18,975. "Have you anything except the "advertisement to prove letting to the highest "bidder?"—No, I have nothing else. I consider that quite enough

18,976. "Had not Mr. Price built on the farm "a mansion quite unsuitable to a farm?"—It is a very good house.

18,977. I want an answer to the question?—It is a better house than was usually built at that time on similar farms.

18,978. That is the only answer you can give?—Yes.

18,979. "Had not Mr. Turner absolutely "refused to come to terms?"—I cannot say anything about that. All the facts I have received have been read out now.

18,980. These are further questions by Mr. Vincent: "Was not the lease of Cafnan granted shortly before Mr. Trygarn-Griffith died?"—Yes, that is so.

18,981. "Was not Mr. Price, the lessee, sub-agent?"—He did look a little after the estate at times.

18,982. "Did not Miss Griffith threaten to "have it set aside because the rent was inade-"quate?"—Yes, I believe so, and that is the reason for increasing it to 105*l.*

18,983. "Was not that the reason that Mr. "Price agreed to the rent being raised while the "lease was current?"—Yes.

18,984. "Did not Lady Reade give back "10 per cent. to all agricultural tenants last "winter?"—All I know about the matter is what has been already read out.

18,985. Then there is a question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Do you know whether any

"of the tenants on the Bodfaen estate have "been allowed any sums towards the cost of "buildings erected by them, without having "their rent raised?"—Yes, even the landlords have been paying for the cost of raising the stones.

18,986. You do know cases?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,987. I want to ask you one question. What was the name of the agent who disapproved the widow's marriage?—I would rather not mention the name, but if I am asked to do so, I will do so.

18,988. What was the name?—Mr. Prichard, of Llwydiarth Esgob, Llanerchymedd, the agent of Sir George Meyrick, Bodorgan.

18,989. Was Mr. Prichard on bad terms with this lucky bridegroom, or was there any other reason why he should have disapproved this wedding?—I do not think he knew him at all. The reason he objected was that he wanted the widow to marry another man.

Lord Kenyon.

18,990. Was the widow older than the young man?—Which of the two men?

18,991. Well, the one she married?—I believe she was younger.

18,992. Had she money?—There was 700*l.* in the bank at the time she was turned away, and the rent was ready in the house.

18,993. Was there any supposition that he married her for her money, or anything of that sort?—No, none whatever. He was a bailiff who worked on the farm.

18,994. I have another question, which is practically the same question put in another way, by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "After the land-"lord of the Bodfaen estate made an allowance "towards repairs, did he increase the rent?"—No, he did not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

18,995. You speak about agents. I take it you are in a position to say something further. Do you know whether the tenants make it a habit of giving presents to the agents at Christmas?—Some have been doing so, but I cannot prove it. I did a little of that kind of thing myself, but it did me no good.

18,996. Did you feel it a burthen?—Yes, rather.

Lord Kenyon.

18,997. Another question put in by Mr. Vincent is, "How long had the widow been "married before she became a widow?". I suppose that means, how long was she married to her first husband?—Perhaps about eight years, but I cannot say exactly; eight or nine years.

18,998. What was her station in life before that?—She was a servant.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

18,999. This is your evidence, translated to you by Professor Rhŷs, and it is correct?—Yes. I wish to say that I come here perfectly independent, and I cannot vouch for every detail, but I give the facts as they are within my own knowledge.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"The evidence of John Jones, 'Refail, Llanfairynghornwy.

"I am a tenant farmer, occupying the above place, and a blacksmith.

"'Refail is a small farm which, up to the present year, belonged to the Baron Hill Estate. During the years of my childhood it was let for 7*l.* a year. After the tenant had spent scores of pounds in improving the land, and in building, the rent was raised to 9*l.* 10*s.*; it was subsequently raised to 11*l.*, and then to 14*l.* This year the tenant was obliged (like many others) in purchasing the place to pay for the improvements made by his parents.

"Tyn y lon, on the Baron Hill Estate, was in the occupation of the late Richard Roberts. Prior to the late tenant effecting improvements on the place the rent was 3*l.* a year. It was then raised to 5*l.*, and after a new house and other buildings had been erected the rent was again raised to 7*l.* This year it was sold, and the widow purchased it at an unreasonably high price.

"The following instances which have occurred in my neighbourhood may throw some light upon the present system of land tenure:—

"1. Mr. Jones, Penlloeger, spent about 500*l.* on his farm in building, fencing, and improving the land. The rent was advanced, and this year his farm was sold to the highest bidder. It was purchased by Miss Mary Owen, Plas Berw, who comes into possession next month. Last week the tenant received a letter of which the following is a copy:—

"'Bangor,

Dear Sir, October 2, 1893.

On behalf of Miss Mary Owen, Plas Berw, we propose to call there on Wednesday next, about 11 o'clock in the morning, to see you about the repairs to the buildings, and the condition of the farm generally; you had better have someone there to meet us so as to come to some understanding about them before you leave. Some practical joiner or farmer would be the best for you to get. We can also discuss the question of future tenancy.

Yours truly,

Owen and D. Griffith.'

"2. Mr. John Evans, Maes y Merddyn, spent about 400*l.* in buildings and improving his land. His rent also was raised, and the holding has now been sold and has been purchased by the son who has had to pay over again for the improvements made by his father.

"I might easily name some more.

"There is another phase of the question of land tenure and cultivation which I beg to call attention to, viz., the unjust and injurious practice of consolidating farms. I know of several instances in my district.

"1. There were farms called Brynllwyd and Dafarn on Lord Boston's estate, each of which kept a labourer, a servant-girl, a couple of horses, &c., throughout the year, besides giving employment occasionally to a day-labourer, a smith, a joiner, &c. Now they have been consolidated.

"2. Castell and Hendy, on the Baron Hill Estate, were consolidated with other farms.

"3. A holding called Bodronyn, on Sir George Meyrick's estate, was added to other farms.

"4. Ty Fatw, on Lady Neave's estate, was joined to another large farm.

"5. A farm called Waenlych, on the Llanfawr Estate, was sold to the highest bidder, and was afterwards converted into a park for grazing purposes.

"The evil in connexion with this is that the farmers, after receiving addition to their farms, do not as a rule employ more men on the farm, or give more work to other people. Consolidating farms is a loss to a large number of people, and in the instances mentioned deprived about 54 persons of their means of livelihood, and if these instances deprived so many people, what must be the number throughout the whole of Wales?—I could name one who received an addition to his farm, who only keeps one servant man, one maid-servant, and one boy, whom he gets for his keeping, on a farm of nearly 200 acres."

19,001. And for the other place, Tyn y lon?—240*l.*

Mr. Griffiths.

19,002. Your general complaint is that money has been spent upon the farms, and when you purchased them you had got to pay again?—That is so.

Mr. Grove.

19,003. Why were the farms that you have spoken of consolidated; was it because the buildings and cottages had fallen into disrepair, and the landlord did not care to go to the expense of repairing them?—I cannot say for certain. That may have been the reason.

19,004. I think you said that the agent was on last Wednesday to go over this farm that had just been bought by Miss Mary Owen. Do you know whether the agent has been over the farm, and with what result?—Yes, he has been.

19,005. With what result. Is the man to stop on?—He has ordered the tenant to do certain repairs again.

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,006. When the place named 'Refail and the other place you name on the Baron Hill Estate were sold, was any application made for the improvements by the last tenant?—John Jones, of Penlloeger, did so to my knowledge.

19,007. And you?—No, I did not.

Lord Kenyon.

19,008. Questions put in by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Is there a farm called Plastirion adja- "cent to your own?"—Yes, there is.

19,009. "What is the character of the land at "this farm?"—It is medium land; neither good nor bad.

19,010. "Has Plastirion been as well culti- "vated as your farm?"—No, it has not.

19,011. "Do you know how often the rent of "Plastirion has been raised?"—It has been advanced once in my lifetime.

19,012. "What price did it fetch at the sale "of the Baron Hill Estate?"—125*l.*

19,013. "Compared with the price paid for "your farm, was Plastirion sold at a high or a low "price?"—It was sold at a low price comparing it to Tyn y lon, which is exactly the same size, and Plastirion was sold for half the price within 5*l.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. GEORGE H. M. OWEN called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

19,014. You live at Carnarvon?—I live at Carnarvon.

19,015. What do you propose to give evidence about?—I am the secretary of the North Wales Property Defence Association and I tender three files of the returns for the counties of Merioneth, Carnarvon, and Anglesey. Each of such returns is signed by the owner or by his accredited agent. No choice has been made of such returns, but all that have come to hand from my correspondents have been included. The said returns must not be taken to cover the whole of the owners of land in the counties referred to. The said returns show in separate columns (1) name, address, and county of owner; (2) acreage and rental; (3) temporary abatements since 1883; (4) permanent reductions since 1883; (5) observations as to rise and fall of rent extending for the most part over 50 years. I have kept these returns with regard to the three counties in separate bundles, and each form is signed, as I have stated, at the top by the owner or his agent.

19,016. Vouched for by the owner or his agent?—Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,017. Has every member of the Association sent in his return?—Yes, I believe so.

19,018. Every one?—I will not say all. I have not checked it, but I believe they have, more or less.

19,019. I suppose we shall have another one for the other three counties after this, shall we?—Yes, I believe so. It is my intention to try to get them for the six counties of North Wales.

Lord Kenyon.

19,020. Your proposal is to give each county as it is completed?—That is what I intend.

Mr. Grove.

19,021. About what acreage do these returns cover, roughly?—I could not tell you, I have not worked it out.

19,023. After you have examined these in detail you will be able to tell us that?—I shall be quite ready to give any information I can. The following is a tabulated statement of the contents of the three bundles I have handed in.

ANGLESEY.

1. Name and Address of Owner. County (or Counties), giving first the County in which most of the Property is situated.	2. Acreage and Rental.	3. Temporary Abatements since 1883.	4. Many other allowances to individuals on special occasions, and for lime, &c., &c.	200*l.* per annum since 1880, or thereabouts.	No general re-valuation has been made since 1842, and that was not acted upon. Some rents are lower, and some the same as in 1830. Some have been raised for large drainage works, but nothing at all on capital outlay, and insufficient to pay for maintenance even. Full particulars can be given as to each farm.
Charles Jones, Esq. - Derwyn Alyn, Rossett, Denbighshire. Merioneth.	117 acres - - - 137*l.* (including rent of house, garden, and appurtenances, 35*l.*, and a cottage let for 1*l.*).	- - - - -	Land let with house when bought; now reduced.	No re-valuation or increase since 1875, when the property was purchased.
Messrs. Wayne - - Aberartro, Llanbedr, Merionethshire. Merioneth.	800 acres - - - 300*l.*	10 p.c. sometimes; Michaelmas 1892, 10 p.c.	Rent of majority of farms reduced by amount of tithe.	Re-valuation in 1865, after railway came. Some rents increased a few reduced.
Mrs. Pfoulkes and Miss Lloyd. Hengwrt, Dolgelley. Merionethshire.	About 4,500 acres - -	5*l.* on one farm; 1*l.* on another -	5*l.* on one farm - -	The old tenants have been kept on at the same rents. On re-letting, some have been slightly raised where the value has risen from the nearness to new railways, &c., also where the land from vicinity to Dolgelley has let as accommodation land.

19,023. I suppose you have no means of getting answers to certain questions that you would like to have, even for your own information, have you?—In what way?

19,024. As to the exact rent and so on?—No; sometimes landlords are not able to give even the exact acreage, and some do not give the answer as to rentals sometimes.

19,025. And even when you have it I suppose it is not for publication always?—Everything that I have had—every answer given to me about rental and acreage—is contained in those forms.

19,026. It is all here?—Yes. I asked their leave; that is why I asked them to sign the form.

19,027. And they are for publication?—Oh, yes, certainly. All that is sent in for publication.

Lord Kenyon.

19,028. I have some questions sent up by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffiths: "You have referred to your "'correspondents'; to how many did you "write?"—In the county of Anglesey?

19,029. "In each of the three counties?"—I could not say exactly—between fifty and a hundred in each county.

19,030. "How many replies did you receive?"—They are all there.

19,031. "What acreage does the reply cover in "each of the three counties?"—As I said, I have not worked that out. I can give the number.

19,032. It would be quite possible to get at the acreage, would it?—Yes.

19,033. It is merely the addition of your column acreage and rental?—Yes.

19,034. It will be a very valuable thing if you will do so?—I will add up the columns.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,035. And give the totals for each county?—I will try.

Lord Kenyon.

19,036. Mr. Llewellyn Jones sends up this question: "Can you give any returns as to "increase in rents on the various estates during "the period from 1870 to 1883?"—No. My returns only started in 1883.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. H. Richards called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

19,037. Will you give your evidence in Welsh or English?—In English.

19,038. You are Mr. W. H. Richards, of Ynysfawr, Llanerchymedd?—Yes.

19,039. You have no complaint to make as to your tenancy, you say?—None whatever.

19,040. But you wish to make some statements about trespass; is that so?—Exactly.

19,041. Will you read your statement?—I make no complaint as to tenancy. I wish to lay the following complaint before the Commissioners as to trespassers, particularly by mushroom gatherers. The business of a farmer is variable, and depends much on the weather. Whatever, he ought to be protected from depredators. He has besides crows and sparrows to annoy him, trespassers (bold and impudent) not only after game but to collect plovers' eggs in spring, and later on mushroom gatherers (stealers), which have continued this year for a period of over three months, and caused, in my case, no end of mischief, besides a direct loss of more than 20*l.* There are also gatherers of blackberries. Continual damage is done this way to my fences, which cause sheep and cattle to stray and trespass; it also causes much loss of time and extra labour, besides annoyance and ill-feeling to neighbours. I look upon the loss in these depressed times as very serious.

19,042. Have you ever manured for mushrooms?—Not specially; but mushrooms will not grow unless you do prepare the land.

19,043. I believe if you manure and continue improving it, especially for mushrooms, you can protect yourself?—If I improve the land mushrooms will come, not without.

19,044. Is the game on your land your own?—No.

19,045. Is that reserved by the landlord?—Yes. The hares and rabbits are mine. I am at liberty to kill them.

19,046. You complain of depredators, as you call them, coming after them?—Poachers, I mean.

19,047. You complain of trespassers generally?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

19,048. Your complaint then is mainly as to trespass?—Exactly.

19,049. Are you a freeholder or a tenant farmer?—Both.

19,050. We want to get hold of one or two agreements for the holding of land with which the tenant farmers are satisfied and at which they have no grumbling, we want to get before us an agreement as to which they say, "Now "that is a fair agreement between the landlord "and the tenant." Do you hold your farm under agreement?—I do.

19,051. Could you put a copy of that agreement in and let us see what it is that you are perfectly satisfied with?—Well, I can do so.

Mr. Grove—continued.

19,052. I venture to think that the Commissioners would like to see an agreement as to which a tenant farmer comes and says, "There "is an agreement that I am satisfied with"?—Very well.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,053. You say they do a little poaching as they go along gathering mushrooms?—No, not in gathering mushrooms. Besides poachers, I say there are trespassers gathering mushrooms.

19,054. I thought you said they did a little poaching under the pretence of gathering mushrooms?—Oh, no.

Lord Kenyon.

19,055. Question by Mr. Laurie: "What "remedy do you propose for the trespasses "complained of?" Have you thought of any remedy—a more stringent law of trespass—or what?—I think law should be made more strict as to prosecution.

19,056. Then questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Is the trespass inflicted by mushroom "gatherers your principal grievance?"—Yes.

19,057. "How do you calculate your loss at 20*l.*?"—I consider that over 40*l.* worth of mushrooms have been gathered on my ground this season. The damage they do in breaking over to the fencing is something I cannot tell you. They cause sheep to stray and to trespass somewhere else, giving me endless trouble in going after them and repairing the fences.

19,058. "Have you any suggestions as to "amending the law between landlord and "tenant?"—None whatever.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HUGH PRICHARD called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,059. Is this your statement translated by Professor Rhŷs, and is it correct?—Yes.

The following statement was read:—

"I occupy a farm of 20 acres, called "Minffordd, in the parish of Llangaffo. I came "to the place with my parents sixty years ago. "The then owner was the late Colonel Williams, "Craig y Don. There were no outbuildings on "the place except a small old cow-house for "one cow and a pigsty, both being rush "thatched. The house was also old and in poor "condition. The owner would not make any "buildings but he promised that my father and "his family after him should have the place at "a rent of 10*l.* a year on condition that my "father should build all that were necessary. "However, in a few years after my father's "death, my rent was advanced by 8*l.* making "it 18*l.* a year. A few years later a new agent "came upon the estate. I went to him in the "year 1876 and told him that the old house was "almost falling. He replied that they intended "granting leases for 14 years to the tenants, "and that I should have a lease and my rent "raised by 2*l.* to make it 20*l.* He told me to "build a good house and that he would allow "me 20*l.*. I built a house worth 120*l.* and was "allowed 10*l.* the first year and 10*l.* the follow-"ing year. Ten years later, viz., in 1886, the "estate was sold. I tried several times to get "the agent to sell me my holding by private "treaty but he would not. Lastly I went to "them on the morning of the sale and offered "700*l.* privately but they declined my offer, "and said it would reach hundreds more than "that. However I purchased it for 700*l.* in "the public auction."

Mr. Griffiths.

19,060–1. Then you complain that you spent 120*l.* and you only received 20*l.* from your landlord?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

19,062. Then when you bought the property for 700*l.* how much do you consider you paid extra because of the improvements that you yourself had put there?—I cannot say precisely, but I know that scores of pounds of my money have been spent there to bring it up to that value.

Mr. Grove—continued.

19,063. When you were promised the lease by the landlord did you ever ask for a letter to confirm it so that you might have something in writing?—No, I did not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. OWEN GRIFFITH called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

19,064. You are a farmer of Bonc Fadog, Tregaian?—Yes.

19,065. And you hold about 70 acres without sheep runs; is that so?—Yes.

19,066. Who is your landlord?—I am an occupier' under two landowners, Mrs. Jones Parry, Aberdunant, and Major Lloyd, Plas Tregaian. I may add that I am the sub-agent to both estates, too.

19,067. What do you wish to give evidence about?—I wish to give evidence concerning those questions that I have prepared answers for.

19,068. Particularly about your own farms?—Yes.

19,069. You say your farm has been held by members of your family for generations?—For generations.

19,070. You also wish to speak for the district?—I do.

19,071. Are there any recent enclosures in your district?—No.

19,072. Do you think there is any unenclosed land that could be cultivated with profit?—I do not think there is any.

19,073. Are there any sheep walks in the district?—No.

19,074. What do you think about the management of estates; how are they best managed; which estates are best managed?—Well, I should say the middle-sized estates that lie compactly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,075. Do you mean estates or farms?—I mean estates now.

Lord Kenyon.

19,076. You do not agree with what we have heard sometimes, that the bigger estates are the best?—No, I do not quite agree with that. I should say the middle-sized estates, the compactly-lying estates.

19,077. You say that politics, religion, and language make no difference between you and your landlord?—Not in the least.

19,078. What is the usual time of entry?—November.

19,079. Are agreements or leases most common?—Agreements are most common.

19,080. Have you got your own agreement?—No, I have not got it with me.

19,081. Do you know of any applications for leases being refused?—I do not know of any applications being refused.

19,082. Do you know of any applications being made?—Yes.

19,083. You do?—Yes.

19,084. What do you think about the safety of tenants under agreements?—I think they are quite as safe under an agreement as under a lease.

19,085. You think they are?—Generally, perhaps they are not, but with regard to myself and my co-tenants on this estate I consider we are quite as safe.

19,086. Do you object to any part of your agreement; are there any clauses you object to?—I cannot object to any part of my agreement. I know that some of its clauses are stricter than others, but I believe that they are merely for protection, in case of the tenant leaving. I never saw use made of them against a tenant that does his duty.

19,087. Do you mean they are merely for protection against bad tenants?—Yes, against the running down of the land in case a tenant leaves.

19,088. Can tenants obtain copies of their agreements?—Oh, yes, they always obtain copies of the agreements.

19,089. In English and Welsh?—In English or Welsh. They are translated in case it is necessary.

19,090. Do you believe that the tenants understand their agreements?—Oh, they quite understand them.

19,091. How is the rent fixed?—At a lump sum.

19,092. Is there any uniformity in the rents of land of similar quality on the same or neighbouring estates?—Generally there is a good uniformity, taking into consideration the different situations of the estates and other different accommodations.

19,093. The rent of small holders, of course, as we have heard, is generally larger in proportion than that of large farmers?—I believe they are higher in proportion.

19,094. What do you suppose is the reason for that?—Well, I cannot give any reason in particular.

19,095. Your district, you say, is made up of lowland farms?—Yes.

19,096. Are any services other than the payment of rent rendered by the tenants?—None.

19,097. Are the holdings let to the highest bidder?—No, they are not let to the highest bidder, but I see that small landowners—farmers and tradesmen who own few patches of land—are very apt to follow that course, and consequently they get too high rents for it.

19,098. Has your rent ever been raised?—Yes, my rent has been raised in 1878, and not since.

19,099. Did you object to that?—Well, I could not object at that time; the time was good then.

19,100. And have you received any abatements?—We received abatements of 10 per cent. since 1884 every year, or rather 1885, I think—1884 or 1885, I would not be quite sure.

19,101. How about the local rates?—I think the local rates have increased the last 21 years.

19,102. Who pays that increase?—The occupiers.

19,103. Has any consolidation of farms taken place on those estates?—Not to my knowledge on these estates; but I know of consolidations in the district.

19,104. What do you consider—is it good for the district or harmful?—Well, I believe it is harmful to the district.

19,105. Causing less labour to be employed?—Yes; they do not keep labourers in proportion on these large farms.

19,106. Do you think sufficient labour is employed now on farms?—No, I do not think so on these large farms.

19,107. What would be the cause of that?—Well, I believe it is the low price of produce, and such things.

19,108. And the labour is too high?—Labour is too high.

19,109. What do you think the best size for a farm?—I should say from 80 to 120 acres would be sufficient for any man.

19,110. Which would provide best for their families?—I cannot say.

19,111. Which do you think stand the depressed times best?—I think that small farms stand depressed times best.

19,112. Why?—Because they depend mostly on dairy produce and store cattle and pigs and such things, while the big farmers are preparing for the other markets.

19,113. Do you know of any sub-letting?—Yes, I do know of some in the district.

19,114. For what reason?—Well, they sub-let pasture land that will graze better, and they get more for it than what they pay in proportion for the whole farm.

19,115. They get a very high rent when they sub-let, do they?—Yes, they get a high rent then.

19,116. Do you know of any instances where rent is paid the day it becomes due?—No, I do not know any instance of that.

19,117. What is the usual custom?—The usual time of paying rent is about January. The rent becomes due in November and May, and the usual time is January and July.

19,118. About two to three months' credit?—Yes.

19,119. Do you know any instances of tenants borrowing money to pay rent?—Yes, I know instances of money borrowed to pay rents by reason of poverty, and I know that sometimes money is borrowed as a matter of convenience for the time being.

19,120. What about labourers; are labourers scarce?—Good labourers are scarce.

19,121. Is the labour better than it used to be, or worse?—Oh, quite as good.

19,122. What have you got to say about the cultivation of the land?—I may say that land in some instances is insufficiently cultivated, owing to the high prices of labour and the low market value of all farm produce.

19,123. Is there any waste land in the district?—Not as far as I know.

19,124. Has arable land been laid down in pasture lately?—Yes.

19,125. To a large extent?—Yes, to a large extent.

19,126. What about root crops?—Root crops have increased to a large extent. I think it is beneficial in two ways; the crop itself is a good feeding for cattle and sheep, and the cultivation of the crop answers the purpose of fallowing the land.

19,127. Fallowing, of course, has gone out of fashion altogether?—The old-fashioned fallowing has gone out of use.

19,128. What have you got to say about improvements?—The improvements that are generally made in this district are new buildings, repairs, drainage, fences, gates and posts, and manures. The first three specified are generally made by the landlord in co-operation with the tenant in this manner. In new buildings the landlord pays for the timber and slates, and the tenant pays for all the work. In repairing the landlord does the outside repairs and the tenant the inside. In drainage the landlord pays for tiles or stones and the tenant for opening and closing the drains. As to fences, gates and posts, and manures, these come on the tenant himself. I know instances where the landlords undertake all expenses of these improvements, and, on the other side, I know instances where the tenants have themselves erected new buildings, &c., without any allowances.

19,129. Are you aware of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I am.

19,130. Does anybody attempt to contract out of that Act?—I do not know of any agreements to contract out of the custom of the country. If there are agreements contracting out of customary compensations, probably they do so because the Agricultural Holdings Act provides for compensation.

19,131. Have you anything to say about the custom of the country with regard to growing crops and so on?—The custom of the country with regard to growing crops, tillage, cultivation, and manure left by an outgoing tenant, is that the incoming tenant has to take them at a valuation according to the rule of valuing.

19,132. And he takes the hay and straw in stacks?—Yes, the hay and straw in stacks as well.

19,133. There are no sheep farms in this district, are there?—No.

19,134. How about the game?—In my district there is no trouble through game. With regard to ground game the landlord and tenant partake as provided by the Ground Game Act.

19,135. Do you know of any freeholders?—I do, a few.

19,136. Are they worse off, or better off, than tenant farmers?—In cases where the freehold is heavily mortgaged, I consider they are worse off than tenant farmers, inasmuch as they do not obtain abatements when times are hard.

19,137. Then about farmers' sons and daughters working?—Well, it is the custom for the children to work, to help on the farms.

19,138. Do they pay them any wages?—Small wages, in the way of keeping a few cattle or sheep or something of that kind.

19,139. Do you know of any farmers without sons who manage to pay their way?—Oh, I do, many.

19,140. With hired labour?—Yes.

19,141. How do the higher class of farmers bring up their children?—They bring them up in business, and put them on other farms.

19,142. What do you think about a Land Court?—Well, in my opinion, there is no necessity for such a thing in this part of the Principality, because, in the first place, the less interference between landlord and tenant I think the better it is; and I think the welfare of one is the welfare of the other; and the interest of both is so closely coupled together that a third party would not do any good to interfere. That is my opinion.

19,143. What do you believe to be the causes of the present low prices?—Well, what I believe to be the cause of the present low prices of all agricultural produce is, mainly, the great push of foreign goods on the market, and also the high rates of the railway companies for agricultural produce and manure, as well as scarcity of forage at home on account of an exceptionally dry season.

19,144. What remedies would you suggest?—Unless the British farmer is protected, in some way or other, against foreign competition, in my opinion there is a dull prospect awaiting him.

19,145. Did you hear the evidence of Mr. Hughes about the rates?—Yes.

19,146. Do you agree with him?—Yes, I quite agree with him.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,147. What is the acreage of the farm you farm yourself?—115 acres.

19,148. Pasture, corn, or what?—Some pasture and some corn—more pasture than corn.

19,149. You say your rent has been raised?—Yes, in 1878.

19,150. And it has been lowered since?—No.

19,151. You have had some abatements?—Yes every year since 1885.

19,152. How much per cent.?—10 per cent.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

19,153. Do you think that is sufficient to meet the times?—Well, I think it is very good.

19,154. Do you not think the depreciation in produce and the expense of farming would amount to more than that?—It may be, I am not quite sure about that.

19,155. Cattle are very low in our country you know that?—They are, very low.

19,156. Do you not think rents should be permanently reduced as well as raised in good times?—Perhaps so, if times will hold like this.

19,157. The rents come very heavy upon farmers?—They do. I think that trade and commerce should take part of the burden too.

19,158. Is it because there is no work for them that labourers are not employed to the extent they used to be?—No, there is plenty for them to do, but it is not quite so plentiful as it used to be.

19,159. Do you think the money is so plentiful to pay them?—No, I know that it is not.

19,160. You have not got a copy of your lease, you say?—I have not to-day.

19,161. What provision have you in your agreements for compensation for permanent improvements by the tenants?—I do not think we have any provisions in the agreements, but usually they get leases when they apply for them; that is very seldom.

19,162. You say that the landlord and the tenant unite in building and draining and that sort of thing?—They do, in co-operation together.

19,163. Then when a tenant leaves, what security has he to have anything for what he has done?—Well, it is very seldom they leave on the estates I am on.

19,164. Is there any goodwill ever given when they do leave?—It is not allowed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,165. Do you know of any tenant who has made a claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not know of any tenant who has made a claim.

19,166. Do the tenants generally know that the Agricultural Holdings Act has been passed for their benefit?—Yes, I believe they all know.

19,167. Can you assign any reason why they have not made a claim?—No. As I told you before, it is very seldom that a tenant leaves on these estates; he is succeeded by his son or some other near relation.

19,168. Are you speaking now to the estates that you are on only, or do you refer to others?—These two estates.

19,169. Are you able to speak as to other estates?—No, I am not going to speak of other estates.

19,170. You say that the local rates are increased, and that the increase has fallen on the tenant. Do you think that just—that the tenant should pay the increased rates?—I think it is very unjust.

19,171. What suggestion have you to offer to meet a case of that kind?—I suggest that it ought to go on trade and commerce as well as on the land, as the other witnesses have suggested.

19,172. Then practically you agree with Mr. Hughes?—Quite so.

19,173. I think you said that less labour is employed on the land now, but you did not say very distinctly whether you thought labour was too high or whether the circumstances of the farmer were too low to pay for it?—Well, it is a little of both, I should think.

19,174. You think that labour is rather too high?—I think labour is rather too high, comparing with other things in the market at present.

19,175. Do you know anything about the standard of comfort among the labourers?—No.

19,176. Do you think they are too comfortable?—Oh, I think they are.

19,177. You do?—Yes, I do, to some extent.

19,178. In what way do you mean?—Do you say too comfortable?

19,179. Yes?—I did not quite understand you. I did not mean that. I think they are comfortable. They are better off than farmers nowadays.

19,180. But if their wages were reduced, they would be less comfortable?—Very likely, yes. They ought to take a share like the farmers do.

19,181. You think they ought to be a little less comfortable than they are?—Yes, they ought to take a share, whatever.

19,182. I think you say that there is no waste land in your neighbourhood?—Well, as far as I know, there is none.

19,183. Is there anything in the shape of marsh land in your neighbourhood—wet land?—There is, not far from my place, but it has been drained lately to a good extent.

19,184. Is there any marsh land that is completely worthless?—No, not quite so. They make use of it as a sort of grazing for horses in summer time.

19,185. But that land could be improved if it was drained and dried more effectually?—It is quite dry, only it is too boggy.

19,186. Too boggy?—Yes, too marshy—too much of a bog. It is quite dry.

19,187. Do you think it is not possible to make it more profitable than it is?—Well, I cannot say that very well.

19,188. Is it difficult to get the landlords to drain marshy ground of that sort?—No; it is the landlord that did this.

19,189. Can you get a sufficient fall in these marshy places for drains?—Well, there is a good fall in the land I am speaking of, a very good fall, but generally there is not.

19,190. Do you think that it would be an improvement to the neighbourhood if the Government, say, were able to advance money at a low rate of interest to different landowners who had land in these marshy parts?—I should think it would be a great benefit.

19,191. To the neighbourhood?—To the neighbourhood in general.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

19,192. And to the farmers in particular?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

19,193. You have not put in a copy of the agreement will you do so?—I will; to-morrow.

19,194. Have you got the agreements printed in Welsh or in English?—Not in Welsh—in English.

19,195. Is a copy always given to each tenant when he signs?—Yes.

19,196. You say they can have it if they like, but is it as a matter of fact always offered to them?—Yes, they get a copy; they are always told they can have it.

19,197. Do you think as a rule the tenants thoroughly understand the different clauses in the agreements?—Well, when a tenant requests a translation he gets it.

19,198. Who does the translation for the tenant?—It is the agent's clerk.

19,199. There is rather a responsibility about that, is there not? Suppose some few words were to be misinterpreted; would it not be better to have it printed in Welsh? Then you would have the thing before you properly without having to translate?—That is very likely.

19,200. We have found in a great many estates that they have the agreement printed in Welsh as well as in English, and therefore there is no risk of a few words being put wrong by an interpreter. Now I think you say that in your opinion the tenants under these estates are as safe under agreements as they would be under lease?—Yes, with regard to the tenants on the estates I represent.

19,201. The agreement is yearly, of course, subject to a certain notice?—Yes, yearly.

19,202. How can they be as safe if the landlord decided to sell the property?—Well, I have not seen a case of that kind.

19,203. But such a thing might happen, might it not, and the complaints we have had before us seem to hinge to some extent upon that—that after improvements have been effected sales have been made, and the sitting tenant has had to buy the place at a much higher rate because he has put money and labour there himself. Then again, the landlord may die, and there may be a change of tenancy or something from that. Do you consider, taking those two things into account, that a tenant is as safe under an agreement as he would be under a longish lease?—There is an advantage to be under an agreement more than a lease, I am sure.

19,204. Then you do not attach much importance to fixity of tenure, that we have heard so much about?—No.

19,205. I think you said that labourers were scarce; that was your remark?—Well, good labourers are scarce.

19,206. Is it because cottages are scarce; do you think a few more cottages about the farms would fix labourers a little more on the land?—It would in my opinion.

19,207. You think it would?—It would in my opinion.

19,208. Then I think you spoke about the high railway rates. Do you know whether those rates are more than the railway companies can charge under their present maximum powers?—Well, I understand that we British farmers have to pay (so I have been told) for carrying beasts from Liverpool to London more than the Americans pay from the United States to London through Liverpool.

19,209. There are no doubt inequalities of that kind, more or less, I daresay, but I was then more particularly alluding to local rates—the rates, say, from this particular district. Do you consider those rates high?—I do, especially on manures and farm produce.

19,210. Have they gone up lately?—They have gone up, but they have come down to the old standard again.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,211. You were talking just now about cottages. You heard what a gentleman this morning said about cottages, that they could be built for 60*l.* Have you had any experience with regard to cottages? Have you built any on either of the estates you speak of?—I do not think that a cottage could be built for such a sum as that—a good cottage. From 80*l.* to 100*l.* I should say.

19,212. What sort of cottage would that be?—A four-roomed cottage.

19,213. You do not think you would build cottages such as he described for 60*l.* now?—No; those belong to the old days.

19,214. I did not quite understand you with regard to rates and taxes just now; who is it that escapes rates and taxes now?—I believe trade.

19,215. Suppose a man has a shop; he has got to pay rates and taxes, has he not?—Yes, but not to the same extent as the farmer.

19,216. Not to a sufficient extent?—No.

19,217. Or suppose he is a manufacturer, he has got to pay rates and taxes?—Yes.

19,218. You do not think he has to pay enough?—I am of that opinion.

19,219. You say the tenants very seldom leave, but we have heard something of sales of landed property in this county. Does not that come to much the same thing, so far as they are concerned?—Yes, but I mean on these estates that I was speaking of.

19,220. But you said just now, and I understood that to be a general statement of your opinion, that the interest of the landlord and the tenant is the same, and that what is good for one is good for the other. Did you mean that only to apply to those two estates, or did you mean it as a general statement of your opinion?—Well, it ought to be applied to every estate. I think it is.

19,221. You have heard the evidence which we had to-day about those men who thought they ought to have had compensation, one of them to the extent of 2,000, and another a good deal, and so on in various degrees. You heard that evidence, did you not?—Yes, I did.

19,222. How would your principle work out there?—Well, I know there are black sheep among them here and there.

19,223. But some of those were on estates which I understood to be well managed. You would not call them black sheep, would you. They were great landlords of Class A., as they were called, I think, some of them. Do you wish to give an opinion upon that point?—No, I cannot give any opinion upon it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,224. Is it the custom of the landlords to do the permanent repairs in the part of the country you are acquainted with?—Yes, it is the custom on this estate. They are building the buildings and the tenant has to do the cartage of the materials.

19,225. It seems to be a common custom in those parts that we have been to?—Yes.

19,226. Does the converse of that ever occur, that the tenant is allowed to do the permanent repairs?—Well, it is allowed.

19,227. And is permission applied for under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not think there is a case of that kind under the Act.

19,228. Then permission is granted?—No, they do not apply for it. They do not refer to the Act at all.

19,229. They do not apply under the Act?—No.

19,230. Then when the landlord gives permission does not that constitute a certain amount of tenant right?—Yes.

19,231. In your opinion it would?—Yes.

19,232. Is there a custom of the county in regard to the unexhausted improvements paid for by an incoming to an outgoing tenant?—It is not the custom of the county. With some things there is.

19,233. Is that custom looked upon as satisfactory?—I believe it is; I do not hear much complaint.

19,234. You spoke of consolidation of farms; you thought it an evil?—Yes.

19,235. Can you give us your opinion as to how it can be prevented?—I think that the buildings are going down, and they put them together like that.

19,236. That is the cause of it?—Yes.

19,237. Can you suggest any way by which it could be prevented?—No, I cannot suggest anything.

19,238. Do the tenant farmers of Anglesey avail themselves at all of the University College of Bangor and of the agricultural training there?—Yes, I understand they do now.

19,239. Then with regard to the rates. The 10 per cent. abatement, I think you told us, has been given each year since the year 1886?—1885.

19,240. Has that been a general abatement to all the tenants?—To all the tenants; everyone on the two estates.

19,241. Have they applied to the Assessment Committee to reduce their rating in consequence?—No, I do not think anybody has applied to the Assessment Committee.

19,242. Has the Assessment Committee done anything without application to reduce their rates?—No, they do not do anything without application.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,243. You have had some demonstrations and lectures on dairying in this part, have you not?—Yes.

19,244. Have they been a success?—To some extent, I believe.

19,245. Did the people attend pretty well?—Yes, there were good attendances.

19,246. The women attended well?—The women I do not know much about.

19,247. Was there any improvement made in the butter making?—I cannot say that.

19,248. What kind of dairies have you on the estate you represent?—The old-fashioned way.

19,249. Not large enough for modern appliances, I suppose?—No, they are not.

19,250. You have some experiments in this neighbourhood as well in agriculture—on growing mangolds and turnips?—Yes.

19,251. How far from this place are they?—In farms round here, in many places.

19,252. Are there any that we could see, within reach here?—I do not think there are any this year so far as I know, but there used to be experiments made in late years.

19,253. Have they been a success; do you think they have taught the farmers anything?—Well, I think they have to some extent.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,254. You say, Mr. Griffiths, that the interests of the farmer and the landlord are identical?—I do.

19,255. So far as you as a tenant are concerned what is your interest, so far as the rent is concerned?—I do not quite understand the question.

19,256. I will put it in this way: Is it not your interest to have the rent as low as you can?—It is.

19,257. What is the interest of the landlord so far as the rent is concerned—to have as much as he can, is it not?—Yes.

19,258. How can you say that the interests are identical?—If the tenant will go back the landlord will, because he depends on it. That is what I mean—he depends on the tenant. He depends on land through the tenant.

19,259. Is that your explanation?—Yes, and in that way I think they are.

19,260. Do you think that your farm would let for more money?—Yes, it would.

19,261. Do you feel that you are living on the generosity of your landlord?—We agree together very well.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

19,262. Will you answer my question. Do you feel that you are living on the generosity of your landlord if you think that your farm would command a higher rent?—Well, I do to some extent—yes.

19,263. I will ask you this question: which would you rather receive, 10*l.* as charity or 10*l.* as a matter of justice?—I do not know; I would prefer charity as well as justice.

19,264. Would you rather have charity?—Charity as well as justice.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,265. You were asked just now with regard to improving marshy ground; have you ever seen basic slag applied to that?—No, not applied to that land.

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,266. There is one question I should like to put with regard to what Mr. Richard Jones has asked you; can you not get justice from your landlord?—I can, and more than that too, I get charity.

19,267. These questions are handed in by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "What district do you "speak for?"—Tregaian district within 2 miles from here.

19,268. "During the last ten years how many "changes of tenancy have taken place in this "district?"—On the estate?

19,269. He says "In this district"?—I cannot say.

19,270. Then you cannot name the farms or the owners thereof, I suppose?—No.

19,271. "In the agreement in force on the "estates of which you are sub-agent what are the "clauses as to manure and rabbits?"—According to the Ground Game Act; as provided by that Act.

19,272. That is as to the rabbits. What are they as to manures?—The manures they take at a valuation.

19,273. You say you had your first remission of rent in 1885?—Yes.

19,274. "Do you consider that the year 1883, "the year from which the reports handed in by "Mr. George Owen were taken, is well chosen in "order to show an increase of rent?"—I have no recollection.

19,275. I do not think you quite understand the question. Mr. Owen handed in a return just now of the years from 1883 to the present year showing the different landowners' remission of rent and so forth. I think this question is put in order to know whether you consider those fair years to show a decrease of rent?—Oh, yes.

19,276. You think them fair years?—Yes.

19,277. "Do you think that as a rule the "tenants get compensation for improvements "made upon their farms?"—Yes.

19,278. "When estates are sold do you agree "that the purchase money includes the tenants' "improvements?" Do you agree that the tenants buy their improvements over again?—In some cases they do.

19,279. These questions are by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Were rents generally raised in the district in 1878?"—Yes, about that year.

19,280. "Have rents been in many cases reduced since that year?"—I do not know of any.

19,281. "Do you not think that in view of the agricultural depression rents should have been reduced?"—Well, I should think so.

19,282. "In cases where buildings are made in co-operation by the landlord and tenant, is the tenant paid compensation for his share in the building?—He does not take much share—as I told you, the cartage of the materials, that is all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,283. Before you go further let me ask one question upon that. In cases where a building is erected jointly by the tenant and by the landlord: say, where the landlord supplies the material and the tenant finds the labour, do you know of cases where rent has been increased on buildings so erected?—No, I do not recollect any at present.

Lord Kenyon.

19,284. These questions are also by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Do landlords give their "tenants permission in writing for the im- "provements made by them in connection with "building so as to enable tenants to claim "compensation under the Agricultural Holdings "Act 1883?"—No, I do not think they do. There is no application.

19,285. They have not been applied for?—No, not according to the Act.

19,286. "You make a complaint as to railway "rates: would you not suggest that the "Government or some tribunal should step in "and intervene between the railway companies "and the public who send goods by them?"—I cannot suggest anything.

19,287. "If you are of opinion that the "Government should do this, would it not be "well that they should also intervene between "landlord and tenant where complaints are "made as to unfair and excessive rates?" You answer the first question in the negative, so that I will not pursue that.

19,287*a*. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "You stated that "there was no waste land in your district, have "you recently or at any time, and when, bought "common land at Rhosmeirch?"—There is common land there too.

19,288. Did you buy any?—Yes, I did.

19,289. "How many acres?"—About 18, or a little more.

19,290. "Have you any objection to state the price you paid?"—450*l.*

19,291. Is there any common land remaining at Rhosmeirch?—No, only just about half-an-acre or an acre I may say, and that is a rocky place.

19,292. "You have stated that sons follow their fathers in the tenancy on the estate of which you are sub-agent. Do you know Henlla farm?"—Yes, I do.

19,293. "Is it on the Tregaian Estate?"—Yes.

19,294. "Was not William Jones, the son of William Jones, late tenant of Henllan, refused the tenancy?"—No. He was on another farm on the same estate.

19,295. "Was not the farm given to a tenant who after receiving the tenancy became a Churchman and a Tory?"—I do not know.

19,296. I will repeat the question—"Was not "the farm given to a tenant who after receiving "the tenancy became a Churchman and a "Tory?"—I know nothing about his political views.

19,297. You do not know what they were before or after?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,298. You do not know what they were before?—No, not before either. He was a stranger to me.

19,299. Question by Mr. J. S. Laurie: "How "long has the common land at Rhosmeirch "been enclosed?"—I cannot say.

19,300. Can you not remember when you bought it?—Oh, yes, it is only about four or five years ago that I bought it.

19,301. It was enclosed long before?—Yes, I may say it was enclosed 100 years ago.

19,302. The following is a question handed in by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Have you any com- "plaints to make of trespassers over your land, "such as mushroom gatherers and others, and do "you think the law of trespass wants strength- "ening?"—No, I do not think there are any.

19,303. The following question is by Mr. Vincent: "Which would you rather have: 10*l.* "as a matter of charity, or 10*l.* the proceeds of "confiscation?"—Perhaps you would rather not answer the question.—No, I cannot.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

19,304. [The following statement of the witness was read:

"Evidence of John Williams, Tregof Isaf, Cemaes.

"I am a tenant farmer and offer evidence relative to a farm called Cromlech, in the parish of Llanfechell, formerly in my occupation. The owner is Mr. G. J. Roberts, J.P., Trefarthen, Anglesey. See 20,427.

"I became tenant of Cromlech about the year 1865, when the house, the outbuildings, and the land were in a very poor condition. I spent hundreds of pounds erecting scores of roods (eight yards) of stone walls, hundreds of roods of draining, and cultivating seven acres of gorse land which had not been ploughed before. The farm consisted of about 150 acres, and the rent was about 160*l.*, but it was impossible to get it to pay. Portions of the farm had been let previously as accommodation land, and on that account the rent was higher than that of any other farm in the district. No one had previously been able to hold the farm for more than four years. At that period I went to Mr. Roberts, the landlord, to Crug, Carnarvonshire, and was for a long time trying to induce him to reduce the rent, as it was impossible to raise the rent from the farm. The prices of cattle and corn were very low at the time. He positively declined to grant any reduction, and I gave notice that I would therefore quit the farm. In a few months afterwards he let the farm to another tenant for 50*l.* a year less than I paid him. He asked from me 10*l.* compensation, as he said I was leaving the farm in a bad condition. He had never seen the farm before I had gone there and improved it, because it was only a few years before I left that he had purchased the freehold of the farm for about 1,600*l.*, and he came into possession of it about two or three years later. He therefore received interest of about 10 per cent. for his money. My neighbours testified that I had greatly improved the holding, and I had done that without receiving a penny towards the expense."]

Lord Kenyon.

19,305. Is that your statement, and is it correct?—Yes.

19,306. You say your landlord gave 1,600*l.* for the farm; is that so?—A little over 1,600*l.*

19,307. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Griffith Jones Roberts, Trefarthen.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,308. You consider 10 per cent. rather an unusual return on land, do you not?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

19,309. Do you know what rent is being paid for that now?—It was reduced 50*l.* to the new tenant, but he was to pay an increased rent after the lapse of five years of 20*l.*, I think.

19,310. Then the present rent, you say, and for the next four or five years, is 110*l.*, is it?—Yes, I suppose so.

19,311. Was it said that this farm was let in bad condition?—He tried to say so.

19,312. Could your neighbours bear testimony to the fact that you kept the farm up in good order?—Yes, in a very much better condition than I got it.

19,313. Have you given an estimate of the money you spent on the farm when you were in occupation?—I have the estimate in my pocket.

19,314. Could we see that?—Yes, that is part of it; I have much more. (The witness handed in a document.)

Lord Kenyon.

19,315. When did you leave your farm?—1880.

Mr. Grove.

19,316. Do you say that is only a portion of it?—Yes.

19,317. Then although you say you spent 170*l.* in improvements, when you left they asked you for 10*l.* compensation, did they?—Yes, they did. These improvements, represented by the 100*l.*, are to be seen there now, but there are scores of pounds spent on improvements which cannot be seen as clearly as these.

19,318. What do you estimate the other part of your improvements at? How much would the total be?—150*l.* more than the 100*l.*

19,319. That is 250*l.* then?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 20,447.

Mr. RICHARD JONES called and examined, partly through an interpreter.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"The evidence of Richard Jones, Tyddyn Hic, Gaerwen.

"I am a farmer, and occupy the above place. My father and mother occupied Ynysferw, Llanfihangel Esceifiog, a farm of about 60 acres, which was owned by the late Mr. Trygarn Griffith, Garreglwyd. My mother died leaving nine children. My father married a second time, and had five children by his second wife, making 14 children. As the place consisted of very poor land, my father had to work very hard himself, and was obliged to work the children also, so that none of them had a day's schooling. The place was sold on six months' notice about the year 1856, and my father had to leave without any compensation for anything. My stepmother is still alive, being over 80 years old, and could prove these facts.

"My father then had a small farm in the parish of Llanddaniel, under the late Mr. Bulkeley Hughes, Plas Coch. Nine years later this place again was sold, and my father had to leave this again, without any compensation as before. The House of Commons then knew but very little about Wales, its inhabitants, or their troubles, and possibly cared less.

"I know of several others of my relations that have suffered severely from different agents."

Lord Kenyon.

19,320. Is that your statement, and is it correct?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,321. I see your grievance is much the same as what we have had before, but here, at the end you say that you know of several others of your relations that have suffered severely from different agents?—Yes, two brothers of my mother were the first two. My grandfather lived on a farm on the estate of Lord Boston. There were two sons, aged about 28 or 30 years, and they were very anxious to stay at their old home, and if they had been short of money, there were plenty of their neighbours who were willing to stand by them. Do you wish to know the date?

19,322. Yes.—I cannot say the year, but it is far back, about 49 years ago. I am not sure of the year. There was a very bad agent on Lord Boston's estate at that time. He was a curse to the country. My two uncles had to leave the farm, because they had not thought of the 100*l.* It is a saying in the district to this day, that no one could ever get a farm in those days, unless he made a present of 100*l.* to that agent.

Lord Kenyon.

19,323. That was 49 years ago?—Yes, as near as I can say; just about that year.

Mr. Grove.

19,324. I suppose you confine it to that agent; you do not want us to suppose that it was general?—It is only said as regards that agent. The present agent is a pattern to Wales; he is that exactly, I can assure you. Two other farms on the same estate, and in the same parish, were treated in exactly the same way very nearly about the same time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,325. When a farm becomes vacant, are there many farmers after it?—I do not think so, and I do not care very much. I do not watch those things. I am getting too old.

19,326. Are you a retired farmer?—No, I am still farming a small farm.

19,327. Do you know of many retired farmers in the sense that the word "retired" is generally used, namely, that they have made a fortune, and given up farming?—No, I do not. The farmers are in a very serious plight. I was on the railway for 26 years, and lived by the sweat of my brow.

19,328. What did you do on the railway?—I was foreman platelayer.

Mr. Grove.

19,329. Do you complain that your father was turned out of two farms, one after the other, after spending a lot of money on improvements, without compensation of any sort?—I am not going to say that. My father worked very hard to keep himself and his family. He improved the farm as much as he could, and in those years I do not think he considered he ought to receive any compensation. They were quiet times in those days. It is very different now.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,330. It was found difficult to please that agent whom you mentioned just now?—I was only a boy at that time, I am now 67 years of age; but I remember the man very well.

19,331. We heard the other day from one tenant that there was a quartette of men that the tenant farmer had to please—the keeper and three others. You have not a keeper to please, have you?—No, he has nothing to do with my home; I was not on his estate.

19,332. Then, the next was the clergyman?—Oh, the clergyman; if the landlords got peace from the clergymen I think it would be very quiet even now. I do not think there is anyone who influences the landlords more than the clergy, although I cannot prove it, and I do not intend to. The clergy influence the landlords more than any other class.

19,333. In what way?—Up to about 25 years ago there were not many of them in the country, and they were quite asleep. Canon Ryle said four years ago: "I thank the Lord for the work "that has been done by the Nonconformists, "when the Church ministry were asleep." He said it in a public meeting, and I read it from different papers.

19,334. But then that sort of clergyman did not trouble you?—They were sleeping, and then they were leaving the farmers and all alone; but it is quite different now. They are sticking curates everywhere about the country. In my time, when I was young and living in different parishes here with farmers, at the time going about the country carting lime, and so on, I knew a good many churches, and I was close to two parish churches; there was not a congregation to be seen at all, only the parson, a curate, and the sexton. That was the rule about 25 years ago, and what wakened them then was the cloud that Mr. Gladstone raised in Ireland to disestablish the Church, and it was no bigger than the palm of the hand, as that boy observed in the dry weather.

19,335. It is since then that the clergy have been troubling you?—Since about 25 years ago they have become quite mad; they do not know what to do. With regard to the landlords, I do not want to run them down at all.

19,336. I was going to ask about the fourth in the quartette which I mentioned just now, the landlord. You are satisfied with the landlords?—Yes, as a rule, because it is very easy for me, as they have not much to do with me. It is very easy for me to be satisfied, because as to the tenancy of my little place, the way I did was this: I am living now with a second wife, I buried the other wife in Carnarvonshire when I was on the railway, and I happened to be having nearly 1*l.* a week for my maintenance, and there was only myself, so I looked for another, and found her in yonder little place, and I married her, and I am as happy now as I ever was, and the tenancy is for her lifetime at the rent of 50*l.* per annum.

19,337. Having brought you to that happy position I shall not trouble you with another question, I think?—Thank you.

Sir John Llewellyn.

19,338. Has any agent ever asked you for a premium on taking the farm?—I never took a farm.

19,339. I thought you said you had a small farm?—I married one who had a farm.

Lord Kenyon.

19,340. I have one or two questions to put to you which are handed in. One is from Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Do you know of the evic- "tion of Mrs. Parry from Llyslew?"—My Lord, I know a good deal. I knew her from her childhood; I used to play with her. She is a cousin of mine, and I was brought up close to her, and, of course, we used to play together when children, my Lord, and I am glad, as St. Paul said before Festus, to appear before you on that account.

19,341. What about her eviction?—She has been very severely treated, my Lord. I could say a great deal, but I expected this case would be mentioned by someone more able than I am; still I am so proud of giving vent to my feelings. As I said on the paper there were different relations of mine that have suffered severely; I meant her, and I heartily thank you for just mentioning it.

19,342. It is Mr. Llewellyn Jones who asked the question, and not I. Now, Mr. Vincent wishes to know "what was the name of that bad agent you spoke of"?—It was the late agent.

19,343. What was his name?—His name is rotten, as I tell you, but I will give it to you. "Haine," I believe his name was, and it has been said ever since that two gentlemen from this country saw that he was treating the farmers so cruelly, that they let Lord Boston know. The present Lord Boston is the fourth to live on that estate in my time, and his Lordship at that time, I believe, was over 30 years without coming to Anglesey at all. The agent could do as he liked then, of course, and Lord Boston was informed by these two gentlemen of the agent, and of his doings, and he sent him to his own place, as Judas was sent in the old time.

19,344. His name was Haine?—Yes.

19,345. Mr. Owen Wynne asks: "Where is "the agent now who you said was the curse of "the country?"—Well, he is in his own place, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 10.15.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Llangefni, Anglesey, Wednesday, 11th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.

MR. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Chairman.

The Commissioners request all the Welsh-speaking witnesses to be good enough to verify their statements before one of the Commissioners who is able to speak Welsh, so that we may be perfectly satisfied that the evidence read out in English before the Commissioners is correct in every particular. I need hardly repeat that these verifications of the statements of Welsh witnesses are held in an open Court, as it were, in another room certainly, but that room is open to the Press and public.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. THOMAS PRICHARD called and examined.

Chairman.

19,346. You are agent for the Bodorgan estate, and to whom does that belong?—Sir George Meyrick.

19,347. And other properties in Anglesey?—Yes.

19,348. You are a farmer, landowner, late county councillor, solicitor, clerk to magistrates, tax commissioner, chairman of Board of Guardians, Rural Sanitary Authority, and Assessment Committee of the Anglesey Union, I understand?—I am, and a member of the Joint Education Committee.

19,349. What do you give evidence generally for?—For the western part of the county.

19,350. And Sir George Meyrick's property in particular?—Yes, quite so.

19,351. What property has Sir George Meyrick?—It is 16,000 acres.

19,352. I have it 17,000?—It is, roughly speaking, 17,000 acres perhaps; call it that—with what is held in hand.

19,353. You are the steward of two manors?—Two manors.

19,354. Are there any courts held?—Yes.

19,355. Quit rents are received, and no services are exacted, except attendance. Is that so?—Quite so. The officers are steward, constable, and high bailiff. There are no copyholds in Anglesey.

19,356. What do you say about the character of ownership?—I say that the character of ownership per se does not affect the occupation or cultivation; more depends on the pecuniary circumstances and the character of the occupier. Neither an encumbered owner nor an impecunious tenant can occupy or cultivate advantageously. Per contra, no difference can be seen between occupation and cultivation if there are well-to-do, industrious, thrifty freeholders and tenants.

Chairman—continued.

19,357. Can you say whether there have been any recent enclosures?—The most recent are on the Bodafon Mountain.

19,358. What year was that?—1868, about. Then Llanfechell in 1866, and Gwalchmai in 1870.

19,359. What were they?—All wild mountain land that had been pared, heather and small gorse, and most of the soil had been taken off for burning. There is no fuel in the county.

19,360. Who lived upon it?—There were a few squatters there.

19,361. What happened to them?—I had nothing to do with them.

19,362. You cannot give evidence about them?—From hearsay, I believe some of the very old ones considered their place as their own freehold, but those of the more recent ones had to pay, and I know some instances.

19,363. Were they evicted or taken on as tenants?—They bought their places. The Crown was the lord of the manor, or the Woods and Forests; at least they claimed them. No one admitted their right, but they sold everything, whether it belonged to them or not, and reserved all the minerals. There was nothing but minerals; it was bare rock, and they sold the whole thing.

19,364. Have recreation grounds or allotments for the use of the labouring poor been apportioned?—There were no recreation grounds.

19,365. There were none?—There were no people to recreate themselves scarcely.

19,366. Were there any squatters' cottages. Have dwellings been erected on the waste?—I have answered that, I think.

Chairman—continued.

See 27,737. 19,367. You only know from hearsay?—I know some people paid. The people of Gwalchmai built a chapel, and had to pay the Woods and Forests 23*l.* for it.

19,368. They built a chapel, and when this was enclosed they had to pay 23*l.* to the Crown, you say?—23*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.* to the Crown.

19,369. What do you know about the commons?—There is a common at Aberffraw and Tywyn Trewan and Tywyn y llyn; they were all See 18,560. mentioned yesterday. These commons are all sandy waste, and if they were regulated under the Regulation of Commons Act, they might be made much more useful and advantageous than they are. There is no stint. All kinds of animals are turned out. The manor courts used to punish for turning out animals suffering from scab, &c. This is now done under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts. The commons would become much better pasture if the bent were allowed to grow, but it is the custom to cut it for making mats and basses, &c.; it is cut under the running root-stems which bind the wild sand together so that the surface is loosened and swept away by the wind, and no sward is formed. There is no Statute here to prevent this cutting as there is in Lancashire. Three classes of persons are interested. First, stockowners; second, matmakers; third, poachers.

19,370. How do you mean the poachers?—People wandering about catching rabbits and things.

19,371. Do you call them poachers?—Certainly, my Lord. The sporting belongs to the lord of the manor; therefore they are poachers. It is impossible to prevent these interests from clashing, and I proposed to set the Regulations of Commons Acts in force, but objection was made and no steps were taken. The rights are vested in tenants of the Manors of Aberffraw and Treberfedd, but are exercised mostly by cottagers who have only gardens and allotments. Then there is an impression that the commons belong to the commoners at large, to the poor, and that the "public" have rights on them, but the soil belongs to the lord of the manor; the rights of common pasturage, &c., belong to the owners and their tenants in respect of their land ownership. Lessees and yearly tenants have no right of common except through their landlords. As a matter of fact, all the people that exercise these rights are tenants of the manor and are cottagers.

19,372. Are there no public rights on the common?—Rights of way. I know of no other rights.

19,373. No public rights of cutting turf, for instance?—Only those that belong to the manor; but people do carry sand from here.

19,374. Are the commons advantageous or do they form a drawback to adjoining farms?—A great drawback, because owing to trespass by sheep it is impossible to fence against them. People keep too many sheep; they are half-famished and break out into adjoining farms.

Chairman—continued.

19,375. You think the effect on the general condition of sheep farming is bad?—It is bad in that neighbourhood, no doubt.

19,376. How many large owners of 1,500 acres and upwards are there in the county?—About 20.

19,377. Are the estates mostly scattered?—Mostly scattered; all the larger owners reside a considerable portion of the year in this or in the adjoining county. As a rule it is easier to let farms on large estates as they are managed on general principles, and they are easier managed, and the same farms have been kept by the same family for generations. There is a sort of family feeling between the landlord and tenant on the whole estate.

19,378. There are yearly tenancies, I take it?—All yearly; one lease only.

19,379. Does religion, politics, or language make any difference?—It does not make the slightest difference on a large estate. The tenants are chosen either because of relationship to former tenants on their merits as good farmers, and as having means, or as having been good farm servants.

19,380. Do you know anything about the special training of agents?—I can speak to no other but myself. My grandfather was the agent before me of the same estate—going back the last 100 years.

19,381. What is the usual date of entry?—The 13th of November.

19,382. Has there been any demand for leases?—No; none.

19,383. Is there any difference in the condition of the leaseholders and yearly tenants?—There are no leaseholders; but all the old leaseholds were very badly farmed.

19,384. There are no cases of hardship?—That is so.

19,385. You say changes of tenancy are not very frequent?—No; if anything, less frequent in prosperous times. Small tenants seek for larger farms.

19,386. You compensate if you take over fields?—Always.

19,387. And if there is any mining or brick fields you compensate as well?—Yes

19,389. And a great many of the oppressive clauses taken out?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

19,390. The oppressive clauses are not used?—No, never; and they might as well go out. They are only an encumbrance. There is another agreement I will put in. We let land and a place for a cow—the 3 acres and a cow business; that is more simple, and it has been going on for five or six years.

19,391. Does this work well?—Yes.

19,392. You are satisfied with it?—Quite.

19,393. The amount of rent of course varies?—Very much.

19,394. Are the tenants usually given a copy of the agreement or lease, or if Welsh speaking are their contents explained to them?—The large tenants have plain copies, and anyone who asks me has one; but, as a rule, I find they are generally lost.

19,395. Still you supply them?—Yes; and if they do lose them, they get them again. They are explained in the Welsh language. I object to their being translated into the Welsh language, for this reason. I recollect a Welsh will case, in which there was a great dispute about the meaning of certain words in the Welsh language, and it cost more than the property was worth. I was in Court, and I could give the words which caused the difficulty if necessary.

19,396. Small estates are let at higher rental than the large ones?—As a rule they are.

19,397. And the rent of the small tenantry is higher per acre than on the larger farms?—Owing to the buildings; and houses cost more in proportion to the acreage of the farm than they do on a large farm.

19,398. Is the market value greater?—I should like to say this. The estate was valued in the year 1806 to begin with. It was on long leases for lives and years; they began to expire in 1842, and they kept on expiring until 1860. Since then, the whole estate has been valued on the same basis by a competent valuer in the year 1871, so that the rent is as uniform as a man could make it. The average rent of the estate was 16*s.* 7*d.* an acre all through the whole estate; then there is a deduction of 20 per cent. now, so that really the land is let for 14*s.* 3*d.* an acre all through the estate.

19,399. Is the right of pasturage over a common taken into account when the rent is fixed?—No, as it is seldom exercised except by cottagers, and an adjoining common is a nuisance.

19,400. Are there any services other than payment rendered by tenants?—No.

19,401. Nothing?—There were mill services formerly reserved, I suppose as an old remnant of the manor tenure.

19,402. How are the rents fixed?—By a valuation of every field on the estate.

19,403. What happens when a tenant complains of his rent being too high?—Sometimes he gets it reduced, sometimes he does not

19,404. Have you had an arbitrator?—I have had an arbitrator, and the arbitrator decided the rent was not too high, and the landlord paid all the expenses. I believe he is in court now.

19,405. Have rents been raised generally, or in "individual cases"?—They were all gone through; some few were raised and some few lowered in 1871, because there has been no real valuation since 1806. As a rule they were raised. The valuation showed an increase of 12 per cent., but they were let under the valuation by 4 per cent.

19,406. Have any permanent reductions been made?—Permanent reductions were made on all the mills, because mill property has become good for nothing.

19,407. Have there been any temporary abatements?—Reductions were made in places referred to yesterday. At a place called Tyddynhowel the rent was 128*l.*, now let for 110*l.*, 18*l.* reduction. Another place was reduced from 210*l.* to 190*l.*, and another place 20*l.*, and another 23*l.*

19,408. On Sir George Meyrick's estate what reductions have been made?—1883 to 1884 5 per cent.; 1884 to 1885, 5 per cent.; 1885 to 1886, 10 per cent.; 1886 to 1887, 15 per cent.; 1887 to 1888, 15 per cent.; 1888 to 1889, 10 per cent.; 1889 to 1890, 5 per cent.; 1890 to 1891, 10 per cent.; 1891 to 1892, 20 per cent., and there is to be another 20 per cent. this year. I should say that the rents are received only once a year, viz., in January. They are due in September and received in January. They had a notice two months beforehand of the reduction of 10 per cent., and they get two or three months' notice of the amounts to be reduced now as they had in other cases.

19,409. How soon after it falls due is the rent usually paid?—It is reserved as a forehand rent, payable quarterly, and the tithe is condered as part of the rent payable to the landlord. It is always received in January once a year, except the cottagers, who pay twice a year.

19,410. Do you think the tenants like to have the rent payable once a year?—They think it is as good as a reduction of 10 per cent. in the rent; but I do not see how they make it out. You had better ask the farmers themselves, as they can tell you better than I can.

19,411. From your experience do you think it is a boon?—They say so.

19,412. Now what do you say about the effect of the preferential claim?—The farmers in Anglesey, at any rate, do not get credit unless they have cleared their rent; but we always require sureties for various reasons, first, because the rent is left standing in their hands so long, and it may be a question whether you could distrain for more than 12 months. There is never any difficulty about it. It is the regular custom of the country, a guarantee of character and capital, and saves distraining.

19,413. You have told us about the tithes. Have the local rates increased?—I have a return, which I will hand in.

Rateable value - -	49,812	50,205	56,634	56,147	55,584	55,866	55,899

You will observe there are four unions. The rate of the one I live in was 4*s.* 9⅜*d.* in 1869, and it has been reduced 1*s.* 10¹¹⁄₁₂*d.* The rateable value has increased from 49,000*l.* to 55,000*l.*, roughly speaking. I say that land is much over-burdened in comparison with funded property, presuming everyone should contribute to taxation according to his means. The Property Tax Schedule A. should be raised, not on the gross income as at present (no deductions are now allowed for repairs, management, &c.) but on the net income as in Schedules D. and E. Professions deduct rent, office expenses, rates and taxes, labour and materials, and they get off 25 per cent. as compared with land. I should like to say further upon that point; this is presuming a man should pay to local taxation according to his means and according to his profits, and not merely according to his occupation. That is the argument. I say if a farmer pays 300*l.* rent, he is supposed to make a profit of one half according to the Income Tax Schedule B., that is 150*l.*; so that take a farm about 400 acres the rateable value after deducting the 10 per cent., and so on, would be 270*l.* I am putting the land at an average of 15*s.* an acre. He would pay, taking an average of 4*s.* for all rates, 54*l.* a year in rates on those 400 acres. A medical man or a lawyer makes, say, 150*l.* a year, and he lives in a house rated at 30*l.* and he pays rates 7*l.* 5*s.*, so that here are two men, the farmer pays 54*l.* in local rates, the other man only pays 7*l.* 5*s.*, thus one pays eight times more than the other. Again, land, as under Local Boards, only pay one fourth of the sanitary rate, and education and police rates, and it should be the same in my opinion in the county generally. Then there is a question about small tenants. A labourer with an average wage put it in round figures at 40*l.* a year pays no local tax virtually; if he does, he pays about 2*s.* or 3*s.* a year either directly or in the rent, whereas if he takes a little tenement of 35 acres, that would be rated probably at 25*l.*, and he would pay rates amounting to 5*l.* a year. I cannot understand what inducement there can be to persuade labourers who are really well off to go and take these little farms and pay 5*l.* taxation, and thus have to half-starve themselves in order to pay the rent.

19,414. What is the average size of farms in your district?—The average size of the farms in the whole county according to Mr. Doyle's report is 41 acres, and the average size on the Bodorgan estate is 40 acres. I have the average in 10 parishes; they vary from 25 acres in one parish to 90 in another. I can give each parish, if you wish it. They are taken from the Tithe Apportionments.

19,415. You will put them in?—Yes, a copy shall be handed in.

19,416. Can you give us the particulars concerning this estate and where any holdings have been consolidated?—At the beginning of the century most of the estate was let on long leases, lives, or years. The holdings were partitioned amongst the lessees' families, and when the leases expired about 1850 the farms were over populated, the buildings were in a wretched state, and many of the occupiers were on the parish. There were no roads, the fields small, and fences out of repair; the cost of providing buildings, houses, and walls would have been enormous. Emigration was all the go; the demand for leases had ceased and owners were compelled to consolidate holdings. This, however, was done only on the expiration of leases, and owing to the inability of the occupiers to continue the tenancy and to pay interest on buildings. There has been no consolidation since 1870; in fact, there has been a good deal of sub-division as many of the old estates have been sold. I think the average size of the holdings is smaller than it was 25 years ago. I have a statement from the census of the number of inhabited houses and the population from 1861 to 1871. The population has decreased. In 1861 it was 54,609; in 1871 it was 51,040; in 1881 it was 51,416, and in 1891 it was 50,098. The males are fewer than the females by about 300.

19,417. Do the small holders stand the depression better than the larger ones?—I think they do, because they pay less wages, employing less paid labour, living harder, and are more economical; they trust less to servants, but as a rule are extravagant in fuel, food, and fodder.

19,418. Do the children of small holders emigrate and become labourers?—The children of small holders emigrate or become labourers, artizans, or preachers. The children of large farmers go into business, become doctors, lawyers, vets., or farmers.

19,419. Is there much waste land reclaimed by tenants in your district?—A good deal of land has been drained.

19,420. And a little might be reclaimed by draining marshy ground?—Very little.

19,421. Is the tenant restricted from ploughing?—No, except in parks—what they call parks—grass parks, let for grazing. There is no strict distinction between arable and pasture land. The tenant is not restricted from ploughing any field, and there is very little difference, not 10*s.* an acre, between the cost of laying down pasture and rotation crops.

19,422. Who erects houses, buildings, and cottages?—Now, on this estate the landlord does.

19,423. Do they open and deepen the main streams, or not?—I do not say they do—Sir George Meyrick does.

19,424. On Sir George's estate, who does the ordinary drainage?—The tenants do, except in some cases they are allowed so much for draining, or they have drain pipes given them. The gates almost invariably in Anglesey belong to the tenants, and they have a right to remove them.

19,425. Who supplies the materials for the buildings?—The old arrangement was that the landlord provided all the materials of every kind, and they came, as a rule, on an average, to more than two-thirds of the cost; and the tenant paid for the buildings, that is the mason and joiner, and he got the advantage of the two-thirds that the landlord paid, without any interest. We considered that in about 21 years or so (I can give you the figures if you like), the tenant got really more than he expended on the place. Take an instance, say 300*l.* spent on a place, the landlord, say, spends 200*l.*, that is, two-thirds. The compound interest at 4 per cent. for 21 years would make that up to 456*l.* The tenant spends 100*l.* He gets the benefit of his money immediately in the better buildings, and he also gets the benefit of the landlord's expenditure without any interest; and you will find by calculation, that at the end of the 21 years he will have got his own interest and the principal back, and the benefit of the landlord's money as well except this, that he has done the haulage.

19,426. Is he compensated for haulage?—Not if he is there for any length of time. If for any reason he goes away within a short time of the work being done, he is compensated.

19,427. Is there any custom of the country?—There is no legal custom; what is called a custom is very vague; it is a practice, and not a custom at all, for it cannot be enforced.

19,428. Are any improvements made without the landlord being informed?—The tenants have got into a bad habit of doing improvements without informing the landowners. It is almost impossible to persuade them to act according to law or agreement. The landlord receives no notice, and cannot be expected to pay for a thing done without his knowledge.

19,429. Would consent be given if the improvements were real?—Consent would be given, and has been given.

19,430. Now, about the allowances for outgoing tenants, in respect of growing crops, tillage, and culivation, and so on?—There is no legally established custom, but generally the incoming and outgoing tenants sign an agreement for valuing seeds, manure, hay, straw, and green crops.

19,431. What do you say about tillage and cultivation?—There is none, because the farms are given up in November. There is no autumn cultivation worth talking of.

19,432. Can the outgoing tenant sell off everything?—Yes, if there is a custom of the country, it is so.

19,433. He can cultivate as he likes. Have you had any instances of dissatisfaction upon people going out?—No doubt there have been cases in which the outgoing tenant was not satisfied; it is almost always owing to his having spent money without the knowledge and consent of the landlord, and having kept no accounts or record of the expenditure. On the other hand, the landlord has generally reason to complain of want of repairs and condition.

19,434. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act of any use?—The tenants will not read the Act or abide by it, and no Act will work unless we have an improved system of valuation. I could make some remarks upon the Act, but I do not think you need be troubled with them now.

19,435. No. Is game strictly preserved by Sir George Meyrick?—The game is preserved, but as a rule—in fact, I may say everywhere, except near the coverts—the tenants are allowed to catch all rabbits in any manner, but they prefer to keep up the stock, and catch them in the season when prices are highest, and convert the farms into rabbit warrens. Hares are almost extinct on the Bodorgan estate. Permission was given in 1876 to the tenants, except those adjoining the Bodorgan coverts, to destroy rabbits, and the agent has been continually urging them to keep them down. On the excepted farms, the owner catches the rabbits gratis, and gives half the catch to the tenants The tenants should repair the fences. In consequence of the tenants' neglect to keep the rabbits down in Llanbeulan parish, 1,500 acres, the owner sent a man to catch them by the couple. He caught 763 couples in a month, price 2*s.* 4*d.*, less 6*d.*, for catching, and the proceeds were distributed among the tenants according to the amount of repairs done by each. Hares and rabbits are reserved, so as to enable the owner to prosecute trespassers, and to protect the land and fences from being converted into a warren. The sporting on some farms is let to the farm tenant with liberty to sub-let. They generally do sub-let at an increased rent. Small freeholders, and tenants whose game is not reserved, almost always sub-let.

19,436. The rabbits, I suppose, if there are any, do a lot of harm?—There is no doubt they are the ruin of the farmers. I should like to see every one of them destroyed and not see one.

19,437. Do dogs do any harm in killing the sheep?—Oh, an immense deal of harm. There is an immense amount of complaint about dogs. I know a case in which the same man's dog killed 33 sheep at the same time—at least drove them into a hole and so smothered them, and another lot a short time after that.

19,438. The tenants do not beat the covers, I suppose?—No, never. There are no covers to beat in Anglesey, except adjoining the houses, and except the gorse banks, where the crows' nests are, that we heard of yesterday. The gorse banks are the best cover.

19,439. Do you find a difficulty in keeping the people off the land?—Yes, my Lord. Farms are over-run with fellows all the year round. In the spring people are wandering all over the fields and ditches to get watercress; after the watercress season is over, plovers' eggs are all the thing. Then there is also an amount of trespass in respect of mushroom gathering. I will just give you an idea of the amount of mushrooms in this county, people will not believe it, but I have made inquiries, and I have observed during the ten weeks, which is the nominal season in this county, that there are 200 tons of mushrooms sent away; as much as 4 tons go from one station in one day; I have seen them. Then if you put them down, roughly speaking, at an average of 1*d.* per lb., but I think the country people get more than 1*d.* per lb., it is something over 2,000*l.* Many of the farmers I have talked to, consider that such a thing is simply depradation, and I consider so myself, too. We know the mushrooms are wild produce of soil; if they belong to anybody they belong to the farmer who pays rent for the farm. Instead of that being the case, you scarce dare go into your fields without being abused by poachers or wanderers, who never do a day's work, and who are after these mushrooms.

19,440. Do you consider the law of trespass satisfactory?—No, I suggest that the law should be altered. I believe in Scotland you have no right to go over any man's field without his permission, no matter what you are doing. I think the law of trespass in that way ought to be made punishable, just the same as trespass in search of game.

19,441. Then I understand that poultry are kept by farmers extensively?—Yes, my Lord, by the small farmers particularly.

19,442. There is no market for fruit or vegetables?—No; it does not pay to send them to Bangor even.

19,443. Then as to instruction in butter and cheesemaking, by field experiments and in other agricultural subjects; what can you tell us about that?—Instruction is given by the University College of North Wales. Classes are held at the college and in villages with actual working field experiments on manures, roots, hay, and pasture throughout the county. They are all largely availed of. One of the pupils took a R.A.S.E. scholarship, a prize, another a prize, and reserve number for champion at the Chester Show. Then there is a dairy school at Bangor, managed by a limited liability company, of which I and many others are directors. It was a losing concern; it was never intended to pay, and I think they get as many as 20 in the class there, and they are managed, perhaps as you heard of, the same as at Wrexham. But evidence will be given by a professor of this college, who knows more about it than I do.

19,444. The railway rates are very high?—The railway rates are very high.

19,445. Have you any detailed information about that?—Not very much, my Lord. They have changed the rates. Formerly farmers used to be able to send oxen at a head rate from here to London, but now they will not let you send at that rate, unless they take a whole truck or a half truck. It is a dead loss to farmers, but they encourage the dealers. We have no competition here whatever. There is only one railway, and they charge what they like for intermediate stations. It cost 16*s.* 10*d.* to bring a sheep from Chester here. You can go there and back yourself by an excursion train for 5*s.*

19,446. Is there any co-operation among farmers for the purpose of purchasing or analysing farm stuffs—for example, manures?—There used to be. There was a society for purchasing and analysing manures; it used to advertise and receive tenders, but a local firm invariably secured the orders, and offered the same terms to non-members (the subscription was simply nominal, it being only 5*s.* a year), so that that of course shut up the society. There is no real spirit of honest combination and co-operation among farmers, and no mutual confidence. They will not stick to any rules, and on principle each man fights for himself. We have now besides a society which has not been established for many years, for keeping a stallion cart horse. There are 70 members, nearly all tenant farmers.

19,447. Do the farmers insure buildings and so on, on your estate?—Yes, I believe they nearly all do in different offices; they very often insure in the banks and other offices.

19,448. With regard to small proprietor farmers, what can you tell us?—There are more small proprietors now than there were, but there are fewer holding by inheritance. The old inheritors generally tied up their land and charged it heavily for younger children, or furniture, buildings, or extravagance. The same may be said of the extinct race of squireens; the properties have been sold.

19,449. Have many farmers bought holdings of their own?—A great many farmers have bought their holdings. In the last 50 years almost all the old estates, in fact all but about 20 of any size have been sold, and in more than half of the cases the tenants bought their own or other holdings. A question was asked yesterday with regard to this, and I think about one third of the county has changed hands within the last 50 years, so far as I can gather.

19,450. There is a large number of small holdings—held by small freeholders?—Yes, there is a large number.

19,451. Do most of them succeed?—Some of them do and some of them do not; it depends largely on the man.

19,452. Are they mostly a failure or not?—No, certainly not, not so far, but they have not felt the pinch yet.

Lord Kenyon.

19,453. Some of these big sales have taken place recently?—Yes, they began to any extent in 1854. They have been going on, I cannot tell you exactly, but I should think to the extent of about 1,000 acres a year since that, sometimes more and sometimes less.

Chairman.

19,454. Then the farmers work very hard. We have heard a great deal about that, and I do not think we need trouble you with regard to it?—A great many of these farms have been sold at a profit, and the rents have been raised almost invariably on sales.

19,455. I suppose with regard to the hired labourers it is the same principle as we have had in other parts of North Wales. Do the married men live in the houses?—I should say this: there was a question insisted upon yesterday that there are a great many men who have no children, and women too for the matter of that, who get on with their farms just as well as those who have children. I can give instances of a great many.

19,456. Now with regard to cash wages, what do the labourers get?—I made it out for Mr. Lleufer Thomas on the Labour Commission (and that will tell you exactly) that they get from 36*l.* to 40*l.* altogether.

19,457. As to perquisites?—They come altogether to about 42*l.* to 48*l.*, adding it up.

19,458. I suppose the chief fluctuations in wages during the last 50 years are about the same?—I can give them from 1837 if you like.

19,459. Will you put those in?—They are as follows: 1837, 9*d.*, 10*d.*, and 1*s.* 6*d.* in harvest; 1844, 14*d.*; 1848, 16*d.*, 1*s.* 6*d.*, and 1*s.* 8*d.*; 1854, 1*s.* 4*d.*, 1*s.* 5*d.*; 1867, 1*s.* 7*d.*, 1*s.* 8*d.*, 1*s.* 10*d.*, 2*s.*; 1870, 1*s* 10*d.*; 1873, 2*s.*; 1881, 2*s.* 6*d.*

19,460. Is the accommodation provided at farm-houses for male labourers good, bad, or indifferent?—It is very variable. A great many of them are fed in the houses; most of them are fed in the houses; and then they have what they call the "brews"—the back kitchen or lower kitchen is their sort of mess-room. In some places they are very comfortable, in others they are not so comfortable. It depends very much upon the farmer.

Chairman—continued.

19,461. The women sleep in the house, I take it?—The women sleep in the house, and their accommodation is good.

19,462. The women's accommodation is good, and the men's is bad?—The men's is not so good, but it is not entirely owing to the farmer's fault. The men are such ruffians; they will break or spoil anything in the shape of furniture which is put into their rooms. When Mr. Lleufer Thomas went round we visited many sleeping places, and it so happened that we saw a man doing mischief in one.

19,463. When you talk of a ruffian, you mean a man of rough manners, I suppose?—Yes, kicking things to pieces; they have rough manners.

19,464. Ruffian is a strong word?—Well, call him strong man—anything you like, a rough "un."

Mr. Grove.

19,465. Do you mean the men do wilful damage?—Certainly I do. They break things; if you put pots and pans and things of that kind into a room like that, you will find them all broken in the morning.

Chairman.

19,466. With regard to the condition and construction of cottages, will you please tell us about that?—Do you mean as to the cost?

19,467. Is the condition of cottage accommodation better than formerly?—It is better than formerly, but as a rule it is not good. Most of the old cottages at any rate only contain one or two rooms, and then they have wainscot beds like they have in Scotland—box-beds or shut-up beds. The floors are bad and damp; there is insufficient light in the room, and insufficient ventilation, and the standard of comfort is very low; but as a rule cottagers prefer to live in a miserable hut at 6*d.* than to pay 1*s.* a week for a good house. Upon the question of cost of cottages, I may say we have built a good many cottages, and I do not think you can make a decent cottage under 120*l.*

19,468. Have you got any gardens to those cottages?—Yes, almost invariably there are gardens, my Lord.

19,469. Are there any allotments?—No. When I say there are none, I mean all through the country there are none, but near Aberffraw there is a village of 85 houses, which are almost all occupied by labouring men, and they have got gardening plots from half an acre to a little more. There are 40 of them, and there are cow plots, or cow fields varying from 4 to 7 or 8 acres, apiece.

19,470. With regard to ownership and tenure, how are those cottages held?—They are as a rule let with the farm, except in the villages. The whole of the tenants at Aberffraw are tenants in chief, and they pay direct to the landlord; but on the farms as a rule they are let to the tenant, and he sub-lets. It is very hard to get men to live in cottages on the farms; they prefer going to the villages. They are more independent, they say, and the wives like it better.

19,471. Who live the hardest. Do you think the small tenant farmers do?—The small tenant farmers do, by a long way.

19,472. Do you think the labourer is better off than the farmers?—Certainly, I think so.

19,473. Except in regard to house accommodation?—Except in regard to house accommotion.

19,474. Is there much migration in your district?—There is continual migration, and there has been as far back as I can remember. Almost all the artizans go to the towns, mostly to Liverpool, and they become joiners, carpenters, jerry builders, and assistants in shops. I believe in many of the large drapery establishments in London, the assistants are mostly Welshmen, so I was told. Then they go to mining districts, quarries, to the colonies as farmers, and to all parts, in fact.

19,475. When did trade depression begin in your district, in your opinion?—About 1880 to 1883.

19,476. What are the principal causes of that depression?—I believe the first cause with us was bad seasons; then came foreign free competition, because I make it out, that foreign stock and corn pay no sort of taxation, Customs, or local rates, whereas the home-grown produce is very much over-burdened with local rates. We get very dear labour, and the strikes upset everything. Owners and farmers are more affected than labourers are.

19,477. Can you suggest any remedy of any sort?—Only the usual remedies which are suggested. If trade would be improved somehow by opening up new markets for manufactured goods, so as to raise the price and the demand for raw material, such as wool and other farm produce, I think it would be beneficial, and it would increase the wage-earning power and the purchasing power, and raise the price of butter, milk, and other produce by improving the labour market. I should also, somehow or other, suggest that the local taxation should be relieved by making personalty bear its share of maintaining the poor, the roads, sanitation, and education. As I said before, houses only should bear the sanitary and education rates. I should like to say that I do not go in for protection in any way, but it seems to me quite suicidal to handicap our home land produce. Compare it in this way, I think I am right in saying (I have asked many farmers about it) that supposing you sell a three-year-old bullock for 20*l.* he will have paid in local taxation by the time he is sold for 20*l.* at three years old, from 2*l.* to 2*l.* 10*s.*, that is 11 per cent. on the value of the beast; whereas the foreign animal does not pay any taxation at all; you bring him over to Liverpool all the way from New York for 35*s.* and then send him from Liverpool to London for another 35*s.* Comparing that with the taxation in foreign parts so far as I have made it out—it is not original of course—we will take India, where there is one per cent. on produce; the Western States of America three per cent., including local and Imperial taxes, or whatever they call them in America, all United States rates; then Manitoba one per cent.; New South Wales, there is no local taxation; Victoria and South Australia about one per cent.; New Zealand one per cent.; whereas in England the owner, who is also the occupier, pays 20 per cent. without reckoning any death duties It seems unfair that the land should pay so much for the education of men who become clerks and tradesmen. It is unfair that land should have to keep up the Navy to protect ships from bringing produce cheaper than English land can grow it, and lighthouses in order to keep those ships safe; whereas the ships contribute nothing in the shape of local burdens, and sailors' wives and orphans have to be kept by the land out of the poor rate. Then again, land has to pay for police to protect personal property which alone can be stolen. I myself should suggest that ships should pay a tonnage rate of about 1*s.* a ton or something of that kind towards the Navy, so as somehow or other to relieve the land from all these burdens.

19,478. Are the general relations between your landlords and tenants friendly?—They are very friendly generally, particularly on the old family estates, but I should say that a certain section of the Welsh press, represented by the Genedl, the Baner, and Celt, have done their utmost to create bad feeling by painting landlords as villains of the deepest dye, and suggesting that they should be annihilated and swept off the face of the earth without trial or hearing. I venture to put in a few specimens of this scurrilous literature, with translations for the use of the Commission from the above-named papers. See 20,18

19,479. What have you spent in 19 years in repairs and improvements?—On the Bodorgan estate we have spent 19,400*l.* in 19 years, and no interest has been charged for money spent in this period, except in one or two special cases.

19,480. I suppose families have held farms for generations?—Well, I cannot find out how long they have been upon farms, but I know there have been several over 200 years, and a great deal more than that, perhaps, because all I can find out from them is that their great great grandfathers and so on, have been there, but they cannot remember dates. I know of my own knowledge that there have been 28 families over 100 years, and most of those have been over 200 years, but I have no further record than going back to 1783. There have been 10 families over 75 years and 19 over 50 years. I have some general remarks to make, my Lord. I do not know whether you wish to hear them.

Chairman—continued.

19,481. I think you have gone very fully into it already ?—I cannot understand the increase of rents in Anglesey compared to other counties.

19,482. Have you any reason for it ?—I believe there is some sort of reason for it.

Chairman.

Lord Kenyon will ask you about that.

Lord Kenyon.

19,483. When you refer to the increase of rents do you mean that paper which was put in ?—Yes, that return.

19,484. You are aware that that does not include agricultural rents only ?—I do not know what it includes ; I want to find out.

19,485. That is a very difficult matter to do ?—Nobody seems to know.

19,486. Have you any other remarks to make about that ?—Yes, I have got evidence with regard to two very interesting reports, I do not know whether you are aware of them. One in 1794 is by Mr. Kay to the Board of Agriculture, or to the head of the Board of Agriculture, Sir John Sinclair, who was the head of the Board of Agriculture in those days ; and the other book, which I have here, is by Mr. Walter Davies in 1810, who reports to the same Board.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,487. What do you mean by the Board of Agriculture ?—There was a Board of Agriculture in those times ; it lasted a very short time, but it did a great deal of good while it lasted. This is a book by Mr. Walter Davies, drawn up in 1810, published by order of the Board of Agriculture and Internal Improvement. This gives you a very good account of agriculture in these parts in those days. He says in those times there were experiments made in Anglesey, and he mentions the landowners who let their land on leases at very moderate rents. All those leases were really for building ; they were almost at ground rents, and then as I say, when we get to 1840 or 1850 the rents were raised ; the landlords had to do all the improvements, the tenants were bankrupt, and the buildings were nowhere, and then money had to be spent on them, and the interest was charged, and the rents went up. Then there came to be all these sales, and the income tax, as I know, being a commissioner of taxes, is raised on the interest. The Inland Revenue Office are now very much more particular than they used to be when I remember, 30 years ago. There was no income tax paid then on interest—on borrowed money. They did not know anything about it ; but now they are much sharper than they used to be, and I do not think anybody escapes. I daresay you know that this is so ; if a man borrows 1,000*l.* on his farm he may pay 40*l.* or 50*l.* interest, and he has to pay income tax on that, and get it back again from the mortgagee, that is included in the rent returns ; and whereas he was only paying 20*l.* rent he then has to pay 40*l.*, and that at once appears in the income-tax returns.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

19,488. Do you think there is any room for improvement in the way that farmers cultivate their lands ?—Well, some farmers farm very well ; and some badly.

19,489. Then there is room for improvement ?—There is room for improvement, no doubt.

19,490. They would compete better than they do, if they would farm better ?—Yes ; but then it is so disheartening if they have to pay everything out in rates ; they are handicapped and overloaded to begin within.

19,491. Do you think these experiments of the Bangor College are doing any good ?—I think they have taught a good many things that ought not to be done ; I do not know whether they have taught things that ought to be done ; they may in time.

19,492. Have they taught anything with regard to the use of manure ; have the farmers opened their eyes in the country round about ?—In a way ; but I think the farmer himself is the best man to find out experiments, and he can open his own eyes.

19,493. There has been a certain amount of discussion about it at the Bangor College ?—Yes ; there has been a certain amount of discussion ; and it has done a great deal of good ; but I think you will find that a farmer will treat his own land with anything in the shape of manure better than anybody else.

19,494. You made some remarks with regard to permanent pasture ; you said you did not think it cost much more in Anglesey to lay it down than rotation pasture ?—Yes, it is owing to the climate ; you would be surprised to find it is so.

19,495. I suppose it is so in this particular part of the country ?—Yes ; the ground gets covered with good grass in six or seven years. You know that there is a saying that "making a "pasture breaks a man, and breaking a pasture "makes a man" ; but it is not so here. I do not think there is any landlord who binds his tenant not to plough certain fields. Of course they do keep fields about the house, but they are not bound to.

19,496. Is there much sub-letting of grazing here ?—There used to be a great deal ; the land used to be let by auction, but not on the Bodorgan estate. The land used to be let as high as 6*l.* or 7*l.* an acre, but they have gone on letting. There was one thing I should say : the cultivation of arable land is good ; but grass land is neglected. People seem to think that grass land will do for ever. All these grass lands have been let for cattle, and they have been so depreciated that grass land is let for much less than it used to be. Of course prices are lower too.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,497. What do you consider the expense of building a farm cottage, may I ask ?—It varies so much ?—Of course, we have found that of those built near Bodorgan, including cisterns for rain water, and everything put together, building four cottages cost 166*l.* a-piece; but those are very good cottages. I do not think you could build a decent cottage under 120*l.* I know a man who did build one, as he said, for 20*l.* and I know the cottage too.

19,498. I would not like to live in it?—Nor I; I do not think he put anything down for haulage, and I think he had got the quarries. He burnt lime himself; he was a lime burner, and he kept no account at all, in fact; but I dare say he paid in wages only 20*l.*

19,499. Have you ever seen basic slag applied to the land?—Yes, I have used it myself; most people have used it.

19,500. What effect has it?—A very good effect.

19,501. Do you say that there is an increase in the growing of turnips?—Yes.

19,502. How are they hoed; do the labourers hoe them?—No, you cannot get labourers to do it, and by the piece in overtime; and it is agreed that you cannot get boys because they keep them in school. It is all done by horse hoeing.

19,503. But still you have to hoe besides horse-hoeing?—Yes, but my own farm is very stiff clay, I do not know what your farm is like. If you take a hoe on my farm you would scratch up all your turnips, it has to be done by finger and thumb. You cannot do it by the hoe.

19,504. What I am surprised at is, that there is an increase in the growing of turnips, when the expense is so much more than it used to be?—Formerly there used to be fallowing—summer fallowing, and there is none now, and that is the only way we can keep the land clean by keeping green crops and hoeing them.

19,505. But still I look at the expense of doing it when you keep a man at 15*s.* a week?—But it is done by boys; we only pay the boys from 10*d.* to 15*d.*, and then we do let it by piece-work.

19,506. Sometimes you do that?—Yes; when they like to take it.

Lord Kenyon.

19,507. Do Irish labourers come over for that purpose?—No, very few; not worth talking of, or taking into account.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,508. Do you recommend that the gates should be repaired by the tenants?—I believe so, because, I think, they take more care with them then. I find it is the same with the ovens in cottages where the people live for a long time; if you give them an oven it will burn out in a week, and if it is there, and they have got to pay for it, it will last for years.

19,509. Then, with regard to the walls, and so on?—They are generally stone; the timber will not last.

19,510. You speak about the period for exhaustion; does that apply to the other farms on the estate which you are on?—A great many have adopted it. I should say that comes from the Act of 1875, more or less.

19,511. It is rather new to us?—It was adopted from the Act of 1875, but it was always more or less a custom on the estate to give them as good as a 21 years' lease; that was the idea.

19,512. Tenants as a rule get compensation for any permanent improvement they make on your estate?—There were sales two or three years ago, and we paid them large sums of money in compensation. I have got the list here.

19,513. You say they are slow to give notice of any improvements?—They are stupid. They trust to the landowner's honour entirely, and I cannot prevail upon them to give notice.

19,514. Does it not arise from the fact that they do not like to displease the landlord?—Oh, dear no; they have only to send me a halfpenny card, and I shall be there the next day. That is all they have to do, and they will not spend a halfpenny to save 5*l.*, a great many of them.

19,515. Then you spoke of a system of valuation; what system of valuation do you recommend?—That is the question. It has puzzled us all through Anglesey. At present it means this, that each party appoints one or two or more valuers, and the outgoing tenant's valuer values the thing about one-half too high, and then the incoming tenant's valuer values it about one-half too low, and then they appoint an umpire, and they drink a bottle of whiskey, and he splits the difference. That is my opinion. I know there would be objections to this statement, but it is the fact.

19,516. Then you do not consider that the present valuers are really competent?—They are competent, but I will not say more.

19,517. With the bottle of whiskey in them they are?—The whiskey helps them.

Mr. Grove.

19,518. Have you any teetotal umpires?—I have no doubt there are, but I do not think they get much custom.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,519. Who provides the whiskey?—The outgoing tenant. It is his interest to get as much as he can. The valuation is held in his house.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,520. Have the tenants generally on your estate suitable accommodation for the rearing of poultry?—It is only some few people who care about it. They have poultry houses where they ask for them, but, as a rule, the hens are in the cart sheds, and in the rickyards, and all sorts of places.

19,521. Then you consider that there is a great deal of room for improvement among the farmers in that respect?—Certainly. The cottagers do much better with poultry than the farmers do.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

19,522. They have studied poultry keeping more, you consider?—The way is this: the farmer keeps the corn, and he objects to his wife having much for the poultry, as he wants it all for his horses, and to sell, and the farmer's wife has to steal it in fact.

19,523. Do you think the farmers' wives could keep more poultry if their husbands allowed them?—That is a matter between the husband and wife. I do not interfere, and I do not keep any myself. I am not married.

19,524. Have the farmers' sons taken to these experiments?—Yes; they have attended lectures; and I should think I have seen as many as 70 present in the next room.

19,525. Are there many experiments upon land in this neighbourhood that we could see?—Yes. There is a gentleman in the room here, Mr. Priestley, who had experiments at his farm, and there are others.

19,526. How far off?—Close by.

19,527. If you can let us have the particulars, I should be very pleased, because if we have an hour to spare, I should like to see them?—I have a list; it is in English and Welsh, and it does not mention the places. (The witness produced a list.) I do not think any of these happen to be near here, but Professor Gilchrist will show you all this much better than I can.

19,528. He comes at the end of the week, and we should not have a chance to see them?—Here is a list of the College Lectures too, which I put in. (The witness handed in the list.)

19,529. Do you not consider that landlords should insure buildings, and that it is enough for the tenant to insure his stock?—No, they take more care a great deal; if they have to insure, they are more responsible. They take a great deal more interest in it. The amount is very small.

19,530. Supposing a place is burnt down, I should think that the landlord would step in to see that the building is put in good order?—They are insured in the name of the landlord and tenant.

19,531. You speak in your evidence of some farms being sold as high as 70 years' purchase?—Yes.

19,532. It sounds an enormous amount?—They are small places. I can give you the name if you like.

19,533. How do you account for it?—I cannot account for it at all; the rents were very low, that is all. I can account for it in no other way.

19,534. What is your experience of labourers keeping a cow. You mentioned something about it before. Do you not think it is recommendable for labourers, as a rule, to have a cow pasture on the farms?—They are not on the farms; they are detached. There were two small tenements, and the buildings were very bad and tumble-down, so that instead of rebuilding those, I divided them into nine plots quite apart. They are near the village of Aberffraw, or within a mile, or a mile and a half of the village. Then they had a cow-house and buildings attached to their houses. We built the cow-houses for them.

19,535. How are they doing?—They are doing very well from what I hear; they pay their rent regularly. There is not a single penny in arrear on the whole estate. In fact, they wanted to sub-let at a profit, only of course I would not allow it.

19,536. Quite right. Then you think it a hardship that the land should pay the sanitary rates?—That it should pay in full the same as houses do.

19,537. And in this neighbourhood they do pay just the same as house property?—In the rural sanitary districts they do, but in the town you are in now, for instance, there is a Local Board, and the land there does not pay as much as the houses; I believe it pays only one-fourth.

19,538. As a rule we have found where we have been that there is not much inspection in the rural districts?—There is none; there are no byelaws, I should tell you, in the Anglesey Union. They are talked of, but I do not know whether they will ever be passed.

19,539. Have you provisions in your towns and markets, for selling cattle by weight?—No, nowhere.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,540. You mentioned that the buildings were insured in the name of the tenant and of the landlord?—Yes.

19,541. Supposing that one of those ruffians, as you called them, came across and set fire to one of those buildings, would the tenant have to bear a share of the cost of the erection?—We should get as much as we could out of the insurance. The thing has happened, and then the landlord re-built the buildings entirely at his own expense. The same thing happened to a mill also; in that case the tenant insured quietly without telling the landlord, and the landlord insured without telling the tenant. The miller set the mill on fire, and the landlord re-built it and got the money from the two offices.

19,542. Could you supply the Commission with the names of the places where these agricultural experiments are made?—I have given some of them.

19,543. We might see them. You say in this statement that lessees are the worst farmers?—I say they were, I think—the old lessees—I do not say they are.

19,544. What was the reason?—I really cannot tell you, except that it was a fact. I know a case in my own neighbourhood where there was a lease granted in 1780 or 1790. It was one farm originally, and they built half a dozen little homesteads on it, and at the end of the lease there were two of the families living in huts on the place and obtaining relief from the parish.

Mr. Grove.

19,545. What length of lease was it?—A lease for lives and years; it lasted about 70 or 80 years, I suppose.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,546. Do you think it was because of this that the tenant or the lessee considered it was policy for him to get as much out of the land as he possibly could, and then at the end of the tenancy it would be depreciated of course?—As a rule, it was let to a man for his life, and his son's life after him, and perhaps two sons, so that he would be cutting his own throat, would he not, if he did that.

19,547. You are referring to long leases?—Yes, long leases. I do not refer to 21 years' leases.

19,548. You could not supply any reason why it should be so—that lessees are worst farmers?—No, I really do not know. I cannot account for it. They ought to be better farmers, but they were not as a rule.

19,549. That is what I thought. You say that changes in tenancy are if anything, less frequent in prosperous times. Then, according to your admission, the times are anything but prosperous?—I never said they were not. We would not allow 20 per cent. back if that were so, you may be sure of that.

19,550. I think with regard to the agreements you made a statement to this effect—that none of the penal clauses are ever enforced. Is it because they are generally observed?—No, I never ask any questions.

19,551. There are breaches of the clauses?—I have no doubt there are, but if anybody asks to do a thing they are allowed to, and I dare-say they do it without asking. There has been no notice taken of it whatever. The agreement is not intended for a good tenant; it is intended for a bad one, in order to check a bad one.

19,552. Do you supply all the tenants with a copy of the agreement?—Anybody who asks for it, and the larger tenants. As I said before, we supplied a great many, and they were continually asked for, and they used to continually lose them. They can have them, whenever they ask for them.

19,553. Do you charge anything for them?—Oh, dear no, except for the stamping. The tenant pays about 1*s.* or 1*s.* 6*d.* for the stamping, and they are not charged anything for a plain copy, of course.

19,554. I think you said that in one case the rent was fixed by arbitration, and the cost borne by the landlord?—No, I said that the tenant said his farm was let too high, and then he asked me: Would you submit it to arbitration?" "Yes," I said. Then we agreed upon the man, and then the tenant said: "Well, I "will select three farms for him to walk over," and I said: "I will select another three," and we all three did walk over those farms, and the tenant's farms. I have the report, but I would rather not show it, because it is not favourable to the tenant.

19,555. What was the object of walking over these other farms?—To compare. He said his farm was dearer than the other farms, and, therefore, the only way of getting at the valuation was by a comparison. He selected his farms, and he said: "Mine is dearer than such "and such a farm." "Very well," I said, "we "will walk over them."

19,556. Who made this valuation of the Bodorgan estate in the year 1891?—He is a professional valuer, who valued most of this county.

19,557. Appointed by the landlord?—By the landlord. He had surveyed the whole estate before, so that he knew a good deal about it, and he has surveyed most of the county as well.

19,558. You say that the right of pasturage over common is never exercised by a large tenant?—No, I do not think it is. It is not worth their while. The Lord of the Manor himself used to exercise it. The place is wild and sandy with a little clover, which, if it was allowed quietness, would become good grass in a little time, but it is so terribly knocked about and messed up that it is good for nothing hardly, except for very small sheep.

19,559. You say in this statement that you will explain the practice as to services, other than payment of rent, rendered by the tenant?—It may appear so in the statement you have, but it does not say so in mine. I will explain them if you ask the question.

19,560. I should like you to do so?—First of all with regard to the mills. I say that they have to clean the mill streams, I explained it before, it was an old Welsh custom. It is rather going too far back to be of any real benefit; but, as you know, there were old Welsh tenures something in the shape of manors, and there was a mill belonging to the different manors. The tenants were bound to grind their corn at different mills, and they were bound also to keep the mill streams clear as part of their service, or as part of their tenantry, but now all the mill-grinding has been done away with, and any tenant can go to a mill off the estate or on the estate, or where he likes. The old custom however remains of certain farmers sending men to clean the mill-stream for half a day, or whatever time it takes. Instead of doing that now, as it has been so badly done, it is commuted to half-a-crown, and I let the job by contract. It comes at half-a-crown a man per day to about 5*l.* total.

19,561. I suppose the tenants have to bear that expense, although the stream does not run through their farms?—It does not run through their farms at all. It is in the old original manor, or ville, whatever it was.

19,562. You say that the effect of consolidation on production is that farming is better than it was, and there is less waste in fencing yet you say that small holders stand depression better?—I do.

19,563. How do you account for that?—Because, as I said before, they do not trust to their servants; they do the work better themselves, and they do not pay so much for hired labour. As we all know, it is almost impossible to get servants to be careful; they waste every thing.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

19,564. Then small farmers would do better?—I say they are far better. I have said so all along.

19,565. You say it with regard to farms that have been consolidated, and I should think, that farms that have been consolidated are naturally larger?—I do not, indeed. If you will refer me to my statement, I will tell you what I do say.

19,566. It occurs under the heading of "Production?"—I state there who stands the depression best. That is what I am referring to.

19,567. No, I refer to where you say that the effect of consolidation on production is that farming is better than it was, and that there is less waste in fencing?—So there is.

19,568. Then you go on to say that the small holders stand depression better, because they cultivate better?—No, I do not, indeed.

19,569. I understood you to say so?—Excuse me, I read it from this. The small holders stand depression better, as they employ less paid labour, live harder, and are more economical; they trust less to servants, who as a rule are extravagant in fuel, food, and fodder. That is what I said. I read it from this statement.

19,570. Well, I suppose we may take it as they trust less to servants, that the farmers prefer to do it themselves; they do the work themselves, do they not?—I do not say they do not. I do not understand you. I say that the farming is better in the country generally, owing to consolidation, but I say that the small holders suffer less than the large ones because they do not pay so much money out of pocket.

19,571. Because their children are employed on the farm, is that so?—Sometimes they are; sometimes not; they very often are. The children of small farmers very often go to service, as often as not; they are much wiser to go, too.

Mr. Grove.

19,572. You say that there is no demand for leases; one could understand that there would be no demand for leases just now, but say during the last 20 years, why has there been no demand for leases in your opinion?—Well, there has been none. I have not been asked for a lease except in very few cases. There was only one lease really asked for, and that was granted. I suppose it is the sort of habit of the country. I cannot give any other reason.

19,573. Do you think there is sufficient agricultural labour upon the land now?—Do you mean to ask whether sufficient men are employed or whether there are sufficient men to be employed?

19,574. Whether there are sufficient men employed?—In some places not.

19,575. Do you think the shortness of cottages would account for that, to some extent?—No, I do not, because the farmers could not get the men to live in their cottages, and the cottages have been allowed to go to ruin. The men prefer to live in the villages.

Mr. Grove—continued.

19,576. You think then that the reason of the cottages having been allowed to go to ruin was because they could not find men enough to occupy them; is that it?—The population of the county is getting less and less every 10 years. It is no use having houses, when there is nobody to live in them.

19,577. You speak of the children of the larger farmers becoming doctors and lawyers; is there very much of that, or is it exceptional?—Oh, no, it very often happens.

19,578. Would you say it is the rule?—I suppose not the rule, but it very often happens.

19,579. The rule rather than the exception, you think?—I think so in many cases.

19,580. You have given us one point as to the railway rates. Did you pay 16*s.* 10*d.* for sending a sheep to Chester?—No, bringing a sheep from Chester.

19,581. Do you know the distance?—It is about 80 miles.

19,582. What would be the legal charge of the railway company?—I do not know. I have no doubt it was a legal charge, but it seems an immense sum. It is 19*s.* from Shrewsbury. I often buy rams in Shrewsbury and bring them over, and it costs 19*s.* to bring a ram from Shrewsbury.

19,583. Here is a small book which I referred to before, in which the matter has been dealt with, I think in rather a facetious manner by the gentlemen of the Press; still there it is. There is the Board of Trade book which gives you the actual rates that the company can charge. This book can be obtained for 1*s.* any day. I find that for a sheep they can only charge you three farthings per mile?—I should state this. The sheep was bought at the Chester Show. Therefore they charge something extra for taking it from the show ground to the station, but I cannot get at the exact charge.

19,584. But it appears to me that this is a most unreasonable charge, and as far as I can see one that is far above their maximum power?—I inquired at the time and I could not make anything of it.

19,585. It is far over their maximum charge. I do not think that for 80 miles they could charge you more than 6*s.*?—You must remember that a ram is not a sheep, you must look under the heading "rams." I forgot that. They charge twice as much for a ram. I think the same as a horse. If you look under the heading "rams" you will see. This ram was "commended" at the show.

19,586. Yes; I suppose a ram is more valuable. Now you do not want to throw any sort of discredit upon the teaching of the Agricultural College from a scientific point of view, do you?—Oh, dear no, I encourage it.

19,587. Would you say that the farmer now knows better than any one else what to do with his land?—On his own farm?

19,588. On his own farm?—On his own land he must know, no doubt.

Mr. Grove—continued.

19,589. You think that the science of chemistry may be of great service to a farmer, do you not?—Yes, I do of course.

19,590. You speak of the advantage of basic slag for instance?—Yes.

19,591. And that has been, of course, discovered purely by the chemist?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,593. But what would it be like?—Well, it is a cottage I suppose about 20 feet or so outside—20 feet by 15 feet.

19,594. That would be something like what Lord Stanley has described as a square box, with two holes in it?—Well, it had three holes in it, a door, a window, and a chimney, and two or three holes in the floor.

19,595. Then perhaps it might cost more. Then the Assistant Commissioner gives in his appendix the items for two cottages which come to 65*l.* each, only I think there is no charge made for stones, sand, or gravel, except that of raising or carting them. Could that apply to your district, from what you know?—I think it is possible to build some sort of a house, but I should not like to expect any one of my men to go and live in such a house. I have three cottages myself on the farm.

19,596. The cottages you build are more commodious?—A great deal, yes; they have four rooms in them and a little back kitchen.

19,597. What about the cottages at the village of Aberffraw?—Those were built long long ago under old leases and they are very bad, most of them.

19,598. Are they in a good sanitary state?—They are getting on by degrees. We spend about 100*l.* a year on them, mostly in sanitary arrangements.

19,599. Does the sanitary officer visit them every now and then?—I try to get him to go very often, but he will not go.

19,600. He is too much afraid of the state of his own health probably?—Well, he is very careful.

19,601. What about the village of Aberffraw. Have you had epidemics or fever there lately?—There was German measles, I think, about two years ago.

19,602. Was it serious?—Well, I really do not know. I think it was made more of than it really was.

19,603. How do you mean; did it get into the newspapers; did the journalists get at it?—There was a great deal of talk about it. I do not think it was so serious as the people made it out to be. It is the people's habits that is the difficulty. They keep ducks there. They are very fond of keeping ducks, and the floors are made of mud, and they will make duck ponds inside their houses; they feed the young ducks in those duck ponds inside. No matter how good a cottage may be, if people will keep their poultry and their filth in the house in that way you do not know what to do with them. It is hopeless. Yet if I turned out a person because he had a duck pond in his floor, I should be called I do not know what,—a regular brute.

19,604. Do you think that with a better class of cottages with wooden floors, and so on, they would manage to have duck ponds inside?—Well, I think they would make a hole in the floor; they would have a duck pond.

19,605. Suppose the duck pond was made for them in the back yard?—There is the river close by. The idea of having these duck ponds and keeping the ducks in their own houses is because otherwise their neighbours would steal the ducks, therefore they like to keep the ducks in their houses at night. I am talking of facts now. I am not joking.

19,606. Suppose there was a proper place for housing the ducks, and so on, then they could lock them up at night, could they not?—There is really no room in the town to make outhouses to every cottage. They will keep animals of all kinds, although they have no accommodation for them.

19,607. What about the police regulations. I suppose you contribute towards the expenses of the police?—Oh, yes. I complain that we pay very highly for the police.

19,608. Does a policeman ever visit the village?—Yes, and if he interferes, he gets a black eye; that is the result generally; and he runs away.

19,609. And this all happens in the ancient royal village of Aberffraw?—Where brave Prince Llewelyn once resided.

19,610. And possibly a much greater Prince than he, Maelgwn Gwynedd. Now, what about the accommodation in the farm-houses on your estate. Where do the farm servants generally sleep?—We always build good rooms for them outside.

19,611. Outside?—Yes, with separate entrances from the outside.

19,612. Have they any sitting accommodation?—They have rooms where they can do what they like. They are supposed to be in the house. They may be there if they like till half-past 9; they can smoke and do any mortal thing they like, sing, and make any noise they like.

19,613. The rooms in which they sleep have no fireplaces?—No, no fireplaces in bedrooms.

19,614. Do the farmers welcome them to their kitchen, excepting when they are eating?—Well, some farmers do, and some do not.

19,615. What is the result of that?—I can refer to an extract I have from one of Ap Ffarmwr's letters, if you like, which will give you an idea.

19,616. Perhaps you have given it already?—I have put in the letter.

19,617. Very well. The having their sleeping accommodation outside the farmer's house does not help the farmer to have any control over them at night, does it?—The farmer does not control them.

19,618. What would they do?—They would go away, or knock him on the head.

19,619. Where do they go?—Heaven knows.

19,620. Do they become a nuisance to the neighbourhood?—Well, yes, in some places they do. They go larking about at night all over the place, pulling people's gates off, and putting them in the roads.

19,621. This brings us back to the question of police efficiency, does it not, somewhat?—Yes, of course it does, unless you go on deeper principles. I think they ought to be better taught somehow. I do not know how it is to be done.

19,622. Does this state of things lead to any serious result?—Do you mean morally?

19,623. Morally?—Oh, yes, the number of bastard children, and so on.

19,624. Is what?—Bad.

19,625. Is large?—Yes, I cannot compare it with England, but it is large.

20,190. 19,626. How does it compare with other parts of Wales?—I could tell you to-morrow. I have not got the figures here.

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,627. Can you tell us the average rent?—16*s.* 7*d.*, but then there is 20 per cent. off, and that reduces it to 14*s.* 3*d.*

19,628. You were asked about reductions or abatements, and I understood you to say that reductions had been going on over a series of years. You say that there have been three permanent reductions?—Yes, 20*l.*, 23*l.*, and 18*l.* permanent and yearly returns or abatements.

19,629. Are the farmers, in consequence of that, able to get any reduction in their assessment?—They ought to be. I have had—at least, I have not had myself, but I have seen Counsel's opinion to that effect—that an Assessment Committee is bound to reduce the rateable value according to the actual rent paid, but it is not done, It is the farmer's own fault for not appealing.

19,630. You would know, being Chairman of the Assessment Committee?—They must appeal, and go to the Quarter Sessions.

19,631. Now, I come to a rather important point. In speaking of co-operation among farmers, you say, "There was a society for purchasing and analysing manures; it used to advertise and receive tenders, but a local firm invariably secured the orders, and offered the same terms to non-members, and so shut up the Society"?—Yes.

19,632. Is it your opinion that there is a want of such a Society still?—Oh, a very great want.

19,633. Do you not think that that want will be met by a recent Act of Parliament—the Fertilisers and Food Stuffs Act—which has been passed recently, I think?—The difficulty is to get anybody to take action.

19,634. The county councils under that Act (I think it has been passed, and comes into operation on the 1st of January next), may be called upon to appoint a district agricultural analyst?—Yes.

19,635. Do you think that that will be advantageous?—Well, if he is kept up to the mark, and if work is given to him, it will be advantageous; but many of these public officers are appointed, and no work is given to them.

19,636. Probably the public are hardly aware that this Act has been passed, and it is a very good thing to call their attention to it?—I am only comparing it now with the operation of the Adulteration of Food Acts and so on. I do not think there have been any convictions in Anglesey.

19,637. Would you give us your opinion as to a Land Court, as that has been so much talked about?—I really know nothing about a Land Court. I am too busy to have read anything about it, and I know nothing about it. If one only knew what was the scope of its action one might say something, but I really know nothing about it.

19,638. In your experience have you seen any instances of a want of greater fixity of tenure than exists now?—Of course the difficulty is when sales takes place. There is no doubt that tenants do lose a great deal of money when sales take place, and they get no compensation.

19,639. When sales take place, you think instances have been known of the tenants having to purchase, or other people purchasing, upon the tenants' own improvements?—Well, I suppose it comes to that. What I mean is this, that they ought to have some payment for what they have spent on the land.

19,640. I observe what appeared to me to be a little discrepancy in your evidence, and I should like to have your explanation of it. Under the heading of improvements, you say that "Landlords erect houses, buildings, houses, and cottages"?—That is a mistake, I am sure it is not in my copy.

19,641. That is not correct?—No.

19,642. You are not responsible for this. This is merely placed in my hands, and is not what you read?—Certainly not.

19,643. Will you tell me what you did say?—Landlords build cottages, but not on the farms; there have been none built.

19,644. On the estate for which you are able to speak, does the landlord erect the houses and buildings?—Yes, but it is a new practice. I see that in my statement I do say that the landlords "erect houses," but I should not apply it in that way. There have been no cottages built. Cottages have been built near the demesne, but there have been no cottages built lately on the farms.

19,645. I should like to have your correction as to what you said in answer to the question about compensation for improvements. You say in your statement, as I have it here, "On the other hand the landlord generally "has reason to complain of want of repairs?" —Yes, very often.

19,646. Will you explain that, because I think in the answer to which I referred a moment ago you said that the landlord erected the houses?—Erected, but not repaired.

19,647. Does he not repair now?—No, not as a rule. Any extensive repairs, or anything in the shape of renewing is done by the landlord, but any ordinary repairs, like pointing roofs, and that sort of thing, is done by the tenant.

19,648. The ordinary landlord's repairs are pretty well understood, are they not?—In Anglesey the tenant does all the small repairs; the rents are very low.

19,649. The rents are very low, and the tenant does the repairs?—The tenant does the little things. I know in England that if a nail falls out of the door, they send for the estate joiner. In Anglesey the tenant puts the nail in himself, or ought to.

19,650. Then, in consequence of the tenant doing those repairs, the rents are fixed at a lower figure than they otherwise would be?—Certainly, yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,651. I should like some explanation of the answer you gave about laying down land for pasture, and the price paid for seeding?—The valuers only allow the outgoing tenant 10*s.* an acre. That is ridiculous. It is too little by a great deal, if it is properly done, for seeds—young seeds. It costs me about 25*s.*, that is all I know, in seeds alone.

19,652. You cannot get them from any seedsman for much less?—Not if you get first-class seeds.

19,653. How do you find the land laid down for pasture. Does it generally come rapidly into pasture?—Yes, it is wonderful. With some land it is quite wonderful how soon it makes pasture where it is in good heart.

19,654. And it must be treated pretty well afterwards?—You must top-dress it in about six years or so.

19,655. It takes some time before you can get a good pasture?—Before you can get good fattening land it takes a long time.

19,656. In our part of the country, if you leave a square yard of ground without any seed, it will be there for seven years without a blade of grass?—It is quite different here. I do not know why it is, but if seeds have failed, the patches will all grow up in a couple of years with some sort of grass—not the best grass, but some sort.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Chairman.

19,656*a*. I have some questions put in by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Mention the clauses in "the agreement which you consider cumber-"some?"—I do not think I used the word "cumbersome." "Oppressive" was the word I used, I think.

19,657. Well, say oppressive?—The penalty clauses. They may be considered oppressive.

19,658. "Which clauses do you propose to "strike out of the agreement in future?"—I have not really made up my mind, but most likely Clause 4 will go out.

19,659. "Have you or Sir George Meyrick "ever taken advantage of Clause 9?"—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

19,660. What was Clause 9?—About the dogs. About nine years ago some puppies were sent to be walked, and the farmers, those that I asked, were very glad to take them. Some said they could not take them, and they were not forced to take them. Prizes were given for the best walked puppies. I think nine dogs were sent in one year, and 12 in another year. It is entirely a matter of goodwill. This clause is kept from the old agreement, which was made about 40 or 50 years ago. Any damage that was done by the puppies was paid for.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,661. Do you have any bills for damages?—No, we do not want a bill. I pay them without having a bill sent in.

Chairman.

19,662. Further questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith. "Has your attention ever been called "to a place called Fferam Fawr"?—Yes.

19,663. "Was there any difficulty about that?"—What sort of difficulty?

19,664. I suppose as regards Clause 9?—Not that I know of. I do no not remember that there was any difficulty.

19,665. "Have you supplied agreements "recently, and when, to tenants on the estate?" —Yes, whenever they are asked for. I cannot remember when, but almost every year.

19,666. "Have you given agreements to any "of the tenants who are to be called in the "course of this inquiry?"—I have.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,667. Do you have the agreements in Welsh and English?—No, only in English. I gave the reason—because it is almost impossible to get the equivalent in Welsh.

Chairman.

19,668. "Have you asked any of the tenants "to give evidence before this Commission?"—The tenants were all met together, and they wanted to know whether they had not better give evidence. I said: "You had better arrange "the whole thing among a committee of your-"selves," and I believe they have done so. I gave them copies, and all that sort of thing, when they wanted them. They lose their agreements—they are continually losing their agreements.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,669. How was this meeting of the tenants convened?—I do not know at all. They did it among themselves. I was not at any meeting.

19,670. Who mentioned to you about it?—The way it was mentioned, to begin with, was in conversation after a manor court.

Chairman.

19,671. "Has their evidence been submitted "to you, or anyone on your behalf?"—No, not those tenants.

19,672. Any tenants?—Some. Some produced their evidence, and I said: "You had "better take it away. I have nothing to do "with it. Send it to the secretaries direct."

19,673. Then the answer to that question is, "No"?—Virtually no.

19,674. No tenants have submitted evidence to you?—The word "submit" is rather an awkward word. If you say "produced" to me, I say it has been, but if you ask has it been submitted to me with a view to revision, alteration, approval, or disapproval, I say no.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,675. Did you read their evidence?—Certainly, the evidence of some of them.

Chairman.

19,676. "What are your powers in the selec-"tion of a tenant?"—Full, except this, that I made a list, and I keep it. I heard this morning, for instance, that a poor old tenant aged 81 had died; there are already three applications I had by post this morning. I keep the list open for about a month, inquiring into all the circumstances, and I submit three or four of those that I think are the best to the landlord, and he makes the selection.

19,677. "Is your recommendation always "acted on?"—No.

19,678. "If not, can you give any instances "in which your recommendation has not been "acted upon?"—I do not keep a record in that way. I destroy the lists, but the landlord, of course, sometimes knows of the people, and likes to put a man in that I have not thought of, perhaps a man with no capital, or something of that kind, that he puts in out of kindness.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,679. Did you tell the Commission just now how the translation of the agreements into Welsh was done?—Well, I can translate myself as well as most people.

19,680. What time do you give them to consider it. Do they take the agreements home with them before they sign them?—No; they know about the agreements on the estate, most of them. You very seldom get new men; they are almost all related one way or another, to one another. I practically never will let a man sign unless I go through the whole thing, but the general terms are as well known as the Bible.

Chairman.

19,681. "In how many cases have the servants "of your predecessors in the agency, or of "yourself, obtained farms on the Bodorgan "estate?"—There have been old servants, I suppose, half a dozen I should say in a hundred years. I cannot remember.

19,682. Your own servants?—Yes, they have been in service with me or my predecessors.

19,683. "Were tenants evicted to make room "for them?"—No, never.

19,684. "Can you give the names of the farms "upon which there has been a change of tenants "during the last ten years?"—If I had the paper I can give you the names. I have a note of all the notices to quit for the last 20 years.

19,685. Will you send them in?—I will give you a copy of them. I cannot now, because I did not know you would want it; but I have it among my papers. I may be wrong, but I think there are 23 notices in the last 21 years, that is to say, notices that have been acted upon, and there was a reason for every one.

19,686. "You say the estate was valued in 1871?"—Yes.

19,687. "Was this valuation made by a Mr. Algeo"?—Yes.

19,688. "Will you produce this valuation"?—I have got a summary of it here.

19,689. "Will you put that in?"—Yes. This is an extract from the valuations in 1871 of the Bodorgan estate. "Estate in 31 parishes in "Anglesey. Amount of valuation 11,754*l.* Let "under valuation for 11,255*l.* The valuation "gave an increase on the old rental of about "12 per cent. Let at about 4*l.* per cent. below "valuers' figures. The acreage was then "14,476A. 1R. 14P. It has since been increased "by purchases to about 17,000 acres."

19,690. "Has there been any valuation since 1871"?—No, no thorough valuation.

19,691. "Do you know how much money was spent on the estate during the last 19 years"?—I have got all the expenditure for the last 100 years, but I did not go into it. I have only been agent for 20 years. The reason why I began 19 or 20 years ago was that I was appointed agent about 21 years ago, and after that a large estate of 2,000 acres was bought.

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,692. You said just now that there were 23 evictions in the last 21 years?—You call them evictions, they were only notices to quit.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

19,693. 23 notices to quit that have been acted upon?—Notices that have been acted upon.

19,694 23 notices to quit that have been acted upon in 21 years?—Yes, I think it was so.

19,695. How many farms are there?—255.

19,696. So that that is about one a year over the 255 farms?—Yes.

Chairman.

19,697. "In the case of Bodelwa you have said you allowed the tenant to remain on the farm in face of an unfavourable independent report"?—I did not say so. I did not mention the place, to begin with. I referred to it, but I did not mention it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,698. Was that the case where there was arbitration?—Yes.

19,699. Did you not say that the tenant remained in the farm, and that you were satisfied?—I said that the arbitrator decided against the tenant, but I left him there. He is there now.

Chairman.

19,700. "Was the tenant so permitted to remain a Tory"?—I do not know what his politics are. I never inquired. I believe he is a Tory, but I do not care what he is. He has been there for the last, I do not know how many years, 30 years I daresay, and he has had a family of 18.

19,701. The question was "Was the tenant so "permitted to remain a Tory?" You say you do not know what his politics are?—I believe he is a Tory.

19,702. You believe he is a Tory, but you do not know for certain?—No, I do not know which way he votes.

19,703. Kindly simply answer the questions, because we have a heavy day before us. "In "the case of Treriffri did you refuse to refer the "question of rent to arbitration"?—Certainly I did. It was not a question of rent. It was a question of interest on outlay.

19,704. "In the case of Treriffri, did you "refuse to refer the question of rent to arbitra-"tion"?—It was submitted to arbitration finally, and decided on arbitration.

19,705. "Was the tenant of Treriffri, a Liberal"?—I do not know what he was. The tenant of Treriffri was an old lady, and women had no votes in those days. I really do not know what her politics were.

19,706. "Do you allege that all tenants on "the Bodorgan estate obtain compensation (full "compensation or otherwise, and how much) "for the improvements which they make on "their farms"?—May I ask this question. Does it mean in case of sale?

19,707. I suppose it means to put it in every way, in case of sale, or in case of the tenants being given notice to quit, or in case of their giving notice to quit?—If they leave they get compensation, but as long as they are sitting there, as a rule they do not, except by arrangement. It is matter of agreement.

19,708. Do they get compensation when they leave their farms?—Yes, compensation was given to all those who sent in proper claims, only in cases of sale. I have a list here.

19,709. "Will you repeat this statement "when your attention is called to the case of "Fferam Fawr"?—Oh, yes, there was compensation given in that case, according to the agreement.

19,710. Full compensation?—According to the agreement.

19,711. "Do you agree that some tenants on "the Bodorgan estate obtain compensation and "some do not"?—They get compensation if they have done any permanent improvements, and if they have not, they do not.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,712. But you mentioned just now "proper" notices, or "proper" something—proper applications, I think?—That is not on the estate, we waive that. That was a general question.

Chairman.

19,713. "Can you enumerate the tenants on "the estate who have obtained full compensa-"tion for their improvements"?—I have a list here in cases of sales, of 27 tenants who had compensation amounting to 1,169*l.* 13*s.* (See Appendix.)

Mr. Grove.

19,714. How many years does this run over?—In 1886 to 1889, the amount was 342*l.* In 1889, it was 795*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, and in 1890, 32*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, total 1,169*l.* 13*s.* 0*d.* That is of sales only.

Chairman.

19,715. "Have you any knowledge of the "political and religious opinions of the tenants "on the estate of which you are agent"?—I have no idea what religion they are.

19,716. Or politics?—I have an idea, but I never ask a man when a farm is let to him what he is.

19,717. "Have you ever let a farm without "knowing the religious and political opinions "of the successful applicant"?—Yes, over and over again.

19,718. Have you ever interfered in any way "with the political views of the tenants"?—No.

19,719. "Have you ever induced, or attempted "to induce, any tenant of the estate to attend "political meetings"?—No.

19,720. "How often do you visit the farms "on the Bodorgan estate"?—It depends upon the farmers. As a rule, I try to get round to them all, once in three years, but then we have buildings. I attend to the buildings myself, and I go to the same farm once a fortnight, so that I cannot be in two places at once.

Chairman—continued.

19,721. "You have said that tenants make "improvements without the landlord's know- "ledge or consent?"—They do, yes.

19,722. "Will you give any instance you "know of, in which improvements were made "on the Bodorgan estate without your know- "ledge or consent?"—Well, I find out afterwards. I find out when the work has been begun, but they have been begun without my knowledge or consent.

19,723. "Have you ever explained to the "tenant that he was building at his own risk?" —I have, over and over again.

19,724. "You have said that tenants con- "stantly make improvements which are not "'real improvements'"?—I did not say constantly. They do do it.

19,725. "Can you give examples on the "Bodorgan estate of tenants' improvements "which are not 'real improvements'"?—Yes.

19,726. "Will you name the farmer and far- "mers, and explain why the improvements "are not 'real'"?—I may refer to a place in which a bog was drained, and which is of less value now than it was before.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,727. Because it was drained?—Yes, it is good for nothing. It was too light. There was some sort of grass there in the spring before: now there is nothing; it is quite brown—brown as this floor. There is another very large bog that was drained, and afterwards the rateable value had to be reduced. It was actually reduced in value, because as long as it was kept moist there was some sort of herbage, but when it all got dry and dusty, nothing grew there.

19,728. I quite agree with you that it is possible?—Oh, it is quite possible.

Chairman.

19,729. "Will you mention the date, after "which the landlord on the Bodorgan estate "built on his farms at his own expense"?—I cannot tell you exactly, but I suppose it is more than 10 years ago.

19,730. "How long was this before or after "the tenant of Treriffri left his farm"?—Oh, it began with that. I was going to find the date. That was the first. That was done entirely at the landlord's expense. That was begun in 1882, which is just 11 years ago. I thought it was about that.

19,731. When did the tenant of Treriffri leave his farm?—I believe he left in 1883 or 1884.

19,732. "Was it, and until when, the custom "on the Bodorgan estate for the tenants to "carry peat for the use of the agent"?—It used to be the old custom. It has been done away with for the last—I do not know how many years ago—15 years ago I should say.

19,733. "Is it also the custom on the Bodorgan "estate for the tenants to cart gravel for the "agent's walks and to cart materials for build- "ings erected on the agent's own property"?—No. I cart for the tenants sometimes. I have had presents of gravel, and I always make an acknowledgment for them.

Chairman—continued.

19,734–5. You have presents of gravel?—Not presents but cartage of gravel.

19,736. Then the answer to that is "yes"?—It is yes, but then it is for a consideration.

19,737. The question is, "Is it the custom for the tenants to cart gravel for the agent's walks"?—Certainly not.

19,738. Has it ever been done?—It is not a custom. One tenant does bring me a load of gravel and always takes back a load of something else. It is not a custom.

19,739. Or "to cart materials for buildings "erected on the agent's own property"?—No, certainly not.

19,740. Nothing of the sort has ever been done?—A farmer has carted as a favour for me, and I have carted for him.

19,741. Then you say you have had gravel carted for your walks?—I have had a load carted by one particular old tenant, who was an old nurse of mine. She brings me a load of gravel every year, and always takes a load back of something else.

19,742. Does anybody give you materials for building?—No, I pay for everything.

19,743. The answer to that is "no"?—No.

19,743*a*. "Have any materials for buildings "erected on your own property ever been carted "by the tenants?"—Well, I have had gravel carted, as I say, but I have always paid the carter.

19,744. Not gravel; materials for building?—Only gravel.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,745. A load of what generally goes back?—Hay. It is a particular kind of hay, which is called "gwair rhaffau." It is for making hay ropes, or whatever you call them—hay bands.

19,746. So that really your old nurse is better off?—This is just as she likes. I intend her to be better off. That is my wish.

Chairman.

19,747. "What payment, if any, did you "make for these services to the old nurse?"—I have told you.

19,748. "Was it done for you by several "tenants, or any and which, last summer;" that relates to the cartage?—There was some gravel carted last summer.

19,749. Gravel?—Yes, not for walks, but for building.

19,750. By the old nurse?—No, by somebody else—by other tenants.

19,751. Then I had better go through these questions: "Has this in fact been done by "tenants for you." That is carting gravel and carting materials for buildings?—Yes, and I paid the carters, and gave them a feed too.

19,752. "Was it done for you by the several "tenants, or any and which, last year?"—I say it was.

19,753–4. "Did you erect buildings, or were "buildings erected for you at Llanerchymedd

Chairman—continued.

" last year, and did tenants of the Bodorgan " estate carry, and how much, gravel or sand, " or other material for your building?"—I say they did.

19,755. "What payment, if any, did you make for this service"?—That is what I say; I paid the carters, and I gave them their food.

19,756. You paid the carters?—Yes, they got 1*s.* apiece, I think it was.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,757. Then the tenants themselves did not get anything?—No.

19,758. Did you ask them to do it?—I did not ask them, they offered.

19,759. They offered in every instance?—In every instance. I never thought of asking. In fact, some of them came and I did not know that they had come at all. It was afterwards that I heard of it.

Chairman.

19,760. All you paid was a shilling and a dinner to the carters?—That is all.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,761. As this was a special occasion, how did they know of it?—They knew I was building, I suppose. Llanerchymedd was a market town, and they saw that I was building.

Chairman.

19,762. The only payment was 1*s.* to the carter, and the dinner?—Yes.

19,763. "When the land of Penrhoswen was added to Parciau Eirianallt, did not the sitting tenant make every effort to be allowed to remain in his farm"?—I went to see the house, and the first thing I saw was, the door was shut, the windows were all to pieces, and the children were creeping in and out like rats. The house was filthy, the mother never went near the children, and the man was at that time—well, he was insolvent.

19,764. "Was a petition in his favour sent to " the landlord after you had refused to give him " the farm"?—It is quite possible. I do not remember now.

19,765. "Why was the tenant of Penrhoswen turned away"?—Because the place was so awfully neglected, and he was too poor to carry it on. He used to cart, or something, and never went near the place.

19,766. "If you allege that the reason was the ruinous state of the buildings, will you explain how it was that new buildings were built near the site of the old buildings for the use of the present owner of the land"?—Really the buildings were on a different holding. That little place Penrhoswen was let by itself in those days, and now it has been consolidated with the other one, and the buildings are more convenient where they are now than where the old building was. I have answered the question, if I understand it rightly.

Chairman—continued.

19,767. But you kept up the old buildings?—No, the old building was pulled down.

Lord Kenyon.

19,768. But I understood you to say that there was another reason—that the tenant was insolvent. It was not only the ruinous state of the buildings?—Certainly. The new buildings were built several years ago.

Chairman.

19,769. "Is the present holder of the land a Conservative"?—He may be.

19,770. Now, I have a number of questions by Mr. R. H. Williams. "How many farms on the " Bodorgan estate have been consolidated during " the last 25 years"?—I cannot tell without referring; but I think there have been half a dozen. Penrhoswen was one.

19,771. "Referring specially to the parishes " of Llangadwaladr and Aberffraw, can you " mention the farms consolidated in this dis- " trict"?—There were several little places that were consolidated in Aberffraw, because I could not let them otherwise.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,772. Why could you not let them?—They were in an out-of-the-way place, too far for a man to live comfortably there.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,773. You mean to say there were no roads?—There were roads, but they were too far from the centres of labour. There was no occupation for a man there.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,774. What size places were they?—Little places about five or six acres—labourers' cottages more than anything else—they are not farms, they are what we call tenements.

Chairman.

19,775. "Do you know Bontvaen"?—I do.

19,776. "Has any of the common land been " enclosed and attached to Bontvaen. If so, " what acreage"?—I believe there was a bit enclosed by the late tenant. In 1881 there were a few yards taken in to straighten the fence.

19,777. Do you know what the acreage of it was?—No; I do not think it was an acre altogether, the part I am referring to.

19,778. "Have any notices with your autho- " rity, knowledge, or consent been put up " forbidding tenants and others to cart sand " from the Aberffraw Common"?—Yes, certainly.

Chairman—continued.

19,779. "By what right was such notice put up"?—Because sand was being carted by others than those that had a prescriptive right. There was a brother, I believe, of Mr. David Owens, who was building in this town, and he carried sand here; and although there is plenty of sand there you must protect your rights; there could be no prescription to carry sand to a new house in Llangefni.

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,780. You claim a private right to that sand, do you?—As lord of the manor only.

19,781. As lord of the manor only?—As lord of the manor. Why I principally objected was, because they would carry the sand away from a wall, and so sap the foundations of the wall. If they had carried it from the open common I should not have said so much.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,782. We heard yesterday of the owner of the Bodorgan estate and Lady Neave being parties to an action?—That is a different place altogether, I have explained that.

Chairman.

19,783. "Do you allege that there are any and "what rights possessed by the Bodorgan estate "over the Aberffraw Common"?—I say that the present Baronet is the lord of the manor.

19,784. "Do you claim the rabbits"?—Certainly. As lord of the manor we claim the sporting. The right has been allowed by the Crown, and we claim wreck rights, and get them every year. We had 30*l.* last year.

19,785. "Have you on any and what farms, "planted trees without the consent of the "tenant"?—Most of the tenants want to plant trees, and trees would have been planted but for these bad times. I never have planted trees without consent, I may say.

19,786. "Have you ever planted trees on any "farm without the consent of the tenant"?—No.

19,787. "Do you know what sleeping accom-"modation there is for farm labourers at "Mynydd Ithel"?—No, I do not. I know the place, I have not been in the sleeping room.

19,788. "Have any of the tenants complained "to you that the sleeping accommodation for "the servants in that farm is inadequate"?—No, I was there last year, or this spring, I forget which—last year and this spring.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,789. Did you inspect the buildings?—No, I did not. The man was not in a good state of health. He was suffering from melancholy or something, and I did not like to bother him.

Chairman.

19,790. "Will you repeat this statement when "your memory is refreshed by recalling to you "the name of William Roberts, of Pandy "Treban"?—What sort of complaint?

19,791. About sleeping accommodation for servants being inadequate on the farm of Mynydd Ithel?—There is an old building there, but I do not think it was a sleeping room. If I remember right, it was a wool store. I went to the house about two months ago. There was certainly no sleeping room there. There was a lot of wool lying there. He is a wool manufacturer.

19,792. You say that no tenants have complained to you that the sleeping accommodation for the servants was inadequate on that farm?—No.

19,793. And you have had no complaints from Mr. William Roberts, of Pandy Treban?—Not about sleeping accommodation.

19,794. Then I have some questions by Mr Vincent: "Is the entire police force of the county "about 30"?—It is, I believe. I do not know exactly. It used to be 27; I do not know how many it is now.

19,795. "When payments were made in "respect of the squatters, were they all, so far as you know, made to the Woods and Forests"?—Yes, certainly.

19,796. "With regard to your experience as "an agent, do you farm yourself, and have you "had experience in erecting buildings, &c."?—Yes, I farm 190 acres of very stiff clay, and I am always building.

19,797. "Is there any right recognised by "which a tenant can dispose of his interest on "your estate"?—No.

19,798. Then I have questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Does your experience tell you that "tenants take much notice of their agreements "or attend to the clauses in them"?—No, they do not.

19,799. "And on the other hand, do the land-"lords enforce the agreements as against their "tenants"?—Not as a rule.

19,800. "In fact are not the agreements very "little thought about by either side"?—Quite so.

19,801. Then I have one or two other questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "You have "said that you had never asked a tenant to "attend a political meeting, or interfered with "their politics"?—I never "induced" was my word. I might have asked them, but I never induced them to attend a political meeting.

19,802. You are asked: "Have you ever "induced, or attempted to induce, any tenant to "attend political meetings," and you say no?—I say "not induced"—not used any sort of influence.

19,803. Or attempted to induce?—No.

19,804. "You say you have never asked a "tenant to attend a political meeting, or inter-"fered with their politics. Is this your hand-"writing and letter.

'Bodorgan, Llangefni,
'N. Wales,
'7th November 1885.

'DEAR SIR,

'I KNOW you were a Liberal, but you were always a very good friend and an

Chairman—continued.

upholder of liberty and religion, which I think are in serious danger from Mr. Chamberlain, and I am glad to hear from John Hughes I was not wrong. Can you attend a public meeting at Aberffraw, of which notice will be given, to support Captain Rayner, and say a few words as to land, &c.?—

'Yours truly,

'THOMAS PRICHARD.

'To Mr. Samuel Owen.'"

Yes, my Lord.

19,805. That is your letter?—That is my writing. That is my letter, yes. By "inducing" I understand undue influence, and I used no undue influence. Mr. Owen did not come to the meeting.

19,806. Then you still allege that you did not interfere with the politics of any of the tenants?—I do not consider that that is any interference. I did not.

19,807. You consider that that is no interference?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,808. Captain Rayner was the Conservative candidate, I presume?—He was the Conservative candidate.

Chairman.

19,809. A question is sent up by R. M. Evans—"What is the name of the manor which is "under the control of the Bodorgan estate?"—There are two manors.

19,810. Have you stated them?—The names are given in full in my statement.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 20,187.

The Right Honourable the LORD STANLEY OF ALDERLEY called and examined.

Witness.

Witness—continued.

and also an enclosure in Holyhead Island called Pwll Pillo. I produce the deeds of conveyance of both these. At the time enclosures were made neither allotments nor recreation grounds had been thought of, and they would have been no use in the out-of-the-way places where enclosures were made. For instance, the only enclosure I know was made in the end of last century or the beginning of this, on the Llancilian Mountain. Then I am asked, what is their effect on the rent of adjacent farms. I asked that, the other day of a tenant who has the right of getting sand on the Towyn, which the London and North-Western Railway crosses. He said it was handy, but made no alteration in the rent. I may state that the Commissioners of Woods and Forests sold the surface rights of that to a Captain Thomas, and he began enclosing. My late uncle resisted this, and insisted upon my joining him, which I did. It cost me 50*l.*, and I believe we won the law-suit against the person who was trying to enclose it; but I really think this sort of commons are very much better allotted and divided. Then they get improved and become of value to somebody, whereas at present the value is very small to the few people that make use of them. Then I am asked about management: "Where land is held "by small or large, by absentee or resident "landowners in consolidated or scattered "estates." No rule can be laid down. Evidently where an estate is scattered the owner cannot visit it, and the agent has more trouble in visiting it than where the estate is consolidated. I have done a good deal in the way of consolidating my Anglesey estate. As I have said, I own land in 30 parishes. I have now got rid altogether of five parishes, Llancilian, Llanfechell, Llanfairmathafarneithaf, Llandyfrydog, and another. I have only two places which I have not yet got rid of. Then I am asked,

Witness—continued.

"Where there is a difference of either language, "politics, or religion between the landlord (or "agent) and the tenant or proposed tenant." Now these differences are perfectly immaterial. I find by my books that I have spent quite as much money upon the houses and buildings of tenants who do not speak a word of English as on those who do. As to religion, that I have nothing whatever to do with The differences between the different sects are very small, and do not concern me. As to politics, I have only got two electioneering experiences. I have never had anything like a political eviction, or any eviction at all. One of my experiences was in the last election, when I let it be known that I preferred Mr. Lewis, the sitting member, because he was a good, honest Radical, and had been so all his life, whereas the late Mr. Morgan Lloyd was not properly speaking a Radical; he called himself a Liberal Unionist, and he took up with a number of Radical ideas for the time, in order to catch votes. My other experience was just after I came into my property, when I first went into the House of Lords. I did not then consider myself firm in the saddle, so, being asked in the case of a bye-election, I said that I wished the tenants to vote as they pleased. Just after that, a Conservative country gentleman called upon me; he followed me out of my house to where I was, and said that the opposite side had been putting pressure on one of my tenants who wished to vote for the Conservative candidate, pretending that it was upon my wish that that had been done. I said, "It "is quite the contrary. I have said that I wish "my tenants to vote as they please, but of "course I prefer the Conservative." He said, "will you write me that." I said, "yes, I will, "but you are not to make any public use of it— "not to publish it." However, he did do so; he made a poster of it and it was placed up all over the place. Then a gentleman, I think his name was Mr. Ashton, who had been a supporter of my father's in Parliamentary elections, wrote to me and said "I suppose this is a forgery." I answered that it was not a forgery; that I had not intended it to be published, though it was published; but that a great personal and political friend of Mr. Gladstone's had just been writing to me, and saying that he had been requested to see whether I would ask my tenants to vote for the Liberal. That answer shut him up entirely, and I heard no more about it. As to difference of language, I may say I have never been able to speak Welsh, chiefly owing to my having always been more or less deaf, though I am worse now than I was. I found it very difficult to catch the Welsh sounds, and I think that all Welshmen do not pronounce exactly alike, but I have always done my best to promote the purity of the Welsh language when I have heard it interpreted and so on, and in providing reprints from the old Welsh manuscripts. I should be much obliged if Professor Rhŷs would mention to me what is the Welsh for "turnips."

Professor Rhŷs.

19,811*a.* I am not here to answer questions, but I will tell your Lordship at the end of the sitting.

Witness—continued.

That is a word that I find very few people —educated Welshmen—know, although it is still in use in South Wales, and you will find it in some of the old dictionaries printed in North Wales. Then there is another word which I find nearly every Welshman that I have asked, states is an English word, whereas it is really a Welsh word; that is, "park." I should be glad afterwards if the Professor would tell me what the essence of that word is. He ought to know, and I have no doubt he does, but I do not believe anybody else in this room does. Agents usually have special training. Where they have not, the tenants put them at a disadvantage. Then as to the term of tenancy; the usual date of entry is November the 13th. Then: "Are farms let on leases from year to "year?" Both. There is no demand for leases, but I may say that from my last experience, I am not altogether in favour of leases. I agree with what I am told was said by Mr. Prichard, of Llwydiarth Esgob, who has just gone, that the leaseholders are generally bad farmers. I have inherited a few leases, that is to say, I have inherited land on which leases had already been given, and some of those lessees are certainly very slovenly farmers. There are other objections which I will mention further on. Leaseholders for their own life, or for lives, seem to be less careful in their farming. Then: "Have changes become more "or less frequent than in former years? If "more frequent, to what causes are they attri- "butable?" Not more frequent. Where they occur, the chief cause seems to be from the tenants being unmarried or childless. I see that there has been reference made before the Commission to the diminution of population. Now, lately I have been going a good deal about the country and among the people, and asking who lives in this farm and that farm, and I find that in a great majority of farms there are either bachelors or widows, or old women married to young men, but I find very few fathers. I must say that that, is a thing which ought to be discouraged, and I am sorry to read that one member of the Commission has been using Malthusian language which is quite of an opposite nature, and calculated to encourage what I must consider a misfortune, if not a vice. I find that in South Wales one member of the Commission said that a woman of 50 would be a comfort to a young man of 25; or rather, he asked whether a young man of 25 would not be a comfort to a woman of 50. Now, in married life, if people are not to live like cat and dog, the advantages must be mutual.

19,812. I think if you will read the evidence you will find that the Commissioners were not agreed on that point?—I am very glad to hear

it. That is a very good thing. Then "have "any cases of hardship arisen." I can mention one case of hardship. In 1876 a person asked from me a lease of a small farm, about 27 or 28 acres. A good deal was done in re-arranging the land to make it convenient for him. Then, I am sorry to say, this gentleman became bankrupt, not through any fault, or any blameable fault of his, but chiefly through extravagance in building in other places belonging to him. I was told that he had made cornices to his farm buildings in some places, and there were other extravagances in his buildings. 13 years ago a man bought the remainder of this lease for 330*l.*, and spent 20*l.* more upon it, as I have seen lately. Then this man writes to me and says that the rent of his place is higher than that of some of my neighbouring farms, and asks to have his rent reduced; he also complains that his wife is now an invalid, which was true, and that therefore he is under greater difficulties. Well, I should be perfectly willing to take one of two courses—either to reduce the rent, which he says is now high, from about 27*s.* per acre to 25*s.*, or to say to him that he may exchange with any of my tenants who have a cheaper farm, and who would be willing to exchange with him. In that case I should probably have to let the farm to the tenant who exchanged at less than it is now. But here is the hardship. I am told that I cannot do that. The man offers himself to surrender the lease, but I am told that, in consequence of the agitation, if I did this I should be represented as tyranically trying to get this man to give up the lease, which has only got about five years more to run. I should be glad of the opinion of the Commissioners as to the course it would be proper for me to take, and whether I could safely take back this man's lease and reduce his rent, or let him take another farm, without exposing myself to any obloquy. May I hope for an answer after I have done, upon that question too. I may say that that shows the disadvantage there would be, supposing there was what some of the agitators are agitating for, namely, free sale. Everybody would be saddled with the money that this man paid: for instance, on this small farm he paid 330*l.* for the half of a 21 years' lease. I would say another thing. The buildings were made larger and more expensive than they need have been. He has got tieing for six cows, though he usually only has three. He has got stables for three horses, which is two too many for a farm of that size; he only has one horse. If these tenants are allowed to make improvements, as they call them, without any check, they will be over-building all over the place. Then "In resuming the occupation of a field or "plot out of a holding for the sake of planting, "building, or for other purposes, do owners "generally serve their tenants with proper "notices for the purpose, and grant them com-"pensation." As far as my knowledge goes, notices are not required, but such matters are arranged on an amicable footing, and compensation always given by reduction of rent. In Anglesey I have only had two cases. One was with the late Mr. Owen, of Penmynydd. I planted some plots of land, about two acres altogether, in the manner he wished, chiefly for shelter for the cattle and shelter for the grasses, which require shelter from the sea winds. It was all settled by him, and I deducted from the rent the amount for the land that was taken, and the tithe. In the other case some land was taken from two tenants in Holyhead Island, and in those cases I deducted from the rent whatever was the average value of the whole farm, not having regard merely to the actual value of the particular land which was taken, which was merely rock, and of very little value, so that the tenants were perfectly satisfied. Then "If "damage is done to the land in timber-cutting, "is the tenant compensated." There is no timber to cut in Anglesey, except close to Menai Straits. Then "If any mining, brick fields, "quarries, or other industrial operations have "been commenced on land in your occupation, "has the rent been re-adjusted, or compensation granted in consequence." No brick fields in Anglesey except one at Cemaes just established. Then "What are the usual conditions of tenancy. "Produce copy of agreement or lease." This [handing] is one of my old agreements. I have made some later, but I can hardly give them in, because they have not yet been applied, except in very few cases. The reason I have not got the new agreements is because of the danger of trouble with the income-tax collectors if the tithe is merged with the rent. "Are any of the "clauses considered oppressive." I have never heard of any such thing, and they really have very little effect. Such clauses are only safeguards for cases of very bad farming, otherwise cultivation is left to the discretion of the farmer. "Are penalising clauses common, and are they often enforced." I never heard of any of them being enforced at all. Then as to "rent: its amount." As to my rents, as far as I can make out the average of a total assumed to be 5,700 acres would be 17*s.* 9*d.* or under 18*s.* an acre, since in some cases the tithe is included in the rent, so that it would be difficult to ascertain the exact average. The average of 29 holdings from 1 to 18 acres is nearly 17*s.* an acre; this is contrary to what usually occurs as to small holdings being let at a higher rent than the large ones. The average of 21 farms of from 20 to 48 acres is 17*s.* 6*d.* an acre. The average of 12 farms from 50 to 80 acres is 14*s.* 6*d.* per acre. One farm of 91 acres is at 28*s.* 6*d.* an acre, and the average of 23 farms above 100 acres is 17*s.* 3*d.* per acre. I have no difficulty in letting farms. If the Commission like, I can hand in a statement of the rents in 1821, 1851, and 1893, showing very little change. (See Appendix.) Then I am asked "Is the rent annually fixed on a gross sum at so much per acre." My rents are not fixed, they are what they have been before, and sometimes increased with a new tenancy by mutual agreement. Where I have taken away any land I have diminished the rent by the average of the whole, very much in the same way as I have done with regard to letting. "Is there any uniformity "in the rents of land of similar qualities on "the same or neighbouring estates"? Generally there is "Is the rent of the smaller "tenantry higher per acre than on larger "farms"? Not in my case in Anglesey; rather the other way. Then I say there are no upland farms in Anglesey. The right of pasturage over a common, &c., is not taken into account when the rent is fixed. No services other than the payment of rent are rendered by the tenants. Then I am asked, "Is the holding practically "let to the highest bidder"? I know of no highest bidders, and should not listen to any if there were such. Then as to the acceptance of tenants with sufficient capital, tenants are often accepted with less than what authorities consider sufficient capital. So far as I know, arbitrations are not resorted to as a means of settling or re-adjusting the rent. "Have rents "been raised generally, or in individual cases, "within the last 50 years. If so, give particulars"? Not generally. They have in a few individual cases. The statement that I read just now as to rents will explain that. Then as to permanent reductions. Three permanent reductions have been made, one of 25*l.*, one of 10*l.*, and one of 5*l.* In all these cases these permanent reductions were given on account of the age of the tenant, and not on account of the condition of the holding. That also answers the question "When rents are "raised or reduced, does the change depend on "a re-valuation"? The change depends in my case on personal considerations. Then "What "have been the chief fluctuations in prices "affecting rent within the last 50 years"? Wheat has gone down to half the money at which its cultivation is profitable, but little or no wheat is grown in Anglesey. Oats have been more stationary, and cattle have risen very much in price. I have got here a statement of the prices of cattle, but I am sorry to say it is given by my agent only from 1881 to 1892. Previous to 1881 there was a farm bailiff who had the accounts, which have disappeared. The following is the statement:—

Then I am asked "How soon after it falls due "is the rent usually paid"? My November rents are usually paid in January. My May rents used to be paid in June, and since the new Tithe Act are paid in July. "What effect "has the preferential claim for rent on the "position of tenants generally"? The effect of allowing the landlord to give them more time, and of not obliging him to require beforehand rents. "What is the average size of "farms in your district"? As the Chairman told me that it would be useful, I have here a statement of the number of farms and the acreage, from 394 acres down to two acres. (See Appendix.) Then I am asked "Have holdings been consolidated." No. "Have "upland or lowland farms been mostly con-"solidated." As I said, there are no upland farms in Anglesey. Then "What are the re-"lative effects of small and large holdings "respectively on their occupiers, as to their "practical skill in farming." The large holdings are more favourable to skill in farming. Then, on "their condition in time of trade depression;" small holdings may be less affected by trade depression, since their object is principally to maintain their occupiers. Then, on "their ability to provide for their families;" small holdings cannot be expected to provide for, as distinguished from maintaining or supporting a family. I suppose I may take "providing for their families" as referring to providing dowers for the daughters, or setting up children in business; whereas maintaining or supporting, merely means providing daily food. "Is there any land going out of cultivation." None. "To what extent has waste land "been reclaimed by tenants." None that I know of. Then as to draining marshy ground, that may cost more than it would be worth. As to increase or decrease of root crops, root crops have probably increased. For some years I gave prizes for best turnips to my tenants, and desisted after all their turnips had become about equally good. Fallowing has gone out of fashion. Then as to improvements, I am asked "What improvements are generally made in "your district by (1) the landlords." The answer is, buildings, water-courses, drain-pipes, planting, shelter. My expenditure on my Anglesey estate on improvements other than buildings, from 1877 up to the present time, has amounted to 439*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* as shown in the following statement:—

	£	s.	d.
1877	14	0	9	Sea walls.
—	3	16	0	Draining-pipes.

I am told that yesterday a member of the Commission asked some witness whether I had spent any money in improving my property. I think that, as it was known that I was coming here to-day, he might have waited to ask me personally, instead of asking another person, who had to say that he was not prepared to answer. I find that the money spent between 1851 and 1871 upon this Anglesey estate (this is irrespective of Holyhead and Presaddfed) was 3,086*l.* This does not include two years of that period, for which two years (1852 and 1856) the accounts are missing. From 1872 to 1892, both inclusive, I spent 4,475*l.* Besides that, I have spent on something which is a benefit to the farmers and the people in the neighbourhood, and which does not bring me in anything—I have spent 570*l.* on a covered market at Amlwch. That is made up as follows:—

Site - - - -	25
Market - - -	454
Covered shed for carts -	76
	555
	£570

that they are a "curse to the country," or something like that. I have told the Commission what was spent by the agent of my grandfather and father (my father did not come to Anglesey, he had no time, his holidays were always passed in Scotland). There were 3,086*l.* spent on the farms in 17 years. So that after all, that is not much less than what I have spent myself, under personal superintendence, and visiting all the farms regularly as I do. From 1872 to 1892 inclusive, that is 21 years, 4,475*l.* has been spent, as against 3,086*l.* for the 17 years (or 16 years you may call it, as the accounts for one year are missing). 3,086*l.* was spent in that time by the agent at the request of the tenants naturally, or on the requirement of the tenants. I have been perhaps a little more lavish in some respects. I have built a number of new farm-houses, and I have generally made them as convenient as it was possible to do; in fact, you may see that from my having spent so much money in dairies, a point I shall refer to later on, when I give my reply as to instruction and butter and cheese making, and comment on Professor Dobbie's lectures. Then, I am asked what improvements the tenants make. The answer is, drainage and better cultivation after slovenly farming. Of course, if a tenant comes to a bad farm, he will tell you that he has improved it; but that is nothing more than what it is part of his duty to do; it is all in the day's work; he is expected to improve it, or else he would not be chosen. Then, I am asked to "notice specifically . . . . . fences, "gates, and posts." Keeping up gates and posts belongs to the tenants. Where it is not so, as in Cheshire, the gates frequently get very rough usage. I constantly in Cheshire, have to pick up gates that are lying on the grass and rotting, as the tenants neglect them so, and no wonder. I am also told that somebody said yesterday that I did no repairs, as all my rents are based on the calculation that the tenants do the ordinary repairs. In Cheshire no tenant thinks of putting in a nail or doing any little thing of that sort, we have an estate carpenter; and it is very easy to have an estate carpenter where the estate lies compact. But here in Anglesey, where property is so much scattered (mine is less scattered than anybody else's), you cannot have an estate carpenter. You must arrange with the tenants that they shall do a few of their repairs themselves. Then I am asked, "In the case of co-operation "in improvement what is the part usually "undertaken by each, and how is remuneration "secured to either party?" The remuneration all goes to the tenant. "In the case of im-"provement partly or wholly effected by a "tenant, is there any compensation obtainable in "your district?" If a tenant leaves he gets compensation for any improvement partly carried out by him, even though his farm agreement and the lowness of his rent contemplated that his labour was to be given—if he called upon his landlord, for instance, to supply draining pipes. I am very sorry that Mr. Brynmor Jones is not here to-day, as I should have been glad to have his opinion on a point like this. Suppose you have done a good deal for a tenant—built him a large house—a good house—not raised the rent at all, or made any request for higher rent; suppose he asks you to allow him to use some of the materials of the old house for improving and building. According to the agreements, all the landlord has to do is to give him the materials and leave him to make the improvement. Suppose you agree with him that he should do this, and that he should not charge for his part of the labour, under the Agricultural Holdings Act, would that be considered as trying to contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I am sorry that the legal member of the Commission is not here, as I should have been very glad of his opinion, in order to know how to act upon that point. Then I am asked for instances where either party contracts out of the Agricultural Holdings Act? This cannot be done. Then I am asked, "By virtue of the Agricultural Holdings Acts "(1875 and 1883), do farmers often apply for "their landlord's written consent for specific "improvements? If not, why? and with what "results." The result is seldom asked for or needed. I know of three cases where improvements have been made without leave or notice. Two of those are on my own property, and one of them is on a neighbour's. Then I am asked as to "the liabilities of a tenant, as to mode of "cultivation, dilapidations, and sale of produce." Tenants never pay for dilapidations. If they did, what would they pay with? A son, whom I could not accept as a tenant, left his late father's farm without paying the last half-year's rent. He went away, but he came back again, and he was never troubled about it. Then, "Have many (or any) cases occurred in your "district where an outgoing tenant has failed "to obtain sufficient compensation for his "improvements." No, I never heard of such "a case. Then, "Do you know of any "instances where compensation has been given "for the general improved condition of a holding, "and not simply for specific improvements?" Yes. The Royal Agricultural Society gives prizes for the best cultivated farms. "Is there "any right recognised as belonging to tenants "to dispose of their interests in their holdings "to any solvent tenant to whom the landlord "shall not have any reasonable objection?" None whatever. Then I am asked, "In your "experience is the procedure under the Agri-"cultural Holdings Acts workable and satis-"factory?" I find that it is decidedly satisfactory for tenants, but not equally so for owners. There was a case in which I had to compensate a tenant—just a similar case to respects. The plantations in Anglesey are perfectly useless and of no value except for shelter, and they are very much wanted for shelter. The Privy Council are now aware that it is not only the cattle that want shelter but also the grasses. As to bee keeping, there are plenty of flowers for bees all over the country. Then "is there any instruction given in butter "and cheese making." Professor Dobbie, of Bangor, gives lectures in butter making, but this theoretical teaching is not as good as the practical teaching by example of a woman who already can make good butter. Professor Dobbie came to me, and I had three women to meet him to hear what he had to say, and see if he could lay down any fixed rules as to the length of time that milk should set for making butter. He could not; it was impossible to bring him to book. These ladies silenced his guns completely. I had prompted them to speak to him, and as to what they should say. It was intended to ask him what was the Welsh for the English proverb about "teaching your "grandmother to suck eggs." I do not know whether the Commissioners are aware of what the Welsh is; the Welsh is much more polite. It is "the lamb thought it would teach the "sheep how to eat grass." I had already, when Professor Dobbie made his appearance in the country, begun to make improved dairies, and I consider that that is doing as much as I could do if I subscribed to Professor Dobbie's lectures. Then "is there any co-operation among farmers "for purchasing or analysing farm stuffs, e.g., "manures." Yes, some farmers, led on by the late Mr. Thomas Owen, of Penymynydd, established a wharf in the strait between Anglesey and Holyhead for landing coal and manures. Then as to co-operation for farming operations generally, such as threshing, harvesting, and sheep shearing, neighbouring farmers help one another with horses and carts during harvest time. That is one advantage in having relations in adjoining farms. Then "to what extent do "farmers and agricultural labourers avail themselves of benefit societies." I have got a very good answer to that, but I am sorry to say I cannot take the credit of it myself. It is a statement of what the practice is at the Holyhead Board of Guardians. This is a letter from Mr. Robert Gardner, who is, I believe, coming before you:—

"Valley,
Anglesey,
My Lord, August 31, 1893.

I omitted to name in my letter with reference to my suggestion to charge the general revenues of the kingdom with the maintenance of workhouses.

I would institute a sort of pension of provident fund for labourers who, upon subscribing so much, would have sufficient added from general revenues to provide against sickness, accidents, and old age.

At present we have a standing resolution in this union where an applicant for relief has been provident by joining a friendly society which has made provision for him for some time, and has reduced its allowance owing to sickness extending over a year, and compelled him to apply for assistance, we at once make up the deficiency without offering the workhouse test. We find this has caused labourers to join friendly societies, and in time it will have a beneficial effect on the union funds, as well as encourage thrift amongst the labouring class.

I am, my Lord,
Your obedient servant,
Rob. Gardner.

To the Right Hon.
Lord Stanley of Alderley."

Then: "What other provident institutions are "used by them (e.g. savings' banks, building "societies), and to what extent?" The Post Office Savings' Banks advantages are not sufficiently known, and ought to be advertised in railway waiting rooms—I say here "on white enamelled plates," but our adviser says I should not say that. However, I do say that, because in Belgium it is on enamelled plates, which are durable, that the advantages of the Post Office Savings' Banks are advertised. Then about the sale of farms, I think the Chairman was cross-examining Mr. Prichard, of Llwydiarth Esgob, just now about that. I can give the amount of purchase-money, if required, in the cases of several farms. Here is a list of a number of farms that I sold. Most of these were sold by private treaty and agreement with the tenants. In one parish, Llaneilian, the farms were sold by auction. This statement shows the acreage, the price paid, the names of the persons who purchased, and those that were tenants. (See Appendix.) Then I am asked what is the present condition of small freeholders as compared with the yearly tenants about them. That depends very much upon the price at which they purchased. I heard of one of these persons who had purchased one of my farms, selling it at a profit; but with that exception I have not heard any changes. I have very constantly been asked to purchase farms by owners who had been tenants, and had purchased them, and afterwards found that it was burdensome, and wished to get rid of them. I purchased two in that way, and I have been asked to purchase a good many more. Then I am asked, "To what extent do tenant farmers "and their wives take part in the manual "labour of their farms?" Also, "Do their "children work at home; if so, are they in "receipt of wages, or how otherwise remunerated." Also, "What provision is made for "them by their parents on marriage, or independent settlement in life?" Also, "Could "present rents be maintained if wages were "paid in respect of the children's labour." These questions strike at the root of small holdings, and at the teaching of Mr. Jesse Collings and his school, who ask for allotments and small holdings on the ground of their employing the spare time of the labourer or artisan and his family. If a small holding can keep alive a man and his family without other work being sought for, Mr. Jesse Collings is fully justified, and it is unreasonable to expect a small holding to provide , in addition, wages for the children. Mr. P. A. Graham's observations should be borne in mind, that small holdings (as distinguished from allotments) only answer in grazing counties, where the cow supports the holding, without requiring much more labour than what a woman can give. Then I am asked as to gardens, allotments, or small holdings, attached to cottages. I think all my cottages have gardens attached to them. The last witness spoke about a cottage which he said I had, which was 15 feet by 20, and like a box with a door in it. I think there must be a mistake of ownership. I think Mr. Prichard, of Llwydiarth Esgob, as he knew the measurement so well, must have been speaking of a cottage belonging to a farm which he purchased from me, and which is no longer mine. Anyhow, I do not consider myself responsible for the cottages, which are let with the farms and belong to the farms, and I have never had any complaints of them. I have been into a good many of them, all about Bodewryd, and have always been struck with the neatness and cleanness of them, and the quantity of china ornaments that they possess. I have heard that Mr. Owen, of Rhosbeirio, a short time ago expressed surprise at their comfort, and I asked, "How is it that he has only just found this out, "when he has been in Anglesey all his life?" I was told that he had been canvassing for a county councillor, and that he now knew more of labourers' cottages than he used to do. Then I am asked: "Has there been any considerable migra- "tion of farmers or labourers from your district "within the last 50 years; if so, owing to what "cause, and whither have they migrated?"—No one migrates. The few that had migrated returned. I have got one tenant who has been out to California for seven years, and he has come back. I know of several others in the same neighbourhood who have also been to California and have come back again. Then, "When in your opinion did the different periods "of trade depression begin in your district?"—In 1892, that is last year, I think, with the fall in price of cattle. "What are the principal "causes of such depression, and what classes "are chiefly affected by it?"—Free American importations, and the people who chiefly suffer by it are working men in town or country. "What remedies do you suggest for improving "the profits from land?—First, the re-imposition of duties on foreign silk manufactures, which were levied before Cobden's treaty. This would allow of the complete abolition of Schedule B., which is unjust and very harassing to agriculturists and also to Somerset House. The people at Somerset House, the tax collectors, would be very glad to get rid of Schedule B. It causes them more correspondence than it is worth, and they are obliged every year to return a great deal. Some years ago Schedule B. produced 300,000*l.*, and that was all it produced on the general revenue of the country. Now I should think it produces very much less, taking into account the money that has to be returned. The silk duties, before Cobden's treaty threw them over, used to produce 250,000*l.* a year. Those duties alone would set up our silk manufactures, which are all failing, in Macclesfield, and Coventry, and Spitalfields, and wherever there are any. I may say that Schedule B. is particularly harassing to farmers, because they are supposed to be able to appeal against it and get the money back, but this requires them do keep accounts which they are unable to keep, because the Income-tax Commissioners are people of much red tape and routine, and they insist on the accounts being kept in a particular way, The next thing I would suggest is the re-imposition of 1*s.* a quarter registration duty on all grain. That was thrown away by Mr. Lowe when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer. According to Mr. Chaplin, that would have brought in, two years ago, as he said in the House of Commons, two millions and a quarter. Now if you had two millions and a quarter falling into the revenue for nothing, as this would (because the expense of registration is already gone into), that would very likely free the country of rates for schools, and you might abolish all school rates of any kind whatever. The next thing is the imposition of a duty of 5*s.* a quarter upon Colonial and Indian wheat, and of 10*s.* a quarter on foreign wheat, that is to say Russian and American wheat. The example of France and Italy shows that 5*s.* a quarter would not affect the price of bread at all. The duty in France is something like 8*s.* per quarter, and the duty in Italy is about 9*s.* I got reports from our Consuls laid before Parliament, and these showed very clearly that the price of bread in France is very much the same as it is in England. In some places in the Western departments, near Bordeaux, the bread is cheaper than it is in England. Wherever the price of bread is higher, it is chiefly owing to the high rents that the bakers have to pay in towns and cities such as Paris. Then as to general relations between landlord and tenant, whether friendly or otherwise. I have always known them to be friendly. There is one thing more, my Lord, that I want to say. I have seen a reference made by some witnesses to this, that the Welsh farmers are afraid of their landlords, and afraid of their agents, and most afraid of their keepers. Now I am inclined to say that they are most afraid of the preachers. I have found a number of my tenants were willing to do this, that, and the other, but they did not venture to do it, and I was told that it was the fear of the preachers that kept them back. Then there are two statements that I want to hand in, one for Anglesey and one for Holyhead, showing the approximate number of years the present tenants and their ancestors have lived on their holdings on my estate, with such details as could be ascertained. (See Appendix.)

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,813. Can you suggest any system which will be better than mutual freedom of contract between landlord and occupier, first as to rent and then as to tenure?—Certainly not—no better system than the present system of free contract and what is called the higgling of the market. No tenant is obliged to take a farm unless he likes. Take the case that I referred to, where a man paid 330*l.* for a farm. I said to him, "Why are you so silly as to give 330*l.* " when you might have it for nothing." If he could not have had it immediately, he could have had it by waiting, and the 330*l.* that he gave, would have been much better invested, and would have provided him with the rent of a small place and some land. Then as to tenure I do not see that there could be anything better then the year to year tenure. The year to year tenure is practically perpetual as long as a tenant conducts himself well. I was once asked by somebody—I think a foreigner—how it was that we had such a small number of rural police. I explained it to him in this way. I said, in the country districts every man who wishes to be a tenant at starting is obliged to bring a good character, and he is also obliged, in order to remain a tenant to keep a moderately good character; that is to say, he must take care to avoid convictions, even though it be merely for minor offences.

Professor Rhys.

19,814. Did I understand you to say that the labouring man was an especial sufferer from foreign competition?—Yes, certainly. If property owners have less money to spend, the labouring classes must get less wages.

19,815. Do you think that that swamps the larger wages they enjoy and the cheaper rate of provisions?—I would rather not go into questions of political economy offhand like this, without figures, but there is no doubt that when Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright got the Corn Laws repealed they expected to get wages down; they did not look to a rise in them. As a matter of fact, wages have gone up, and that has been due in part to Trades' Unions and in part to the general prosperity of the country, which was not owing to free trade, but owing to the vast impulse given to trade and commerce by steam, by larger steamboats, by the larger freights that were brought over from America. When Cobden spoke, he expected that there would always be 10*s.* per quarter freight on wheat; now wheat is brought over in ballast very often. All those things have affected the calculation. Cobden expected wages to go down for the millhands. That was the expectation of the Manchester men.

19,816. Would you kindly name any time since the reign of Queen Elizabeth when labourers were better off than they are now?—

They are beginning not to be so well off. That is partly owing to strikes too, in the towns, but in the Eastern Counties of England and in Wiltshire the labourers are not as well off. Here in Wales labourers are decidedly well off. I think they are too well off because where the labourer is boarded and lodged it is quite unreasonable that he should get 10*s.* a week pocket money; he only gets it to drink, or at any rate he does not put by as much as he ought.

19,817. You have not quite answered my question?—I think that has been established before the Commission and I think I have seen it also stated before the Labour Commission, that 10*s.* a week pocket money is what the labourer gets where he is boarded and lodged in the place.

19,818. I am sorry to say I do not think you have answered my question. I ask, can you name any time since the reign of Queen Elizabeth when labourers were better off than they are now?—I should say in Queen Elizabeth's time they were much better off, except when Oliver Cromwell upset everything—probably they were very badly off then; but really, one has not got details about these matters much before the Georgian era.

19,819. You alluded to some common land in Holyhead Island, I think. When was that enclosed, do you know?—The conveyance of the Holyhead Island land is dated the 3rd November 1840; the conveyance of the Pwll Pillo Marsh is dated January 25th, 1875.

19,820. Do you know of any resistance to that enclosure; have you ever heard that it was resisted?—No, I never heard of any such thing.

19,821. To whom were those rights conveyed?—To my grandfather.

19,822. What is your opinion with regard to encumbered estates and landlords who are badly off. How about the cultivation of the land on their estates?—Of course it depends upon degree. If the landlord is very much encumbered he can do nothing in the way of any improvements and buildings that are wanted. It is all a question of degree. When he gets that bad, then the chances are that his creditors will come down upon him, and he will be obliged to sell his estate to somebody else, who will make a better use of it, so the evil corrects itself. A moderate incumbrance does not matter very much. I have got no incumbrances to speak of, myself.

19,823. You would not say that they are favourable to good cultivation of the land?—No, of course not.

find out how much incumbrance they had, and for the Government to lay down a margin and say "If your incumbrances are beyond a certain "point, then you must sell! You would not propose that?

19,825. I am not suggesting that, but I want to know what you think the direct or indirect effect would be on the cultivation?—There would be no effect on the cultivation, but a bad effect of course upon the buildings. As long as the buildings that had already been put up lasted well, the tenant would go on just the same, and the incumbrances of his landlord would make no difference to him. If afterwards the buildings came down, and he wanted new ones, then of course he would suffer.

19,826. So far as that goes, it does affect the cultivation unfavourably; a good farmer cannot get on with bad buildings?—That is so.

19,827. So it does make a difference?—Have you come across many encumbered owners?

19,828. I am not here to answer questions; besides, that is not a subject on which we can get information, but you think it does make a difference?—A slight difference, varying with the circumstances—no; I will say that it makes no difference. I will give you one illustration to show that it does not make a difference. Now, when the Agricultural Holdings Act has been passed, any tenant whose buildings are bad can put up the buildings at his own expense and recover for them at the end of the time. I know one landowner who, after the Agricultural Holdings Act was passed, ceased to give the materials; he said to the tenants, "You may "recoup yourselves when you go away." It is true, they did not want to go away, and were not likely to go away, but still, on the whole, a man whose buildings were very bad would be safe in rebuilding, because he could recover the outlay under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

19,829. Have you not got to get the consent of the landlord even under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I imagine a landlord could not refuse it in those circumstances.

19,830. But if he is heavily encumbered, he will probably be obliged to refuse it?—In all these things it is a question of what you can do and what you cannot do. People do not take sufficient account of public opinion, and everybody is under the influence of public opinion. There are a number of things that you could legally do, but which no landowner would do; nobody goes to his extreme legal rights.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,831. Have you done anything in the way of encouraging libraries in the villages, in order to prevent the prowling around the neighbourhood by the farm boys at night?—Yes, I have. I did one thing, and tried to do another. I have made a beginning with a library of Welsh books in my principal farm at Bodewryd; it is in the middle of the property I have there. Then at Bodedern I heard that Archdeacon Wynne Jones,

when he was the owner, had attempted to establish a reading-room, and that the project had fallen through. I offered to build an additional room, either as a school class-room, or simply as a reading-room adjoining the school at Bodedern. The schoolmaster was perfectly willing to keep it open at night, and to receive people there for amusing themselves, for reading and so on; but although I have offered to provide the building, I have not been able to get further than that. They have not yet said that anybody would be glad to have it, nor made any proposal to me as to which spot the building should stand on.

19,832. Are you aware that the dairy accommodation is very inefficient in this county as to modern appliances?—Yes, I am aware, and I have endeavoured to remedy it as much as I know. I have added new dairies, and enlarged dairies in several places, and I keep doing it wherever I can.

19,833. Does the same apply as well to poultry-houses?—I have never heard of that requiring attention; I fancy that they do very well as they are. I have not heard of poultry-houses being insufficient.

19,834. Do you not think that poultry breeding should be encouraged?—Very much so, and I understand that a great deal of it goes on in Anglesey; there is already a great deal, and it should be encouraged. I may say one thing that people do not generally know. It is after all not the breeds of poultry that are of consequence. You might bring fowls from France, Amiens fowls, which are the best layers, but if you bring them to Anglesey they cease laying. The only fowls equal to them are the Dorking fowls; that is because the Dorking fowls live upon the same chalk as the French fowls. It is the chalk that they eat that makes them lay good eggs, and not the breed. If you bring breed fowls from one place to another, it does not follow that they will be as good as the original breed.

19,835. Still in a wet climate, such as you have in this district, I think there should be accommodation indoors for them?—Well, I have seen a lady who had a nest of fowls hatched by her drawing-room fire, and they went about the room very freely. That is the only case I have known of indoor fowls.

Lord Kenyon.

19,836. What do you think of the establishment of a Land Court; will it benefit anyone or any class, in your opinion?—No; I cannot imagine anyone in his senses asking for a Land Court after the experience of Ireland. I do not see that it would benefit anybody. It might possibly benefit a very few people—the first lot who came under it; all the others afterwards would suffer.

Chairman.

19,837. A number of questions are sent up by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith:—"What consolidations have taken place on your estate"?—I am not aware of any consolidations that have taken place. I am going to consolidate two farms, the two houses of which are close together—so close that there is danger of the stacks catching fire—and which are 60 acres each. I am going to build a new house immediately, before I can effect consolidation, which will not be done till I have another place to put one of the tenants into.

19,838. "Have Glan yr Afon, Porth y grug, "Stente, Cwm and Gors been consolidated"?—Mr. Elliott, my agent, tells me that Glan yr Afon and Cwm have been consolidated very many years ago. These were added to Ty mawr for want of tenants. Ty mawr is a farm close to Holyhead. That is one of the farms where I have built a new dairy, and where the tenant has got a gas engine. It was before my time anyhow.

19,839. "How many farms have been taken "by the estate to be farmed"?—None, I should say. The only farm that I have in my hands is one adjoining or close to Penrhos.

19,840. "Is there a clause in your agreement "preventing the tenant from selling turnips and "potatoes"?—I should say certainly not. I should not consider such a clause necessary in my interests, and I do not believe there is any. I have here the old agreement, and I see the clause is as follows: "That all hay, straw, and "turnips, shall be consumed on the farm, pro-"vided nevertheless that the tenant for the "time being shall yearly, on first bringing on "to the farm five tons of good and rotten "manure, be at liberty to sell one ton of hay, "straw, or turnips, for every five tons of manure "so bought." I do not believe that has ever been acted upon. Would you mind asking my agent here whether it has ever been acted upon?

19,841. "Do you consider this clause neces-"sary in your interests"?—No; I think the discretion of the tenants is quite sufficient. It may be necessary though to have something in writing to prevent a bad tenant spoiling the land by ploughing it up unnecessarily.

19,842. "Referring you to Ysgellog, did the "farm remain in the family of the late tenant "for 200 years"?—I do not know whether the late farmer was there for 200 years; I believe he died childless. His former landlord is here, and can tell you.

19,843. "When the farm became vacant was "it applied for by a member of the family, who "was a farmer of good repute and sufficient "means"?—No; I never heard of that applica-tion.

19,844. "Was the farm actually let to Lewis "Jones, a Churchman and Tory"?—Yes, it was let to Lewis Jones. He is a Churchman, but I do not think he is a Tory. The actual tenant had been looking out for that farm for a good while; but I must tell you that the late owner of that farm and I had been talking, I of pur-chasing and he of selling it, for a good many years before.

Chairman—continued.

19,845. "Do you know Pen-y-bryn Rhos-golyn"?—Yes.

19,846. "Was the farmhouse burnt to the ground"?—Yes, it was.

19,847. "Was the house burnt built by the "tenant at his own expense"?—The house was burnt, on the tenant's own account, through his own negligence, that is to say, the tenant con-tended that there was a beam in the chimney which had been constantly catching fire. If so, it was his duty to have informed me or my agent that there was a beam in the chimney which wanted removing. He did no such thing. The real fact was that the tenant took in as a lodger a brother of his who was known to be a drunkard, and there is every reason to believe, through the suddenness with which the house burnt, that he upset a paraffin lamp. I must tell you that the brother could not be got out in time, and he was burnt to death; but there is every reason to believe that the place was set fire to by a paraffin lamp. So I told the tenant that if I was to keep him he must repair the damage himself. Ultimately what he con-tributed was 100*l.*

19,848. "Was the house burnt built by the "tenant at his own expense"?—I say it was not entirely built at his own expense. What he contributed was 100*l.*

19,849. "Was a new house rebuilt by you "without consulting the tenant"?—No, that is not true. When the new house was built the tenant was consulted.

19,850. "Was the tenant called upon to pay "for the new house"?—I called upon him, as I told you, to pay 100*l.* towards it. My agent will tell you what was the complete cost.

19,851. That does not matter. You say he paid 100*l.* towards the cost of the new house?—My impression is that the whole cost was something like 140*l.* I do not like to say exactly, but I believe it was over 140*l.*

19,852. "At whose expense are buildings on "the estate erected and repaired"?—Buildings on the estate are erected by me, and small repairs are done by the tenant. I do not know that I can exactly describe to you the difference between what I call ordinary repairs and the sort of thing that a man can get done himself easily. If a whole building comes down then I have to re-erect it.

19,853. "What abatement of rent have you "given on your estate during the last 10 "years"?—I have given no abatement of rent, and never do, because on principle I would not. I make permanent reductions where I think them necessary. You have got a statement, going a long way back, and you will see that the rents have not been altered since then. Although the value of cattle went up very much, the rent has not been altered, so one year pays for another. I have never had any complaints nor requests for abatement of rents.

19,854. "Comparing the rents of to-day with "those of 1853, is there an increase or a "decrease"?— That statement I handed in ought to have been added up, and as it is not, it is rather difficult to say offhand. A great many of these rents are the same now as they were in 1821 and 1851; there has been no alteration. In some cases there has been a decrease, and in a few others an increase. Where there has been an increase it is where there has been new letting to a new person, not of the same family. In fact the farm that I mentioned that was 91 acres, and let at 28*s.* 6*d.* per acre, is where there has been the chief rise of rent, and the tenant is still perfectly satisfied that it is a moderately rented farm.

19,855. "Referring you to the case of Ysgu- "borddu, did you raise the rent from 72*l.* to "132*l.*"?—Yes, that is the one that I am referring to.

19,856. "Was there a valuation"?—My agent tells me that there was not. The tenant offered that for it himself.

19,857. "As to the enclosures in Holyhead "Mountain, when was the enclosure made"?—You mean enclosures not on the Holyhead Mountain but on Penrhosfeilw. The deed was in 1875. Probably the enclosure followed shortly afterwards.

19,858. "What price, if any, was paid by the "representative of your estate"?—Penrhosfeilw most likely was not applied for at all. It was, I suppose, an allotment to the adjoining landowners. The conveyance of the mountain is another thing. I see in the deed it is "Ninety "pounds and eleven shillings of lawful money "of Great Britain."

19,859. "What rents annually are now re- "ceived in respect of the Holyhead Mountain "enclosures"?—You are mixing up the two enclosures. This Holyhead Mountain is not an enclosure at all. It is simply that the Crown made over the surface rights to me. What rents I have from Penrhosfeilw I could not tell you at this moment. This is not Penrhosfeilw really; it is Pwll Pillo Marsh. You must ask my agent about it. These things are before my time.

19,860. "What improvements, if any, have "you or your predecessors in title executed on this enclosure"?—I do not know that I have executed any improvements upon this. It is most likely that the land has been added to the adjoining premises, and gradually come into cultivation. The usual custom is to let it at first at a very low rent, a nominal rent, and then afterwards by degrees in years after, the rent is increased. All I can tell you is of something which happened of the same kind in Cheshire, of which I am aware. There was a plantation that was cut down and thrown into the farm, and the tenant said to me that the custom was to let it for somany years for nothing; and after that, I forget in what number of years, he said the custom was for it to be let for something more, and so on, till it came to the value of full land. As a matter of fact, the new tenant is in the farm, but nothing has been added to the rent of that farm for the rent of that plantation.

19,861. "You have spoken of the labourer "getting 10*s.* a week as pocket money"?—"Pocket money" is a strong expression of course. What I mean is, that he does not live upon it; he only has to get his clothes out of it.

19,862. "Do you know that out of this 10*s.* "he has to buy his clothes and meet all the "other liabilities which he may incur"?—Well, I should think four weeks' wages at that rate would buy his clothes.

19,863. "Do you think a labourer ought to "buy books occasionally, or contribute to the "chapel he attends"?—Yes, by all means let him buy books. I would not recommend that he should get Y Genedl Gymreig. As to contributing to his chapel, if he went to church he would have to pay nothing. What he has to pay for his preachers I do not know.

19,864. "Do you think a labourer ought to "put a little by to meet the chance of illness or "accident"?—Certainly, and I have referred you to what the Holyhead guardians are doing to encourage that kind of thing. I have also been at work with other people in London trying to get Sir Reginald Welby to do something to improve the Post Office arrangements, and to make them more generally known.

19,865. "Do you now say that 10*s.* a week is "too much for the labourer"?—No, I do not say so now that it is pocket money. When I said that, I meant it as a figure of speech. But I do say, that it is more than he requires, and it is very hard upon the farmers to have to pay that money when they cannot afford it.

19,866. Do you think that 10*s.* a week is more than the labourer requires?—By "requires" I mean, and I suppose you mean too, absolutely requires; that is to say, that it is a matter of necessity that he would be pinched if he had less. I think he would not be pinched if he had less.

19,867. "You state you erect buildings on "the estate. Who built a new granary at "Chwaenwen Isaf"?—The new granary at Chwaenwen Isaf was built in this way. I gave the materials and the tenant left, and then he was compensated, so that the whole building cost more than if I had started it and built it by myself by a contractor. That is the case I referred to when I told you that the arbitration cost 12*l.* 12*s.* 0*d.*, and the award was only 28*l.*

19,868. "Did you refuse to compensate the "outgoing tenant until forced to appoint a "referee"?—No, certainly not. The tenant began by asking for a great deal more than he was entitled to, beyond the matter of the granary.

19,869. Now I have a number of questions by Mr. R. H. Williams: "Have you ever desired "your tenants to destroy their dogs"?—I have desired them to get rid of them certainly. A number of people keep sometimes two, and as many as three dogs without any necessity, not having sheep; they are not sheep dogs, but dogs that are very mischievous. Some people with only four acres of land keep a dog that eats much more than a child would eat. I say they have no right to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs. The dogs are a perfect nuisance. At one time in Holyhead we had a dog that went mad, and bit five other dogs, and they all went mad, and these dogs were quite out of control.

19,870. "Was a farm called Turnpike in the "parish of Holyhead, let to a maid servant "after her master's death on the condition that "she would take her dog to Penrhos to be shot"? —I do not know about taking it to be shot, but there is no doubt I said that she should get rid of it. I do not know that she was a maid servant, I forget what she was.

19,872. "Did you order the said tenants to "destroy their dogs"?—I did not order them, but I desired them to get rid of their dogs I desired the Exciseman to exercise a little more vigilance in looking after dogs such as had no right to exemption. Then I spoke in the House of Lords about the necessity of diminishing the dogs—I have got the speech here. The figures were published in the Carnarvon newspaper of the number of sheep worried in two years in seven parishes in Carnarvonshire. Llanddeiniolen was one of them. I do not remember the names of the others. In Anglesey here, I have heard constantly of sheep being worried by dogs.

19,873. "Have you yourself ever shot dogs "belonging to your tenants"?—I have probably constantly peppered dogs at a distance. I do not remember ever shooting one belonging to my tenants to kill it, but I never see a dog in a field without blazing at it more than a hundred yards or so. That is the only way of impressing upon the dogs and upon the farm servants what is proper. It is not the tenants who bring them out: the tenants all wish to have the dogs kept at home, but the farm servants disregard that. There is no agricultural operation that I know of in which a dog does not assist. He helps to tie sheaves, he helps to get potatoes, and everything else.

19,874. "Did you some years ago shoot a dog "at Cerrig y Baban, near Caergeiliog"?—No, I shot a dog on the farm of Mr. Owen, of Penymynydd. I was with him, and the keeper telegraphed to me that there was a dog there. I ran up a slope up the turnip field, the dog was gaining on me, he was coursing a hare, the hare turned several times, we were going up a steep ascent, so I fired a long shot to bring the dog to. It brought him to, and he came in a diagonal line again to go off the farm, then I shot him. We could not find him, but the following year his skeleton was found in the turnip field. Mr. Owen was very glad to hear of it, as it was a stray dog that had no business there—a dog that did not belong to his farm.

19,875. "Had you to pay any damage and what amount"?—No, I had to pay no damage, and there was no damage legally. I will tell you a story about the rights of dog shooting——

19,876. We do not want a story. Will you kindly answer the questions. "Do you reserve "the ground game especially in the parish of "Holyhead"?—I would like to finish answering the other question, please. I had not to pay any amount because I was within my legal rights. I must tell you that the first dog I ever shot, I shot in Cheshire. It was pursuing a hare, and I then did not know the law of the land, and I was under a mistake; I thought "I must not "shoot this dog till he has made himself criminal "—till he has killed his hare; if he has not killed "a hare, no one has any business to kill him." But he did kill a hare and then I shot him. We threw the dog into a ditch. Some time afterwards a woman appeared and asked "Have you "seen my dog?" It was such a very unladylike dog, that I did not believe it was hers. I said, "What dog—oh, if you mean a cur, yes—there "it is in that ditch; it has just been running "after a hare." Then she sued me. The case was reported in "Bell's Life," and was called a leading case upon the law. I was not able to be there because it happened that there was a division in the House of Lords on the motion against the late Sir Robert Collier's appointment to the Privy Council. I was one of those who voted, and I could not stay away to attend the County Court. This woman misrepresented one thing. She spoke not under oath but under declaration; she said I told her I had shot the hare. I had not shot the hare. It was the dog who killed the hare. However, that made no difference. Then I remember afterwards the case of a farmer in Cheshire who had seven sheep worried by a dog. He went home and got his gun and followed the dog and killed it. They said that if he had killed it while it was running at a sheep he would have been within his legal right, but that it was a vindictive act to go away and follow the dog at a distance. This dog was coursing a hare on a farm that he did not belong to.

19,877. "Do you reserve the ground game "especially in the Island of Holyhead"?—No, I do not. It is no use reserving the ground game, and nobody does such a thing that I know of. The only difference between my property in the parish of Holyhead and my Anglesey property, is that on my Anglesey property the farmers kill rabbits themselves, and in Holyhead I mostly do it for them. They get the rabbits.

19,878. "Do the tenants suffer from damage "done by rabbits"?—No, the tenants do not suffer from damage done by rabbits. I never heard any complaint, and I think you had a witness yesterday, who said he lived between two of my farms, and never heard of any complaints.

19,879. "Has any compensation ever been "allowed any tenants for such damage"?—Yes, as I told you I have given compensation. I told you about the case of a tenant who I believe is a woman to the best of my recollection; I gave her compensation for damage done by some rabbits, which had got out of a neighbouring enclosure.

19,880. "Do you know Porth y dafarch Farm "in the parish of Holyhead"?—Yes, I know Porth y dafarch Farm.

19,881. "Have you had a portion of it con- "verted into a rabbit warren"?—Yes, I have, with a 6-foot wall to prevent the rabbits getting out.

19,882. "Has any reduction in the rent been "allowed on this account"?—Yes, a reduction in the rent has been made, as I have told you already, by taking the whole rent of the farm and dividing the rent by the number of acres, and then the average of whatever comes off per acre is taken off although this was rocks and the other part of the farm might be good land. There has been no complaint made. In fact, one of the tenants had only two acres of rocks and I think he said he did not want anything, but I insisted that he should have it.

19,883. "Has a farm called Tanrallt Bodedern "been similarly converted"?—I must say I think these are most extraordinary questions. Who is Mr. R. H. Williams? This is not a tenant coming forward to explain. It is some meddling outsider. What does he know about it? The fact about this, is that this enclosure is part of the farm of Tanrallt; I have here somewhere the exact acreage, its rent was 125*l.* The tenant himself has not much capital. He has not as much stock on the farm as he ought to have, and he cannot cultivate properly. The top of the farm which is part of it is a gorse field—a very rough gorse field—and there are other gorse banks. The tenant himself proposed that I should take off part of the land and take off 25*l.* from his rent. That I have done without any demur or cavil. I took it at his own valuation. Then the other day I happened to ask "Has any difference been made in the rating "of this," because I supposed that necessarily it would go by the value of the rent. The rent undivided is 125*l.* It was four fifths that the tenant retained and I took one fifth. However, the person who valued for the guardians valued the remaining part of the farm at 61*l.* rateable value, and he valued for me something like, I think it was 22*l.*, showing a different proportion—rather a larger proportion of rates was put upon me. As the tenant gets the benefit of the rate I said it was not worth while disputing about it, so the tenant has been benefited. It has been all done at his own suggestion and request, and that this should be brought up as a grievance by some outsider is, I think, rather too bad. I really think that the Commission ought not to allow such questions.

Chairman—continued.

19,884. Will you kindly answer the questions concisely?—I cannot answer more concisely a question such as this, which is captious and you might say a false question.

19,885. "What effect upon the neighbouring "farms had the creation of rabbit warrens"?—No effect whatever.

19,886. "Are prosecutions for offences against "the game laws often made on your estate"?—No, not often. My agent will be able to answer this question better than I can.

19,887. "Do the gamekeepers receive half the "prosecution fee in case of conviction"?—I do not know about that.

19,888. I have some further questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Referring to Presadd- "fed, was the house in an insanitary con- "dition, and did your tenant, Daniel Jones, lose "three of his children through diphtheria, "which was caused by the insanitary condition "of the house"?—The house cannot have been in an insanitary condition, because my late uncle had built new offices, and rebuilt it altogether, and intended it for my late aunt to live in, if she had survived him.

19,889. "Was the said Daniel Jones obliged "to take a house elsewhere on that account"?—No, he did not; he lived in the house and left it in a very dilapidated state.

19,890. Did you afterwards sue Daniel Jones for dilapidations?—No, I did not. What I sued Daniel Jones for, was this. He attempted to go away, and did go away without paying his last half-year's rent; and it was decided against him in one of Her Majesty's Courts of Law, I believe, by Mr. Justice Field.

19,891. "Did you refuse to pay for manure "and seeding left on the farm by Daniel "Jones"?—Probably my referees did refuse to pay for seeding, because I heard that the seeding was very badly done. In short, it had to be re-seeded. Mr. Owen, of Penmynydd, and somebody else were the people who looked into that matter—practical agriculturists.

19,892. Then I have some questions by Mr. Vincent: "As a matter of fact, have you "not spent a great deal of money in providing "dairy accommodation"?—I have spent for Mintons tiles 269*l.*

19,893. "You are a landowner in England. "Do you know of any reason why a Land "Court should be wanted in Wales more than in "England"?—None, whatever. In fact, some of the people in Lancashire are rather unreasonable in complaining, because the markets of Lancashire must be as good as those in Cheshire.

19,894. "Do you consider rents are higher in "proportion to value of land in Wales than in "England"?—Rents are very much lower in Wales than in England; even lower, I think, than the difference of markets would account for. It is accounted for by what I said before: that tenants are expected to do the small repairs which they do not do in England where you have an estate carpenter and mason.

Chairman.

We are much obliged to you, Lord Stanley, for your evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Hugh Williams called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

19,895. Has this statement been gone through with you by Professor Rhŷs, and is it the evidence you want to give?—Yes.

[The following statement was read]:

"The evidence of Hugh Williams, Pantysaer Isaf, Llanfair, M.E.

"I am a tenant farmer, residing at Pantysaer Isaf, Llanfair mathafarn eithaf, Anglesey.

"I beg to bring under notice facts with reference mostly to small holdings in the parish of Llanfairmathafarneithaf, and the adjoining parishes of the Anglesey Union.

"Occupation.—The usual term of tenancy is 12 months. There are but very few farmers holding their farms under leases. The demand for the same is but very limited as the rents are too high. I have been given to understand that the landowners have an objection to grant leases. Where there are leases, the tenants farm better as they have security of tenure for a specified period.

"In some instances the tenants change very often. In one farm that I know of, I remember as many as seven different families living. Two or three out of the seven tenants went through all their money there. I must attribute their failure to the fact that the rent was too high. I know of many instances of hardships to tenants. I have an opportunity of knowing the circumstances of the farmers of the district, as I have been an agent to a London manure company for 10 or 12 years, and I not only solicit orders, but collect the money also. It has become a somewhat usual thing for one farmer to become surety at the bank for another farmer, for money to pay the rent. I also know of some who have had money on their stock. I know of many working very hard in order to make two ends meet. I am not aware of any class of people in the country working so hard as the tenants of small holdings. I am not aware, either, of any who live on such hard fare.

"Many of the agreements between landlord and tenant are oppressive. In many of them the tenant is not allowed to sell hay, straw, or turnips, under any circumstances, except at the expiration of the tenancy. The tenant is also compelled to observe a certain rotation of crops, which rotation is not always the best. The agreements are drawn out in English—in a language unintelligible to the common people. The tenant often signs an agreement, the contents of which he knows nothing about, and which he has never seen, save on the occasion of signing the document. Many of the landlords keep the copies of agreements to themselves without furnishing one to each tenant. The rents of lands of similar qualities vary greatly; the reason for which is that some of the landowners let at reasonable rents, while others let at rents very different from that. The rents of small farms are, on an average, higher by one third than those of the large farms; and in many instances the rent is higher by one half. The land on small estates is also much higher than that on the large estates. I beg to present to you a few facts which prove that the rents have been raised high recently.

Chairman—continued.

"Pantysaer Isaf is 38 acres. There is only about half the farm under cultivation, while the other portion is too thin. My father, my grandfather, and my great-grandfather have occupied the place before me. The rent has been advanced during the last 45 years from 15*l.* to 35*l.* irrespective of the rates. As far as I am able to judge, the expense to the landlord during the whole time it has been in the occupation of my ancestors and myself, was only about 200*l.* My ancestors and I have invested hundreds of pounds in the place without receiving a penny as compensation. When my great-grandfather entered the place, the house and outbuildings had their roofs fallen in—in fact, they were in ruins. He became tenant, at first, at a rent of 9*l.* a year. At present I am from 5*l.* to 10*l.* out of pocket every year for the last seven years—the time I became joint tenant with my mother without putting a penny aside as wages for myself.

"Pantysaer Uchaf is 29 acres, and is in the occupation of Owen Jones. During the last three years the rent has been advanced from 14*l.* to 30*l.*, and that without the landlord having spent any money on the farm.

"Tyddyniolyn is 9 acres, and is in the occupation of Jane Williams. The rent has been advanced from 12*l.* to 30*l.* a year (the latter sum including the rates). The holding is about 3 acres less than it was before the increase of rent. It is but fair to add that the present landlord has gone to some expense, possibly 100*l.*, more or less, on the place.

"William Williams, the tenant of Tymawr, 9 acres, had a sudden notice during last year that the rent would be advanced from 10*l.* to 16*l.*, although the tenant and his wife are over 75 years of age each, and their ancestors had occupied the place for 250 years. Seeing that the increase was so much and the depression so great, the tenant's daughter, who looks after her parents, asked whether they might purchase the place. The only reply they had, after some time, was that they might have the place for 500*l.*; or at a rent of 15*l.* instead of 10*l.*, and with no further security than the lives of the old people. This was done on a large estate, viz., that of the Hon. Frederick Wynne, Glynllifon. The matter has now been settled by purchase.

"The rent of Tyddyn Sarjant, 28 acres, in the occupation of Owen Williams, was recently advanced from 11*l.* to 24*l.* a year; but he had an addition of an acre or an acre and a quarter, and a house worth 150*l.*

"The rent of Pentyddyn, in the parish of Llanallgo, 10 acres, in the occupation of William Williams, was at a recent period advanced from 12*l.* to 20*l.* a year. This is, I believe, Church property, and the rent belongs to the Penrhoslligwy living. Many persons doubt whether the advancements were legal in this last instance.

"I am not aware of the rent of any farm in the district having been reduced during the last 50 years.

"Several landowners have granted occasional abatements during the last six or seven years in amounts varying from 5 to 15 per cent.; but there are also several who have given no abatements during that period. Notice is generally given beforehand when abatements are granted. Sometimes a revaluation is followed by the rents being raised, but not always. Rents are often raised without any revaluation whatever, and when the prices of produce do not justify it. Small dealers often suffer severely in the different neighbourhoods on account of the preferential claim for rent. The Welsh people are so attached to their homes that they will pay the rents, lest they might receive notice to quit, even if they have to leave every other possible claim unpaid.

"The tithes are paid by the occupiers in this district almost without exception.

"The occupiers also pay the land tax as a rule, and that is the case without exception, in the parish of Llanfair mathafarn eithaf. The occupiers pay all the local rates, but there are some exceptions amongst those who only occupy houses and gardens. The Income Tax is paid by the landlords, but if paid by the tenant for convenience sake, it is returned on the rent day. The local rates have not increased in my district during the last 25 years, except in two parishes, viz., Llanddyfnan and Llanfairmathafarn eithaf. The increase in these parishes is due to education. Two schools and schoolhouses had to be built in these parishes, and as the interest and an instalment of the capital were paid annually, there was an increase in the rates. The education rate alone has been, in the course of the last 15 or 20 years, about 1*s.* 3*d.* in the pound on the rateable value.

"The farms vary considerably as to size in the district. In Llanfair mathafarn eithaf the farms are generally somewhat small—ranging from 3 or 4 to 60 acres. In the adjoining parishes the farms are much larger, and reach scores and hundreds of acres. In one instance several small holdings have been consolidated into one farm of about 1,000 acres. This affects the produce unfavourably, as much of the land is overrun by rabbits.

"Small occupiers are certainly more skilful and competent in farm work than large occupiers, and they can pass through a period of depression better, as they work occasionally off the farm and earn money to pay their creditors. However, they are not as able to provide for their families as large occupiers. Facts show that middle-sized farms are the best, taking everything into consideration.

"Cultivation.—Hundreds of acres of waste land have been enclosed from the common in the parish of Llanfair mathafarn eithaf within living memory, and some of it has now become fairly good land. Lord Boston, as lord of the manor, has enclosed hundreds of acres, during the last 10 or 20 years, in the parish of Penrhos Lligwy, but I have no knowledge as to his title to the same. He has let the parts enclosed in small plots to different persons at low rents.

"Improvements.—I am not aware of any landowner in this district having done any improvements on his land, further than erecting dwelling-houses and outbuildings jointly with the tenants. It is the tenants, without exception, that improve the general condition of the holding (save of course where the landlord occupies his own farm). Many small freeholders who occupy their own farms cultivate their land well, and improve it immensely. When a tenant quits a farm, it is customary to permit him to sell the hay, straw, and root crops, by the incoming tenant appointing a valuer to meet a valuer appointed by the outgoing tenant; or in the absence of that, he is permitted to sell them by public auction. It is also customary to allow compensation for permanent improvements; but I am not aware of any tenant having received compensation for the general improved condition of his holding. When compensation is given it is for specific improvements, and never for general improvement.

"Game Preserving.—Game is generally preserved by the landowners in my district. Tenants generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Game Act of 1880; but not all of them. The reason for this is, that the tenants are afraid of their landlords to draw the line too straight. The tenants suffer much loss through the game, and they are not always sufficiently recompensed for their loss. In some parts of the county the tenants are obliged to pay the game tax, and, of course, the landlords or some persons appointed by them enjoy the benefit. This is the case in the parish of Llanfair mathafarn eithaf. The tenants throughout the parish pay the game tax.

"Co-operation and Combination.—I am not aware of any instances where profits or risks are shared between landlords and tenants, or between employers and employed. It is a custom amongst the farmers to assist each other to carry out specific work, such as carrying hay and corn, threshing the corn, &c. I am not aware that any farmers insure their stock or agricultural implements; but many insure their hay and corn stacks against fire, and some insure their outbuildings. Many farmers in my district make use of 'Sick Societies.' There are two such societies in the district with a membership roll (between them) of about 300. I hold an honorary office in one of them, viz., the club of the Independent Brethren of Marian Glas. The members number over 200. I estimate that about half the number of members of both clubs, are farmers.

"The General Condition of the Farming Population.—Freeholders.—Many small farmers have inherited their farms after their relations, and the number has not decreased, but on the contrary. Several tenants also have purchased their holdings and occupy them personally. What induced them to do this was that some of them wished to improve their circumstances, while others were greatly attached to their homes, and purchased them at any price rather than lose their holdings. Freeholders as a rule cultivate their land much better than occupiers. The reason for this is obvious; no one can turn them off their farms, and they will be compensated for their labours. They work with a will. With reference to farms in general, and especially small farms, the tenants work themselves, together with their children and wives. The children work at home generally, receiving no wages, or next to nothing. Very few parents, who live in small farms, are able to assist their children when they go from home, or when they marry. It would be impossible to pay the present rents, were the children properly remunerated for their services. Not only the children who are at home receive no wages, but those who have left home, and have gone into service, or to sea, or work as joiners in some of the towns of England, send money home to assist their parents to pay the rents and taxes. It would have been all over with many small farmers in the country since many years but for this."

Lord Kenyon.

19,896. What is the size of Pantysaer Isaf?—38 acres.

19,897. Who is your landlord?—Mrs. Roberts, of Graig Wen.

19,898. Is she also the owner of Pantysaer Uchaf?—No.

19,899. Who is the owner of Pantysaer Uchaf?—The Rev. Mr. Roberts, who is a curate in Merionethshire, I believe, now.

19,900. Have these farms been recently sold?—It is 45 years since Pantysaer Isaf was sold.

19,901. And the other?—Pantysaer Uchaf three or four years ago.

Mr. Griffiths.

19,902. You say you did know of tenants changing six or seven times on a farm?—I know one farm where tenants have removed six or seven times in my lifetime.

19,903. What is the cause of that changing?—I believe they are unable to live there on account of the rent of the farm being too high.

19,904. Did any of them fail?—Two at least failed.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

19,905. What became of them?—They left.

19,906. On what estate was that?—The estate of Tanygraig Pentraeth.

19,907. Who is the owner?—I am not certain, but I think John Rice Roberts, Esq.

19,908. Then you say with regard to Pantysaer Isaf that the rent was raised from 15*l.* to 35*l.*; in how short a time?—I cannot give dates, but the advances have been made in the last 45 years. The farm was sold about 45 years ago, and the rent was raised first from 15*l.* to 28*l.*, then to 33*l.*, and afterwards to 35*l.*

19,909. There were some buildings erected before that?—About 20 years ago a house and outbuildings were built at a cost of about 200*l.* I estimated them at about that.

19,910. You speak of several places. Have you been deputed by these people to appear here before us?—Yes; a meeting was called, and I was requested to appear before the Commission to state how matters were in my district.

19,911. And you have put forward the matters concerning the advances in rent from their information?—Yes, I had these facts from the persons themselves who held the farms.

19,912. You speak of Pantysaer Uchaf, where the rent was raised from 14*l.* to 30*l.* Was there any money spent on that farm in buildings?—No, not a penny, so far as I am aware.

19,913. I mean by the landlord in buildings?—No, not a penny.

19,914. Then you say as to William Williams, Ty Mawr, his rent was 10*l.* and advanced to 16*l.*?—They had a sudden notice that the rent would be advanced from 10*l.* to 16*l.*

19,915. Did they buy the farm then?—Yes, they bought the farm for 500*l.*

19,916. What is the date of the purchase?—About three months ago.

19,917. Then Tyddyn Sarjant again. The rent, you say, was advanced from 11*l.* to 24*l.* a year. Why was that?—I think the chief reason was because the place was sold.

19,918. Had each of the people improved the places?—There was 150*l.* improvement on that place, and about an acre and a quarter added to it.

19,919. Then the tenant in this case had to pay twice over for his improvements. Who built the house?—The landlord built the house.

19,920. You mentioned some instances of hardship besides?—There are several instances where the rents are too high, and that is what I consider the greatest hardship. The food is poor and the work is heavy.

19,921. You are a manure merchant, are you not?—Yes.

19,922. How do you get your money in?—Very middling indeed. I have lots of money out for many years.

19,923. Then it is not only this year's accounts that you are in arrear?—No, there are many years in arrear before.

19,924. Do you lend some of them money?—No, I do not lend very much.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

19,925. Do the farmers purchase as much manure now as they used to do?—Yes, they buy quite as much; in fact, they buy more every year.

19,926. Only they do not pay ready money?—No, they do not pay ready money. Those that use less guano live poorer; they do not fare so well.

Mr. Richard Jones.

19,927. You say that there is a demand for leases, and that farmers have taken them?—I know of instances where farmers have applied for leases.

19,928. And been refused?—Yes, and been refused, and there is an impression in the district that the landowners are not ready to grant leases.

19,929. I think one of the agents told us this morning that they would be perfectly prepared to grant leases if there was any demand for them?—I cannot say about that, but the general impression in my neighbourhood is that they are very unwilling to grant leases. That is the general impression in my district.

19,930. You say here "It has become a some-"what usual thing for one farmer to become "surety at the bank for another farmer for "the money to pay the rent." Are you able to speak with authority on this point, or is it merely hearsay evidence?—I know of several instances, but I would not like to give the names. I may say this, that I have been myself several times surety for a farmer.

19,931. We do not ask for the names, but have you them?—I know of several, but I would not like to disclose them.

19,932. You also say that the farmers live on hard fare. Of course I should not have asked you unless you had mentioned this; but could you tell us what is the diet of the farmers now; what do they get in the morning for breakfast?—Some live on bread and milk.

19,933. What is the next meal?—Dinner.

19,934. What do they get for dinner?—Potatoes with butter-milk, and potatoes with butter; some get salt meat; they very seldom get meat except salted meat.

19,935. You say that they have potatoes and butter. How do they manage that?—They put potatoes into a bowl and a lump of butter in that.

19,936. And mix them?—Mix them.

19,937. And afterwards do they get meat?—Sometimes.

19,938. I think you said they get salt meat?—Bacon and beef salted.

19,939. Then the next meal?—What they call tea.

19,940. What is that?—Bread and butter and tea.

19,941. And do they get supper afterwards?—Yes, porridge.

19,942. What do they have along with it?—Butter-milk generally.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

19,943. How often do they get fresh meat?—There are many farmers who cannot afford to get a piece of fresh meat once a year.

19,944. During the whole year?—During the whole year.

19,945. What do the labourers get?—Something similar to that. Of course there are some farmers who get it better than others.

19,946. Do you think the labourers on the large farms get better food than the labourers on the small farms?—Yes, as a rule.

19,947. You say that the landlords or the agents do not supply agreements to the tenants. Is that so?—They do not allow tenants to have copies of it.

19,948. Would they not have one if they asked for it?—I am not aware of it.

19,949. Do you know cases where they have been asked for and refused?—I signed an agreement about seven years ago. I suggested that a copy should be given, but it was not granted.

19,950. Can you think of any reason why an agreement was not given?—The impression is that the landowners draw out the agreements in order for them to be safe should the tenants leave.

19,951. As a protection against a bad tenant?—I cannot say.

19,952. Are all the cases you have mentioned of advance in the rent recent?—Some of them quite recent, others several years ago.

19,953. Then there is the case of Pentyddyn, where there was an advance from 12*l.* to 20*l.* You say many persons doubt whether the advances were legal in this instance. It is Church property. What makes you think that persons doubt whether the advances were legal or not?—It is not known whether the Reverend Mr. Richards, Penrhos-lligwy, is a trustee of that property or whether it goes towards his stipend. He informed them that it would be advanced.

19,954. What is William Williams—a Churchman or Nonconformist?—It is very difficult to say. His wife belongs to the Nonconformists; he does not belong to any sect.

19,955. Are there any other farms that are Church property besides Penrhos-lligwy?—There is one small place close to Pentyddyn. It belonged to Pentyddyn years ago—it belongs to the same living.

19,956. Has the rent of that place been advanced?—I do not know. The man that held it, has just died.

19,957. What was he; was he a Nonconformist or Churchman?—He was a Churchman.

19,958. Do you think these places are let on the condition that the tenants are to go to church?—No, I do not think that.

Mr. Grove.

19,959. You spoke about collecting a game tax. How many parishes did it apply to?—So far as I understand, it is in the Anglesey Union; the whole of the parishes.

19,960. Is it collected in any other union?—I do not know.

Professor Rhŷs.

19,961. With regard to the agreements; did I understand you to say or to intimate that the tenants have a sort of shyness in asking for their agreements?—My impression is that some landowners do not give copies, only when they are signed, and then they take them back.

19,962. That is the impression in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

19,963. Do you have the agreements explained to you at all, or do you have them to take home with you to find out what they mean and look over them?—I had my agreement to go home to be signed by my mother, who does not understand a word of English, and the only interpreter was myself, and I do not profess to understand much.

19,964. I suppose that many of your neighbours do not understand the agreements as well as you do?—Very likely not.

19,965. Do you not think that they are to blame that they do not study their agreements?—They would understand them perfectly if they had them in Welsh, but they are in a language foreign to them.

19,966. Do you think it would be a convenience to have them in Welsh?—They would understand them perfectly.

19,967. Is it your impression that leaseholders farm their land better than tenants holding from year to year?—Yes.

19,968. You touched on another subject. You said some of your neighbours could not pay their rents unless they were helped by their children who were away earning wages?—Yes.

19,969. Have you anything more to say on that. Can you give any instances?—I could give an instance in connexion with Pantysaer Isaf when my father was tenant there. I had one brother away at sea and another a joiner at Liverpool, and they sent money home to assist.

19,970. Your father could not have paid but for their help?—I think it must have been impossible for him to do so.

19,971. Do you know of any other cases where you think the same state of things exists?—Yes, I know of some instances, but I would not like to name them; perhaps they might feel offended.

19,972. Do you know of any now?—Yes, I know of several instances, but I would not like to name them.

19,973. How many could you think of now?—I know about half-a-dozen or more.

19,974. On what estate. You will not object, perhaps, to say that?—Not on any particular estate; there are so many small estates in the neighbourhood.

19,975. It is on several estates?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

19,976. Do you consider that the occupiers are better off as tenant farmers or as freeholders?—I consider they are better off as freeholders.

19,977. Even although they have to do the buildings?—Yes.

19,978. Do you think if the Welsh had the same opportunities of land purchase as the Irish have they would largely exercise that right?—Yes, very largely.

Lord Kenyon.

19,979. Can you give any instance of a landlord refusing to grant a lease?—Yes, the tenant of Tyn y gongl farm applied for a lease some years ago.

19,980. Who was the landlord?—Some of the Madryn family—John Williams, Esquire, Gwernhefin Farm, Bala, was the agent. At first the lease was promised, but they never had it from him. They were willing to build a house and out-buildings if they had a lease.

19,981. They could not come to terms?—No, he was not willing in the end to grant a lease.

19,982. Did he build a house?—No, the place by now has been sold.

19,983. You also stated that leaseholders farmed better than the tenants under agreements. Can you give any instance of that?—Yes, because they have security of tenure.

19,984. No, I want instances of the farming better under a lease?—There are very few on leases in my neighbourhood, and I do not remember an instance at present.

19,985. You cannot give an instance then?—The leases have run out by now.

19,986. I only wanted to know if you could point to an instance, and you cannot?—The leases are run out, but there is an instance at Pantsaer Uchaf when it was under lease.

19,987. It was better farmed when it was under lease?—Yes, I consider it was better farmed.

19,988. Although you are a manure merchant?—Yes.

Chairman.

19,989. These are questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "You have told us what food the "farmers have. May I ask if they ever have a "glass of 'cwrw'?—The poor sort of farmers get a little drink, but the best farmers do not drink.

19,990. "You are a manure agent. I suppose "in these bad times you reduce the price of the "manure"?—Yes, it has been reduced several pounds in a ton during the time I have been agent.

19,991. "Do you give the farmers any "guarantee of the purity of this manure"?—The reputation of the company is sufficient.

19,992. "May I ask if Mr. Bryn Roberts, M.P., is not trustee for this property, including your farm, on which you say you are so hardly dealt with"?—I believe he is.

19,993. These are questions by Mr. Vincent. "Are these farms of which the rent has been raised near Benllech"?—Yes, the lower part of the parish goes to Benllech.

19,994. "Is not that place becoming a watering "place, and has not land gone up greatly in value

Chairman—continued.

" in the neighbourhood " ?—Yes, it is improving in that direction, but there is one drawback; there is no railway going to the neighbourhood.

19,995. " Are not Olgras and Parc Treseifion close to your farm " ?—They are not very far.

19,996. " Have not improvements been done upon them by the landowner within the last 50 years " ?—I do not think there is much improvement done on either of the Olgras. There are two Olgras.

19,997. " Do you mean to seriously say that you have never known in Anglesey landowners do improvements at their own expense " ?—I am not aware of any doing improvements without the farmers helping in carting.

19,998. " Please give any details of your ex- " penditure on Pantysaer Isaf " ?—I carted all the materials for the new house and buildings in 1872.

19,999. Anything else ?—Yes, we have walled and drained a lot, and we have reclaimed waste land.

20,000. " Was not the increase of rent at " Pantysaer Uchaf and on Tyddyn Sarjant made " after they had been sold from the Bodorgan " estate " ?—Yes, the advances were made after they were sold.

Chairman—continued.

20,001. This is a question by Mr. R. R. Roberts: " Does not Mr. Roberts, agent for Mrs. " Roberts, supply copies of agreements whenever " they are asked for " ?—I do not know. I did not make a special application, but I suggested to the trustee that I would like to have one.

20,002. " Do you not know that copies were " supplied in the case of Monachlog and Tyddyn " Tirion last year " ?—I never heard that a copy had ever been given on the estate.

20,003. Question by Mr Bryn Roberts, M.P.: " Is not the property managed entirely by the " tenant for life and her agent, Mr. Roberts, of " Gydrian " ?—I do not know what the terms are between them.

20,004. Is not Mr. J. Bryn Roberts' connection purely nominal ?—I do not know. I understood he was a trustee of the estate—one of the two.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Owen called and examined.

Chairman.

20,005. You are a solicitor, I believe, at Bangor ?—I am.

20,006. Will you kindly state the points upon which you wish to give evidence ?—I have paid special attention to the subject of land tenure, and to the relationship between landlord and tenant. I have also acted as solicitor for a number of tenants in cases of disputes, and I have always taken a deep interest in the question on public grounds. I was brought up a farmer, and I am convinced that if greater security for capital and labour were given, and more freedom of cultivation, the land in Anglesey could be made to produce twice the quantity it does now. There have been vast improvements during the last 30 or 40 years. The rent roll of Anglesey has been more than doubled since 1815, when it was returned at 81,000*l.* In 1890 it was 184,897*l.*, though unfortunately the rent roll has been increased at the expense of the tenant principally. On purely agricultural land I do not think that all the landlords of Anglesey put together have spent 100,000*l.* during the same period.

Ownership: It is difficult to state the exact effect of incumbrances on estates, but where it is known that an estate is heavily mortgaged it tends to lessen the confidence of the tenant, and to produce a feeling of insecurity which is sure to be detrimental to good farming.

The present system enables a landlord to send a valuer over his estate to re-value it in order to raise the rent without due regard to the tenant's improvements, and this has wrought grievous hardship, of which I will give some instances.

Chairman—continued.

In Anglesey most of the Crown property has been disposed of to private owners, and that for almost nominal prices. This is a misfortune, especially in a county like Anglesey, which is surrounded by the sea, as land which would be almost valueless for agricultural purposes often turns out valuable for building purposes. All such land should be vested in public bodies for the benefit of the public. The foreshore and the space between high and low water mark are claimed by adjoining landowners, much to the loss of the farmers who were in the habit of carting seaweed and sand for manuring the land. An attempt was recently made by two adjoining landowners, with the consent of the Board of Trade, to prevent the carting of sand and gravel from a portion of the foreshore at Ce mlyn, near Cemaes, and an action for trespass and for an injunction was brought against a farmer in the County Court of Anglesey. That was referred to yesterday. I have here a copy of the judgment of the County Court Judge, which if the Commissioners would like to see it, I will hand in, as it deals with the question very fully. However, I need not refer to it further, as I think it has been already dealt with. Then the usual date of entry is the 13th of November, and as a rule farms are let from year to year. Leases are sometimes applied for and granted. Leaseholders feel greater security, and the two best farmed farms in the county adjoin each other and were held—one under a lease for the life of the tenant and his wife, and the other for a term of 45 years.

See 18,839, 18,926, 18,932–41, 20,092, 27,956.

On some estates the tenants have to keep a dog for the landlord, and I know of instances where they have also covenanted to preserve the game for the landlord.

Rent is always fixed by the landlord or his agent, according to his own goodwill, and the tenant must either accept the landlord's rental or leave. There is absolutely no uniformity, not even on the same estate. Some large farms are let at very fair rental. In one case in which I was concerned the tenant offered to refer a dispute about a proposal to advance rent to some competent valuer, and to pay the costs of such reference, but this offer was declined and the tenant had to leave. That was on the estate managed by Mr. Prichard, who gave evidence this morning. As to cultivation, in the district where I was brought up, there seemed to be a healthy and friendly competition among the neighbours for the best farming, for best stock, and best results generally, but the landlords took advantage of every improvement made by the tenant to raise the rent, with the result that farming in that district has become almost paralysed. The neighbourhood is much more thinly populated now, and there is an appearance of indifference, and a lack of the energy which was so characteristic of the farmers and labourers at that time, 25 and 30 years ago.

Generally speaking, the tenants used to make all improvements at their own expense; when buildings were necessary, the landlord sometimes (not always) allowed timber, slates, and lime. Fences, gates, and posts were invariably made by tenants.

I know of agreements where both the custom and the Agricultural Holdings Acts have been excluded.

Farmers do not often apply for written consents to execute improvements. They seem to prefer doing them, and trust that their landlords will not disturb them. Often they are deceived. I have never heard of a case where the outgoing tenant has obtained sufficient compensation for his improvements, nor do I know of a single instance where compensation has been given for the general improvement of a holding, and tenants have no power to dispose of their interest in a holding. In one case a claim was sent in for general improvements to the soil, but it was disallowed, although the landlord recovered the sum of 2*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.* for dilapidations in the buildings, and this on a farm where the tenant had spent several hundreds of pounds on permanent improvements, and lost all.

In my opinion, the provisions and procedure of the Agricultural Holdings Act are not satisfactory, nor do I consider the Acts themselves adequate. They do not allow sufficient freedom for the proper cultivation of the soil, for reclaiming waste land, and for the general improvements of farms. The period of exhaustion under the Act of 1875 is far too limited, and this is the basis of agreements too often. If a person build a house on lease in a town, a term of 80 or 90 years is granted, but if a tenant farmer build a house for himself and family, or for his cattle, as a rule his expenditure is deemed to be exhausted in 21 years. The printed agreement of one large estate has the following clause:—"All claims "for compensation for unexhausted improve- "ments must refer to such as have been done "within a period not exceeding seven years "previous to determination of tenancy." I have the agreement here. In another agreement on another estate the following clause is inserted:— "It is hereby agreed that the tenant shall be "entitled to a period of exhaustion of 14 years "from the 13th November 1874, in respect of "house and buildings erected and improvements "executed by him."

Professor Rhŷs.

20,006*a*. Does the seven years also include buildings?—Everything.

20,006*b*. I mean the one you mentioned before?—That is the only clause relating to improvements in the agreements.

20,006*c*. But it does include buildings?—Yes, certainly, all improvements. The tenant in the last case told me that he never saw the agreement until after the place was sold, and never knew of the existence of such a clause. He cannot read, and does not understand English.

In one case, on a change of tenancy of a farm on a large estate, the surveyor of the estate was instructed to value a stone wall erected by an outgoing tenant at his own expense to divide a rabbit warren from cultivated land. The surveyor valued it in 1881 at 350*l.*, all of which the incoming tenant had to pay. The period of exhaustion was fixed at 15 years. The clause in the agreement is as follows: "And it is "hereby agreed that the tenants shall be "entitled to a period of exhaustion of 15 years "in respect of stone walls built by the late "tenant for which the said Samuel Owen has "paid the sum of 350*l.*" I have photographs of that wall as an illustration, because I think they will assist the Commissioners very materially. [Handing in photographs.] You will observe it is a stone wall. The new tenant died in 1891, that is the person who paid the 350*l.*, and his children were turned away in 1892—the children of the man who refused to attend that political meeting of Aberffraw, of which we have heard—and lost this 350*l.*, except $\frac{4}{15}$ths, equal to 93*l.* By calculating interest on 350*l.*, and deducting 93*l.* from the total, it will be seen that the sum of 46*l.* was added to the rent for every year the tenant occupied the farm. This wall is quite as good to-day as it was in 1881. I saw all the walls last Saturday. In cases where fences are made with thorns planted by them, those fences are better in 21 years than at any period since their erection, yet when made with consent of landlord even they are deemed to be exhausted in 21 years, and no claim can be made if erected without consent, however great the improvement.

See 20,1 20,280.

When absolute security is given to farmers, and more freedom of cultivation, more home produce will be brought to the market, the congested state of the towns will be relieved, and men will find healthier and more remunerative work on the land than in the towns. Besides, a large proportion of the money now sent to foreign markets for food will be spent on our own produce.

With regard to game preserving, I think it ought to be done away with, and the game should become the absolute property of the cultivator of the soil, just the same as his poultry. The Ground Game Act is a failure, especially on farms adjoining coverts and warrens, as tenants cannot trap except in certain ways, and they will soon get into trouble if they set their traps so as to catch the hares or the rabbits. As a rule pheasants cost the landlords more per head than they fetch in the market, without taking into account the damage done to the crops of tenant farmers, and it is certain that they damage the crops quite as much as rabbits.

With regard to co operation and combination: an attempt was made recently to establish a union between landlords, tenants, and labourers, but for obvious reasons it did not flourish, and it is now dying. The landlords did not give up their Property Defence Association, nor did the labourers give up their union. The tenants are without any union for self-protection.

As to the general condition of the farming population, in the county of Anglesey, a great number of the tenant farmers are in comfortable circumstances, the majority live from hand to mouth, and a great number are quite at their wits' end as to how to meet their engagements. Lately, proprietary farmers have increased owing to large portions of estates coming to the market, but the prices were so high that many will be much worse off as far as rent is concerned, though they may make up for it by the feeling of security, and the fact that they will be improving their own property. Those who purchased 40, 50, or 60 years ago have done well, and I know many farmers who have cleared the money borrowed at the time, and now their farms are free.

Tenant farmers, their wives and children in 9 cases out of every 10, work hard on the farms, and almost invariably when a farmer's son stays at home his position is not much better than a labourer, while the son who leaves home and goes to business succeeds in life. It is a common occurrence to see the successful sons of farmers buying land in their own native county, when the stay-at-home sons have to slave for their livelihood.

General relations between landlord and tenant: In order to illustrate the present unsatisfactory state of the law of landlord and tenant, I will refer to a few cases where the landlords have taken undoubted advantage of their powers, and raised their rents on improvements executed by their tenants, and otherwise confiscated property which ought to have belonged to the tenant. I wish to emphasize the fact that I have selected these cases out of dozens of similar, and some worse cases in the county of Anglesey, as I find that an attempt is made to minimise the effect of evidence already given by stating that there may be cases of occasional harsh treatment. My contention is that even if that were true, the law which enables a landlord or his agent to single out any tenant farmer for vengeance and confiscate his property is defective, and ought to be amended.

The first case will be that of Llyslew, in the parish of Llanidan, in the county of Anglesey. It measures 251 acres, and belongs to the Bottwnog Free Grammar School. The late tenant, Mr. John Hughes, succeeded his father in the year 1864, and continued as yearly tenant up to 1872, when he agreed with the trustees for a lease for 45 years at the yearly rent of 220*l.* The solicitor for the feoffees prepared the lease. It was made between the Lord Bishop of Bangor, Lord Newborough, Lord Penrhyn, the Dean of Bangor, William Bulkeley Hughes, Esq., Richard Lloyd Edwards, Esq., Charles Wynne Finch, Esq., the Reverend William Williams, clerk, John Griffith Wynne Griffith, Esq., Rice William Thomas, Esq., and the Reverend John Williams Ellis, clerk, the trustees of the Bottwnog Free Grammar School of the one part, and John Hughes of the other part. After it was executed by 9 out of the 11 trustees, the late Mr. Bulkeley Hughes refused to execute it, as he thought the trustees had no right to grant a lease for more than 21 years, and it appears that he warned the tenant that it was not legal. However, the trustees never repudiated the lease during the lifetime of the lessee, and the lessee told me many a time that he always felt as safe as if all the trustees had executed it, and there had been no doubt about their power, as he considered the word of all those noblemen and gentlemen quite as good as their deed. See 20,160–86, 20,333–426.

It was on the strength of this confidence in the honour of his landlords that he went on improving the farm, and I have in my possession a copy of a valuation made by two of the most competent valuers in the county of Anglesey to show that according to their estimate the late tenant spent over 2,600*l.* on permanent improvements, quite apart from what he spent on the improvement of the soil, and what levelling and clearing had been done, which no one could even value.

When the farm was brought to as nearly a state of perfection as was possible the lessee died, and his only surviving sister gave up a business she had in Manchester in order to return to the old home. She took out letters of administration to his estate, but she soon found that her brother had not lived long enough to reap the benefit of his expenditure on the farm, and that he had not had time to pay back the money known to be borrowed to carry on the improvements. She, however, soon settled with all the creditors, and was in a position to carry on the farm. She made repeated applications to the trustees for assurances that they would not take advantage of the doubtful validity of the lease and terminate it. In November 1877 she was served with a notice to quit, but she afterwards did everything in her power to induce the trustees to allow her to remain at the old home. Every conceivable argument was urged in her favour. Deputations of leading agriculturists, justices of the peace, and others, waited on different trustees to plead for her, and leading farmers in the county were prepared to guarantee the rent, and the proper management of the farm, but it all ended in an action of ejectment and, with the assistance of the sheriff of the county, the only sister of the man who had spent all his substance in improving the farm was evicted and placed on a stool in the middle of the high road, a cripple and homeless. In addition to that, petitions were sent to all the trustees, accompanied by this letter, which has only been handed to me to-day, and which would have been inserted in my statement had it not been for that. This is a petition sent to the Lord Bishop of Bangor:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We, the undersigned, being landowners, farmers, and tradesmen, in the parish of Llanidan, and immediate neighbourhood, beg most humbly to present this petition in connexion with the letting of Llyslew Farm to your consideration. Having heard that Llyslew has been let to Mr. John Evans, we earnestly beg of you to re-consider your decision, and we desire to submit to you the following reasons for approaching you in this matter:—

"I. That the family of the present tenant (Mrs. Parry) have occupied Llyslew for at least 80 or 90 years, and that her late brother had spent about 3,000*l.* in improvements upon the farm.

"II. That Mrs. Parry being next-of-kin, and administratrix of the late Mr. John Hughes, and therefore having every reason to expect all advantages that might accrue from the lease granted Mr. Hughes in 1872, hoped to succeed him as tenant.

"III. That Mrs. Parry is willing to give a fair and reasonable rent for the farm, and is ready to present the names of respectable and trustworthy gentlemen to guarantee that the rent would be paid in due time, and that the farm would be managed in the best and most husbandlike manner.

"IV. That the feeling in Anglesey is so intensely against Mrs. Parry being deprived of her old home as to justify us in submitting to you this humble appeal and petition.

"Hoping you will see your way clear to grant us this favour.

"And your petitioners will ever pray."

That was signed by 200 persons within 36 hours in the immediate neighbourhood of the farm. In addition to that petition, a letter was sent by Mrs. Parry to the following persons: the Lord Bishop of Bangor, Mr. Evans, Broom-Hall, Colonel West, Captain Wynne Griffith,

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

Sir Love-Jones Parry, Mr. Lloyd Edwards, Mr. Ellis Nanney, and the Hon. Frederick Wynne, dated Llyslew, November the 5th, 1889:—

"I humbly beg of you as one of the trustees of Bottwnog Charities to read and consider the following personal appeal, as I believe it contains facts which, if taken into consideration may influence you to reconsider your decision respecting the letting of Llyslew.

"When I signed the agreement to become the tenant of Llyslew for the 12 months ending November 12th, 1889, I understood that by so doing I would enhance my chances of becoming the yearly tenant, and when the agent and the solicitor to the trust came here quite unexpectedly some months afterwards, they remarked upon the good order in which they found everything; and the fact of their not telling me anything to the contrary, led me to hope and to conclude that my chances for the tenancy were brighter and better; otherwise I should have made every effort months ago to learn the feelings of the trustees upon the matter. I beg to state that I have been bred and born here, and that my parents and brother have held the farm for over 70 years, and I feel an exceptional attachment for my old home; this was the sole cause of my giving up my business in Manchester, trusting that through the kindness of the trustees I should become the tenant of Llyslew after my brother.

"The circumstances under which I came in connexion with him are somewhat painful to refer to, and I need not state that they have been a source of great anxiety to me, and that I have spared no effort or personal sacrifice to satisfy all the creditors, and have now also finally settled with Mr. H. Williams, who has been managing for the last 18 months.

"I live among some of the most experienced farmers in Anglesey, and could refer you to any of them (without their permission) to prove that Llyslew is now in better order than it has been for many years. I would name—Mr. Roberts, Trefarthen; Mr. Owen, Pen Mynydd; Mr. Owen, Rhyddger; Mr. Owen Lewis, Bodrida; Captain Owen, Plas Penrhyn; and Mr. Roberts, Gwydryn.

"If anything was done in any way contrary to your wishes in the selling of hay it was quite unintentional, as no clause in the agreement prohibited my doing so.

"I am ready to give for Llyslew the reasonable rent you require for it, and will also sign any agreement as to the mode of farming which you may think proper and reasonable to place before me. I can also give you the names of a large number of influential and respectable persons, any of whom would readily and gladly guarantee that the rent would be paid regularly and that Llyslew would be farmed according to agreement.

"I am glad to find that all Anglesey are in deep sympathy with me in this sore trouble. I am a defenceless widow, and to think of parting with my old home rends my heart; in fact, I have nowhere to go, having only a few weeks to prepare everything. I trust this humble appeal will be successful. However, I shall remain here until I am forced to leave—Yours obediently, Signed, Cat. Parry.

"P.S.—J. Evans has evidently misled the trustees, when he stated that he was a cousin of mine."

That is the tenant who succeeded her. Invariably on a change of tenancy there is an account taken of what is due to the old tenant for manure, seeding, &c. At Llyslew these were valued at over 300*l.*, but the landlords have taken possession of the improvements, manure, seeding, and all, and have never paid one penny for them.

The farm was let to a Mr. John Evans at 300*l.* or 320*l.* a year, although the old tenant offered 320*l.* rent for it rather than leave, and she would have given proper sureties for the due payment of the rent and the proper management of the farm. But the trustees refused to entertain her application on any terms.

When applying for the farm the present tenant laid great stress on the fact that he was a Tory and a Churchman. In reply to an article published in the "Genedl," he wrote a lengthy letter, dated 14th November 1889, which was published on the 20th November 1889. The letter is written in Welsh, and the following extract is a translation: "You" (referring to the leader-writer) "say that the late tenant spent "his strength and his money relying on the "lease, which is a great mistake. It is true "that the late John Hughes did get a sort of a "lease, but he knew well that there was no "force in it, because the late Mr. Bulkeley "Hughes, who was one of the trustees, refused "to sign it, and not only that, but also warned "him that it was illegal; so the late tenant was "not relying on the lease when he spent his "money on the land; but he was doing so in "accordance with his own whim and pleasure. "It is true that he did improve the farm, and "it is true also that the trustees have recognised "that by paying for all the improvements to "his sister" (as a matter of fact the trustees have never paid one penny for the improvements, or even for manure and seeding). "The "next thing in your article is to ask, 'Who is "the new tenant'? You answered correctly, "only that you imply that my only qualification "for obtaining the farm is that I am a Tory and "Churchman. In this place comes out the true "cause of your defence of Mrs. Parry. It is not "the fact that I personally have got the farm "that is the root of your bitterness, but the fact "that I am a Tory and Churchman. It is true, "as you said, that I am a Tory and Churchman, "and I laid stress on that when applying for "the farm."

It is stated that landlords let their farms to Churchmen and Tories—when they can find them—in preference to Nonconformists and Liberals, but this cannot be proved; the above case is the nearest approach to documentary evidence on the subject. It is a fact, however, that within a radius of 2 miles from this farm three other farms formerly occupied by Nonconformists and Liberals, are now held by Churchmen and Tories, the change having taken place within the last five years, and one of the trustees of Llyslew said that this farm had been long enough in the occupation of a Methodist. The person referred to is the Reverend Dean of Bangor. He told Mr. Hugh Williams, of Gwydryn, that, and I have his authority for stating it.

20,006*d.* The present Dean of Bangor?—The Very Reverend the present Dean of Bangor told Mr. Hugh Williams, of Gwydryn, and that he would do all in his power to take it out of the hands of the Methodists, and that he would be no party to letting it remain longer.

Referring again to the improvements executed by the late tenant in order to try and prove their value apart from personal testimony, which I can, as a practical farmer, give, I will refer to the Agricultural Returns for 1890. This includes the prices from 1872, the year the lease was granted, till 1888, the year when the new tenant took the farm.

In Table 32, pages 92 to 95, the average prices of live meat per 8 lbs. sinking offal shows a reduction in beef of about 1½*d.* per lb., mutton about 1*d.*, lamb about 2*d.* per lb.; other tables confirm this.

In Table 35, page 100, the average prices of wheat, barley, and oats are given as follows:—

Wheat.

	s.	d.
1872, average per imperial quarter	57	0
1888, do. do. -	31	10

Barley.

1872, average per imperial quarter	37	0

Oats.

1872, average per imperial quarter	23	2
1888, do. do. -	16	9

In Table 36 the average price of coal shows a difference of 6*d.* per lb. in the same period.

Assuming that all the improvements executed on this farm had been done by and at the expense of the trustees, and assuming that the prices were the same in 1888 as they were in 1872, the farm would have been cheaper to Mr. John Hughes at 500*l* a year than it was in 1872 at 220*l.* It was capable then of producing nearly double the quantity, and much less productive labour was required,—by this I mean, wages for joiners masons, rockmen, and men engaged in draining, repairing, &c., besides materials for buildings.

As this case will serve to illustrate other cases I intend to mention, I have not trusted to my own knowledge of the farm and of farming, but I have taken great pains to fortify myself with the experience and knowledge of some of the most practical farmers in the county, and they are agreed that the farm was quite capable of producing in 1888, according to the ordinary mode of farming, 350 quarters of oats for sale, 20 heads of cattle for market, besides carrying a flock of 100 sheep. Hardly any wheat and barley are grown in Anglesey. The weight of an Anglesey bullock averages about 650 lbs., sheep about 60 lbs., and lambs about 36 lbs. Sheep average a lamb and a half each, equal to 150 lambs in this flock, and the average weight of wool per sheep is about 5 lbs.

By keeping 30 ewe lambs to replace 30 sheep prepared for butcher on account of age, there would be 120 lambs and 30 sheep for sale, in addition to the 20 bullocks and 350 quarters of oats. As there are no returns, I take it that the prices of horses, pigs, butter, eggs, &c., were the same, and therefore the loss on the year's produce in 1888, owing to depreciation, as compared with 1872, would be as follows:—

350 quarters of oats at 6*s.* 5*d.* per quarter - - -	112	5	10
20 heads of cattle weighing 650 lbs. each at 1½*d.* per lb. -	81	5	0
30 sheep weighing 60 lbs. each at 1*d.* per lb. - - -	7	10	0
120 lambs weighing 36 lbs. each at 2*d.* per lb. - - -	36	0	0
500 lbs. wool at 6*d.* per lb. -	12	10	0
Total loss - -	259	10	10

It is generally estimated that a farmer must receive for a year's produce a sum equal to the rent three times over before he can clear expenses, including interest on his capital. On a turn-over of 1,500*l.* therefore there would be a loss of 250*l.* according to the foregoing table of deductions, thus reducing the gross turn over from 1,500*l.* to 1,250*l.* One-third of that sum would be 416*l.*, the fair value of the farm to a new tenant, who had everything to gain by the expenditure of another.

This rent would correspond with what other people valued the farm. One farmer was prepared to give 3,000*l.* for the residue of the lease. Add interest on this amount to the rent reserved it would make it 340*l.* a year, and his capital was to be realised in 28 years. Another friend and client offered 12,000*l.* to the trustees on hearing that it was on sale. 3½ per cent. on this sum would amount to 420*l.* a year. These amounts correspond to the estimate on the producing capabilities of the farm, and no doubt it cost fully this rent to the late lessee by adding interest on the capital expended. The whole capital was ultimately lost owing to the action of the trustees. Now if the farm had been left as it was when Mr. John Hughes had it—no improvements at all—simply farmed like ordinary tenants from year to year, the trustees would have had to allow 15*l.* or 20*l.* per cent. off the 220*l.*, some landlords are allowing 25*l.* per cent.

The next case is Glantraeth, in the parish of Llanynghenedl, occupied by Mr. Robert Hughes. I have a photograph of the buildings here which will enable the Commissioners to follow me better. [Handing photograph.] That shows the new buildings and the state of the old. Such buildings as were pulled down were in much worse condition. The buildings on this farm had gone quite beyond repair. Some are still standing and can be seen. In 1889 the tenant submitted plans for a new farmyard. They were approved by the landlord, and he agreed to allow 20*l.* a year for four years out of the rent towards the expense. The farmyard cost over 400*l.*, besides the haulage, &c., so the allowance only just covered the interest on the expenditure. Had the 80*l.* been allowed at the outset in a lump sum it would have increased the value of the allowance, but before the last half-year's rent was paid, and the 10*l.* allowed, the farm was put up for sale by public auction, and the tenant was obliged to pay full value for it, as if the whole building had been done at the expense of the landlord; without these good buildings the farm could never have been sold within hundreds of what was paid for it by the tenant. I have seen the farm, and it was offered to a client of mine for exactly the amount agreed to be paid for it, on condition that the tenant was allowed to remain in it to bring up his family, and he was willing to forego all claim in respect of the new building.

See 20,15

There is another case which I have written on the back of that proof, and I have not a copy of it, but it refers to a farm called Cae Crin, in the parish of Llanfaelog. The farmhouse and buildings were altogether built at the expense of the present tenant and his predecessor, and the principal part of it was built some four or five years ago, I believe, from plans and specifications prepared by the architect and surveyor to the Bodorgan estate. I have here photographs showing the front of the house and the farm buildings, and also the side view of the house, which also shows the walling and different things done by and at the expense of the tenant. I have put a little pencil mark there to show that there was a little of the old buildings remaining, adjoining the house on the part where there is a chimney. [The photographs were handed in.] I may say that last week I called upon the tenant of this farm to obtain some information about a different matter altogether, although my principal reason for going to see him was about this building. He told me that last year, about Christmas, he signed an agreement with his landlord, he does not know what the contents of that agreement are, he has no copy, and I have asked the Secretary to be good enough to give Mr. Prichard notice to produce it, so that I might see that agreement. I should be very glad to see it.

See 20,29 –327.

Lord Kenyon.

20,007. Did he build his house?—Everything—he and his predecessor. The house was altered and the farmyard built new altogether. I should be glad to see that agreement now, because it would save some trouble. However, I will proceed with another matter.

There is another case which I have not included in my proof, and that refers to a farm called Llwyn yr arth. The late tenant died some six months ago, I believe. He took the farm in 1854 at 135*l.* a year. The rent was raised four times during that period until it was 205*l.* before it was sold. He had spent over 600*l.* himself on buildings, and he and his predecessor in the tenancy spent over 1,500*l.* in improvements on this farm. These are facts which the late tenant told me himself a short time before he died. The farm was sold, and he submitted his claim for compensation to his landlord, when he was offered the sum of 24*l.* to settle a claim of 1,500*l.*

22,195 The next case is that of Bodsuran. This farm adjoins my old home and until recently belonged to General Owen Williams, formerly of Craigydon, but now of Great Marlow. It measures about 260 acres, and was occupied for nearly 40 years by the late Samuel Owen as tenant at a rent of 170*l.* When I first remember hearing the neighbours discussing the merits of the different farms in the locality I understood this farm was always considered highly rented, as there was some very indifferent and dry land there, and none of first or even second rate quality.

At this time, however, the tenant was looked upon as one of the best and most enterprising farmers in the whole district, and was constantly improving the farm by walling and reclaiming waste land, and generally improving the soil. He told me many a time that he could prove that he had spent from 2,000*l.* to 2,500*l.* on permanent improvements, and I believed him, because when I was at home he was constantly making some improvement, and I could form a fairly accurate estimate of their value.

When he had just got the farm into a good condition the landlord advanced his rent by 40*l.* a year, and not satisfied with this, in two years afterwards he made another advance of 70*l.*, a total advance of 110*l.* a year, wholly on the tenant's own improvements. Besides, he compelled him to take a lease for 14 years at this rent or leave the farm. At that time prices ranged pretty high, and there was no means of obtaining any compensation for improvements. Before the expiration of the lease the farm was sold, and there is not the slightest doubt but that the tenant paid from 2,000*l.* to 2,500*l.* for improvements which he himself had executed out of his own hard-earned money. The effect of these advances and of similar treatment of other tenants in the district was to paralyse good farming, and one tenant remarked to me once, "We know how to farm, but what is the "use, the more we do, the more we have to "pay." This is perfectly true according to my experience.

The last case I shall mention is that of Treriffri, in the parish of Llechcynfarwydd, in this county. It belongs to Sir George Meyrick, Bart., of Bodorgan. The redeeming feature in this case goes far to support the argument in favour of compulsory references or of the establishment of land courts to settle disputes between landlords and tenants. The farm measures about 100 acres, and was let to my grandfather in 1787 for 25*l.* a year. Between that time and the time when I can first remember the conditions of tenancy, I believe several advances were made in the rent. It was 71*l.* a year when I first remember it, about 30 or 35 years ago. This was always considered a very high rental, as the farm is situate on the very high hill and is always short of water. See 20,211–79.

My father spared neither labour nor money to improve the farm, in fact he improved it more than any other farm on the same estate, and he had to pay dearer for it. He died in 1868, and the rent was raised to 85*l.* It was afterwards raised to 90*l.* All these advances made before the landlord ever spent one penny piece on the farm, and before he was ever one penny short of his rent.

My father therefore paid an advance of 184*l.* per cent. on his own improvements for many years. During my mother's widowhood there was an advance at the rate of 260*l.* per cent. in about 80 years.

In 1882 arrangements were made for building a new farmyard and homestead, and I understood at the time that the custom of the estate was for the landlord to provide all materials, and the tenant to pay for all labour, and do the haulage and clearing, &c. When the tenant did this with the farmyard, the landlord paid for skilled labour for the house, as well as for materials.

I made arrangements with the agent for the landlord to pay for skilled labour, as well as materials for the buildings, and for the tenant to pay interest on extra expenditure. No rate was mentioned. There can be no dispute as to the custom, as it is specially referred to by the agent in two letters. The first is dated 17th October 1885, and is in reply to a letter sent by me as to retaking the farm after notice to quit had been served on my brother as executor of my mother. The following is a copy of the letter:—

"Llwydiarth Esgob,
"Llanerchymedd, R.S.O.
"17th October 1885.

"Bodorgan Estate, Treriffri

"Dear Sir,

"I am in receipt of your letter. The custom of the estate in building is for the landlord to pay for materials, and the tenant to pay for labour, subject of course to a claim for compensation as specially agreed to in each case, but before commencing to build at Treriffri, you asked me whether Sir George Meyrick would, owing to your mother's age, &c. do all the building at his own expense, charging the tenant 5*l.* per cent. on the outlay. I communicated your wish to Sir George Meyrick and he consented, though reluctantly, as it was contrary to the custom, and would put out the building arrangements for several years. Your brother consented to pay 5*l.* per cent., and to do all the carting. An estimate was prepared and plans submitted to your brother, some alterations were made in accordance with his suggestions, the building was carried out, and he determined to go on building cattle sheds on the same terms. Plans and estimates for these were submitted to and approved by him. The total expenditure by the landlord was 584*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* interest on which at 5 per cent. would be 29*l.* 14*s.*, but in the first year (1883) I only asked him to pay as interest 10*l.*, though 392*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.* had been expended in 1882, and in the year 1884 he agreed with me to pay 10*l.* more, making the rent 110*l.*; I promising to spend 400*l.* in building a farmhouse. The total expenditure on buildings would then be 984*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.*, and on this sum Sir George Meyrick was willing to receive as interest only 20*l.* or something like 2*l.* per cent. instead of 5*l.*, the rate proposed by your brother himself to be paid Your brother paid the increased rent, 110*l*, in January last, and I assure you I was very much surprised when he told me he would not take the farm for 110*l.*, and when he afterwards positively refused to fulfil his solemn promise in consequence of which the buildings were erected. I could hardly believe him capable of such bad faith.

"I write this fully as I do not think you can have understood the case, and I question whether your brother does place the very wrong version I hear he is spreading right and left about the country. I am quite willing to ask Sir George Meyrick to let him the farm on the terms mentioned in this letter. I am sure everyone will say that the landlord, who, after a tenant has promised to pay 5 per cent. on expenditure lets him off at 2 per cent. has dealt liberally with him, and that your brother will be entirely to blame if he has to leave the farm. But I wish you to understand, and make him understand, that 110*l.* is the rent of the farm to him, though if there is a chance of tenancy it may be more or less, according to arrangements for building a house. You may let me know his decision on the 26th instant, but it is useless for him and you to waste your time in further discussion, as I have plainly stated the terms of letting.

Yours truly,
THOMAS PRICHARD.

D. Owen, Esq."

On receipt of this letter, and before seeing the tenant, I wrote the following letter:—

"Bangor,
"Dear Sir, 20th October 1885.

"I am obliged by your letter of the 17th instant, and I shall see my brother on it on Thursday next and give you the reply asked for by the 26th instant as requested.

"In the meantime allow me to state that I never understood the case to stand exactly as you put it, nor have I the slightest recollection of having asked you to build entirely at your expense and than charge the tenant interest on the whole outlay at 5*l.* per cent. per annum by way of additional rent, but I do recollect discussing the matter with you on several occasions, and saying that owing to my mother's advanced age I should prefer seeing Sir George Meyrick building entirely at his own expense and then charge interest on the extra outlay, though I cannot recollect mentioning 5*l.* per cent. as I consider this a very high rate for a landlord to charge for improving his own estate.

"You are aware that some of the outbuildings were actually tumbling down, and the tenant could not have housed her cattle for another winter. It was therefore absolutely necessary that something should be done to them. I understood you distinctly to say what you now repeat in your letter, viz., that it was the custom on the Bodorgan estate for the landlord to pay for all the materials used, and the tenant to pay for labour, and do all the carting, subject of course to a claim for compensation, and I also understood that when the tenant did this with the farmyard, that the landlord would pay for labour and materials for the house, the tenant to do the carting only.

"Now according to your figures 584*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* was spent on the materials and labour. Out of that sum 400*l.* was paid for materials, which are of the very best quality, and will undoubtedly last for the next 100 years; but these are invariably paid for by the landlord, according to your own showing, therefore the extra rent should have been charged as interest on moneys paid for labour, which was only about 175*l.* my mother having paid all the wages of the labourers employed. The interest on this amount even at 5*l.* per cent. would only amount to 8*l.* 15*s.*, but you have already charged and received 20*l.* as additional rent for last year. This is more than double the interest on labour. Then again you have not taken into consideration the enormous expense of carting all the stones from a quarry a mile and a half distant, the timber, &c. from nearly 10 miles, and all the other materials from Llanerchymedd Station, a distance of over 3 miles; you have also passed quite unnoticed the vast expenditure on walls, drains and other buildings, the materials of some of which have been used in the present buildings.

"You are no doubt aware that in 1787 the farm was let to my grandfather at 5*s.* an acre, and there is no reason to suppose that the then landlord was in the habit of letting his land under the market value. The price of wheat in that year was 42*s.* 5*d.* per quarter, and the price of oats—the staple produce in Anglesey—17*s.* 2*d.*, or 1*s.* a quarter dearer than it is this year; so it stands to reason that a great deal of money and labour must have been spent upon it to bring it to a state of cultivation to justify you in asking even a stranger, who has never spent a penny upon it, to pay 23*s.* an acre for it now, and you say that you might let it for less to a stranger. Are we to lose the benefit of all this enormous labour and expense? The landlord never spent a shilling on the place during the 95 years preceding 1882, nor has he ever been short of a year's rent during the whole of that period. It seems, therefore, very hard that you should again demand such increased rent, more especially since you have raised the rent twice before within the last 16 years. Were it not for these advances we should not have uttered a word against the present advance, but when a third advance is thrust upon us in a period of unexampled depression, it is simply crushing. As a practical farmer, no one knows better than you do that the price of stock and produce is 30*l.* per cent. at least lower than it was a few years ago, and it is impossible to find a market even at the reduced prices. We only want what is fair and reasonable. I am very much afraid that my brother can never see his way clear to pay the rent demanded, as he knows the value of Treriffri better than anybody else; but he must recognise the fact that there is no tribunal to which he can appeal from your decision, although Sir George Meyrick might feel some reluctance to evict one of the oldest families on his estate, and to put in a stranger to reap the benefit of all the labour of his former tenants, and that simply because the depressed state of the market does not warrant another advance of nearly 5*s.* an acre in the rent.

"Since there is a bonâ fide dispute, would it not be better to leave the question of rent to be settled by three respectable farmers who know the value of land in this county, and who are unconnected with the Bodorgan estate, and agree to abide by their decision whichever way it goes?

"In writing to you at this great length, I can assure you that I am actuated by one desire only, that is, to bring about a satisfactory and honourable settlement of what I feel to be a very painful and unfortunate state of affairs.

"Hoping to hear from you further by Thursday,

"I am, yours truly,

"David Owen.

"Thos. Prichard, Esq."

Subsequently I saw my brother, and on the 26th October 1885 I wrote a letter, in which the following extract appears. The other portions are not material to this inquiry:—

"He is willing, however, to pay an increased rent at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum on moneys expended for labour on the building, provided you erect a house as arranged, or he is willing to refer the matter to some practical farmer, as I stated, or to Mr. Algeo or Mr. Jones, county surveyor, and abide by their decision. In case you agree to either of the two latter I will myself pay five guineas towards the costs."

In reply to another communication from me, Mr. Prichard wrote as follows on the 4th January 1886:—

"I thought I had, in our long conversation at Holyhead on the 28th October, fully replied to your letter of the 20th October. I then fully explained that on the Bodorgan estate when the landlord provided materials and the tenant the labour, in order to compensate the tenant the landlord charged no interest on his expenditure (of course not on the tenant's expenditure). I told you plainly and finally at Holyhead that the rent would be 110*l.*"

In reply, I wrote on the 5th January 1886:—

"According to your own showing you are charging too much interest on the money expended for building. You only expended about 175*l.* on labour, and the advance ought therefore to be 8*l.* 15*s.* and not 20*l.* I wish you clearly to understand that my brother does not object to your charging interest on money expended on labour."

The correspondence was laid before Sir George Meyrick, but he refused to alter his agent's terms, and my brother had to leave the farm in November 1886. The agent alleged that my brother agreed with him to pay 110*l.* for the farm after being shown the accounts, and that he fulfilled his agreement by paying 110*l.* in January 1885. On the other hand, I say that the demand for 110*l.* was looked upon at the time as simply outrageous, but it was paid because the tenant was too ill to be troubled about anything at the time. My brother asserts that he told the agent that he would never pay it afterwards, and I know this was the feeling at the time.

When this 110*l.* was paid the landlord was only entitled to 98*l.* 10*s.* according to his own showing, and he afterwards returned 8*l.*, admitted by himself to be over-charged. I have his receipt here for the money returned that he had actually over-charged the tenant—8*l.*—and it is endorsed on the receipt for the last rent. Every effort to arrive at an amicable arrangement of the rent having failed, we served the usual notice claiming compensation for improvements, and the same was referred to two competent gentlemen to deal fairly between both parties. In the result the tenant was awarded the sum of 388*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, although this sum did not represent one-third the improved value of the farm, yet it was accepted as final, as we fully agree with the principle of arbitration.

The farm was let to a new tenant for 110*l.*, and the landlord built a new house entirely at his own expense. He also paid the 388*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* compensation and his own costs, bringing the whole to over 400*l.*

If Sir George Meyrick had recognised the equity of his tenant's claim he would have received 90*l.* plus 5*l.* per cent. on the expenditure for labour, equal to about 100*l.* a year, or my brother would have paid the 110*l.* if Sir George had paid him the 400*l.* which was found to be locked up by him in the farm. He could then have invested that sum to bring in nearly 20*l.* a year interest, thus reducing his rent to 90*l.* a year—less than what he offered.

These cases are only given to illustrate a great number of other cases in the county quite as bad, and some even worse. Repeated advances have been made on farms held by industrious tenants, while the rent of his neighbour—who never tried to improve his farm—was allowed to remain.

Before concluding my evidence I wish to add that I do not believe my countrymen would like to see the landlords robbed of their rightful property. Under existing laws, capitalists have been allowed to acquire landed estates. It would be manifestly unfair to deprive anyone of property acquired in a perfectly legitimate manner because the law under which he acquired that property was defective. But in my opinion it is even more monstrous to think that any person can enrich himself or his creditors, by simply confiscating the whole of a man's labour and earnings, and putting improvements made by a struggling tenant up to sale by auction to be sold as his own property, and otherwise appropriating them to his own use. The capital and labour of the cultivator of the said ought to be properly protected, and the capital of the owner should also be protected.

I do not believe in "free sales" of tenancies. If a tenant wants to give up his farm, he ought to give it up to the owner on being paid for his improvements. Failing this, then I think he ought to be allowed to sell his tenancy. As a rule Welsh farmers want fair conditions of tenancy and security for improvements, not for the purpose of selling their rights, but in order to secure their homes and to go on improving.

It is stated that former landlords must have been in the habit of letting their land low in consideration of the tenant undertaking to cultivate and improve it, but this is a mistake, as the freehold was then correspondingly low. For instance, a farm in one parish which was bought 80 or 90 years ago for about 800*l.* is now let for 212*l.* a year, but the improvements were executed by the owners, who were also the occupiers for many years. I may add here that since writing this I have found that one or two fields were purchased for 300*l.* in addition to that, and added to the farm. In the same parish is another farm said to be acquired by the grandfather of the late owner as mortgagee for 300*l.* Before this farm was sold, three or four years ago, the rental was 280*l.* a year, but it was the tenant and his predecessors in this case that executed all the improvements at their own expense. It is only necessary to investigate the title deeds relating to land in the county to find that rents must have been fixed according to the value of the freehold, and that the theory of letting at a low rental in consideration of the expense of cultivation, cannot be supported by anyone accustomed to investigate title deeds, and who is also acquainted with the history of rack-renting in the county.

The estimate of the value of improvements may seem exaggerated, but to show it is not, I may say that about 30 years ago a farm was sold in Anglesey for 9,000*l.*, and the owner became the occupier and built a new house and farmyard, and otherwise improved the farm. Less than 10 years ago this very farm was sold for over 18,500*l.*

I know of another farm which cost the present owner 25*l.* an acre. The tenant subsequently spent over 25*l.* an acre in improving. He has had to pay an increased rent for his labour and capital.

Chairman.

20,007*a.* Can you give the names of those two farms?—Yes.

20,007*b.* Will you hand them in?—I will give the names of all the farms. You want the two farms in the same parish. One was Geirn, and the other was Bodsuran; that farm I have given evidence about already. I know a good deal about both, because I was born and bred on a farm just between the two.

It is very difficult to suggest the best remedy. Certainly, the cultivator of the soil should have more freedom of cultivation, and more security for capital and labour. Protection in any shape or form is quite out of the question.

Competition from foreign markets is becoming more and more keen, but this cannot affect the home market, except as to prices. The more farmers can produce at home, the less quantity is required from abroad. It matters very little to the farmer whether he gets 1*l.* a quarter for his corn or 30*s.* a quarter, provided he gets his rent properly fixed to meet the price. Abatements in rent, which depend on the generosity of the landlord, are bad in principle. Anything that tends to take away the independence of the farmers of the country must tend to weaken the country, as the farmers are its backbone. In my opinion the best remedy seems to be—besides giving absolute security for improvements—the establishment of a sliding scale of rents. This has answered fairly well with regard to tithe, and I see no reason why the average prices of various farm produce in each county should not be recorded, and the sliding scale fixed in each county according to the nature and value of its product.

This would give the owners of land the benefit of an improved market, without re-adjusting the rents, and when the market is lower the tenant would be entitled to a reduction as of right, and not by favour.

Lord Kenyon.

20,008. As to that sliding scale, how would you propose to fix it? Would it slide every year?—Just exactly in the same way as the tithes slide.

20,009. Then you fix it on a different basis to the tithe, I suppose?—Certainly, on the produce of each county. One county differs from another in the capabilities of the soil. One county is a corn-growing county, and another county would be better for beef or dairy-farming or cheese-making.

20,010. You would even have to take a smaller area than a county, because many parts of the county differ?—No, I do not think so.

20,011. Indeed, they do. Take, for instance, the upland and lowland parts of Merionethshire?—Yes.

20,012. Then take Montgomeryshire. There are some lowland farms in Montgomeryshire?—Then I take the upland farms to be sheep farms principally, and that would be regulated by the prices of mutton and wool. Then the lowlands would be regulated by corn, oats, beef, and mutton also.

20,013. It is the fixing of the district which seems to me difficult?—Of course it does present difficulties at first sight, but I think they are all difficulties which could be overcome. It requires very deliberate consideration, I must say.

20,014. Of course it presents a great difficulty to the owner, he never knows what his position is?—It is not more difficult to the owner than to the tenant; it is for their mutual advantage. If the prices range high the owner gets the advantage without re-adjustment of rent. If loss then the tenant gets the advantage without having the trouble to go and ask a favour of his landlord.

20,015. There is a great deal to be said in its favour, I grant you, but I wanted to hear what you had to say as to that. I think that some of your evidence in reference to low rents refers to very much the early part of the century and even earlier. Has not Telfords Bridge, the suspension bridge, made a great deal of difference in this county?—I should think very likely it has.

23,016. Would not that account in some degree for the advancement of rents?—Why should the landlord benefit more than the tenant, my Lord?

20,017. I do not that say he should at all, but does it not account in some degree for the advance?—Very likely it does, but I cannot for the life of me see why the landlord should reap all the benefit from that, and the cultivator none.

20,018. The tenant gets his produce to more markets?—Quite so, but then he has to pay more to the landlord for that convenience, and he does not benefit himself.

20,019. I do not know about that; that is your contention. You spoke about many hard cases. I will not enter into that, because possibly we shall hear more about them?—Quite so.

20,020. You said the game laws ought to be abolished?—No, my Lord.

20,021. What was it you said?—I said that the game ought to become the property of the cultivator of the soil.

20,022. Well, it is, unless he agrees himself out of it?—No doubt it is, but I should make any agreement between the landlord and the tenant which took that right away from him illegal.

20,023. Do you think there would be much game left in the country if that were the case?—I think there would be more game in the country and more real sport, and people who have interest in the county would enjoy that sport. I think it would certainly be to the advantage of landowners as well as tenants.

20,024. Have you much personal knowledge of that?—Yes, a good deal.

20,025. You are a sportsman?—No, not a sportsman.

20,026. You say that pheasants do damage to the crops quite as much as the rabbits?—Yes, practical farmers tell me so, and a good deal more because in wet weather they flop about with their wings and damage the crops very materially.

20,027. Do what?—They go about and begin to fly or something of that sort, and when they start they knock the corn down, whereas the rabbit will find its way right through.

20,028. But I presume the rabbit damage is done mostly by eating?—Very likely it is, but the pheasant eats as well.

20,029. But it does not eat the same amount of corn that the rabbit will when it is young?—I think the rabbit will go in for grass mostly.

20,030. But it does not do the damage to grass that the rabbit does?—Well, they are not so plentiful as rabbits.

20,031. I thought in regard to your evidence that I saw something about goodwill, but I see in the end that you disapprove of free sale?—Entirely.

20,032. You disapprove of the practice of goodwill; as practised now I mean?—Entirely. There is no such thing practised in this county.

20,033. No; I say you disapprove of it?—Yes.

20,034. You do not think the formation of a Land Court would lead to such tenant right?—

No, I think it would not. I would make the free sale of tenancy illegal. I would make it impossible except in the case where the landlord could not pay the tenant for improvements.

20,035. Do you not think that the principle which seems to have been in practice in this county of the tenants being allowed to build their own buildings confers some sort of good-will upon those tenants?—They never get it.

20,036. Do you not think it ought to?—They ought to get it, some sort of tenant right, but they never get it.

20,037. You think it does confer some right?—It does, undoubtedly. A man who builds and improves his farm ought to have full compensation for the improvements he executes.

20,038. Do you not think the system of the landlord doing all the buildings and repairs is better?—It is admirable, but the landlords do not do it. On the Bodorgan estate they commenced after that trouble with my brother.

20,039. I notice more particularly in this county than in any other the building is done by tenants?—Yes.

20,040. You mentioned the exclusion of the Agricultural Holdings Act on some estate?—Yes.

20,041. What clause is that?—Altogether.

20,042. The 1883 Act?—Yes, all Acts.

20,043. But surely you know that is illegal?—I know it, but then it is included, nevertheless.

20,044. Have you the agreement or the lease?—I have an agreement here. "The Agricul-" tural Holdings (England) Act, 1875, the " Agricultural Holdings (England) Amendment " Act, 1876, and the Agricultural Holdings " (England) Act, 1883, or any part or provi-" sion of those Acts, or any of them, shall not " apply to this contract or the tenancy hereby " created, nor shall any custom of the country " affect the same or be set up in opposition " thereto."

20,045. Whose agreement is that, may I ask?—I will hand it up, my Lord. [The witness handed in agreement.]

20,046. It is between Owen Hughes of the one part and Evan Jones. Where does Mr. Owen Hughes live?—He lives at Nanner.

20,047. Is he a large proprietor?—I really do not know the extent of his estate, my Lord. That is a very large farm.

20,048. I see it is 239 acres. It is a curious agreement. Then in the case of this stone wall, did the tenant apply for leave to build that wall, or was he compelled to build it, or what?—The outgoing tenant had built it presumably with the consent of the agent. Then he gave up the farm after six years had expired, and the surveyor to the estate valued it for the incoming tenant at 350*l.*; the incoming tenant paid that 350*l.* for it. The farm had been in the incoming tenant's family for some time, but after he died his children had to leave, and then of course they lost everything.

20,049. The farm had been in the outgoing tenant's family for some time?—Yes.

20,050. You said the incoming tenant's family?—I mean the incoming tenant in 1881. He died in 1891, and then his family had to leave in 1892, having lost all except 93*l.*, I think.

20,051. It seems it is a very substantial sort of wall. Is that a common sort of wall to build in this county?—Quite common. It is as good to-day as it was when originally built.

20,052. Is that the ordinary sort of wall to build in this county?—No, it is an extraordinary sort of wall. It is a better wall than is usually built, because it is built in order to divide the rabbit warren from the cultivated land, and there are other walls besides.

20,053. You do not know if there was any previous agreement between the landowner and the tenant about this?—I do not.

20,054. I suppose the rabbit warren was in the landowner's occupation?—No, I think it is not. I think it is in the tenant's; I think it was let with the farm.

20,055. Do you know if this agreement was ever enforced; it is not signed?—Yes, it was put in force. The tenant named there had to leave. He failed and he was succeeded.

Chairman.

20,056. That is not the original agreement; that is a copy of the agreement?—That is a copy of the agreement handed to me by the tenant.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,057. Can you give us many instances in which the tenants' rents have been raised without due regard to their improvements?—Very many. I could give you others.

20,058. You referred to many besides this one which you have given us?—I referred to four or five in my evidence. I might refer to another which is rather peculiar, because it is the only one which the special correspondent of the "Times" found in the whole county. I will read it—"In Anglesey I have spent some days, " among tenants rather than landlords, without " finding any serious complaints against land-" owners save in one case."

Chairman.

20,059. What are you reading from now, please?—From an article by the special correspondent of the "Times," who was sent down to investigate the condition of tenancy in Anglesey, and he writes an article on the land question in Wales.

20,060. What date is that?—This is dated Wednesday, January 11th, 1893—this year. It is as follows:—"In Anglesey I have spent some " days, among tenants rather than landlords, " without finding any serious complaints against " landowners save in one case. That was the " case of a farmer, name unknown, on the Baron " Hill Estate, which belongs to Sir Richard " Bulkeley, and of which some 12,000 acres are

" in the market. This farmer complained that " during some 30 years of tenancy his rent had " been raised by 53*l.*, that is to say, frrom 237*l.* " to 290*l*, his acreage being, if my memory " serves me correctly, 212." That is the only case which the correspondent was able to find in the whole county; but there are a great number of cases.

20,061. Do you happen to know how long the visit of that correspondent extended?—Well, he says for some days.

20,062. And he went down to discover any grievances amongst the tenant farmers?—Yes, and he says further, my Lord, that "In Anglesey " I have not found anything approaching to a " general grievance in connexion with the tenure " of land; nor have I found anything more " terrible than an amused smile when the forth- " coming Land Bill and Royal Commission were " mentioned." That is dated January 11th, 1893, dated from Yspytty Ifan.

Professor Rhys.

20,063. That is some distance away—a safe distance up in the mountains, is it not?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,064. Do you know of any more instances in which a tenant had been obliged to leave because he wished to refer his case to arbitration?—I do not know at this very moment. I daresay that the Commissioners have observed that in one case Mr. Prichard did refer the question of rent to arbitration, but in this he refused point blank. I would be very glad to see the valuation made by Mr. Algeo in 1871 of that farm. I had a conversation with Mr. Algeo, and he said, "I would be very glad to re-value places " on one condition"—that his valuation would be produced to both parties. Of course your Lordship will observe that in 1871 the prices were very high, according to the agricultural returns.

[Mr. Prichard here handed in a book.]

Chairman.

20,065. What is this?

Mr. Prichard: A valuation in which the farm is valued at 90*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.*, and it was let for 70*l.*

Chairman.

20,066. Is this rebutting evidence?—No; Mr. David Owen asked me to produce this. I would like to see that.

Lord Kenyon.

20,067. Treriffri, is it?—Yes. Treriffri. I remember the day when Mr. Algeo came in sight of it, perfectly well. He never walked a field of it. I remember the day as well as possible.

Professor Rhys.

20,068. He never went over the farm?—Never.

Lord Kenyon.

20,069. Yet you say that you are prepared to take him as a valuer afterwards?—On condition; he laid it down as a condition that he was allowed to show his valuation to both sides.

20,070. But I mean you state in your evidence that you are prepared to take Mr. Algeo?—Yes, quite prepared, on condition that he was allowed to show his valuation to both sides. You see there is a difference between valuing the farm and going to raise the rent. A man cannot value without walking every field; I remember that day perfectly.

Professor Rhys.

20,071. Had he gone over the farm or seen it before?—I do not know when.

20,072. You do not think he had?—All I say is that he never walked all the fields.

20,073. You do not think he ever did?—Never in his life.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,074. Do you consider that when a tenant leaves a farm and plants thorns there that that permanent improvement should be extended over more than 21 years?—Oh, decidedly; I think the clause in the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 is good. The clause in the Act says in the first section "shall be entitled on quitting " his holding at the determination of a tenancy " to obtain from the landlord as compensa- " tion under this Act for such improvement " such sum as fairly represents the value of " the improvements to an incoming tenant." That is my contention. I know of one case where a claim was sent in for very many hundreds of pounds, if not thousands, which was defeated on bare technicality. The tenant held over for a short time after the determination of his tenancy, and the legal referee decided that, inasmuch as he had held his farm over after the 13th November, he was not entitled to claim a penny. If I am not mistaken the claim was for some thousands; at all events, it ought to have been, because the man built two houses on it and the whole of the farm buildings.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,075. In the letter that you wrote to Mr. Prichard you refer to the absence of a tribunal for the settlement of disputes between landlord and tenant, do you not?—I do.

20,076. What kind of tribunal did you refer to?—A compulsory Arbitration Court I was thinking of at the time, which would have the power to give legal effect to their decisions.

20,077. Are you in in favour of a Land Court as it is generally understood?—Well, I do not understand what is understood exactly.

Chairman.

Could you explain what you have told us to Mr. Richard Jones? I do not think he quite understood what you meant about the sliding scale.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,078. I am going to that presently, my Lord. We will lead up to it. [To the witness.] You say that the establishment of a sliding scale has answered fairly well with regard to tithe?—Yes.

20,079. I have no need to ask you how tithe is assessed?—No, I suppose not.

20,080. Do you think the way in which tithe is assessed is satisfactory?—The principle, but not the basis. The principle is satisfactory, but I would not put corn as the basis. I would put what each county is capable of producing.

20,081. I suppose you know that returns of the prices of corn are obtained from towns in corn-growing districts?—Yes, the tithe is based upon wheat.

20,082. In corn-growing districts, all over the country?—Yes.

20,083. I have seen it stated that this is not fair, that these towns are generally the best corn-growing districts, and that of course wheat commands a better price in those districts; that the districts which those towns represent only comprise perhaps about half of the whole corn-producing districts of the whole country?—Yes.

20,084. That the corn in the other districts does not command such a high price as it does in those districts?—Yes, that is why I say I think that each county should command its own market prices for the different commodities. I should make it part of the functions of the County Council to have proper returns of the different prices in the different parts of the county.

20,085. I suppose you will admit that there are difficulties in connexion with a sliding scale?—Very great, but I think they could be overcome.

20,086. There is one thing as to the relative proportions of oats, wheat, barley, or stock that should be raised on a farm?—Exactly so.

20,087. And you see there are other elements entering into the question, such as the price of labour and the conditions of tenancy?—Exactly.

20,088. How would you meet things of that sort?—All those difficulties have to be taken into consideration, I say, and some proper basis agreed upon.

20,089. Do you not think it would be a better plan if the question of fixing the rent was referred to arbitration, and that these persons could take the price of produce into consideration as well as the conditions of tenancy and other elements which relate to the question?—Yes; my difficulty with regard to that is, for how long a period would the rent be fixed, because, if you take the case of Llyslew, the market was very high in 1872. At the end of 14 years there was a loss on the stock produced on that farm of over 250*l.* Of course if you fix the rent for 10 or 15 years, either the tenant might lose a good deal or the landlord might lose a good deal; whereas, if you have a sliding scale on the basis I have referred to, the landlord would benefit during a prosperous year, and the tenant would benefit during a depressed year.

20,090. Would you think that five years was too much, in accordance with the Bill of Mr. Bryn Roberts?—The cost of going to Court would be enormous every five years, I think. My objection to that is the costs. I think it is a very awkward thing for landlords and tenants to be at each other constantly, one for a reduction, and another for an advance.

20,091. Supposing that the Court is simply an arbitration court for each of the parties to appeal to, in case they could not come to an agreement?—Yes; but then you would require to go to it every 5 or 7 or 10 years afterwards, if there was the necessity; whereas you could once settle the rent and it would slide according to market.

Mr. Grove.

20,092. You produce a copy of a County Court Judgment?—Yes. I acted as solicitor in the matter and know all about it, or rather my firm acted.

20,093. Would you be able to put that in for the use of the Commissioners, or is it the only copy you have got?—It is the only copy I have got, but it is reported in the "Law Times" for Saturday, June 11th, 1892; it is reported in the "Law Times"; not in the Reports, but in the paper. If the Commission wish, perhaps it would be better to put it on the Minutes of the Evidence, and then it could be referred to.

Chairman.

20,094. Will you hand it in?—Yes. (See Appendix.)

Professor Rhŷs.

20,094*a*. Could you give us the original Welsh quotation which you translated from the "Genedl"?—No, I cannot produce the original. It is a copy that I have from the "Genedl." It is a very long letter.

20,095. Have you verified it?—My partner took a copy and I translated it myself.

20,096. It would be more satisfactory if you could put in the original?—I am afraid I could not get a copy of the "Genedl" from the file.

20,097. Could you give us the date?—Yes, I can give you the date. The letter is dated the 14th November, 1889, and was published in the "Genedl" for the 20th November, 1889. I am told by the reporter for the "Genedl" that a copy can be obtained of the newspaper of that date.

20,098. So I should think. You consider that the period of 15 years for a stone wall is inadequate for compensation?—It is ridiculous.

20,099. What would you suggest?—The value at the time the tenancy is determined to an incoming tenant. I suggest nothing but that which is in the Act of Parliament referred to.

20,100. And you would have the compensation settled by the landlord when the tenant leaves?—Or the incoming tenant if it is a matter of arrangement between them. It was the incoming tenant who paid the 350*l.*

20,101. That leads me to another question which I wish to ask you: with fixity of tenure how would you prevent a tenant right growing up or coming into existence?—I wish to bring tenant's rights into existence: not to prevent it.

20,102. Of what sort?—Of all sorts. If a man makes an improvement I think that as of right he ought to be paid for it.

20,103. I agree with that, but that is not what I meant. I meant what is sometimes called goodwill, and so on?—I do not approve of goodwill.

20,104. You do not consider that?—No—if a man improves the cultivation or improves the buildings or anything of that sort, he ought to be paid for them on leaving.

20,105. I do not know whether you heard the previous witness who mentioned cases where farmers were assisted to pay their rents by their children who were away working in the large towns or in various positions abroad?—It is rather a delicate thing, but I could name dozens.

20,106. I do not ask you to name them: I know it is delicate?—I can confirm him thoroughly.

20,107. You can confirm that statement?—Thoroughly.

20,108. You think that is largely the case?—Yes.

20,109. It is so in cases that you know of?—Yes, that I am personally acquainted with.

20,110. If they had not that assistance they could not pay their rents?—No, they would have died paupers, many of them.

20,111. Have you known any instances of farmers becoming paupers?—Oh, yes, there is a man now getting 6*s.* a week at Carnarvon as a pauper—an old farmer. I know several.

20,112. Would you object to say on what estates their farms were?—I fancy I had better not.

20,113. I think you mentioned just now a case of a claim for compensation being defeated by what you considered a technical objection?—Exactly.

20,114. Have you known cases of that kind often before?—I have known two. I was concerned myself in one.

20,115. Do you think this has a deterrent effect to a large extent on farmers when they would like to claim compensation?—It has, no doubt, but it is not very often that claims for compensation arise, because tenants are allowed to remain if they are good tenants, from one generation to another in large estates. But there are special circumstances such as sales or some other dispute where a good tenant is turned away, and claims for compensation defeated in that way. In the case that I referred to of the stone wall there was a claim made for improvement to the soil, but that was not allowed.

20,116. Then do you know anything about counter-claims on the part of the landlords?—Yes, I had an action with Lord Stanley where there was a counter-claim.

20,117. What was that for?—He made a claim for dilapidations in the case that was mentioned to his Lordship this morning, and in this case here of Fferam Fawr there was a counter-claim for dilapidations in the buildings, and I believe 2*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.* was allowed. See 20,006*c*, 20,280.

20,118. Is it pretty frequently the case that a landlord makes counter-claims? Does that happen frequently?—I do not think it does very frequently.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,119. With regard to this wall that has been spoken of, the photograph that you put in is a photograph of a remarkably substantial wall?—It is.

20,120. It would give me the idea of being built for some special purpose?—It was.

20,121. That was so?—Yes, that was so; it was to prevent the rabbits from the rabbit warren going to the cultivated land.

20,122. I am much obliged for that information, because that gives it a higher value. Do you approve in principle of the first schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act, the principle being that the consent of the landlord is required in certain things?—Yes, in certain things undoubtedly, but if the landlord refuses I should certainly say that there ought to be some power.

20,123. Of compulsory arbitration?—Yes, by which the tenant could make the improvement if it was for the benefit of agriculture.

20,124. Quite so, but that wall, I suppose, is a different wall to an ordinary wall?—It is a magnificent wall, and it is a mile long, I should think.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,125. What authority would you suggest to put this sliding scale into operation? You must get some authority to work a sliding scale?—Yes, the county council.

20,126. Do you think they have not got sufficient work already?—They can do a good deal more. Of course that is subject to modifications. It was sprung upon me rather suddenly, but I should say so.

20,127. Do you think that they would be better able to superintend the working of the sliding scale than qualified men would be—qualified valuers?—Well, it is very difficult to know who is qualified to value. It is a matter of opinion very often as to valuers. Valuers differ very widely.

20,128. The suggestion of the sliding scale in the first instance is a matter of opinion?—Yes, quite so. Then of course there would be a power to get persons acquainted with the district—with the locality. So much depends on the locality.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

A man must be pretty well acquainted with the nature of the soil before he can properly value. I will give you an instance. Here last summer at Treriffri, which I have spoken of, I do not suppose there is any man in the world who could have paid anything like the rent for it, because it was dry and parched up, and not a drop of water was to be had within a mile, I should think; but another summer a man going over that land would value it a great deal more than he would this year, so that you must have some local knowledge. So much depends upon the seasons.

20,129. You have local valuers of experience in Anglesey?—Yes, you would be able to select them in that way in the county of Anglesey. You would not take a man from the far end of the county to value another part at the other end.

Chairman.

20,130. I have a few questions to ask you which have been handed in by Mr. Vincent. "Was Glantraeth on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate?"—It was.

20,131. "Do you know that Sir Richard will "not settle what compensation is to be given "unless the various purchases have been "completed"?—I never heard of it before, my Lord.

20,132. That is the first you have heard of it?—That is the first I have heard of it. I should be very glad to know that it is a fact.

20,133. "Are you aware that in the case of "Caecrin a promise to compensate is included in "agreement?"—I should like to see the agreement, my Lord.

20,134. You are not aware of that?—No, I am not. I should like to see the agreement As soon as the tenant knew that I wanted information for evidence he refused to oblige me any more; he was afraid.

20,135. Then you have not seen that agreement?—I have not seen that agreement. He had not the agreement.

20,136. These are all Mr. Vincent's questions: "When you speak of the increase of the rent "roll of Anglesey you refer to the returns under "Schedule B.?—Schedule A.

20,137. Not under Schedule B.?—No.

20,138 "Do you take into consideration the "large number of leases for lives which have "expired since 1815?"—I do take that into consideration; I have said in my evidence that I do not think the landlords of that day were in the habit of letting their land under value.

20,139. These questions refer to Llyslew: "Do you not consider the expenditure was large "for a farm of the size of Llyslew?"—No, I do not. The money was very well spent. It is one of the nicest farms in the whole county, and that is entirely owing to the labours of Mr. Hughes. There was I believe, about 50 acres of land there, which was bog and unclaimed.

20,140. "Did not John Hughes erect a stable "for four horses; was that necessary or useful

"expenditure?"—I know the buildings very well, and I do not know of anything that is not absolutely necessary there. I may say that Mr. John Hughes was a kinsman of mine, and I was in the habit of visiting the place very often, and I know a great deal about his affairs.

20,141. "Did not John Hughes die insolvent?" —No.

20,142. He did not?—No; he paid 18*s.* in the £ as it was, he could have paid 20*s.*, and if he had what was his right from the trustees he would have died worth a good deal of money. I consider that the trustees have taken what was really his money for their own use.

20,143. "Did he not hold grazing parks in "various places and establish a sale of fat beasts "at Menai Bridge, thereby losing much money?" —I could not say what he lost, I know that he did take grazing land, but I know also that his farms had more manure than any two farms put together in the county.

20,144. "Was not Mrs. Parry, his sister and "administratrix, an invalid who had lived most "of her life in Manchester, and had no capital?" —Mrs. Parry had capital—enough to take the farm. She could have carried it on and give a proper guarantee.

20,145. "Did she not hand the farm over to "a committee of creditors, and did they not make "a profit of 700*l.* on the first year?"—I believe they did. My brother managed it and did very well for them; and that shows the value of the farm, and corroborates my evidence about it.

20,146. They made a profit of 700*l.*?—Yes, and that corroborates my estimate of the value of the farm. It was owing entirely to the improvements of the tenant.

20,147. "Do you know that so long ago as 1872 Mr. Picton Jones, solicitor to John Hughes, wrote to Lord Penrhyn: 'Whatever 'has happened shall not be a source of trouble 'to your Lordship or to the other trustees, as 'my client looks upon the lease as entirely null 'and void, and will be satisfied with anything 'that the trustees, with the consent of the 'Charity Commissioners may think proper to 'give him'"?—Mr. Picton Jones was the solicitor for the feoffees, who evidently prepared a deed which had no legal effect, and I do not know what he wrote to Lord Penrhyn or anyone else on the subject; but Mr. Hughes told me many and many a time that he looked upon his lease as a perfectly safe document, and that these noblemen and gentlemen would never back out of their solemn undertaking.

20,148. This is a question from the Chair. Was that lease signed by all the trustees?—Nine out of 11; I have a copy of it here; I can give the names of all who signed, my Lord. It is in the evidence.

20,149. You might give us the names of the two trustees who did not sign?—Mr. Bulkeley Hughes did not sign. I may say there was an old feud between Mr. Bulkeley Hughes and Mr. Hughes owing to some game or something. He did not sign, but he was the first to discover that the trustees could not grant the lease for

Chairman—continued.

45 years. It would be easier for me to give the names as signed. The Bishop of Bangor, Lord Newborough, Richard Lloyd Edwards, J. S. W. Griffith, J. Williams Ellis, Lord Penrhyn, J. V. Vincent, and Rice Thomas. All those signed, but the others did not sign.

20,150. "Do you know that the lease was "originally granted in consideration of works "already done and 1,020*l.* to be spent"?—There was a covenant to that effect in the lease, and he spent 3,000*l.* and more.

20,151. "Do you know that in consequence "of the difficulty about the lease most of the "1,020*l.* was not spent"?—No. One of the conditions was that he should put what they call a cross kitchen to the house, and he always meant to do it, and he had 28 years to do it; but he went on improving the land first, because that was productive.

20,152. "Do you know that up to the very "time the writ was issued the trustees ex-"pressed themselves willing to pay for the "improvements?"—If they were willing I cannot understand why they did not do it, because they never paid a penny; and not only that, but whenever there is a change of tenancy, every outgoing tenant is paid for manure and seeding in the land. This was valued at over 300*l.*, and it has never been paid for—not even that.

20,153. The following question is by Mr. Owen Wynne: "You said a good deal about "agreements. Have you ever drawn any "agreements as between an owner and occupier, "and, if so, did they contain very liberal "clauses?"—They contained none of these clauses that I object to. I have prepared a great number.

20,154. They contained none of the clauses that you object to?—None whatever. I got one signed last Thursday week here, and there were none of those clauses, and a copy was given to the tenant.

20,155. This question is also by Mr. Owen Wynne: "We have heard a good deal about "farmers having established some of their "children in business. As a country solicitor, "are not you yourself an instance of the "kind?"—Not from anything that I have ever had from a landlord.

20,156. I think the question means, Mr. Owen, are you the son of a farmer?—I am.

20,157. And you are now a solicitor?—I am now a solicitor, and I never got a penny from the farm towards qualifying. I got something after I was qualified; and I may say this, that when my mother went, with four children, to take the farm after my father died in 1868,—I had a brother then qualifying for a doctor,—the then agent told my mother, "You can afford to "bring up a doctor, and you ought to pay more "rent for your farm," although that man knew perfectly well that my brother had the means of qualifying without getting a penny from the farm, and that agent served us with a notice to quit there and then.

Chairman—continued.

20,158. That was in 1868?—May 1868, the day after my father's funeral.

20,159. Was a notice to quit given you the day after your father's funeral?—The day after my father's funeral, in the office of Mr. Pritchard, on my mother and children, all the children being under age.

20,160. These questions are by Mr. R. H. Pritchard: "Do you know that the next of kin "were threatening Mrs. Parry with proceed-"ings?"—They were not. I was acting for them.

20,161. "Do you know that Mr. Williams, of "Gwydryn, who had acted as valuer for Mrs. "Parry, called and told the trustee's solicitor "so in June 1889?"—I am not aware of it.

20,162. You do not know of that?—No.

20,163. "And he gave that as a reason for "not proceeding with his valuation." Do you know that?—I am not aware of it.

20,164. You cannot answer that?—No; he was not the valuer; he was manager for Mrs. Parry; he was not the valuer. At that time he was a valuer with Mr. Thomas Owen who valued improvements at 2,600*l.* I have a copy of the valuation here.

20,165. He was not the valuer at all?—Not at that time. I am not aware of it, subject to anything that Mr. Pritchard might say, of course.

20,166. All these are Mr. R. H. Pritchard's questions. "Does Mr. Owen know that the "trustees appointed Mr. Dew, and Mrs. Parry "appointed Mr. Hugh Williams, as arbitrator, "to value her permanent improvements?" Did you know that?—No.

20,167. "Did you know that Mr. Williams "after some time declined to act?"—I am not aware of it. I may say that I was acting as Mr. Hugh Williams's solicitor during the whole of that time, and he generally used to tell me everything.

20,168. But you are not aware of that?—I am not aware of it.

20,169. Did you know that she then appointed Mr. Thomas Owen, who died?—Mr. Thomas Owen and Mr. Hugh Williams valued the improvements first together. I do not know what the date was; I may be able to find the date.

20,170. I do not think that is very important. "Do you know that she then refused to appoint another referee?"—I never heard of such a thing. I know that Mr. Dew valued the manure and the seeding in conjunction with Mr. Gardner, I believe, and valued them at over 300*l.*, which was never paid for.

20,171. "Did not you yourself advise Mr. "John Hughes that the lease was bad?"—I told him that the lease was invalid, and he thereupon told me "I feel as secure as if it had "been as valid as any legal document, because I "have absolute confidence in those people." He wanted a loan—a mortgage—on the lease at the time. I told him it was not valid for more than 21 years without the consent of the Charity Commissioners.

20,172. "Do you know that the lease of "Llyslew was not prepared by Mr. J. W.

Chairman—continued.

" Hughes, of Bangor, the solicitor of the trust, " but by Mr. Picton Jones, who was solicitor to " Mr. John Hughes ?"—This is a copy; it was prepared by Mr. Picton Jones, I believe, for the feoffees. I understood so always. I may say this, that all the trustees signed in the presence of S. E. T. Picton Jones, solicitor, Pwllheli.

20,173. I have a few more questions which I must trouble you with. These questions are by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "You have been " asked whether Mrs. Parry had capital"?—Yes.

20,174. "May I ask whether the incoming " tenant of Llyslew had more capital than Mrs. " Parry or enough to farm the land"?—I do not know what the man had in his pocket, but the common report was that he was not as well off as Mrs. Parry was.

20,175. "You have been asked whether Mrs. " Parry is an invalid and whether she was " unable to manage the farm. Do you know " that Mrs. Parry's only daughter was married " to a young farmer who lived in a neigh- " bouring farm, and that Mrs. Parry's son-in- " law was ready to assist Mrs. Parry in the " management of the farm"?—Yes, I know that.

20,176. "Do you know whether there is any " hesitation on the part of farmers to give " evidence before this Commission"?—A great deal. I could give instances.

20,177. "To what cause do you attribute this hesitation"?—Fear of the agents more than the landlords.

20,178. "In the course of your evidence you " have used the terms 'confiscate' and 'confis- " cation.' What do you mean by those words"? —I mean the appropriation of one person's property for the benefit of another, but I would rather give a legal definition to it—a definition given by Mr. Justice Cave at the Chester Assizes, if I may with your Lordship's permission. This is a case which is reported in a cutting from the "Manchester Guardian" for March the 16th, 1893. It reads thus: "At the Chester " Assizes yesterday Rushford Baldwin, wine and " spirit dealer, Greenhill, Holywell, Flintshire, " sued Henry Clough, the present tenant of the " 'Wynnstay Arms Hotel,' Rhyl, for 144*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, " money due." Then I will not read the whole, but there is a conversation here between the judge, Mr. Justice Cave, and the witness representing the owners. The judge says: "When " the tenant gets up the value of a house, do " you confiscate the additional value of the " property?—Witness: We do. The judge: " Well, it is about the coolest thing I have " heard in my life. I do not wonder landlords " are not popular in Wales if this is the way " they conduct themselves. Are you sure you " are authorised to say this for your principals? " —Witness: Yes; there is no such thing as " goodwill recognised in our firm. The judge: " Then I repeat it is a most disgraceful thing to

" confiscate a man's labour and put the money " into your own pocket.—Witness: We should " never take the house from him so long as he " behaved himself. He could keep the house " for ever. His Lordship, in summing up, said " it was outrageous and monstrous for brewers " to confiscate the value of a tenant's labour, " especially as the brewers themselves were at " present going up and down the country com- " plaining about their own property being con- " fiscated. If there was any confiscation at all, " he would sooner see their property confiscated " by the Government than their tenants' " property confiscated by them. Confiscation " which benefited the public was manifestly " very much better than that which benefited " the brewer."

I entirely agree with that, and I have used the words on the strength of that dictum.

20,179. These questions are also by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "With reference to the Llyslew " case, as to the trustees to whom Llyslew be- " longed at the time of the dispute, are they all " without exception Churchmen"?—Yes.

20,180. "Are they all with one exception Conservatives"?—I believe there is one Liberal amongst them.

20,181. "As to the present trustees, are they " all, without exception, Churchmen and Con- " servatives"?—I do not know who the present trustees are, my Lord.

20,182. "Was Mrs. Parry evicted in the " month of May"?—I could not say that from my own knowledge, but the Under Sheriff is present and he may remember. He put her on a stool very gently in the high road.

20,183. "Did the eviction in May rather than " in November, the ordinary date for the termi- " nation of tenancies, mean a loss to Mrs. Parry " of several hundreds of pounds"?—No doubt.

20,184. "Were there at this time 80 acres " under hay, and did the new tenant obtain all " the crops without any compensation to Mrs. " Parry"?—The new tenant obtained every- thing; not a penny has been paid to Mrs. Parry by the new tenant, trustees, solicitor, agent, or anybody else. They have pocketed all.

20,185. "Did the new tenant get the crops " without the cost of labour or paying rent until " after May"?—As I have said before, my Lord, he got everything. Mrs. Parry was a poor woman, a cripple and homeless.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,186. Just one question. What was the reply that came to the appeal made by the justices and the farmers who sent that petition? —I believe it was treated with contempt—with silent contempt. It was ignored completely. The wishes of everybody were ignored, and the trustees carried out their cruel eviction, in spite of every remonstrance, and in spite of every offer of guarantee, that everything would be done to keep up the value of the farm.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 20,250.

Adjourned to 10.15 o'clock to-morrow.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Llangefni, Anglesey, Thursday, 12th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. EDWIN GROVE.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. THOMAS PRICHARD recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

20,187. You wish to answer Mr. David Owen as to three farms?—I do. First of all I have to ask the question whether the extracts I put in from certain newspapers will appear in the print. 19,478.

20,188. We cannot have cuttings from newspapers in the evidence, but if you wish them to be put in the Appendix, they shall be put in the Appendix?—I do, my Lord.

20,189. It must be distinctly understood that they are all verified?—Yes, they can be verified to-day.

20,190. I take it you produce the originals?—Yes, the originals shall be produced. [The witness handed in the original newspaper cuttings.] There was another question upon which I promised Professor Rhŷs some information. 19,626. He asked me for some particulars about illegitimacy, if you remember, and I have brought them. I have drawn out a short summary, but I think you had better take the book. The summary of it all is this, that the average number of illegitimate births in all England per 1,000 is 48, and in North Wales 69. That is the average from 1879 to 1888, 10 years. In Anglesey in the years 1884 to 1888 the average was 89.

20,191. You cannot give it for the same years, can you?—I only take them from the book.

20,192. You cannot give the 10 years?—No, I cannot. There are only four years; that is the average of Anglesey from 1884 to 1888.

20,193. Can you give the North Wales average for that?—I can give the North Wales average for the 10 years ending 1888. North Wales 69, and South Wales 45. The average for Anglesey 1884 to 1888 is 89; but in 1842, to compare with it (I am not choosing the years, I simply take them out of this book, which you are welcome to have) it was 78, so that there is an increase of 11 per cent. since 1842

Mr. Grove.

20,194. It is not per cent; it is per thousand?—Yes. You do not like newspaper cuttings; but there is a very interesting article, I have cut out of the "Carnarvon and Denbigh Herald," which summarises the whole thing, if you care to have it read, although all the information is in this little book.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,195. What is the title of the book?—It is one of a series: "Illegitimacy and the Influence of Seasons upon Conduct," by Leffingwell.

20,196. When was it published, and where?—It was published in 1892 by Swan, Sonnenschein, & Co., and there are maps in it, showing the country, which are most interesting.

20,197. Do you account to any extent for the illegitimacy by the domestic arrangement of the farmhouses in Anglesey?—I thought at one time that that would account for it; but when you come to compare 1842 with 1888 it quite beats me. The accommodation is much better now than it was then, I take it.

20,198. Do you think that the servants slept in outhouses in 1842?—I do not know, but judging from all I have seen I should say, yes.

20,199. You cannot offer any explanation?—I am afraid there are no end of theories; but the most likely theory is what this man calls ancestral proclivities. He discusses whether it is a question of religion, social condition, wealth, or politics; and a number of points—country and town life, and legislation as to marriage and heredity. It seems to be put altogether.

20,200. I think it is not a question of religion, because immorality is preached against all over the Principality, or used to be, and I should think it is still?—To prove that, I should give the averages for Ireland, where, of course, they are almost all Roman Catholics, or principally only 28 per 1,000, England 46 for one year, 1889, and Scotland 79. The curious part is that when you take the individual years there is very little difference; there is scarcely 1 per 1,000 difference. It seems almost a permanent ratio: Ireland 28, England 46, Scotland 79, that is for the one year 1889.

20,201. The book does not give any of the counties of Scotland?—Yes, it does.

20,202. Aberdeenshire?—Scotland is divided in east and west. There are more on one side of Scotland than the other, according to this man's theory.

20,203. I ask about Aberdeenshire, because I believe there is a custom there of the servants living altogether outside the control of the farmer?—The most are in the southern part of Scotland—about Berwick and the lower part; and Aberdeen.

20,204. That in that map is Galloway?—Yes, that is Galloway, I think.

20,205. Is Galloway one of the west?—It is near Stranraer; and Dumfries I think comes next.

20,206. Aberdeenshire, Banffshire, and Nairn?—Aberdeenshire is very bad, as bad as the southern part.

20,207. I do not like to propound racial theories; but I have one in my mind. I am afraid, however, it would not exculpate the present accommodation of the farmhouses and the domestic arrangements of the homesteads in Wales altogether. I am afraid a great deal must depend on the present arrangements?—You seem to agree with this as to ancestral proclivities—the Picts and the Danes and so forth.

20,208. I did not say that. I do not say it explains it all?—No, not all.

20,209. I am afraid the present domestic arrangements are to some extent responsible for the evil?—In Ireland, Ulster is much worse than any other part.

20,210. Would that seem to indicate that Protestantism is rather favourable to this sort of vice?—No; if you compare it with foreign countries that is not so; England comes about the middle.

Chairman.

20,211. You wish to rebut the evidence as to the case of a change of tenancy on a farm—Treriffri—on the estate that belongs to Sir George Meyrick?—Yes.

See 20,007 and the 3 succeeding witnesses; also 20,758.

20,212. We heard the evidence of Mr. David Owen?—You heard my letter and Mr. Owen's letter read, and that is my case; but I say that you must remember that an old lady, Mr. Richard Owen's mother, was the tenant of the farm. Mr. David Owen and Mr. Richard Owen were brothers. Mr. David Owen, as you know, is a solicitor. The whole thing lies almost in a nutshell. There was a misunderstanding from beginning to end unfortunately. I had better begin at the very beginning. I have my journal and everything here, so that I can prove everything I say. I visited the place on the 18th of August 1881, and made a sketch of the new buildings. On the 27th I was there again, and then came the conversation between Mr.

Chairman—continued.

Richard Owen, who was the son, and myself. Mrs. Owen was very old; I do not know how old she was; she was not going out much at that time. Mr. Richard Owen said they were not in circumstances to put up the buildings on what we call the usual custom of the estate. That was that the landlords should provide all the materials, and the tenant all cartage and pay wages. He asked me whether the landlord would build and they would pay (I have it down here) 5 per cent. on the outlay, and the tenant to do the carting. I asked him whether his mother was of the same opinion, and he said, "Yes." I went into the house and saw the mother, and she said the same. I said: I can-"not do anything to-day; it is contrary to the "custom; I must write to my principal, and "get permission to do it." In the meantime I got a letter, and visited the place again, and told Mr. Richard Owen that Sir George Meyrick would do as he asked. On April 19th the plans were approved by the tenant. I was there with a man who will be called (the clerk of the works), and it was entirely understood, at any rate by me, that the landlord was to do all the work, and he was to pay interest on the whole expenditure, not on the labour only. About that time Mr. Richard Owen and my clerk of works, John Hughes, came to Llanerchymedd, and on the way back there was a conversation between Mr. Richard Owen and Mr. John Hughes. Richard Owen said to John Hughes: "The cost "will not be very much, because I shall only have "to pay interest on the wages." John Hughes told Richard Owen: "No; you are mistaken "there; you will have to pay on the whole ex-"penditure—wages and materials." Richard Owen replied: "That cannot be; I am sure that "is not so;" whereupon John Hughes said: "Yes; "it is certainly so, and as the foundations are "not yet dug, you had better go back to Mr. "Prichard at once and make sure of it." Richard Owen then said: "No, I will not do that; "do not tell Mr. Prichard that I asked you "anything about it." I did not hear any of this conversation until after the unfortunate—well, dispute we will call it, took place. If I had heard of it there and then, things would have been properly understood, and set on a proper footing, but they were not. They cost altogether 599*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* There was a promise, as I said, of a new house which was to cost 400*l.*—it was virtually 1,000*l.* together. The house would have been built but for Mrs. Owen's illness. She died. When the money came to this amount the 5 per cent. would have been 50*l.* I told him it was utterly unreasonable to expect a rise of 50*l.* on 90*l.*, and Sir George Meyrick would be satisfied with the 2 per cent., which made 20*l.*, so as to make what Mr. Owen calls the rent, but what I call interest on expenditure to 90*l.*, and interest 20*l.*, total 110*l.* Mr. Richard Owen paid this sum. Then after that, I forget what year it was exactly, as I have just mislaid my notes, he declined to pay it, and said it was impossible to pay, and he had never intended to pay except the interest on the wages only—that he expected to have all the materials gratis. I told him, "Well, I have "gone out of my way in recommending the "landlord to show you a favour that no other "tenant has ever had scarcely, and you put me "in an awkward position"; and I asked him to think it over. I should say that he refused to pay the 110*l.* on the 18th March 1885. Then on the 31st March 1885, Mr. Richard Owen called again and paid the money, and agreed to take for 110*l.*, and expressed himself satisfied. On the 4th April I saw Mr. David Owen.

20,213. I do not want to interrupt you in any way, but I do not see that there is very much difference between you. The two letters put the case very clearly. Mr. David Owen in his letter of the 20th October 1885, says: "I never "understood the case to stand as you have put "it. There is evidently a clear misunder-"standing between you"; and he says: "Nor "have I the slightest recollection of ever having "asked you to build at your own expense and "charge the interest on the whole outlay." We quite understand there was a misapprehension. I want to ask you this: You do not rebut that a lot of labour and money was spent on this farm?—I rebut the correctness of Mr. David Owen's assertion.

20,214. He says what you say, namely, that you did not understand each other?—Quite so.

20,215. We quite understand you; you think one thing and he thought another?—Yes, but Mr. Richard Owen has paid the rent—he agrees to take and pay the 110*l.*

20,216. That is very likely, but there is no rebutting evidence about the death in 1868 and the advance of 108*l.* per cent. for many years on his own improvements?—No, I do not want to rebut that.

20,217. There is no rebutting evidence against the advance of 260*l.* per cent. during the mother's widowhood?—I did not begin there; that is not the question.

20,218. Really, the rebutting evidence is that you and he had a misunderstanding?—Mr. Richard Owen, the brother, and I understood one another, and Mr. David Owen interfered and did not understand it.

20,219. There was a misunderstanding in this case which I give no opinion about. He had to leave in 1886, as he says, and he considers that a great deal of money has been spent for which no return has been made?—He says I refused to put the rent to arbitration. It was not rent; it was increase of expenditure.

20,220. There was a misunderstanding between you, and you went to law over it?—They sent in a claim for 600*l.*, and they got, as Mr. Owen himself says now, 388*l.*

20,221. I do not think there is much difference between you, except you say you did not understand him and that he did not understand you, and that if there had been an understanding perhaps this unfortunate occurrence would not have happened. Is that what you want to say?—Yes, particularly. Then there was a statement that Mr. Algeo had never walked over the farm. It is very important to me as employing Mr. Algeo, and very important for Mr. Algeo himself, that such a statement should be refuted.

20,222. What do you say about that?—He is here himself and here is the tracing.

20,223. What else is there?—That is all I have to say about that. I would ask to be allowed to call Mr. John Hughes, who had the conversation with Mr. Richard Owen, so as to explain that he had no reason whatever for any misunderstanding, because he told him and referred him to me, to get a more perfect understanding.

Lord Kenyon.

20,224. Who was John Hughes?—He acts as clerk of works, as I call it, so that he was a person in authority.

20,225. He explained the matter to Mr. Owen?—Yes, and asked him to talk to me, and Mr. Owen said, "do not say anything about it; "do not say you mentioned it to me;" well that it looks as if a trap had been set to catch me.

Chairman.

20,226. I do not think we can go into that. You make a statement to the effect that he did not understand you and you did not understand him, and that is the occurrence?—Yes, but I can prove that he did understand me, and that is my point. That is all he has to say. You see my character is at stake; at least I consider so, and it will not take you more than five minutes to hear his evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 20,280.

Mr. JOHN HUGHES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

20,007 above.

20,227. What are you?—A joiner.

20,228. What connection have you with the estate of Sir George Meyrick?—I go to look over the buildings.

20,229. Are you a sort of bailiff?—I draw plans of the buildings and look after the buildings as an architect.

20,230. Have you anything to do with the letting or the value of the estate?—No, nothing, but I go over the buildings when a tenant leaves a farm to see as to the state of repairs.

Chairman—continued.

20,231. Have you ever had any conversation with Richard Owen on the subject of the Treriffri Farm?—Yes, many times. See 20,758.

20,232. Do you remember the proposal to build a new house in April 1882 or 1883?—Yes, the farmyard first of all.

20,233. Had you any conversation with Mr. Richard Owen upon that subject?—Yes.

20,234. What did you say?—I was told by Mr. Thomas Prichard to go there to see about building a farmyard. Mr. Prichard had a paper and pencil in his hand to draw the plan, and after we had commenced Mr. Richard Owen asked Mr. Thomas Prichard if he would build the whole lot and pay the whole expense.

20,235. He said that to Mr. Richard Owen?—Mr. Richard Owen asked that of Mr. Thomas Prichard.

20,236. Did Mr. David Owen ever ask that question?—No, never. I never spoke a word to Mr. David Owen about it.

20,237. It is Mr. Richard Owen; it is nothing to do with Mr. David Owen?—Quite so.

Lord Kenyon.

20,238. Did he say anything about 5 per cent.?—I do not know. Mr. Richard Owen stated that he wanted Sir George Meyrick to build everything and not according to the custom of the estate.

20,239. Did Mr. Richard Owen expect to pay percentage on the whole cost of the outlay, or only on the cost of the labour?—He understood that before putting down the foundations.

20,240. He understood what?—That he would have to pay the interest on everything—on the whole outlay.

20,241. Did he ask you to say nothing about that conversation to Mr. Prichard?—Yes, he did.

Mr. Grove.

20,242. Is it usual in discussing such matters for you to be acquainted with the terms arranged between the landlord and the tenant?—Yes, it is.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,243. How did you know that Mr. Richard Owen knew that he would have to pay 5 per cent.?—I did not know it.

20,244. I thought you said that just now you knew?—I told him that he would have to pay for everything—for the timber, the slates, the lime, and so on.

20,245. That is all you told him?—Well, I did not know how much he would have to pay.

Lord Kenyon.

20,246. Answer this question. Did the tenant expect to have to pay some amount of interest, and did he know what that amount was?—I do not think he knew what rate per cent.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,247. That is not the point; did he know on what he was to pay interest—on how much outlay?—He had not incurred them at that time.

20,248. What I want to know is this: he was to pay interest on the expense of the materials, but did he understand he was to pay interest on any other expense?—Yes, on the whole of the cost of the building.

Lord Kenyon.

20,249. Was the tenant aware that he was to pay interest on the whole amount—outlay, labour, and everything else?—Yes, he was, and that before cutting the foundations.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 20,311.

Chairman.

This is a question from Mr. David Owen—"Will Mr. Prichard produce a letter of the 8th "of January 1886, or will he admit this passage "—'Just one word about the payment of last "'year's rent. You know the trouble we were "'in then, and rather than have any disturb-"'ance we decided to pay what you demanded,

Chairman—continued.

"'but I think my brother told you then that "'he would never pay such rent afterwards.'"

Mr. Thomas Prichard: Yes, that is Mr. David Owen's letter to me; he wrote it I daresay; that is all I admit.

Mr. DAVID OWEN recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 20,211, 20,758.

the custom of the estate to pay for materials, and then there was no necessity to mention it. They provided the materials free of all. Then the whole question was—"Will you also pay for "the labour, and charge interest on the labour." That was the whole substance of the conversation. It would have been ridiculous for anyone to say—"I will pay for the materials," because the materials were always supplied on the estate. That was the custom.

20,251. The whole thing was a misunderstanding?—The whole thing was a misunderstanding. We offered to refer the rent and everything to arbitration. Mr. Prichard said "I will have nothing to do with it; if you do "not pay the rent you must go."

Lord Kenyon.

20,252. Is your brother alive?—Yes, he may be here to-day.

20,253. Can you state whether he can attend to say what conversation he had with Mr. Hughes?—Undoubtedly. I am told he is not coming to-day, but I will wire for him to come.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert Algeo (Surveyor, Menai Bridge) called and examined.

Chairman.

20,254. Do you remember revaluing the farm in question?—Yes.

20,255. Did you or did you not walk over this farm when you made the valuation?—I walked over every field and I have my notes here, and these are original notes on the tracing.

Mr. Griffith.

20,256. Will you give the date when you walked over?—I think it was in 1870; I am not quite sure of the date.

20,257. Can you say the date of the month?—No, unless I had my memorandum book with me.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,258. Did you inspect the buildings;—Yes, I looked at them. They were very dilapidated, very poor buildings, then—old.

20,259. It was nothing more than a glance, I suppose?—I did not take the measurement of them to see what was wanted; they did not look very good.

Mr. Grove.

20,260. Did you pay more than one visit when you made the valuation and inspection of the farm, or did you make it all in one day?—I made it all in one day.

Lord Kenyon.

20,261. Was Mr. David Owen there the day you went over the farm?—I do not remember.

20,262. He says he remembers very well your going. You do not remember him?—I do not remember any of them.

Chairman.

20,263. This is a question by Mr. Vincent—"Will you put in your notes." ?—Yes, [handing].

20,264. Question by Mr. David Owen "How "many farms did you inspect on this one day?—I cannot say, but I know I go to every field when I am making valuations, and carefully make my own notes. You may not understand the figures on that tracing perhaps.

Lord Kenyon.

20,265. These pencil notes were made on the spot during the progress of your valuation?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

20,266. Is it your custom when making a valuation of a farm to have a note-book and to make notes as to each field as you pass over?—I put them generally up on a tracing.

Chairman.

20,267. Question by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Upon what principle do you value a farm"?—It depends a great deal upon the situation and the taxes that are payable and the quality of the ground. You must use your own judgment on all those points.

20,268. Question by Mr. David Owen: "Where did you make the sketch produced?"—I made the tracing in my own office, and the writing I did in the field.

Lord Kenyon.

20,269. The pencil writing?—Yes.

Chairman.

20,270. Question by Mr. Vincent: "Have "you not valued between landlord and tenant "all over the country?"—Well, I have done a great deal.

20,271. "Have you not also done so between "different landlords?"—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

20,272. When you value, do you value the thing as it presents itself to you at the time, without taking into account who has done the improvement on a farm—whether the landlord or the tenant?—I value what I think it will reasonably let at from year to year. I never had instructions from any proprietor to advance rents, but use my own discretion—carte blanche.

Chairman.

20,273. Questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Do you consider one visit to a farm a sufficient "acquaintance with a farm to make a valua-"tion?"—Yes.

20,274. "Has rent been reduced on your "valuation?"—I cannot say much about that. In some places I believe they have. I believe on the Bodorgan estate they have had a discount on my valuation of late years.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,275. That is not the thing; but a reduction in rent?—I do not think any permanent reductions have been made. I have made a valuation for the Marquis of Anglesey, and on other estates.

Chairman.

20,276. Question by Mr. R. H. Williams: "Do you generally, in valuing a farm, ask what "the rent and rateable value are?"—No; I would rather not know the rents.

20,277. Or rateable value?—Nor rateable value. I never inquire.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,278. Do you ever value on behalf of a farmer—a tenant?—Yes I do, often.

Chairman.

20,279. This is Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith's question: "Do you not know what the rent is before "you value?"—I do not. I would rather not know the rent when I have to value property.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Prichard recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 20,006*c*, 20,117.

20,280. Now, let us take Fferam fawr. "In "one case on a change of tenancy of a farm on "a large estate the surveyor of the estate was "instructed to value a stone wall erected by an "outgoing tenant at his own expense to divide "a rabbit-warren from cultivated land. The "surveyor valued it in 1881 at 350*l.*, all of "which the incoming tenant had to pay. The "period of exhaustion was fixed at 15 years. "The new tenant died in 1891, and his children "were turned away in 1892, and lost this 350*l.* "except four fifteenths, equal to 93*l.* By "calculating interest on 350*l.* and deducting "93*l.* from the total, it will be seen that the "sum of 46*l.* was added to the rent for every "year the tenant occupied the farm. This wall "is quite as good to day as it was in 1881." Is there anything you wish to say on that?—Yes; Mr. David Owen calls it confiscation. I call it contract. Whether it is just or not is a different question. The farm was let to Mr. William Roberts.

20,281. I do not think we need really go through that?—I mean to say this, that Mr. Samuel Owen did not build this wall; it was built by a relative of his, and he made a bargain with his relative to take the farm and to pay him compensation, and the original man was to have 21 years—there were so many years expired, and he was to have the rest.

20,282. They say there was only a certain number of years given to the wall. It is as good now as it ever was?—The farm was let below the valuation, to begin with—a considerable amount.

20,283. On account of building the wall?—Yes; improvements. He was to do that and various other things. It was understood he was to do all repairs.

20,284. Was he to build the wall?—He agreed afterwards—after taking. I have not got that in writing, but the agreement came out when Mr. Samuel Owen took the farm. It was put into writing then that he was to have the remainder of the period of exhaustion.

20,285. Mr. David Owen says it was very hard that this wall should only have a certain number of years to pay it over. You say it is a contract; he says it is very hard?—I should have said that I should have let the farm to one of the children, but I could not get them to agree. According to the valuation for the probate, there was only a sum of 515*l.* between five children. They would not partition between themselves. Mr. Samuel Owen had bought a farm for a large sum of money, and everyone knew he had not the means to pay for it. I said I could not allow the Bodorgan Farm to go towards paying for the other in any way; therefore they must keep them separate, and if they divided the money, there would be about 100*l.* each for them, and as there was a rent of 145*l.*, it was quite impossible for a man to farm a farm at a rent of 145*l.*, with 100*l.* to begin with. That is the reason they went out of the farm.

Chairman—continued.

20,286. That is how you rebut the expression "the children were turned away"?—Yes, that is my point.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,287. I think a letter was read from you yesterday to a tenant asking him to attend a political meeting. You remember the letter?—Yes.

20,288. What was the man's name?—The same man, Mr. Samuel Owen.

20,289. The father of these children?—Yes. We had a conversation at a rent dinner. He talked in a peculiar way, as I thought, and I thought he would like to have a public opportunity of expressing his thoughts. He did not, and there was no more heard about it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,290. Have you a copy of the agreement which you have with Mr. Samuel Owen?—Yes; Mr. David Owen has a copy [handed in].

Chairman.

20,291. "Cae Crin. This is a small holding on "the Bodorgan estate. All the buildings and "walls shown in a photograph, to be produced "have been made entirely at the expense of the "tenants according to plans by surveyor to the "estate. Cost about 400*l.* including haulage. "Last year tenant was told to sign agreement "contracting himself out of the benefits of "Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, and the "period of exhaustion fixed by agent. Tenant "has no copy of agreement and does not know "exact contents. He declines to give evidence "as he is afraid of the consequences." What is there you have to say on that?—What I have to say is that the farm has been in the occupation of the family for many years. The old man died, and it was let to Mr. John Hughes (who married the daughter in 1891) at the same rent. The rent was 21*l.*: the valuation in 1871 was 29*l.* They asked to have buildings. I said I would build them buildings. I cannot build everybody buildings in the same year, and I said that I would build them buildings in rotation, and I would build his when the time came. I keep a list, and I get on with them as well as I can, sometimes a large one, sometimes a little one. He said he was in a great hurry and wanted to build at once, and would I secure him the money if he did build. I said I would, and I have had it on my list to pay for whenever there has been any spare money to build. First of all, his own buildings have been erected at his own cost, and I never intended to hold him to that bargain. John Hughes, who is here, drew the plans, and he built the buildings. I forget what they cost now.

20,292. "The outside is 400*l.*" Do you dispute that?—I do not admit that.

20,293. Including the haulage?—I know nothing about the haulage.

20,294. Do you dispute that that would cost 400*l.*, including the haulage?—If you would allow me to look, perhaps I can find it, or if you would call John Hughes, who is here, I think. The man is to have his money as soon as he can get it.

20,295. Was the tenant told to sign an agreement?—He was not told.

20,296. Did he sign an agreement contracting himself out of the benefits of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, he signed an agreement to have a period of compensation, if I do not pay him in full in the meantime. I intend to pay him as soon as I can.

20,297. Is there any agreement contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—There is an agreement handed in.

Lord Kenyon.

20,298. The clause is as follows:—"The "tenant on the determination of the tenancy "shall be entitled to compensation according to "the terms of this agreement only, and all "claims under any custom of the country shall "be deemed to be hereby barred, and the "tenant agrees to indemnify the sureties from "all losses and costs they may suffer as sureties, "and that they may take possession and become "tenants of the holding from the date of their "satisfying the landlord's claim. It is hereby "acknowledged and agreed between the parties "hereto that the tenant has expended in build-"ing on the holding the sum of 133*l.*, and shall "be entitled to a period of compensation of "21 years reckoned from the 13th November "1889, in respect thereof in full for all claims "for compensation, and shall make no claim "for carting."

Chairman.

20,298*a*. That is he signed an agreement contracting himself out of the benefits of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—No. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, says you may make any particular agreement, if I read it aright, although it is a very complicated Act. It is not contracting out of the Act at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,299. You have a scale of compensation in substitution?—Quite so. It is what is called a particular agreement under the Act, section 52. It is not contracting out of the Act at all.

Chairman.

20,300. Has the tenant a copy of the agreement?—He is to have one. I have not got any; they are out of print, as I told you yesterday.

20,301. Then he has no copy?—He has no copy.

20,302. Does he know the exact contents?—No doubt he does; they were explained to him in Welsh by himself.

20,303. That you are certain of?—I can swear to it.

20,304. Of course you could not give an opinion as to whether he declined to give evidence, being afraid of the consequences?—He is not more afraid of me than he is is of you, my Lord—not a bit; we are the greatest friends.

20,305. You are very good friends?—We are very good friends; we always were.

Mr. Grove.

20,306. When you say he understands the provisions of the agreement, you mean, I suppose, that he has to trust to his memory?—Oh, entirely.

20,307. For all that complicated agreement of 30 or 40 long clauses?—Yes, but he has been living under it for so many years.

Lord Kenyon.

20,308. With regard to this scale of 21 years, was that agreed to, by the tenant and yourself as fair?—Yes; but I should tell you this, though it is not down there, it is put down as some sort of security, but I have promised to pay him money down, 133*l.* long ago.

20,309. Has that been paid?—No, it has not been, but as soon as we can get an opportunity he will be paid,—next year, perhaps—but when he does get it, he will get it in full. I have a long list, and we must work the thing systematically. You cannot pay 10,000*l.* in one year. I want to spend 10,000*l.* in buildings, but you cannot do it in one year, and I must cut the coat according to the cloth.

Chairman.

20,310. This is a question by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Is it customary at rent dinners for "the agent to speak on politics to the tenants"?

Chairman—continued.

—It is not, but if the tenants speak about politics to the agent, it would be rude of him not to reply.

Chairman.

Now, I will call Mr. John Hughes, in order that he may say what he estimated the cost of the buildings at.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 20,328.

Mr. JOHN HUGHES recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

20,311. What do you estimate the cost of the buildings on Cae Crin Farm at, including the haulage?—I went there and I saw the bills, and I got the whole of the expenses from the wife. It came to 303*l.*

20,312. Those are the bills?—That is what I got—everything.

20,313. What do you include as the cost of the haulage?—I do not know.

20,314. As a practical man, at what is put the cost of the haulage on building a farm at the expense of 300*l.* for materials?—I cannot say offhand.

20,315. Would it be about 100*l.*?—I cannot say.

20,316. Your practical knowledge would not enable you to say?—No, I should not like to say. There is a difference in places.

20,317. Would you think 100*l.* an excessive price?—I cannot say indeed now.

Mr. Grove.

20,318. Where was the stone brought from with which the building was erected?—All the stones were got on the land.

20,319. On the land itself?—Yes.

20,320. What distance would the average be for collecting the stones, and bringing them to the building?—There was not more than a quarter of a mile.

Mr. Grove—continued.

20,321. Who would take them up and load them into the cart?—I suppose John Hughes, the tenant, did so.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,322. Were the stones got from a quarry on the farm, or were they gathered from the fields?—There is a quarry on the farm.

20,323. They were quarried on the farm?—Yes, as far as I know.

20,324. Are they included in the bills that you have handed in?—There were a number of old stones in the building, and most of the stones were got in that way.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,325. I am not sure whether the witness understood the question; was the hauling included in that 300*l.* odd?—I do not know, but I took the whole of the cost that was given me at the time.

20,326. You do not know whether the hauling was included or not?—No, I cannot say for certain, but I went there to get the bills.

20,327. Do you consider that you are fit to go and see the bills?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Griffiths.

Then you ought to know.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS PRICHARD recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

20,328. What have you further to state?—Might I be allowed to say a word with regard to the gravel that was referred to. I forgot to put it down in the memorandum.

See 18,839, 18,926, 18,932–41, 20,006, 20,092, 27,956.

question was tried simply not to prevent people exercising their proper rights, but to find out what those rights were. Mr. Owen Williams proved his case, not by custom of any manor, but by prescription belonging to that particular house, and that is what the county court judge's decision was. He said, as will be seen in the judgment that has been handed in, that it did not refer to any ship or house, except the one as to which it was proved. I and Lady Neave's agent simply wanted to free ourselves of responsibility in the matter, and we simply paid the costs. It was his own solicitor's fault if he had to pay any. That is all I know.

Chairman.

The Commissioners express a strong recommendation that agreements should in all cases be printed in Welsh, and copies given to the tenants, and that these copies should be invariably given in all cases when the agreements are signed. Will the interpreter state that also in the Welsh language.

[The interpreter made the announcement in Welsh as directed.]

The Witness.

May I ask one question, my Lord. I am sure that all the agents will very much like to do anything that you recommend, but if there is any dispute about the construction of the words, may something be put in, as there was, I believe, in the treaty in Siam the other day, that if there is any dispute the English copy is the legal one.

Chairman.

20,330. That we will consider in the report. We pledge ourselves to nothing?—I am simply asking you to kindly consider it if you will, because I know there have been great disputes with regard to the meaning of a little Welsh word.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,331. I do not think we have ruled against you?—No.

Chairman.

20,332. I simply say that we pledge ourselves to nothing?—I would not have the impertinence to ask you to pledge yourself, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 21,257.

Mr. RICHARD HUGHES PRITCHARD called and examined.

Chairman.

20,333. I understand that the Llyslew case has been tried in a Court of law?—It has, my Lord.

20,334. We cannot go into the merits of the case, but is there anything in this statement that you wish to rebut?—In Mr. Owen's statement?

20,335. Yes?—A great deal.

20,336. Will you be kind enough to confine yourself, not to the general case, but to pointing out anything, that you say is incorrect in his statement. We do not mean to go into the merits of the case. The case has been decided?—I submit Mr. David Owen has gone into the merits of the case, and it would be perfectly impossible for me in replying to him to confine myself entirely simply to rebutting certain small portions of what he has said. He has introduced a vast amount of prejudice into this case. Besides making mis-statements, he has made statements which are partially true and partially untrue, and I claim on behalf of the trustees the right of replying generally, and of stating the case from their point of view. I do not wish your Lordship and the Commissioners to try the case, but I do ask that I should be permitted on behalf of the trustees to make a general statement, showing their position and the reasons which induced them to take proceedings against Mrs. Parry. Mr. David Owen has put this case before you as a case in which landlords have exercised the rights which the law gives them of entering into possession of tenant's improvements. Now it is perfectly obvious that a body of trustees like these gentlemen, to whom Mrs. Parry was a perfect stranger, could have absolutely no reason whatever for taking possession of her improvements. It was nothing to them, as they were merely trustees of a Charity, acting under the direct sanction and authority of the Charity Commissioners for Wales and they could have no interest.

20,337. Is there any interest alleged on their part?—Mr. David Owen alleged it directly. He said at the beginning of his evidence, "In order "to illustrate the present unsatisfactory state "of the law of landlord and tenant, I will refer "to a few cases where the landlords have taken "undoubted advantage of their powers, and "raised their rents on improvements executed "by their tenants, and thereby confiscated "property which ought to have belonged to the "tenant." Then he goes on to say, as an illustration of this alleged confiscation, that he will take the notorious case of Llyslew, and he proceeds thereupon to allege in general terms that the trustees of Llyslew have confiscated, of their capricious will, certain improvements.

Chairman.

20,339. You must not make that statement. You have made a statement that it was prepared by Mr. David Owen, and as you have said it, leave it as it is, and we will call Mr. Owen to say whether it was or not?—I will put my statement in this form, that Mr. Owen prepared the assignment, and if he did not, I apologise.

20,340. You have said that he prepared it. We will ask whether he did or whether he did not. Please go on?—Will you allow me to point out at all events that it was executed in the presence of——

Chairman.

Never mind how it was executed. We will go into that afterwards. Please go on with the case.

Lord Kenyon.

Mr. Hughes was insolvent at any rate.

Chairman.

20,341. Mr. Hughes was insolvent. We have got as far as that?—Then I will admit at once that Mr. John Hughes did hold a lease, that is, he obtained a lease which was afterwards set aside. It was prepared under very peculiar circumstances. There was a slight difference of opinion between the trustees, but the majority of them undoubtedly signed a lease to him for 45 years.

20,342. It was illegal?—It was clearly illegal at the time. It was prepared not by the solicitor to the trustees, as Mr. David Owen alleged; it was prepared by Mr. Picton Jones, who was the private solicitor of the late Lord Newborough, who was the chairman of the trustees, and he was also acting on behalf of Mr. John Hughes. The illegality of the lease was pointed out. Correspondence took place between the trustees of the charity and the Charity Commissioners. There was a meeting between the late Lord Penrhyn and Mr. Picton Jones as to the lease, and Mr. Picton Jones then wrote a letter, of which I have a copy, to Lord Penrhyn, in which he sets out the circumstances. Lord Penrhyn was present at the meeting, although he executed the lease; it was sent to him by Mr. Picton Jones, and thinking it was all right he executed it The lease commenced, I may say, on the 25th of March, but the letter was dated the 15th March. On the 15th of March 1872, Mr. Picton Jones, after his interview with Lord Penrhyn, writes from London:—

"My Lord,

"Llyslew,

"Herewith I beg to send your Lordship the following herein, viz.:—

"1. Copy application to the trustees.

"2. Copy resolution from minutes.

"3. Copy of letter from Mr. Bulkeley Hughes to secretary of the trust.

"4. Copy section of Act of Parliament quoted.

"5. Counterpart lease as drawn by me, strictly in accordance with the instructions of the trustees, looked over, approved of by Lord Newborough.

"Your Lordship will please remember that I was not solicitor to the trust, but solicitor for the applicant, and although I did not expect it, I was asked to draw the lease in question.

"The only point upon which I was consulted was as to whether the trustees had the power to grant the lease, and the answer I gave to that was, that they could do so, for a reasonable term." He then explains how it was that he was not very conversant with trusts, and had not noticed that they could not grant this lease. He goes on: "But whatever has "happened (as I told your Lordship on the "platform yesterday) shall not be a source of "any trouble whatever to your Lordship, or to "the other trustees, as my client looks upon the "lease as entirely null and void." That was written on behalf of Mr. John Hughes; he says that, before the term of the lease actually commenced.

Now, I should like to point out another point, namely, that under the lease Mr. John Hughes covenanted to spend a further sum of 1,020*l.* The main things that he had done on this farm previous to that were draining and walling. It is rather difficult to tell at this distance of time—Mr. Hughes being dead—whether he did spend any more money in draining and walling after the signing of the lease; but there were some buildings that he covenanted to erect for 500*l.*, and a tank for containing manure for 20*l.*, which he certainly did not do. The inference is that Mr. John Hughes did not spend any more money than the money he had already expended without any consent on the part of the trustees, or any application to the trustees. When Mr. Hughes died, negotiations were at the time pending between the trustees of the charity and the Charity Commissioners for the sale of the farm. A question had arisen whether it was desirable to sell the farm or not, in the interests of the Charity, and it was therefore felt that this was a favourable opportunity, Mr. Hughes having died, for determining the tenancy, and Mrs. Parry was informed that the tenancy would probably have to come to an end. No question was raised by Mrs. Parry at the time about the lease; not a word was said about it, but she entered into an agreement with the trustees for a year's tenancy certain. She received notice to quit on the 12th of November 1887, and on the 19th of June 1888 she assigned all the stock and everything on the farm to Mr. Hugh Williams for the benefit of creditors—John Hughes having died in 1886.

20,343. Before we go further than that, I will ask you, did deputations of leading agriculturists, justices of the peace, and others, wait upon the different trustees to plead for her, and were leading farmers in the country prepared to guarantee the rent and the proper management of the farm. That is what Mr. David Owen said?—I cannot tell as to that. I believe that there were deputations, but I have no particulars.—As solicitor, that would not come within the scope of my knowledge at all. I am not the agent.

20,344. You are not prepared to contradict that?—No. If Mr. Owen says so, I believe it is so. I believe that a deputation did wait—one deputation at all events. I have no knowledge of how many.

20,345. But you are not prepared to contradict the statement that the rent was guaranteed by leading farmers? — No, I do not know whether it was or not. There was a feeling among the trustees, I know, that Mrs. Parry, being a woman and a cripple, was not a desirable tenant. She was a cripple and also—although she had certainly been born at Llyslew—she had lived all her life, or nearly all her life, in Manchester, and was not a desirable tenant to have this farm, especially as Mr. Hughes's circumstances were bad.

20,346. I want to ask you one more question: how did it end?—It ended by a claim being put in on the 11th September 1888, for compensation by Mrs. Parry amounting to 2,614*l*. That claim the trustees were quite prepared to arbitrate upon, and on the 7th November 1888, in order that there might have been a proper valuation, the agent wrote to Mrs. Parry intimating to her that the trustees would allow her to remain for one year certain, which would bring her up to the 12th November 1889. That was done, there not being any idea of harshness, in order to enable Mrs. Parry to get rid of her stock to advantage, and so on, and on the 9th November 1888, Mrs. Parry wrote thanking the trustees for their kindness in the matter. Then on the 30th of November I prepared a tenancy agreement for a year certain, and sent it to Mrs. Parry, and the last clause in that tenancy agreement—Mrs. Parry was not, so far as I knew, at that time represented by anybody—distinctly stipulates that this agreement shall not prejudice any claim for permanent improvements which Mrs. Parry may have in respect either of herself or the late John Hughes. Mrs. Parry kept the agreement for some time, but I need not trouble you with that. On the 13th of February that agreement was returned to me signed and witnessed by Mr. Williams, of Gwydryn, who I believe has been referred to, and was one of her valuers. On the 25th of April the trustees appointed Mr. W. A. Dew, of Bangor, to value the improvements, and meet any valuer that Mrs. Parry might appoint. On the 11th of July 1889, Mrs. Parry appointed Mr. Hugh Williams as her referee, and Mr. Williams called upon me very frequently. I never could make out quite what he wanted, but he used to come to me and talk, and he used to call upon Mr. Dew, but we never could get him to appoint an umpire. Ultimately Mr. Hugh Williams refused to act, and he told me, in my own office, that his reason was that he did not feel that he was quite strong enough to meet Mr. Dew, Mr. Dew being a professional man, and he being only a farmer. On the 15th of October 1889 (you will observe the tenancy was then getting to an end), Mrs. Parry appointed Mr. Thomas Owen, of Penmynydd, a very well-known gentleman, who died shortly after. Mrs. Parry neglected altogether, and declined altogether, so far as I know—at all events she neglected—to appoint another referee. We have written to her repeatedly, asking her for the appointment of this referee, and Mr. Dew has written. Then some time in November, when the tenancy came to an end, Mrs. Parry wanted further time; she had not sold her stock, and had taken no steps whatever towards giving up possession as desired. I sent out a clerk offering to allow her to remain in for some little time longer in order that she might get rid of her stock, that is, if she would undertake to deliver up possession, and I sent a written form of undertaking for her to sign, but she declined to sign it. Then that naturally brought the matter to an issue. I had to take the instructions of the trustees, and I was instructed to proceed. Thereupon, before doing anything further, I wrote to Mrs. Parry on the 2nd December 1889, a letter which I should like to read to your Lordship, to show that her position was pointed out fully to her at the time. The letter is as follows: "Dear "Madam,—We have been instructed by the "trustees of Bottwnog School to take the "necessary steps to obtain possession of Llyslew "for the new tenant to whom they are bound." They had absolutely let the farm, and the man was in my office every market day for a year and a half, wanting to know when he could get possession. He was absolutely out of possession, and had his stock on his hands, and had absolutely to sell his stock in consequence of these delays. The letter continues: "We "regret your attitude in the matter, and we "must say we think you must be badly advised. "The trustees have always been willing to meet "your claim for permanent improvements in a "fair and friendly spirit as their instructions to "their referee would prove. We must, how-"ever, point out to you that a wrongful holding "over, which yours clearly is, may, according "to a recent decision, entirely deprive you of "any claim whatever." A case had been tried recently, and that was what I alluded to there, in the county court, in which it was held that a tenant wrongfully holding over had ceased to be a tenant, and therefore had no claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act at all, and that is what I meant to point out to her. "We "venture to hope that you may reconsider the "matter. If, however, you do not see your "way to do this, perhaps you will be good "enough to refer us to your solicitors, and "instruct them to accept service of process." Then, of course, the writ was issued, and delay was again the order. In reply to that writ I received a letter from Messrs. Cemlyn Jones and Thomas, of Bangor, stating that Mrs. Parry had consulted them, and asking for a few days to consider her position. In reply to that I wrote: "Dear Sirs,—We are glad that Mrs. Parry," &c. [the witness read the letter]. We did not press the action unduly, in fact it did not come on for trial, although the writ was issued on the 24th February 1890 until April 1891, so that your Lordship will see there was no undue haste. Mrs. Parry meanwhile remained in possession. We had an immense number of witnesses, as Mr. Owen stated, but perhaps I need not go into that. Ultimately possession was received.

Chairman.

20,347. How was possession received—by an action of ejectment?—By an action of ejectment. We failed entirely to get Mrs. Parry out. She refused to go, and at one time I was informed that resistance would be threatened, and the whole place barricaded.

20,348. Was Mrs. Parry removed from the farm by an action of ejectment?—Undoubtedly, and judgment was recovered.

20,349. And was she placed on a stool in the middle of the high road?—I have no idea. I simply handed the writ to the under sheriff to do his duty.

20,350. Have you any idea what happened at the time?—I was not present, and I know nothing about that. I handed the writ to the sheriff, and possession was delivered in due course. I believe the under sheriff is in Court.

20,351. Mr. David Owen says: "With the "assistance of the sheriff of the county, the "only sister of the man who had spent all his "substance in improving the farm was evicted "and placed on a stool in the middle of the high "road, a cripple and homeless"?—That is not a fair way of putting it. The gentleman did not spend all his substance in improving the farm at all. He had lost his money, undoubtedly, mainly by taking lands at high prices. For instance he took the Castle Meadow at Beaumaris at a rental of 6*l.* an acre, which was ridiculous, and it was notorious that he lost money over that. He also started sales of fat stock at Menai Bridge, and lost money there. It was notorious in the country.

20,352. What compensation was paid to Mrs. Parry?—None whatever was paid, but as I pointed out, it had been decided in a court of law to the effect that she having held over wrongfully, could claim nothing. The trustees could not, even with the consent of the Charity Commissioners, I take it, allow her anything—it would be an illegal claim—although a private owner might do it.

20,353. According to the present law the trustees and the Charity Commissioners were unable to give Mrs. Parry anything for the money that had been spent on the farm?—Certainly, in my opinion.

20,354. Under those circumstances there was an action for ejectment, which was acted upon by the sheriff, and she was evicted from the farm, and she received no compensation whatever?—No; having wrongfully held over, I do not think she could.

20,355. That is according to the law of the land?—In my opinion; of course I may be wrong. It was only a county court decision, the County Court Judge might be over-ruled, of course.

Lord Kenyon.

20,356. What was Mr. Dew's valuation?—Mr. Dew's valuation for the purposes of the trial was 850*l.* I may say that was corroborated by several other competent gentlemen. They varied a little, but Mr. John Pritchard, another auctioneer, valued at about Mr. Dew's figures. Mr. Gardner, Mr. William Brocklebank, and Mr. W. E. Jones, county surveyor, and Mr. Thomas Roberts, of Aber, who are large tenant farmers, and who went over the thing carefully, have valued at about the same figures.

20,357. If Mrs. Parry had had her own valuer and had come to terms, she would have had 850*l.* at least?—Undoubtedly, but as against that, I must point out that the costs of the action were taxed at 800*l.*—the solicitor's and witnesses costs and so on, were absolutely taxed as between solicitor and client.

20,358. If she had acted in the usual way and submitted to arbitration, she would have had that?—She would have had it; and if Mrs. Parry had been well advised, and not got into resistance, she would undoubtedly have received the benefit of the money. I would further point out that, according to Mr. David Owen's own statement, the creditors, managing the farm by a committee, actually made a profit in one year of 700*l.*, so that in taking the figures, estimating that 18 years before Mr. John Hughes had spent, as he alleged he had spent, 1,600*l.* odd, he could not, having held the farm over 18 years, if the farm was capable of making a profit of 700*l.* a year, have spent all his substance in Llyslew. One further remark I should like to make, if I am not detaining the Commission, and that is that I say the trustees were very anxious, during the whole of this time, to meet Mrs. Parry in any fair way; but during the whole time that the matter was pending, there were the most violent and abusive articles appearing in certain portions of the Welsh and English press in the Principality, abusing the trustees as thieves and robbers, and so on, and I cannot help thinking that if those articles had not been published, it would have been probably more easy to arrive at an amicable conclusion.

20,359. I should like to ask you a question upon that, because these gentlemen are of the highest honour among people that I know; do you mean to say that on account of these unfair attacks that were made in the papers, these honourable gentlemen acted in that way?—No.

20,360. Then what do you mean?—What I mean to say is this, that I cannot help thinking that they produced an effect upon Mrs. Parry in inciting her.

20,361. I beg your pardon; you said they had an effect upon the trustees, as I understood you Will the shorthand writer read the answer with regard to that? (The evidence was read.)—What I meant to say was that I thought these local papers had an effect upon Mrs. Parry's advisers in encouraging them not to give up possession, when they were clearly and legally bound to do so.

20,362. That is the interpretation you put upon that?—That is what I mean.

Mr. Grove.

20,363. I suppose some of these trustees may be called resident, and some non-resident?—You see the farm is in Anglesey, while the charity is at Bottwnog, near Pwllheli. Several of the trustees reside down there.

20,364. In your letter to Mrs. Parry, you said that you had received the instructions of the trustees to act?—Yes.

20,365. By what means were the trustees called together; and did they meet and consider this question in all its bearings?—No doubt. I think they had a meeting at Carnarvon, before I was instructed.

20,366. So far as you know, the full circumstances of the case would be laid before the trustees before they would give those instructions?—Undoubtedly.

Lord Kenyon.

20,367. It is a grammar school trust?—Yes, it is a grammar school trust.

Chairman.

20,368. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent: "You do not deny, of course, that if Mrs. Parry had not refused to give up possession she could have been compensated by the trustees?"—No doubt. We were prepared, and we actually appointed Mr. Dew to value the improvements. That was the intention of the appointment. They were appointed in writing. Mr. Dew was appointed by the trustees; and then Mr. Williams was appointed first, and afterwards Mr. Thomas Owen, by Mrs. Parry, but we could never get a referee appointed.

20,369. "May I take it that you refer the "misfortunes of Mrs. Parry principally to the "fact that she was misled as to her rights?"—Undoubtedly.

20,370. "In other words, was she advised "that she was entitled to retain possession?"—Of course I cannot tell what she was advised, but I presume she must have been so advised, or she would have given up possession.

20,371. Did the Court decide that she was not so entitled?—Yes, and I should like to explain with regard to that, as I say the costs came to about 800*l.*, and there was 100*l.* rent awarded by the judge. We have never received the 100*l.* and never applied for it, and we have never received any costs. So that the charity loses to the extent of about 900*l.*

20,372. "Did she, as usual, have to pay for the mistake made by her advisers?" Is that "legal" advisers, Mr. Vincent?—[Mr. Vincent: I do not like to put it too definitely.] "Did "she, as usual, have to pay for the mistake "made by her advisers?"—Undoubtedly. I take it so; that is my view of it. If she had been differently advised she would have got compensation.

Chairman—continued.

20,373. The following questions are by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith:—"Have the trustees refused "to remit to Mrs. Parry the income tax from "1887 to 1891?"—I do not know whether they have ever been applied to for it. I have never been applied to for it.

20,374. "Have the trustees ever offered any "compensation to Mrs. Parry?"—No, they have not. As I say, I am very doubtful whether the trustees have power to offer any compensation. They certainly could not offer her anything, without the consent of the Commissioners.

20,375. "You have referred to the insolvency "of John Hughes. You now state that his "estate was entitled to 850*l.* for compensation. "If this 850*l.* were added to John Hughes' "estate, do you say he would have died insolvent?"—From what I can imagine, I think he would have. I was talking to one of his creditors—a large creditor, I believe—yesterday, and he informed me that at the time the committee, of whom he was one, took possession of the farm and worked it, he did not consider Mr. Hughes' estate would have paid 5*s.* in the pound. They paid a dividend, after working the farm, of 18*s.*, and I doubt whether the 850*l.* would have made up the difference.

20,376. So that he would have have died insolvent, if he had had that 850*l.*?—Clearly, to my mind. I have not got the figures, of course as I was not a creditor.

20,377. "Did you and the agent call at "Llyslew to see Mrs. Parry?"—Yes, we did.

20,378. "On one such occasion did you tell "Mrs. Parry that if she signed the yearly "agreement she would enhance her chance of "having the first opportunity of getting the "farm permanently?"—No, I think not.

20,379. Did you have any such conversation?—I think not. If Mrs. Parry says that the agent says so, I will not say that he did not. I would certainly not have said so myself, because I was merely the solicitor, and most of the trustees were not personally very well known to me.

20,380. "Can you give the exact date when "you let the farm to the present tenant?"—No, that would be done through the agent, and not through me.

20,381. "Can you give the exact date when you informed Mrs. Parry that the farm had been let to another tenant?"—I do not imagine that I informed her at all. I expect that was done by the agent.

20,382. You think that was done by the agent?—I do not think it would be done through me, because the first thing I would have to do, would be to serve her with notice to quit.

20,383. "Who offered arbitration to Mrs. Parry?"—I do not know that anybody offered arbitration to her. It was arranged between her and the agent, in some way or other, that there should be arbitration, and the arbitrators were appointed. On the 26th April 1889 I wrote to her: "Dear Madam,—We beg to send you a "formal appointment of Mr. Hugh Williams

Chairman—continued.

" for signature by you as requested by Mr. R. " O. Jones Pwllheli." He is the agent; so that I presume, at some time prior to that date, Mr. Jones and Mrs. Parry had mutually arranged to arbitrate, and that she had nominated Mr. Williams.

20,384. " When did she refuse arbitration ?" —I do yot know that she ever did definitely refuse. She simply did not, or would not, nominate an arbitrator. She neglected to.

Lord Kenyon.

20,385. Did she not nominate two, and one refused, and the other died and then she never nominated another ? — She never nominated another.

Chairman.

20,386. The following question is by Mr. David Owen: " Mr. Pritchard stated that the " agreement was signed by Mrs. Parry on the " 11th February 1889. He also stated that the " new tenant was in and out of his office for a " year and a half asking for possession. Are " we to understand that John Evans had taken " the farm when Mrs. Parry signed the agree- " ment ? "—No, I take it not—clearly not.

Mr. Grove.

20,387. I think you said that it is very doubtful whether the trustees had legal power to give this compensation to Mrs. Parry ?—It was held so by the County Court Judge for this district. There was an action tried between, I think, Lady Reade and a gentleman called Turner.

20,388. You also said that they certainly could not do it without the consent of the Charity Commissioners ?—Obviously.

20,389. Was that consent ever asked for ?—I do not think Mrs. Parry made any application to the trustees about it after the action.

Chairman.

20,390. There is one more question which I want to be perfectly sure about; all the compensation was 850*l.*, was it not ?—According to our valuers.

20,391. According to your valuation ?—Yes, and they were instructed to value liberally. Those were my instructions to them.

20,392. 850*l.* was the amount to be given to this lady ?—Yes.

20,393. The legal expenses came to 800*l.* ?— They came to 800*l.*—within a little of 800*l.*

20,394. The legal expenses to settle that important business came to 800*l.* ?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

20,395. Not of the arbitration, surely ?—No, that was for the whole of the action, everything connected with the action—the whole bill of costs.

20,396. That would be quite subsequent to the valuation, surely ?—The valuation was never made. Which valuation do you mean ?

20,397. Those legal expenses would never have occurred had she accepted Mr. Dew's valuation ?—No, clearly not.

20,398. It is quite understood that the expenses of this case were 800*l.*—the lawyer's expenses ?—And the witnesses and counsel and everything came to 800*l.* My part of those expenses was——

20,399. One moment; and the widow had to pay that 800*l.*, she was responsible for the 800*l.* ? —No, my Lord, she would not be responsible for the whole of it, because those were costs to the trustees. Of course, as you know, there are two methods of taxing; there is taxing between party and party, and there is taxing between solicitor and client. Those are the actual costs incurred by the trustees as between solicitor and client. A good deal would have been taxed off, as between party and party.

20,400. What was she practically responsible for ?—Those costs have never been taxed.

20,401. But without being taxed, what were the costs sent in by the lawyers upon that transaction ?—I could not tell you until they are taxed.

20,402. But you said the costs are 800*l.* Is that so or not ?—That is so.

20,403. And she would have been responsible for those costs ?—No. I will explain it if I can. The costs were taxed by direction of the Charity Commissioners as between the trustees and myself as representing the witnesses and counsel and all, and they were taxed as against the trustees—as against the Charity—at 800*l.*, which was the amount they had to pay. But suppose the costs had been sent in as against Mrs. Parry, a different principle would have been applied; Mr. Parry's solicitor would have appeared, and undoubtedly a large proportion of the costs would have been struck off against Mrs. Parry, and she would not have been responsible for so much. But the costs have never been taxed against Mrs. Parry, because we felt it was hopeless to tax them, and the cost of doing that would have been simply thrown away.

20,404. Then somebody has paid that 800*l.* ? —Well, it has not all been paid yet, but some of it has been paid.

20,405. That is all the Commissioners wanted to know; there was 800*l.* to pay and 100*l.* for rent ?—Yes.

20,406. That is quite enough. The following question is handed in by Mr. David Owen: " What about the manure, seeding, ploughing " and hay valued at over 300*l.*" ?—That was kept by the trustees. The trustees had that. It was not over 300*l.* It was 250*l.*; Mr. Owen is wrong.

20,407. It was 250*l.*, you say ?—Yes, it was 250*l.*

20,408. Then the trustees had that as well ?— Yes, the trustees had that from the incoming tenant.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,409. Did the incoming tenant pay 250*l.* for that manure ?—For the tillages. I do not know what was included in the valuation. It was valued by Mr. Dew, and he valued the ordinary tillages, and so on.

20,410. The incoming tenant paid for it?—The incoming tenant paid for it.

20,411. Did this man really take that?—I do not know what he took. He sent me a cheque for 250*l.*

20,412. Would that be included in the 850*l.*?—Oh, no. That would be outside it.

Mr. Griffith.

20,413. Is it not a fact that Mrs. Parry offered the same rent of 220*l.* for this farm as the present tenant pays?—I believe Mrs. Parry was willing to take the farm at that rent, but the trustees were of opinion that Mrs. Parry was not sufficiently capable to manage the farm—that she was not a desirable tenant.

20,414. Had Mrs. Parry a son-in-law?—She had not at that time. Her daughter was not married until some time after, I believe. Certainly Miss Parry was unmarried every time I was at the farm. I was there, I think, twice, and she was unmarried then.

Chairman.

20,415. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Did the 18 months you "spoke of consist partly of the period of the "litigation?"—Yes, it would be so.

20,416. "How long after the agreement was "signed, was the writ issued?"—The agreement was signed on the 12th of February 1889 for a year certain, to terminate on the 12th of November of that year. The tenancy expired in November 1889, and the writ was issued on the 24th of February 1890, three months and a half after the date of the expiration.

20,417. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Did Mr. Gardner, "one of your valuers, value the improvements "at 1,200*l.*?"—Mr. Gardner's valuation—he was here yesterday——

20,418. Was it 800*l.* or 1,200*l.*?—I think his valuation was about 860*l.* I had his valuation here yesterday, but unfortunately I lent it to him and he has got it in his pocket, I suppose. He could have substantiated his valuation.

Chairman—continued.

20,419. "Have you settled your accounts with "Mrs. Parry?" Has there been any settlement?—I have no accounts to settle with her. I should like to explain that. The trustees are entitled, and have been, I take it, ever since the termination of the trial, to tax their costs and proceed against Mrs. Parry for those costs. I take it that against those they would have to set in common fairness the 250*l.* that they received for the tillages, but the costs as taxed would undoubtedly far exceed 250*l.* There is no doubt about that.

20,420. The costs then would be 300*l.*, would they not; 850*l.* and 250*l.* make 1,100*l.* Then suppose you put 800*l.* against it, that would leave 300*l.* There is the rent not received, I understand?—Yes.

20,421. Then that leaves 200*l.*?—Yes. Then, as I said before, I doubt whether the trustees have any power to allow that valuation, Mrs. Parry having held over.

20,422. What I was going to say is this: Practically the trustees have got 200*l.* to their credit?—Yes.

20,423. They have not lost on the whole transaction?—Well, they have to raise the money on mortgage. I suppose it is to be put in that way.

Chairman.

20,424. "Does she know the amount of legal "expenses incurred in the law suit?"—No, I do not know that she does.

20,425. You cannot say?—No.

20,426. "Have you communicated with her "to this day?"—I have nothing to communicate, my Lord; I am sure that if Mrs. Parry applied to the trustees even now, they would be quite willing to do anything they could, with the consent of the Charity Commissioners. But I do not think they can do anything without the consent of the Charity Commissioners.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. GRIFFITH JONES ROBERTS called and examined.

Chairman.

See 19,304. 20,427. Are you the landlord referred to in the evidence given by Mr. John Williams on Tuesday last?—I am.

20,428. Mr. John Williams said: "The land-"lord positively declined to grant any reduc-"tion, and I gave notice that I would therefore "quit the farm. In a few months afterwards "the landlord let the farm to another tenant at "50*l.* a year less than I paid. He asked from "me 10*l.* compensation, as he said I was leaving "the farm in a bad condition. My neighbours "will testify that I greatly improved the hold-"ing." Is that what you wish to speak of?—It is.

Chairman—continued.

20,429. Will you read your statement?—"Re-"butting evidence to the statements made by "John Williams, Trergofisa, at Llangefni, "October 10th 1893, respecting Cromlech, a "farm of about 160 acres. He quite misled "the Commission by stating without any quali-"fication that the farm was bought by me for "1,600*l.* The facts are, that I bought the "reversionary interest in the farm from the "lady next in title, with possession of the farm. "The one who had the life interest in the farm "was only 40 years of age, and apparently in "good health. This explains the low figure at "which I bought the reversion, which was not

" 1,600*l.*, but 1,700*l.* The market value of the " freehold at the time would be about 5,000*l.* " As to refusing to reduce his rent, the reason " was that he was not a practical farmer, having " spent the greater portion of his life as a shop- " keeper, and had made no secret of his in- " tention of giving up the farm, and that he " intended building a house and shop and " carrying on business as flour dealer, &c. in the " neighbourhood, which he did, when he asked " for a reduction, which he said must be a sub- " stantial one, otherwise he would give up the " farm, and keep a shop. Ten pounds may " have been asked towards dilapidations, as the " farm had been much neglected, but I have no " recollection of having claimed this "—in fact, I paid it myself. " If he had been a good " tenant, and had understood his business as a " farmer, I should have granted the same " reduction to him as I did to the present tenant, " which was a permanent reduction of 20*l.* a " year. I spent 150*l.* in draining, walling, &c., " during the first three years, without charging " interest on the outlay, and I have given " liberal abatements during bad years besides. " I am almost sure I never got any application " for improvements, for, being a practical farmer, " I could not see any, but quite the reverse. He " never presented me with any list of the " kind." I think it is necessary to say that I wrote that evidence from memory yesterday. After going home I came across a list which he sent in for compensation for fixtures, which amounted to 14*l.* 19*s.* 0*d.* I hand in that list also. That is in the tenant's handwriting:—

" Fixtures left at Cromlech.

20,430. That was paid?—That was paid, I believe by the incoming tenant. The 10*l.* dilapidation, that is for repairs, I paid myself to the incoming tenant, towards putting the roof of the buildings in proper repair.

20,431. Was this 14*l.* 19*s.* 0*d.* paid by yourself or by the incoming tenant?—That was paid by the incoming tenant, but I refunded him afterwards 10*l.*

20,432. Mr. John Williams says the reduction on the farm was 50*l.*, to the new tenant; you say it was 20*l.*?—What he said in his evidence, which amounts to the same thing, was this. He said 50*l.* was reduced for five years——

Chairman—continued.

20,433. He says, "A few months afterwards " the landlord let the farm to another tenant at " 50*l.* a year less than I paid." Is that so or not?—50*l.* a year less than what he paid; it was so; but 20*l.* was the reduction in the rent; the remainder was paid every year towards drainage. If you will allow me I will read from my diary the letting. This was on September 30th, 1879, when I let Cromlech to the present tenant: " Went to Cromlech; let " the farm to Henry Williams for 150*l.*;" the former rent that he had always paid was 170*l.*

20,434. That is 20*l.* a year less?—20*l.* a year less; " and 30*l.* a year extra for five years " towards draining, and walling, and other " things. I also paid 10*l.* for repairing the " buildings."

20,435. Then he might have misunderstood that. It was 20*l.* and 30*l.* making 50*l.*?—Yes, it would come to the same thing.

20,436. It would come to 50*l.* a year less?—Yes; but the reduction in the rent of the farms was 20*l.* a year; the remainder was granted for draining and walling done by the tenant.

20,437. The tenant had to spend 30*l.* a year on draining, walling, and so on?—Yes. I should also refer to my diary, when I first went over to Cromlech after it came into my possession; that was on January 19th, 1877:— " Walked over the farm of Cromlech and from " Cebberdd; promised Mr. Williams, Cromlech" (that is the tenant there at that time) " that if " he would raise the stones, and cart them, I " would pay for the making of the walls, and " also allow pipes for draining if he would raise " stones and cart them "——

20,438. I am sorry to interrupt you, but I think we quite understand that. He thought that 30*l.* and 20*l.* made up the reduction in the rent; you say it did not. It was 20*l.* reduction only?—Yes. I have also told you that it was a reversion. I would just like to read these few notes——

20,439. What does this rebut?—He makes you believe that it was 1,600*l.* for the farm. " Bought Cromlech October 1871: came to my " possession in 1876, John Williams, the late " tenant, having been there since 1865, ten " years before I came into possession. He " became my tenant April 1876. The rent at " the same time was 170*l.* as he paid before. " He gave me notice that he was giving up the " farm May 1879." As for having spent money in improvements, he never showed it to me, and I never was able to perceive it. All that he handed in, was the paper which I have handed to you, amounting to 14*l.* 19*s.* 0*d.*

20,440. Do you rebut that? Do you say that he never put up anything of the sort?—I do, never.

20,441. That there was no erection of new walls and putting others in order?—No. He has never sent me in any statement, nor did I ever understand it; and if he did I think it must have been a long time before I ever became purchaser.

Chairman—continued.

20,442. "Three sites and an outhouse;" are you aware whether he ever erected those?—No, I am not aware.

20,443. Do you know whether he spent 30*l.* in repairs to the house?—I cannot say. He did not send me in a claim for anything of the kind.

20,444. There are two questions I must trouble you with. The first is by Mr. O. H. Foulkes: "Is it true that you, as agent of a "landed estate, are instructed not to let farms "to Liberals or Nonconformists?"—That I am not to let them?

20,445. That you have instructions not to let them to Liberals or Nonconformists?—No, I have never had instructions of the kind.

20,446. Then a question by Mr. W. H. Jones: "Were you one of the deputation who waited "upon the Bishop of Bangor in order to urge "the claims of Mrs. Parry for the tenancy of "Llyslew?"—I was.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Williams recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

20,447. Have you anything to say?—Yes, if you please, my Lord. It was some years after I left the farm that I thought of commencing business at all.

20,448. It was some years after you left the farm that you thought of going into business?—Yes. The improvements that I made on the farm are to be seen there to-day. I have plenty of witnesses here. The walls and the buildings are to be seen.

20,449. Did you send in any request to be paid for these improvements?—I told him that I ought to be paid, but I did not send him an account. I was in his room for two hours and twenty minutes discussing the matter with him, and asking him to make a reduction; and as I was losing money I told him that I would have to give him notice. I have many witnesses to prove that I have considerably improved the farm.

Chairman—continued.

20,450. A question is sent up by Mr. Griffith Roberts: "Was it not known before you asked "for a reduction, that you were for building a "shop on your own property, and going there to keep it?"—I did not build a shop at all, and never thought of doing so.

20,451. A warehouse?—There was no warehouse either; but I went into the flour business four years after that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Samuel Roberts called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

20,452. This is your evidence translated to you by Professor Rhŷs, and it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read]:—

"I live at the Factory, Cefncoch, and am a tenant on the estate of the Rev. J. Williams-Meyrick, rector of Beaumaris.

"I have heard complaints by several tenants that their rents are too high, especially during the present period of agricultural depression. Some of the tenants of the above-mentioned estate pay 1*l.* an acre for the land, and none of us ever had any reduction or abatement during the present depression. We are all subject to six months' notice to quit. There is also much inequality in the rents. The land is not valued on proper basis, and the landlord, so far as I know, does not allow anything towards the cost of building, draining, or fencing.

"I hold 27½ acres, for which I pay 57*l.* rent, which I consider oppressive and unjust. I have appealed several times for a reduction, but to no purpose. I made an application about two or three years ago for an abatement, but the landlord positively declined. My father and myself have spent at least 1,500*l.* in building, walling, and draining since my father first became tenant. About 150*l.* was spent in draining and fencing, and that at the expense of the tenant without any compensation. The business at the factory"——

20,453. What factory do you mean?—The factory at Pandy Cefncoch.

20,454. Are you a miller as well?—No.

20,455. A clothmaker as well as a farmer?—Yes, both.

"The business at the factory was much better 40 or 50 years ago than at present, and possibly the landlord took advantage of the business to raise the rent. My father paid 56*l.* rent, and I pay 57*l.* I consider that the place would have been dear at 40*l.* It was the tenant also who bought the machinery at his own expense.

"As an instance of the inequality in the rents on the estate, I may mention that a farm adjoining mine, and consisting of about 27½ acres, is let at 18*l.*, while I pay 57*l.* for the same acreage.

"There has been no reduction made to any of the tenants on the estate during the last 50 years; but the rents have been raised in several instances. The tithes and local rates are all paid by the tenants.

"The only remedy, in my opinion, to prevent the oppression and injustice of landlordism in Wales, is to have a Land Court, to deal justly towards both landlords and tenants.

Chairman—continued.

"The estate was re-valued in the year 1876, before the present landlord came into possession. When retaking the farm my rent was raised to 60*l.*, which sum included 3*l.* annually for water trespass. There was an old mill on the holding at the time, and the above-mentioned sum included the rent of that as well. In about four years all the machinery from the mill was removed to another mill on the Bodorgan estate, but my rent remained the same until about a month ago, when I was promised by my landlord to be in future allowed the 3*l.* trespass, and he also at the same time promised to take my rent into consideration."

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,456. Do you consider the quality of the land on that farm, which is 18*l.*, the same as the other farm—the farm which you occupy?—It is just the same quality of land.

20,457. Is there any difference in the buildings?—Well, we have more buildings, because we have a spinning machine and carding engines, and some other implements for weaving, and require small buildings for them on the land.

20,458. Who erected those buildings?—My father.

20,459. Your father entirely?—Yes, entirely, without any compensation.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,460. What was the rent when your father took this place?—I cannot say exactly. The place was 10*l.* rent when he came to live there, but there was only seven acres of land attached to the pandy then.

20,461. What was the rent when you first took it?—56*l.*, and it was raised 1*l.*

20,462. How much is the rent now?—57*l.* now, and 3*l.* the water trespass, which Mr. Meyrick promised to allow in future.

20,463. You put up the machinery at your own expense?—Yes.

20,464. Why do you wish to have a Land Court?—Because it would be much better for both to have fair play.

20,465. Will not your landlord reason with you now. Can you not come to better terms with him?—I tried to come to better terms, but he would not promise anything. He told me he would take the case into consideration, but I am afraid it will be under consideration for ever.

20,466. You want to appeal to somebody else who will decide the question between you?—Yes, I do. I offered to meet him with a man to re-value the place.

20,467. What did he say?—He turned back; he would not take it.

20,468. You want the law so altered that you can appeal?—I want a fair rent that is all—40*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

20,469. Tell me about your pandy. You say it does not answer so well as it did?—Not half so well, or one-fifth so well.

20,470. What is the reason?—English goods come into the country.

20,471. You make as good cloth as heretofore?—Perhaps we do, but that is the fact of it.

20,472. Do you not think if you could get it advertised, you could sell it in England?—No, we could not do that. Englishmen can make them cheaper than us.

20,473. Well, I do not know that?—That is so; the trade is on a much larger and better scale there.

20,474. I am very fond of Welsh cloth and I use a deal of it—I am using it now, and I think it is a great pity you cannot push the old pandies?—The place is too high, no doubt.

20,475. Do you pay rent for the pandy as well?—Yes, I pay rent for the pandy as well.

20,476. Is it included?—Yes; 27 acres of land and the pandy.

20,477. Did you put up the machinery in the pandy?—Yes.

20,478. Are you under a six months' notice or a year's notice?—Six months' notice, although the law granted at the time, one year's notice.

20,479. Supposing you were to get a notice to quit, would you get any compensation for your improvements in the pandy?—I cannot say that, but I ought to get it.

20,480. Has there been a pandy there for some time?—Yes; 200 or 300 years—the pandy itself, not a factory.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,481. You say that the rent was advanced when the factory paid well?—That is so.

20,482. Did you employ any men?—We employed then about six or seven men, about 40 years ago.

20,483. Is there any difference between the wages you pay now and what you paid then?—The wages are more at present.

20,484. How much more?—They are one-fourth more.

20,485. You want a reduction on account of that?—Well, it is fair that we should get it.

Chairman.

20,486. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Can you give an idea of the acreage of the Rev. Williams-Meyrick's estate?"—Really I cannot do that, not exactly.

20,487. "Is he a considerable landowner?"—Perhaps he owns about 500 or 600 acres—I should think so, but I cannot say exactly.

20,488. I ask you this myself. Is the Rev. Williams-Meyrick a Nonconformist?—No; he is a parson of the Church of England.

20,489. He is the rector of the parish?—The rector of the parish.

Lord Kenyon.

20,490. In your parish?—In Beaumaris.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. OWEN WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

20,491. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am.

20,492. Who is your landlord?—The vicar of Llanfflewyn; it belongs to the vicarage.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,493. Is it glebe land or farm land?—It is glebe land.

Chairman.

20,494. Will you kindly tell us what you wish to say?—I am a farmer living at Tynybuarth, Llanfflewyn, and so were my parents before me. In May 1874 I married Jane Roberts, Ty Mawr, Llangwyllog, who was niece
1,788 and executrix to the late tenant, Thomas Parry, and I went there to live. Her family and mine had occupied the place for many years, and the land was in splendid condition. Improvements, including walling, draining, and manuring had been made by Thomas Parry and his father before him. We had plenty of capital and to spare, to manage the farm. Before the 13th of May we received notice to quit on the 13th of November following. I had an interview with the agent subsequently, who told me he was sorry I had to leave, but that it was not his fault, and that we would be his and Sir Richard's tenants, if they had their own way; but that Sir Richard's son (Captain Bulkeley) was against me, and that he understood I had been somewhat prominent in opposing his candidature at the past election, and in supporting his opponent. I replied that I had, and that Sir Richard himself had given his tenants and the country to understand that he was against his son (Captain Bulkeley) coming forward to oppose Mr. Richard Davies. I asked whether there was anything else against me, when he replied that there was nothing, and that if I applied I should have the first offer for any other farm that might become vacant on the estate. He also mentioned one farm that would probably become vacant soon.

20,495. Is that the same year as the year you were married, 1874?—It was the same year. When I replied that if I was going to lose Ty Mawr, which had been the home of the family for so long, and that on account of my political opinions, that I would never apply for any farm on the estate. He said he was very sorry, but that Ty Mawr had been let to another person. The father of the new tenant of Ty Mawr had strongly supported the candidature of Captain Bulkeley at the election, while I had done the reverse, and this was the only reason why I lost the farm. Of course the agent took care that no one should hear the above conversation. This is but an instance of one who was made a political martyr in our country.

20,496. Can you tell us this; did Captain Bulkeley ever come forward as candidate for the county?—He did.

20,497. He was before the electors?—Yes, the year I married and went there.

20,498. In 1874 Captain Bulkeley, the late Sir Richard Bulkeley, was a candidate?—Captain Bulkeley was the father of the present Sir Richard.

20,499. He came forward as a candidate before the electors?—He did.

20,500. Then will you continue?—I now live on glebe land called Tyn y buarth. The farm consists of 50 acres, but it is in the tithe map and in the parish books put down at 2 acres more. The rent of the farm in my grandfather's time was only 20*l.*, and it was too high for him to be able to live on the place. My father, who had been apprenticed to a saddler, was obliged to return home to work on the farm for the sake of his parents. There were but few outbuildings, and those in a very poor condition on the farm, as it had previously been let with another farm. All the buildings were built and rebuilt by my grandfather, my father, and myself, with no assistance from the landowners except 10*l.* or 12*l.* worth of slates about four years ago. The above-mentioned tenants spent over 500*l.* on the buildings, but who had the benefit of that? The rent was raised from 20*l.* to 40*l.*, then 52*l.*, and then to 55*l.* When the rent was raised to 52*l.* it happened thus, according to the testimony of the valuer. He was asked to come to Anglesey to value a farm which was said to be 52 acres, and the rent 1*l.* an acre, and that he was to see whether it was worth more. When he returned he said it was not. The result was that the rent was raised by 12*l.*, and that when my father had just erected outbuildings at his own expense. The vicar of the benefice at the time my father made the outbuildings, had consented to their erection, and had assured him that there was no danger of the rent being raised on their account. He was shortly promoted, and this is what his successor did. One vicar was insane while holding the benefice, for a period of over 20 years, I believe. He was a brother of the Reverend Canon Williams, Llanfaelog, who looked after him and paid a curate for reading the services in his stead. One day Canon Williams (and the curate) came to Tynybuarth and informed my father and myself that the benefice was given up, as it did not pay after paying a curate. He said: "Here is your new "master henceforth, and I have accompanied "him to inform you and to see the farm." As my father was infirm I accompanied them over the farm. After returning to the house the curate said the farm was too cheap, and that he would have to get an increase of 8*l.* in the rent. My father replied that he could not give it.

20,501. What year was that in; do you know?—I have nothing to show the year.

20,502. But about what year?—Well, perhaps 25 to 30 years ago. I cannot be certain of the year. I have nothing to show that. If anyone rebuts me about the time well and good.

20,503. This happened in your father's time?—My father was the tenant then, but I was at home, and was walking through the fields with the curate.

20,504. You were a boy at the time?—Oh, no; I was not a boy.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,505. You were not married?—No, I was not married.

Chairman.

20,506. All this happened before 1874?—Yes, when I was at the farm, before I went off. The Canon then pretended to interpose, and said he should be very sorry to see my father being obliged to leave in his old age. He advised the one to reduce his demand, and the other to raise his offer, with the result that my father promised to pay 3*l.* more, although the rent was already higher than that of any other farm in the parish. Some time after this the Canon's brother died (that is the one that was insane), and then the trick was discovered. The curate was neither before nor after that in possession of the benefice. The whole was but a sham in order to raise the rent. It was about 11 years ago that I had the first opportunity of speaking with Canon Williams about the matter. He said: "I do not know you." I replied: "I "know you since many years to my sorrow." "Dear me," he said, "how is that?" I then reminded him of his visit, and how he had raised the rent 3*l.* by trickery, which sum I pay to this day. He did not attempt to deny the fact, and only tried to say the place was cheap enough. It is worse to occupy glebe land than to occupy under a good landlord. Something may be had occasionally from a landlord towards building, &c., but when one applies to the vicars they will only reply that the place only belongs to them while they hold the living, and so that they are not prepared to spend their money on it. I was never allowed any abatement, and though I applied this year, no notice was taken of my application. I have never seen the present landlord, but I forward the rent to his solicitor. There was in the parish of Llanfechell a common, on which there were many labourers' cottages, which had mostly been formerly built on the mountain, with several gardens and quillets, which had been from time to time enclosed out of the waste hill land. It was an eyesore to a landowner in the parish to see the green quillets and gardens, so he induced the Inclosure Commissioners to attach the common to the land of the gentry.

20,507. What year was that?—I have nothing to show. It was the Llanfechell inclosure.

20,508. How many years ago should you say; do you remember; was it in your time?—Oh, yes.

20,509. How old were you when this inclosure took place? Were you a grown up man at the time, or a boy?—Well, I was grown up rather then.

20,510. You were 20 years old at the time?—I think so. I could find that out for you.

20,511. Will you go on?—And the poor labourers were deprived of their title to the hill land.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,512. Was it Crown property before?—It was common land before, and he passed an Act to enclose it.

Chairman.

20,513. Can you tell us the name; who was the owner?—Mr. Bulkeley Hughes, of Plas Coch. He was an M.P. then, and it was easy for him to have an Act of Parliament to enclose it, I suppose.

Chairman—continued.

20,514. Do you know what was the name of the common; do you remember?—Llanfechell Common.

20,515. I do not know whether you will be able to answer this question. Do you happen to know whether Mr. Bulkeley Hughes was the lord of the manor or whether the property belonged to the Crown?—It was not the Woods and Forests who sold it, but the Inclosure Commissioners.

20,516. It was not the Woods and Forests?—I know that it was not the Woods and Forests. I bought a part of it, and at home I could see the date of it.

20,517. Then it probably was under the lord of the manor?—I do not know whether it had a lord of the manor at all.

20,518. Then it belonged to the Crown?—It belonged to those, I think, who had land in the parish. It was shared together by some of the gentry, but they deprived the small holders.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,519. Was there any compensation made to those that had rights on the common when the common was enclosed?—No compensation at all.

20,520. Were there any recreation grounds on the common?—I think there is not any recreation ground, but I am not sure of that We have been fighting for a recreation ground; I remember that very well.

20,521. Was there a recreation ground at the time?—Before?

20,522. Yes?—No, only it was all open to anybody to go there.

20,523. Anybody could go over it?—Yes.

Chairman.

20,524. Will you go on?—They were also obliged to purchase the land they had enclosed; and that, not at its original value, but at its value after it had been reclaimed, manured, and brought under cultivation by the tenants themselves. The landlord in question had some small farms on the mountain, and some of his tenants had enclosed portions of the common adjoining, for which he was so anxious that he gave them notice to appear in a foreign court and obtained judgment against them by default. The result was that one of them became insane. He was taken to the asylum, where he would not eat a morsel, and he died broken-hearted as shown by the following "englyn" which is on his tombstone in the Bodewryd churchyard:—

"Nid penyd clefyd a'm cloes,
Nid ingawl angeu dolurloes,
Nid henaint aeth a'm heinioes,
Ond dyn a fu yn dwyn fy oes."

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,525. I took it down from Mr. Prichard's evidence yesterday that this Llanfechell enclosure from the commons was sold by the Crown, but that the old squatters had been allowed to remain without their holdings being sold; was that so?—It was so, if it was under 60 years.

20,526. Then those who had been there more than 60 years were allowed to remain there?—They were allowed.

20,527. And those who had been there a lesser time than 60 years had their buildings sold?—Yes, there was some difference between 20 and 60 years. I am not quite certain about that, but there was something about 20 and 60 years.

Chairman.

20,528. Now, will you tell us about occupation?—Tenancy generally expires on the 13th November, and is subject to six or 12 months' notice, according to the agreement. Farms are let, as a rule, from year to year, but sometimes leases are granted—generally when the tenant undertakes to erect buildings on the farm. There was a general demand for leases a few years ago, but there is less demand at present owing to the decrease in the value of land, and the continued decrease in the price of produce. Those who have leases farm better as a rule, as they have security of tenure. The chief cause of changes of tenancy at present is that much land is sold. The principal instances of hardship occur when a farm is sold, together with the improvements made by the tenant. I have copies here of several agreements on several estates, and extracts from agreements.

Agreements and leases.—The conditions in these are various. I shall point out some of the conditions which are considered the most oppressive, together with some of the estates upon which such conditions are: (1.) The tenant being subject to six months' notice to quit. May I mention the estates?

20,529. Yes, if you please?—Lord Penrhyn, Sir Geo. Meyrick, Col. Hampton Lewis, Lady Reade. (2.) That the tenant shall keep one dog for his landlord. (Sir R. Bulkeley, Col. H. Lewis, Sir Geo. Meyrick.) (3.) That the tenant shall preserve the game for the landlord. (Rhianfa estate, Col. H. Lewis, Sir Geo. Meyrick, Lady Reade, Rev. Jno. Mason.) (4.) That the tenant, on the determination of the tenancy, shall leave all manure made previous to the 1st July without compensation, and, in some estates, such as the Rhianfa estate and the Penrhos estate (belonging to Lord Stanley) to leave all the manure without compensation. (Lord Penrhyn, Col. H. Lewis.) (5.) That the tenant shall not sell his stock by public auction without the landlord's sanction in writing. (Plascoch estate, Sir R. Bulkeley, Col. H. Lewis, Lady Reade.) (6.) That all the gates shall be left on the farm on the determination of the tenancy, although the landlord had never placed them there. (Lord Stanley.) (7.) The tenant is bound not to sell any portion of the produce when leaving, but the landlord does not bind himself to purchase the same if he chooses to give the tenant permission to sell them. A tenant should know, when laying down a crop, whether his landlord will purchase it or not, in case he should be leaving. For instance, if a field of 10 acres were under green crops, such as swedes, turnips, and mangolds, on a farm 10 or 12 miles from a town or station, and the landlord told the tenant a few weeks before 13th November to sell out his crops, the tenant would not receive, as a rule, more than one-third the value of the crop for it. The agreement should be binding on both parties alike. (Lord Penrhyn, Col. H. Lewis, Lady Reade, Plascoch's estates.) Some of these conditions are not in the whole of the estates I mentioned just now, but only in some of them. (8.) That all the buildings shall be insured by the tenant in an office, and for a sum determined upon by the landlord. (Sir R. Bulkeley, Sir Geo. Meyrick.) Is it not enough for the tenant to insure his own property? (9.) That the tenant shall not keep more than one dog for his own use. (Col. H. Lewis.) (10.) That no compensation be allowed for permanent improvements, unless the written consent of the landlord or his agent shall have been obtained to do the same, which it is almost impossible to obtain from any agent. (Lord Penrhyn.) (11.) The penalties for neglecting to observe the conditions are unreasonable. For instance, a penalty of 20*l.* for selling a ton of hay, straw, gorse, or green crops, and the same sum for every ton sold. A penalty, again, of 50*l.* for every acre of land which shall be farmed contrary to the stipulations in the agreement, and yet many of the tenants do not know what they have agreed to perform, as they have no copy of the agreement. That large penalty is in the Rhianfa estate, but there are lesser penalties in others. A few years ago a new agreement was prepared in connexion with one of the principal estates in the county.

Chairman—continued.

20,530. Have you any objection to give the name of that estate?—Oh, no, not at all. It is Sir Richard Bulkeley's. It provided that the usual produce of hay, straw, and green crops be valued on the determination of the tenancy according to the market value, and that the outgoing tenant should receive only two-thirds of such value, the remaining one-third to become the property of the landlord or the incoming tenant. This agreement was signed by several tenants, but some found out the trick, and declined to sign it, so that the baronet was obliged to alter them all.

20,501. Those agreements that you handed in are in support of the statements that you make?—They are, and if you want to see them privately the originals can be produced for your inspection, but those are put in without dates, so that they shall not know who put them in.

Chairman—continued.

20,532. But those are the agreements on the different estates with the oppressive clauses of which you complain in print?—They are printed or written, and the originals can be shown to the Commissioners privately.

Chairman.

I have had a letter handed in to say that these agreements are put in without the names of the lessors being given. We do not consider that it is at all necessary to have the names of the lessors given so long as we are certain that those conditions are in the leases on the different estates. The Secretary will hand the agreements to Mr. Vincent, and he can verify them, and see whether they are correct or not, and then hand them back.

The Witness.

Do you want to see the originals? They are in Court.

20,533. They can be produced if necessary?—They can be produced.

20,534. But these are fac similes?—Extracts from them. The dates are not put in or else they would know who had put them in.

20,535. Exactly, but those are the same conditions under which these tenants hold their farms?—They are.

20,536. Now will you continue?—Should the valuers, on the determination of a tenancy, fail to agree as to the value of the property, the right to appoint an umpire is reserved to the landlord, and the tenant must abide by the decision of such an umpire whatever it be (Sir George Meyrick).

20,537. That is on his estate?—Yes, and on others too.

20,538. That is in all his covenants, is it?—Well, if he has not lately altered them. I have not heard that he has altered them. (14.) The landlord reserving for himself the ground game as well as the winged game. (Lord Stanley and Sir George Meyrick.)

20,539. Do not the tenants on those estates know that that is impossible?—They know very well, but they would not like to kill a rabbit or a hare, because if the keeper saw them they know the consequence, although they know that they have a right to it by law.

20,540. Then you would qualify that, because that is not quite the same. The landlord cannot reserve to himself the ground game?—We know that very well—that the tenant has a right.

20,541. The tenants know of the existence of the Ground Game Act?—Oh, yes, they do.

20,542. Then what about tithe?— The tenant to pay the tithe up to 2nd July—following the determination of the tenancy. (Sir George Meyrick.)

20,543. But you are aware that the landlord has to pay the tithes?—Yes, if there is a new agreement, but the old agreements stand as they were before; the Act does not touch them.

20,544. The old agreements have not been altered?—Just so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,545. How was it after the passing of the

Chairman—continued.

Tithe Act; did the landlord pay the tithe or did the tenant?—Many of the tenants pay them back to the landlord. The landlord generally pays them in the first instance to the rector, and then has them back from the tenant.

20,546. When did that custom come into operation; was it after the passing of the Tithe Act?—After the passing of the Tithe Act.

20,547. Previously the tenants paid them direct to the rector?—Yes.

Chairman.

20,548. What about the insurance of buildings?—The tenant to insure the buildings in the joint names of the landlord and tenant, and the live and dead stock in the name of the tenant. (Sir George Meyrick.) I will explain that many of their agreements compel them to insure their buildings, but I have never seen any agreement but that compelling them to insure their live stock.

20,549. That is on Sir George Meyrick's estate?—Yes. Then on the determination of the tenancy the tenant to allow the incoming tenant the use gratis of the teams and implements of the outgoing to sow his own hay and clover seed in the spring. (Sir George Meyrick.) The agreement containing a scale of compensation for improvements, but the consent in writing of the landlord must be obtained before the tenant can repair even a pond or a well. (Sir George Meyrick.) Certain sections of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1875, have been adopted, but only in a modified form; and with these exceptions the Act is refused. (Sir George Meyrick.) That no engines, machinery, or fixture shall be erected on the holding without the written consent of the landlord or his agent, and any article erected without such consent shall become the landlord's property without compensation. (Sir George Meyrick.) A tenant would thus have to apply to the agent for permission to affix a horse power, boiler, chimney-piece, or chaff-cutter, or they would become the property of the landlord. That the tenant shall not grow potatoes or turnips for sale. (Lord Stanley.)

Another grievance the farmers of this county complain of, when their farms are given up for sale, is that the following words are generally inserted in the conditions of sale:—"The vendor "reserves the right to bid by himself or his "agent." The auctioneer by this method often bids (privately) against the tenant, and by puffing it in this manner, makes it look like a "mock auction," and the tenant often bids against himself.

Rent: The rent is generally fixed in one sum, the land being calculated at so much per acre, but there is no uniformity in the rents even upon the same estate. The rents of the smaller tenantry are of necessity higher than on a large farm. The rent is generally fixed by private treaty in the first instance, but when the owner of an estate dies the estate is re-valued with the result that the rents are advanced; sometimes the landlord sends his own valuer, but I do not know of any arbitrations in this connexion. The rents have been raised generally during the last 50 years. The farm which I occupy has been raised from 40*l.* to 55*l.*; an adjoining farm has been raised from 35*l.* to 52*l.* There have also been granted some permanent reductions that I know of, but only very few. Abatements have been granted on some of the principal estates, such as Sir George Meyrick's, Sir Richard Bulkeley's, Captain Verney's, and others, but there are other large estates which are higher rented, where no abatements have been granted, such as Lord Stanley's. The small landowners, as a rule, are also very reluctant to grant an abatement. The corn and the cattle have varied in their prices so as to cause fluctuations. The rent is generally paid when it becomes due, but on some large estates it is not paid until six weeks after it becomes due.

Other Charges.

Tithes.—These are paid by the landlord in most cases and then re-paid by the tenant to the landlord. Other landlords pay them through their tenants as their agents. Others send for them to the tenant when they become due, and then forward them to the rector after first receiving them from the tenants. As far as I know the land tax is always paid by the tenant. The income tax is generally paid by tenant in the first instance, and then re-paid by the landlord on the rent day. The local rates have not, as far as I am aware, increased during the last 25 years.

Size of Farms.—Farms vary in their size from 350 acres down to the small holdings. I believe the majority measure from 40 to 60 acres. In some districts farms have been consolidated, but not many in my neighbourhood. Several large farms have been sub-divided lately in order to be more convenient for sale, &c.

There is more pasture than arable land, and so fewer labourers are needed. The population and dwelling-houses decrease, as the result of the farms being consolidated. The practical skill of small farmers, as a rule, is superior to that of the large farmers, and they are better able to pass through a period of depression, as they live chiefly upon their own produce, and have not much to sell. Their ability to provide for their families is much the same.

Cultivation.—Labourers are more scarce than they have been, and it is difficult to afford to keep more at present. Farms are insufficiently cultivated for want of capital, during the present depression. Much waste land has been drained and brought under cultivation within living memory. There is much more land that might be reclaimed, especially by draining, but as a rule landlords who are fond of sport, do not care for that.

Arable land is being laid down in pasture at the expense of the tenant. There has been an increase in the root crops. There has been a decrease in fallowing and in putting lime to the land, while there is an increase in using artificial manures, as the tenant is sooner compensated with crops.

Improvements.—Some landlords allow the tenants a portion of the cost of improving the buildings, but they very seldom allow anything towards cultivation. The improvements chiefly made by the tenants are buildings, walls, hedges, watercourses, and laying waste land under cultivation. Sometimes improvements are made by co-operation between landlord and tenant; at other times the tenants undertake extensive improvements through having confidence in their landlord. In the majority of cases the best estates allow the timber and slates for building purposes, the tenant undertaking the remainder of the work; but often the tenant is tired of waiting for these, and prefers doing the whole himself. Some landowners allow compensation, but in most cases it is simply generosity. I know of some who have contracted not to claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act or the custom of the country—by consenting to accept six months' notice to quit; to accept two-thirds of the market value of the produce; and not to claim compensation for the manure made previous to July 1st in the last year of the tenancy. Many tenants ask permission to make improvements, but, as a rule, the landlord and agent are careful not to give the same in writing.

The custom of the country.—According to the custom of the country the tenant, when leaving, is allowed to sell his crops, unless there be a written agreement to the contrary. I do not know of a single instance where compensation has been given for the general improved condition of the holding. The manure which has not been applied to the land at the expiration of the tenancy is sold, unless there be an agreement to have it valued. Unexhausted artificial manures at the expiration of the tenancy are paid for according to the Act of 1883, if there be no agreement—generally one-third or one-half their value if a root crop has been raised; but if a crop of corn or hay has been raised, nothing is claimed. The rights of an outgoing tenant consist of being paid for his crops, and the seed applied to the land, if the incoming tenant is obliged to purchase the crops. Little compensation is generally given the landlord for dilapidations, or in the way of penalty upon the tenant for breaches of the stipulations as to the mode of farming.

Many instances might be cited where the outgoing tenants have failed to obtain sufficient compensation for their improvements: I shall mention one, viz., "Tanlan, Llanddeusant."

20,550. Whose estate was that?—I cannot tell you who was the owner.

20,551. You do not know the owner?—No. [Statement continued.] "The tenant had cultivated the farm in the best manner, but it "was sold together with his improvements."

20,552. When was that?—Between 20 and 30 years ago, I suppose—less than 30. He was obliged to leave, and died a bankrupt on that account. According to my experience, the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act are unsatisfactory. They should be compulsory and enforceable by a specified court.

Game preserving.—The game is generally preserved by gamekeepers. Tenants do not generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act, as the penalty would be a notice to quit.

20,553. Have you any instance of that?—It is rather difficult to prove the instances, but I know of many who would not kill them because of the gamekeepers.

"Much damage is done by game in some parts, and I am not aware of the tenants being compensated.

"Co-operation and combination.—There is but little co-operation amongst farmers except assisting each other during the harvest time, threshing the corn, &c.

"The tenant seldom insures the buildings on the farm except when compelled, as is the case on some estates; but many insure their corn and hay stacks.

"The general condition of the farming population:—

"Proprietor farmers.—Many have recently purchased their holdings as they were being sold; and lest they might lose the same, if they did not purchase them, they have undertaken great burdens. Another reason they had for purchasing was that they had invested so much in improvements, without receiving much of the benefit of the same. The farms were generally bought at from 24 to 30 years' purchase. The purchase money was often excessive, and the farms are now dearer than before. It is not likely that the majority of the farmers can ever pay off the incumbrances, and they are obliged to pay more (in the way of interest) than their neighbours pay of rent.

"Tenant farmers.—The wives of the Anglesey farmers take part in the work of the farm, especially taking care of the housework, the dairy work, milking the cows, feeding the pigs and calves, together with cooking for the servant men.

"The general condition of the farming population is such that nothing will cause it to be a success except a special court and just and fair legislation, giving the tenant compensation for permanent improvements and security of tenure.

"I beg to call attention to an instance of hardship which occurred in the neighbourhood of Llanfechell recently."

20,554–5. Will you give the name of the tenant or of the estate?—Ty mawr, is the name of the place belonging to the vicarage of Llanbadrig.

"The tenant of a farm died leaving a widow. The family had occupied the place for generations. The widow who was in years was not very strong. The farm belonged to a church living and the vicar lived within a few miles of the farm. The widow desired to have some of her relations or friends as joint tenants with her, but the vicar declined. Further, he served upon her a notice to quit at the end of 12 months, so that he might have possession of the farm immediately, if she were to die in the meantime. He served another notice to quit before the expiration of the 12 months, and a third notice during the following 12 months, but before the expiration of the last-mentioned period the old woman died. Then the vicar requested the person who held the place during the continuance of the tenancy to give up the place forthwith, and he went so far as to send through his solicitor a letter to the person to threaten him. This person who holds the place is a good man with plenty of capital, but his religious and political opinions happen to be different to those of the vicar; and so he is obliged to leave so that the vicar may have one of the same persuasions as himself, though his abilities as a farmer be less. The late tenant (the widow) felt keenly on account of the notice to quit, and often used to say that it was obvious what the object was; and that she feared very much that her friend would not have the farm after her."

The remedies I would suggest are:—

"1. Full compensation for all improvements made by the tenant, viz., improvements that increase the value of the farm, whether he had obtained permission to do them or not.

"2. That all compensations be fixed by arbitrators or a Land Court.

"3. That the tenant shall have security of tenure.

"4. That the tenants who have purchased or will purchase their holdings shall have the loan of money from the Government at a low rate of interest.

"5. That the tithes be appropriated for national purposes.

"6. That half the local rates be paid by the landlord and half by the tenant."

I have rebutting evidence in answer to the evidence of Mr. Moreton Prichard.

20,556. Will you give us the rebutting evidence first, and then we will put what questions there are to you?—It is very short.

20,557. What evidence is it you wish to rebut?—About Tan twr, Dwyran.

20,558. Whose evidence is it?—Mr. Moreton Prichard's. See 11,58 18,768.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,559. Is that Sir George Meyrick's agent?—No, barrister-at-law—the first witness who was examined yesterday. [The witness read the following statement]:—

"Mr. J. Moreton Prichard in his evidence on Tuesday stated that he was able to make a nett profit of 150*l.* a year on Tantwr farm. I beg to explain that almost all the land was under hay last year, which hay was removed off the farm. He has again had the land under hay this year, and has cut a second crop. If this be a specimen of how to farm, Mr. Prichard should tell the landlords, Class A., to alter the clauses in their agreements, so that the Anglesey farmers might farm the same.

"Buildings on Class A.'s farms (as Mr. Prichard classed them yesterday) are extremely poor in some instances, and they would have been even worse only that the tenants themselves improve them. The tenants who were on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate have suffered a loss of thousands of pounds, by not receiving compensation for their improvements when the land was sold during the last few years. The vendors took care to insert in the conditions of sale clauses by which the purchaser became liable for any claim that might be proved against Sir Richard, which clauses are unjust towards both purchaser and tenant, as the purchaser does not know what the liabilities of the vendor are, and as it refers the tenant to the purchaser.

"I shall mention some of the farms that were sold, and it was a shame that some of the buildings were allowed to remain on the land of any landlord.

18,540, 09, 39. "Fferam Uchaf, to which Mr. Prichard referred, the house was unfit for human habitation, and the outbuildings were unfit for the cattle. The house had to have abuttings to support it, and the wall had leaned about 6 inches from the loft, the roof of the barn had fallen in, and the carthouse was something similar. I have heard the late tenant complaining that he had lost half the amount of the rent in one year for want of proper buildings, through the death of the cattle. I might also mention that Fferamgydd, Llanllibio fawr, and Tyn Llan were in a similar condition.

"I also understood Mr. Prichard to state that I had advanced 70*l.* in the rent of Fferam Uchaf, which is not true.

"As a specimen of the success of Mr. Prichard as a farmer, I may mention his experiment as a pig-farmer, by which he lost some hundreds of pounds. One day he gave the pigs some soeg—grains from a brewery—and they became drunk. He sold 19 sows at the same time, as he thought they had become mad. Mr. Prichard said that 20,681. only a few small advancements had taken place on Lord Stanley's estate. I may state that there is a farm adjoining mine, on Lord Stanley's estate, the rent of which was raised from 72*l.* to 132*l.*"

I can corroborate my statement about that farm from which I was sent off. This is the letter I had at the time from a justice of the peace, well known in Anglesey.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,560. In respect of the rebutting evidence, I suppose you do not deny Mr. Prichard made a good profit off the land?—Off his own farm?

20,561. Yes, by cutting the hay and selling the hay?—He may have made a good profit for the first year.

20,562. But I mean the last year?—Yes, because I think last year was the first he entered there.

20,563. He said he made a large profit by selling the hay?—He may do, and by carrying it off the land.

20,564. Quite right. I am coming to that in a minute. I suppose you know that grass may be cut many times in the year, if it is well manured?—I know it may; so I think the agreements of the landlords of Class A. must be altered, because we cannot do it the same as Mr. Prichard.

20,565. You would say the tenants should have the same privilege as anybody else to sell the crops off their land?—No, I do not think it is right. Artificial manure will not do for the hay and straw that has gone off the land.

20,566. I will come to your evidence in chief: Do you think that small landowners are more reluctant to make abatements than big landlords?—Yes, I know very well that is so. I know many who had good reductions themselves, but they did not reduce anything to their tenants, although they were higher, a great deal.

20,567. Is the land being largely converted from arable to pasture?—There is more pasture now.

20,568. Than there used to be?—Yes, than there used to be.

20,569. In consequence of that there is less labour employed?—It is so.

20,570. What would you consider the best size of farm?—From 40 to 100 acres.

20,571. I suppose anything under 40 is rather too small for a man to make a living?—I think it is better to be very small than to be much under that.

20,572. Would you think that a farm of between 5 acres and 30 acres would be a mistake?—I should think a farm from 5 to 10 acres would do very well, but if it is more than that a man must stay at home, and then he cannot go away to do anything else.

20,573. Quite so. You would not call it a farm if it is under 30 acres; it is a small holding?—Yes.

20,574. And a man would do something else for his livelihood, if it was so small?—Yes.

20,575. So that between 40 and 100 acres would be what you think about the best size?—That is my opinion.

20,576. May I ask, with regard to the farms above 100 acres, are there many such in the county?—Yes, many, over 300.

20,577. Are they the effect of consolidation?—Some of them.

20,578. Some, I suppose, have always been large farms?—Oh, yes.

20,579. Do you think there has been much consolidation going on?—Not in my neighbourhood. Not as I am told there has been in other neighbourhoods.

20,580. I am interested in the last part of your evidence, in which you suggest certain remedies. The first of those remedies is that full compensation for all improvements made by the tenant should be given (in which I think we all agree)—improvements that increase the value of the farm, whether he had obtained permission to do them or not?—Yes.

20,581. Do you not think that a landlord ought to have some control over the proposed alterations, which are sometimes called improvements, and are sometimes not improvements?—I think the tenant generally would consult with his landlord, but I think, whether he had a written consent or not, he ought to have full compensation for the improvements that would make the letting value better.

20,582. But do you agree with the principle of the First Schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, which is that the consent of the landlord is required for certain improvements. Do you approve of that?—No; because it could not be done in many instances, if that should be the case.

20,583. Then do you think those improvements ought to be done without the consent of the landlord?—Yes; as I said before, many farmhouses that were sold lately on the estate I mentioned, have just come down. They ought to have been done a great many years before, but the landlord would not do it, and the tenant could not do it.

20,584. Perhaps I may take it then that that schedule should be modified, but not altogether abrogated?—Well, I am not sure about the details of that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,585. In order to try to make it clear, I will put this question to you: In a case where a landlord refuses consent to an improvement, do you think the question should be referred to some impartial person or a tribunal?—That is my opinion.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,586. So that the arbitrator should have a voice in saying whether the improvement was a reasonable one or not?—Quite so.

20,587. And if it were not reasonable the landlord should not be called upon to consent?—To a court or an arbitrator?

20,588. Yes. Then would you give that arbitrator power to say whether the proposed improvement was reasonable or not?—Quite so.

20,589. In respect to the third of your suggestions that the tenant should have security of tenure, can you tell me what you think would be the best form for security of tenure—a lease?—I would like the principle which is laid down in that Bill which Mr. Bryn Roberts brought forward, so that some of the farmer's relatives may have it afterwards if the owner or his family do not want it themselves.

20,590. You know that Bill?—I have been reading it many times.

20,591. Do you approve of that?—I approve of that.

20,592. That is the form of security in which you acquiesce?—Yes.

20,593. With regard to the fourth of your suggestions, that tenants who had purchased or may purchase their holdings might obtain the loan of money from the Government, at a low rate of interest, do you think that the application of the Irish Act would be useful to Wales?—Yes, very useful; and I know of instances where the loan has been found as well as they can, and the farm mortgaged at 4 per cent.; the mortgagee would give only about two-thirds of the value. The tenant had nothing himself, but he did not like to lose the farm; he purchased it, and then he has to pay 5 per cent. to somebody for the rest, and the rents are running very high.

20,594. If Welshmen had that privilege, would they largely avail themselves of it?—They would, surely, and I think we ought to have it.

20,595. Can you suggest anyone who would feel any injury by such an extension of the principle. Everybody would benefit; no one would feel injured by it?—I do not know of any.

20,596. With regard to the sixth of your suggestions, that half the local rates should be paid by the landlord and half by the tenant, is not that allowed for in the amount of rent that is fixed? Would it not be as broad as it is long?—I do not understand the question.

20,597. You suggest that half the local rates should be borne by the tenant and half by the landlord?—Yes.

20,598. Is not that already allowed for in fixing the amount of the rent?—It does come into consideration, but there would be a difference. Many landlords pay very little towards the poor rate, and many a farmer pays more. They do not mind how much the cost would be on the farm, because they have made an agreement with the tenant to pay it. If they had to pay a share themselves they would be more careful, and the tenant would be careful, as he would pay one-half, so that I think it would be of benefit to both.

20,599. The tenants outnumber the landlords, do they not?—I say the tenant and the landlord would be the only two—the landlords and the tenants, I think, would be of the same number.

20,600. But the tenants outnumber the landlords, so that they have a greater voice in fixing what the rates are than the landlords have, because they are more in number?—Well, to be sure they are more, but they would be very careful if they paid half the rates.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,601. You say under the heading of occupation, one hardship in the agreements is that the tenants have to leave at six months' notice?—Yes, I do.

20,602. You consider, I gather, that a 12 months' notice is better for a tenant than a six months' notice?—Yes, a great deal, because if some of the family should die, say, in the beginning of May, he would then only have six months. If there be 12 months, then there would be a year and a half for them to make their things ready if they were to go off the farm. Six months is too little.

20,603. Of course if a tenant had 12 months' notice, and if he got a notice to quit, he could farm with a view to leaving the place, and he would be in a better position to leave a place with 12 months' notice than with six, of course?—Yes, he would not give much improvements in the course of that time.

20,604. You think it is only a fair thing for a tenant?—Quite fair. The Act ought not to have modified it.

20,605. You say that leases are sometimes granted. Is there a demand for leases?—Not so much as there has been, certainly.

20,606. What is the reason? Is it because the tenants do not consider the terms favourable enough, or is it because of the fluctuation in prices of produce and stock?—Fluctuation in prices, and when they offer leases they tell the tenants they shall not have abatements, and many of them have abatements now, when there are no leases. They say, "you shall have a "lease, but must remember we will allow no "abatement after your having a lease." Then the tenant likes to have the abatement in these hard times rather than a lease.

20,607. When a lease is offered is it generally offered at the same rent, or do they ask for an advance?—Sometimes I know of landlords that have wanted some hundreds for a lease in giving it, and the same rent as before, and then there was only the security that induced them to take it years ago.

20,608. A big sum—several hundreds?—Several hundreds.

20,609. In addition to the ordinary rent?—Yes, I could refer to an instance if you like.

1,121. 20,610. Kindly give it?—Cymynod, near Bodedern.

20,611. What was the sum that was asked?—I think it was 500*l.*

20,612. For how long was the lease?—It was not very long; I do not remember at the time.

20,613. Twenty-one years?—I think you will hear from another witness, who knows more about it.

20,614. What about the buildings afterwards. When leases are offered what are the conditions as to repairs?—Keeping them in good repair, and painting them as often as the lease describes, and to insure them.

20,615. We understand that it is a custom in the county, when buildings are erected, that the landlords supply materials and the tenants supply the labour. How would it be under a lease?—Oh, the tenant would do the whole.

20,616. Getting materials, and so on?—The whole—most generally.

20,617. You say that the chief cause of changes of tenancy at present is that much land is sold. Are there more farms sold at the present time than there were years ago?—More, I think, than I saw sold in my lifetime in this county, during these few years.

20,618. Do you think that they are sold with the object of what, perhaps, you would regard as confiscating the property of the tenant?—I do not know, because I am buying myself. I have not seen. I am not afraid.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

20,619. Of course I am talking about selling now?—So I do not know what they mean, but I do not mean that, or else I would not buy land if I were afraid of that. It is impossible to say what makes them sell their property; I do not know.

20,620. Is this clause enforced on these estates that the tenant shall keep one dog for his landlord?—Yes, in many of them.

20,621. Does every tenant on those estates keep a dog?—No. Very often they do.

20,622. It is put in the agreement?—There are many things in the agreements, I must state, that are not enforced. I do not know however what is the use of putting them in the agreements, and putting them on stamped paper if it does not mean something, and I saw sometimes it was put in force.

20,623. Is this one in force—that the tenant shall preserve the game for the landlord? What is the meaning of that? Is the tenant to act as the landlord's gamekeeper?—Yes, to a large extent, as you may see in those copies. I had marked it on those copies of the agreements.

20,624. He is supposed to warn off trespassers?—He is supposed to warn off trespassers, and, in some instances, to take law proceedings against them in the name of the owner—or rather, the owner to take proceedings in the name of the tenant. For instance, Colonel Hampton Lewis, and so on.

20,625. Are the tenants supposed to beat for game?—No, not much.

20,626. This fourth condition that you mention is a question really between an outgoing and incoming tenant. How does it work?—It is—"That the tenant, on the determination of "the tenancy, shall leave all manure made pre-"vious to the 1st July without compensation?"—It gives great trouble to men that are used to value it. They will be sometimes for hours discussing that term. Some say it is legal, another says it is illegal. One says you must stand to the agreement, and another to the law. It is very difficult, in many instances, to come to terms about it.

20,627. To arrive at a just decision between them?—Yes.

20,628. Do you not think it would be better for the manure to remain on the land—it does not matter whether it is in the yard or whether it is on the soil?—Quite so. It ought to be there, but the outgoing tenant ought to have compensation for it. In many instances they can claim nothing for any, but on others, the manure made after the 1st July.

20,629. What is the object of inserting this clause, that the tenant shall not sell his stock by public auction without the landlord's sanction in writing?—I cannot understand it at all. I do not know what they have put that in for, and many of them have put it. I never know for what purpose, I would like to know myself.

20,629*a*. You have broken the clause yourself, do I understand?—No; I asked, because I found it in the agreement, but I did not know why it was put in the agreement at all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,630. Have you ever known a landlord refuse permission to do that?—I do not know of an instance.

20,631–2. I think that is with the intention that the landlord should know what is going on?—No, but they put it in.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,633. But you know of tenants who have broken the clause?—Oh, many have broken it to be sure. Many do not know it is in their agreements, because they have no copy of their agreements.

20,634. You say the 6th Clause is "that all "the gates shall be left on the farm on the determination of the tenancy although the landlord had never placed them there," and you say that is the case on Lord Stanley's estate. Is that enforced?—So I understand his agreement.

20,635. And that clause is in force?—I have not seen it enforced. I do not know.

20,636. Are you well acquainted with Lord Stanley's estate?—Oh, yes.

20,637. Do you know of any tenants who have left, and although they had erected gates, they left them behind?—I do not know of any that left them behind, but I have seen that matters like the manure, being taken into consideration by the valuers. One said they were not to be paid for and the other that they must be paid for.

20,638. There is no need of quarrelling over this; this is plain enough as you have put it. You say it is "that all the buildings shall be "insured by the tenant in an office, and for a "sum, determined upon by the landlord. Is it "not enough for the tenant to insure his own "property." But according to your own showing, if the tenant has borne the cost of the labour of erecting these buildings he has of necessity a share in this property; but I suppose you do not think that the principle is the right one, that the cost of erecting buildings should fall upon the tenant: you think that it should be done entirely by the landlord, and that he should insure his own property?—I am of that opinion, and I do it myself because I am of that opinion.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,639. You do repairs on your property, I understand?—I do repairs. I have bought a farm which has been mentioned by Mr. Prichard yesterday in his evidence, and he said I had raised 70*l.* on the farm. All the buildings were worn down except a cow-house, a boiler-house, and a calf-house, that were newly erected within two years. All the others were in a ruined state; they were not fit for human habitation, nor to put the cattle in when I bought it, except those, and I have expended between 300*l.* and 400*l.* in these two years again on the same property in building myself, and what is said by Mr. Prichard is quite wrong.

20,640. You bore the whole cost except the carting?—Yes, excepting the carting; there was very little cartage, he said; but I do part of the cartage myself.

20,641. The 9th clause is "that the tenant "shall not keep more than one dog for his own "use" What is the object of inserting that clause?—For fear they would kill a rabbit or a hare, to be sure.

20,642. Are the dogs allowed to roam about?—Oh, yes, in the farms. The dogs are loose in the farms always.

20,643. And you think that is the object of inserting it?—Quite so.

20,644. I see with regard to the 11th, you think that a tenant should have more liberty to sell the produce of his farm, provided that he does not weaken the soil, because there are occasions probably when it would be in his interest to sell—say that he has got a good crop of hay; that it would be in his interest to sell some of that hay rather than consume it on the farm?—Yes.

20,645. And do you think that a tenant should have liberty of doing that?—Not much, in that respect, but if he would bring an equivalent in manure.

20,646. Yes, I was coming to that?—If he should be living near a town or something of that sort, and bring a good manure, but not to replace the same by artificial manure.

20,647. By farmyard manure?—Yes, if you could place something like farm manure, but not if you put artificial manure, such as guano—that cheap manure—instead of it; that would be only to make the land weaker; it would force a crop out for a year or two, but would leave the land in a worse state after all.

20,648. What equivalent are you going to find?—If you are living near towns, and so on, where you can get a good manure.

20,649. Supposing he does not live near a town?—I must consume it on the farm, and I do, and I think it ought to be done. If you cannot bring an equivalent in manure, it ought to be consumed on the farm.

20,650. That is a big question—the question of an equivalent, you see?—And it will pay well to do it—better than to carry it off.

20,651. You say in the 17th: "On the "determination of the tenancy the tenant to "allow the incoming tenant the use gratis of "the teams and implements of the outgoing "tenant to sow his own hay and clover seeds "in the spring?"—Yes.

20,652. Do you think that does not work between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant?—I think he ought not to put his teams to another person's use gratis; he ought to be paid for it; but it is seldom that is used. The outgoing tenant generally has harrowed himself with his own teams, and the incoming tenant has had to pay for the seed when he comes in. But it is a hardship to say a man must have the use of your teams gratis for such a purpose. It is a hard thing for a farmer, to say that any other person must have the use of his teams gratis.

20,653. He can have it when he is going to another farm?—If the same agreement would be on the other farm; but perhaps the other farm would not have the same agreement.

20,654. This only prevails, then, on Sir George Meyrick's estate; it is not a custom?—Oh yes, it is on others as well.

20,655. Is it generally so throughout the county?—I cannot say it is so generally.

20,656. Of course if it is general throughout the county, I cannot see that it makes any difference?—It is not general, but on some estates. Perhaps there are two or three. I could find out. I do not know how much I marked there.

20,657. You have only Sir George Meyrick's here?—I have put others at the top. I do not point him out specially, but I put others at the top as well.

20,658. What is the object in putting this clause in Lord Stanley's agreement—that the tenant shall not grow potatoes or turnips for sale; I have not heard of potatoes being restrictions before?—I have not seen that in any agreement but Lord Stanley's. That is the only one that I have seen that clause in, and as he himself said he did not think it was to his interest to have it in. He said at first it was not in. Until we handed him the agreement, he did not know what was in his own agreement.

Chairman.

18,809. 20,659. There are some questions put in by Mr. Vincent: "Are you the person referred to by a "previous witness Mr. Morton Prichard as having "purchased FferamUcha, Llanbabo, in 1889 from "Sir Richard Bulkeley?"—I am.

20,660. "Was John Jones the sitting tenant? "Was John Jones the tenant when you bought the "farm?"—He was.

20,661. "Did you buy part of his holding only"?—A part.

20,662. "Did you ask him to pay an advance "of rent of 70*l.* a year?"—Perhaps I did ask him because he was a very bad tenant, and I had to build the whole myself, and then the cost of building would be all on me, and they would be very soon in ruins, as they were before, if I had left them there.

20,663. "In consequence of his refusing to pay "70*l.* a year more did you turn him out?"—He agreed with me for the rent at first and told me he would find securities, but no one would go security for him; they knew him too well.

20,664. Did you turn him out?—To be sure. He was under notice to quit by Sir Richard. I had to have the place free on the 13th November, and Sir Richard gave him notice to quit, not I.

20,665. "Was he, John Jones, a Conservative?"—I do not know what he was, I cannot say.

20,666. Do you produce the agreement that you have made with your old tenant?—I did not make any agreement with him at all.

20,667. Have you any agreement with your tenant?—No.

20,668. No agreement?—No agreement with the old or with the new either.

20,669. "Were you ever personally a tenant "on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate?"—I was not. I went there I would say on May 1st. I married as I told you in my evidence, Miss Roberts; as she was executrix of Thomas Parry I went there to live, and before the 13th we had notice to quit.

20,670. "With regard to the clause compelling "the occupier to lend his name for the purpose "of prosecuting trespassers in pursuit of game "do you know that some people argue, wrongly "I think, that without this clause it would be "impossible for the owner to initiate a prose-"cution." Mr. Vincent is of opinion upon that that those people argue wrongly?—I would like to have that question in Welsh. I cannot understand that question; it is rather a curious question, I think. (To Mr. Vincent:) Perhaps I need not trouble you with that.

Chairman.

You need not press it. You think it is wrong yourself.

20,671. "Do I understand that you accuse "Canon Williams of conspiring with the curate to "deceive you and your father, so as to obtain "a higher rent?"—I do. I told him so to his face and he did not deny it.

20,672. "Have you a strong objection to the "Church?"—Not to the Church, but I have an objection to paying towards the Church, to which I do not belong.

20,673. "Have you bought land?" I understand you have bought land?—I have.

20,674. "Have you let a part of it"?—I have.

20,675. "What rent per acre is now paid for the part which you let"?—It is 162 acres and the rent is 200*l.*, but I gave all the game, for which the tenants have 10*l.* now. Before this, Sir Richard had the game on the whole farm. It was worth, according to that, about 12*l.*, now I leave the game to my tenant.

20,676. How many acres is it?—162 acres.

20,677. And the rent is?—200*l.*

20,678. And you give 10*l.* back?—And I paid the tithe myself. The commutation on the tithe was 22*l.* 9*s.* Then, as I have stated before, I am paying the tithe myself and that would bring the rent down, because I could not make it compulsory on him according to the Tithe Act.

20,679. I think that is a good answer; it is 162 acres, and you charge 200*l.* a year for it, minus 10*l.* that you return, so that the rent is 190*l.* for 162 acres. "What is the farm of Lord "Stanley on which the rent has been raised "from 32*l.* to 130*l.*?"—I did not say so. See 20,559.

20,680. What did you say, do you remember?—72*l.*

20,681. From 72*l.* to 130*l.*?—To 132*l.* It is the next farm to me; it is on my boundary. I only mentioned that.

20,682. "Do you know that the conditions of "sale on Sir Richard Bulkeley's land make it "unnecessary to complete purchases before "November 6th, 1893?"—I do not know what the condition is this year. It was a condition when I bought the farm.

20,683. "Do you know that Sir Richard "Bulkeley will not consider questions of com-"pensation till that time?"—I do not know when he will consider them. He himself knows,

Chairman—continued.

20,684. You do not know anything about it. Mr. Vincent also asks: "Does not this farm of "Tan Lan, Llanddeusant belong to Owen "Hughes, of Nanner?"—It does.

20,685. "Is not Owen Hughes a tenant on the Bodorgan estate?"—He is.

20,686. "Do you know him quite well?"—I do.

20,687. "Does he not live two miles from you?"—No, he is farther than that.

20,688. "Is not Tan Lan, Llanddeusant about "a mile from your house?"—A mile and a half.

20,689. "What objection can you have to "putting in, the year of each of these agree-"ments?" I believe there is no date to these agreements?—Well, as I told you before, if we put in the dates to be inspected by the agents here, they would know which of the tenants have lent us those agreements to be shown. We had a great deal of trouble in getting them, and then we do not like to expose the tenants; but if you want to see the originals, as Commissioners, the originals will be shown to you. We will not show them to the agents, or else the tenants would suffer.

20,690. "Are any of these agreements obsolete and out of date?"—I do not know what is the meaning of that word "obsolete."

20,691. Are they the old agreements or the present agreements?—Some of them are the present ones, and some are past, as shown, and there are three agreements belonging to Sir Richard's estate now. There is to be sure only one of them now in force. But there are copies of the three, so that you can see what is in them.

20,692. Is it any use putting in agreements that are not in force now. Are these agreements in force now?—So far as I know, except in the case of Sir Richard's estate, but I did not take anything stated in my evidence except from those which are now in force.

20,693. You put in all those that are in force?—Yes, that the present tenant had. I did not take anything from the others.

20,694. "Is not the Penrhyn agreement, for "example, one made at the time of the late "agent?"—I cannot say without comparing it. I will tell you to-morrow.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Is the tenant under the impression that he is under the agreement, whether it was made under the present or under the late agent. Is that the agreement that he has?

Chairman.

20,695. Is that the agreement that the tenant has at the present moment?—I cannot say for certain to day. It is easily proved.

20,696. "Was not that agreement made 20 "years ago on the Penrhyn estate"?—Many agreements which were made 20 years ago on some estates are in force to-day. I do not know if it is so on the Penrhryn estate. They have not renewed their agreements on some estates. I do not know if it is so on the Penrhyn estate.

20,697. "Is the Bodorgan agreement now in force?"—I should think it is, or it has been altered very lately. That is of very recent date.

20,698. Mr. Vincent also says: "I suppose I "may take it from you that the copies have "been made correctly?"—They have.

20,699. You vouch for that?—Yes.

20,700. The following are questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffiths: "Did you hear yesterday "a statement made by the sub-agent of the "Tregaian estate as to ground game?"—I did.

20,701. "Did he state that the tenants were "permitted to have the ground game on the "estate?"—He did.

20,702. When was this done?—It was not done last week. I do not know how late it was.

20,703. Was this date after the appointment of the Commission?—It was surely.

20,704. And after the approaching visit to Anglesey was determined upon?—Yes, it was.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,705. Who is the owner of the Tregaian estate?—Mr. Jones Parry.

20,706. Do you wish that letter to be read?—No, only I was just going to show it to the Commission. I do not care about it.

20,707. You can read it if you like?—No, I do not care about it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. OWEN MORRIS called and examined.

Chairman.

20,708. You are a tenant farmer and a member of the Anglesey County Council?—Yes.

20,709. And a valuer for the Board of Guardians for the Holyhead Union?—Yes.

20,710. What do you intend to give evidence upon?—Upon the amount and the inequality of rents, my Lord.

20,711. Where?—In the Holyhead Union.

20,712. Are you of opinion that the rateable value would be a fair basis for the rent?—I am.

Chairman.

20,713. Will you kindly read us your statement?

[The witness read his statement as follows—]

"The rateable value is as uniform, as experienced farmers can fix it and should it happen to be unequal the aggrieved party could appeal before the assessment committee and finally before the Quarter Sessions.

"The rateable value is a fair basis as to the amount of rents. When the County Magistrates in the year 1888 were revising the County Rate basis they only made an addition of 5 per cent. on the rateable value as it had been previously fixed by the assessment committee of this union. Also, the majority of rents on some of the large estates are fixed at a very small per-centage above the rateable value and in some cases even below it, such as Sir George J. Meyrick and Lord Stanley's estates, but even on the above estates there are a few exceptions, whilst on the smaller estates the majority are too high and the exceptions only, are fixed at a fair rent. The following are a few instances out of many." Shall I read them?

Chairman.

I think we had better take them as read, if you please.

[The witness handed in the list.]

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,713*a*. Then I understand you do not make the rents a basis for fixing the rateable value?—I would rather be cross-examined in my own language, if you please. I might make a mistake in the English language.

[Mr. Richard Jones interpreted the remainder of this evidence.]

20,714. You do not take the rents as a basis for fixing the rateable value?—I do not.

20,715. What plan do you adopt for fixing the rateable value?—I walk every field on every farm. Generally the rents are higher than the rateable value.

20,716. How much?—Generally 10 per cent. I should think; I cannot say. According to the rateable value as it is at present the rents are quite high enough.

20,717. Do you know of any cases where the rent is much higher than 10 per cent. over the rateable value?—I have put in a list.

20,718. I think you had better read the list?—Very well.

I believe the rent of Tanylan, Llanddeusant, has recently been reduced from 150*l*. to 140*l*. I believe these are the worst cases I know of in the union.

20,719. Do you think that it would answer the purpose if every farm was valued in the way in which the rateable value is valued—that a competent man should go over every field, the same as you get at the rateable value, and the rent fixed accordingly, instead of their being fixed as you say in a haphazard fashion, the same as it is done now?—Yes, I believe it would be a great boon if that could be done.

20,720. You think the rents would be equal afterwards?—Yes, quite equal, I believe.

20,721. And in that case there would be no necessity to fix the rent according to the basis of the rateable value. It would be the same?—Quite so.

20,722. I understand from you that the rent is not fixed in a systematic manner at present; that is your point?—That is so.

Chairman.

20,723. Some questions are handed up by Mr. Vincent. "Are there not in your opinion special "circumstances, in the case of many tenancies "known only to the landlords, which determine "the amount of rent?"—I do not know of any.

20,724. You know of none?—No.

20,725. "For instance, improvements by land-"lord or tenant respectively." Do you follow that?—No.

20,726. "If the rent were fixed by the rateable "value would not the board of guardians, elected "principally or entirely by tenants, fix the "rents?"—No, I do not think so. I only put the rateable value in to show that it is equal, uniform, through all. That is my object in putting it in.

20,727. "Are not the boards of guardians "elected principally or entirely by the tenants"?—Mostly.

20,728. Then, two questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Can you speak as to the "preservation of game on Lord Stanley's estate?" Do you know anything about the preservation of game?—Yes, I am a tenant of his Lordship.

20,729. And you know all about it?—Yes.

20,730. "Do you know whether there are "great complaints by the tenants about the "game preservation upon Lord Stanley's "estate"?—Yes, there are some complaints.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Hughes called and examined.

Chairman.

20,731. You are a tenant farmer?—A small tenant farmer.

20,732. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Thomas, draper, Llangristiolus.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,733. Is it glebe land or private land?—It is not glebe land.

Chairman.

20,734. What is the size of your holding?—About six acres.

20,735. And the rent?—20*l.*

20,736. Six acres, for which you pay 20*l.*?—Yes.

20,737. Will you kindly read your evidence—clearly, so that it may be followed by every one present?—"I shall offer evidence to prove "that the conditions imposed by some landlords "upon their tenants are oppressive towards the "tenants, a hindrance to the proper cultivation "of the land, and a national loss. In some "instances the tenant is tied down so much, "that he is not permitted to cultivate the land "in accordance with his own knowledge and "experience, so that he is no better than a "servant to carry out the plans of the landlord, "and those plans are impracticable and prove "a loss. For instance, in the year 1866 Mr. "Robert Davies, Menai Bridge, let a farm called "Capel Llangristiolus, consisting of about 48 "acres, to Mr. Owen Jones. The tenant was "not permitted to plough the land or cut hay, "except from one field, and that to be the same "every year. As the tenant had also some land "of his own, and held land under another "landowner, he was able to carry on fairly "well for some years. The hayfield gradually "became unproductive, and rushes began to "grow in the lower portions. Notwithstanding "this, Mr. Davies would not alter the con-"ditions."

20,738. He was not allowed to plough the land?—No.

20,739. And he could only cut one field for hay?—Only one field, and that would be the same field.

20,740. What did he do—graze it?—Grazed it all.

29,741. He grazed the whole of it?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,742. How many acres was it?—48 acres.

Chairman

20,743. Do you know what the rent of that was?—I have a copy of the agreement here. It is 58*l.* 7*s.*

20,744. Now will you continue?—"The "tenant found that it was impossible for him "to raise the amount of the rent from land in "such a condition, and in the year 1880 he "ploughed a part of the land producing rushes "contrary to the agreement. On this account "he received a notice to quit, but at the same "time an offer of other terms, which were quite "as oppressive."

Chairman—continued.

20,745. Can you give us those terms?—Yes. This is what he was asked to sign: "I hereby "take from Robert Davies, Esquire, that por-"tion of the tenement called Capel Mawr "situate in the parish of Llangristiolus, the "whole (excepting field called Cae fferam bach "ucha, measuring about 3a 3r. 0p., and field "called Waen Caeflaendrws, measuring about "4a. 3r. 12p.; also the field in the marsh "ploughed last year, measuring about 10 to 12 "acres) to be grazed only from the date hereof "until the 13th day of November next at the "rent of 58*l.* 17*s.*, due and payable at Menai "Bridge on the 30th day of July and 30th day "of October next. The marsh field named "above, measuring about 10 to 12 acres, to be "put under oats and properly seeded this "winter, and permission is hereby given me to "plough the field called Waen Caeflaendrws, "measuring about 4a. 3r. 12p. Should I violate "this agreement by mowing or ploughing any "portion of said land, excepting so far as herein "stated, I hereby agree to pay an additional "rent of 7*l.* per statute acre for all land that I "shall so mow or plough, and the same addi-"tional rent on the marsh field in case of my "neglecting to seed it. Income tax and marsh "rate to be paid by Mr. Davies. Tithes, poor, "and highway rates due up to 13th day of "November next to be paid by me. Mr. "Davies reserves the right of sporting." Then I continue: "Henceforth he was obliged to "retake the land every year, with no security, "that he should hold the land further than the "following Michaelmas. He felt that he was "unreasonably oppressed, and gave up his "tenancy in 1884. Subsequently several per-"sons applied to Mr. Davies for the farm, and "the plan he adopted was for every applicant "to state how much rent he would give. The "Applicants advanced their offers one over the "other, and it was ultimately let to one" (I need not name him perhaps) "who did his "best to farm it in accordance with the stipula-"tions of his landlord. It turned out a failure, "and in two years all his stock was sold by the "landlord for the rent, and that for remarkably "low prices, as much of the stock was not in a "condition for the market. At present it is let "every year to a farmer who does not reside at "the place, on the same conditions as formerly, "and with permission to cut hay from the same "field. About 18 acres are almost worthless, as "they produce hardly anything but rushes, and "the tenant is not allowed to cut as much as a "bundle of them. If the land were properly "cultivated, it would give work to labourers, "profit to the tenant, and an addition to the "wealth of the country.

Chairman—continued.

"Mr. Chambers, Carrog, held 60 acres of land under the same gentleman. This tenant dealt considerably in cattle, and so pasture land paid him best; but about 20 acres began to produce rushes to such an extent that he decided to plough two fields, and he intended to cultivate, manure, and seed them in the best manner, so as to have new turf; but this was contrary to the wishes of the landlord, and he gave the tenant notice that he was taking the two fields (about 13 acres) from him, and advancing 7*l.* in the rent in addition. Mr. Chambers refused these terms, and gave up possession.

"In the year 1883 a farm called Fferam, under the same landlord, became vacant, by the tenant becoming bankrupt. The tenant was refused permission to live in the house, and it has been empty up to this day. The house and outbuildings are speedily getting into ruins. For some years the land was let by public auction, but since some time now the auctioneer lets it by private treaty in lots, but the cattle must be cleared off the premises every year by the 13th November. The land decreases in value for want of cultivation and manure. Scores of acres of the marsh are under rushes, which are not allowed to be cut. I hold one field of it myself, and if I had security for it for more than twelve months I would pay the same rent, and would apply a good sum of artificial manure to it, which would improve the nature of the land and the produce.

"About the year 1885 a farm called Dafarn Newydd became vacant by the death of the tenant. The house has been unoccupied since that time, and the outbuildings have fallen into ruins. The land is let by the year to Mr. Thomas, draper, for grazing purposes only. The whole of it is in a very poor condition for want of cultivation and manuring, and there are about 15 acres of it producing gorse, and which are no better than waste land. If Mr. Thomas had security of tenure and permission to cultivate it properly the land would produce three times as much as it does at present.

"In the same neighbourhood there is another farm, Tyddyn Adda, comprising about 14 acres, which is let by the year for grazing purposes, and the house empty. I know of other tenants under the same gentleman who are not allowed to plough any or cut hay except with his consent, and they do not know until the end of September whether they shall remain after the following 13th November. Mr. Davis refuses to open watercourses on other lands, or catch moles, which are allowed to multiply, and cause loss and trouble to neighbouring farmers.

"The tenants of the estate are tied in such a manner that they dare not make the least improvements, not even a yard of drainage, without the consent of the landlord, because if they do so without permission they are liable to pay a fine of 10*l.* per statute acre; and the consequence of this is they are obliged to be satisfied with leaving things as they are. I know of one tenant who is obliged to sell his stock now, because her landlord would not allow her to raise a hay crop; therefore he has no fodder for the winter. I also know of instances where the houses and buildings are now in ruins, and the landlord refuses to build new ones or reduce the rent. Similar complaints are to be heard from other parts of the country.

"Nine years ago Mr. Thomas removed from Llangristiolus to another farm under the same gentleman (Mr. Robert Davies) in Llandyfrydog. The rent for the former tenant was 90*l.*, but Mr. Thomas agreed to pay 120*l.* a year, on condition that the landlord should erect outbuildings. That promise has not yet been fulfilled, and on that account the tenant is obliged to leave a number of his cattle out, which has caused him several losses. The landlord allowed an abatement of 2*s.* in the pound to the tenant for some years, but this was afterwards withheld for two years because the tenant cultivated a field that produced nothing but gorse and thorns. He spent much money bringing it under cultivation, draining and manuring the field, in consequence of which the abatement was withheld for two years, which meant that the tenant had to pay a penalty of over 24*l.* for having improved the land.

"The landlord keeps a man to visit all the tenants, and to report all their doings to him. The tenants are on this account often summoned to appear before him, and they feel that they do not enjoy the reasonable privileges of the subjects of a free country.

"The result of all this is a decrease in the population of the neighbourhood. The labourers have been obliged to remove to other districts, and the labourers' cottages are empty, while others have been taken down. The land of the country is in the hands of a comparatively few persons, and it would be well if some farms were subdivided so as to create small holdings for labourers. The occupiers of small farms generally cultivate the land better, and are able to pay higher rent and grumble less. More labourers might be employed on the farms if they were sufficiently cultivated; the chief obstacle to this is the right of the landlord to send a tenant away or raise his rent. The labourers are neglected too much. There is no proper accommodation provided for those who are lodged on the farms, and many labourers' cottages are very unfit for habitation. The standard of comfort enjoyed by them is but very low as compared with that of the majority of the farmers, and extremely low as compared with that of the landlords."

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,746. So the competition rents are a failure?—I wish to answer all questions in Welsh, please.

[The evidence was subsequently interpreted by Mr. Richard Jones.]

20,747. I think you tell us that the property decreases in value in consequence of what you have pointed out?—The land is considerably depreciated in value owing to the harshness of the clauses in the agreements.

20,748. The first paper you put in, is 27 years ago, and the last is 10 years ago?—Yes.

20,749. Is Mr. Davies alive?—Yes, as far as I have heard. I think he was alive yesterday.

20,750. You do not put him up as a model landlord?—I do not.

Chairman.

20,751. Some questions are handed up by Mr. Owen Wynne: "May I ask if the landlord "you are speaking of is a Liberal?"—I do not think he is very liberal towards his tenants.

Chairman—continued.

20,752. Is he a Liberal in politics?—I do not know, I am sure.

20,753. "Is he a Nonconformist?"—I believe he is.

20,754. "Do you think farmers would wil- "lingly give up part of their land for the purpose "of giving land to labourers?"—Farmers, do you mean? [Question repeated.] No, I do not think so.

20,755. You do not think they would?—No.

20,756. Then there are two questions by Mr. Owen Williams: "Do you sell basic slag?"—I do.

20,757. "If so, what is your opinion of it as "a fertilizer?"—Well, I consider it the best of all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Owen called and examined.

Chairman.

See 20,211 –53.

20,758. We have one question, and only one, I think, to ask you. Do you remember a conversation about Treriffri farm with Mr. Hughes, who was a builder and agent? You know the circumstances of the case?—Yes, my Lord.

20,759. What was said?—He asked many a time on what terms we were building there, and I refused to give him an answer, because we had special terms by the agent at the time. He never mentioned anything that there was a misunderstanding until we had finished all the farm buildings.

20,760. Then you contradict his statement?—Every word.

Chairman—continued.

20,761. You contradict the statement that you asked him not to speak to the agent?—Yes.

20,762. And you corroborate what Mr. David Owen has stated as well?—Yes, every word that he said.

20,763. You substantiate Mr. David Owen's evidence in every particular?—In every particular way.

20,764. And the whole thing was a misunderstanding between you and the agent, and you did not in the least understand what he thought you did?—Till we finished the buildings.

20,765. Till the whole thing was over?—Yes, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Roberts called and examined.

Chairman.

20,766. Will you give your evidence in English?—By your permission, my Lord, I will read an application of mine to Sir Richard Bulkeley for compensation. I think that will show the merits of the case better than what is specified on the paper I have sent in.

20,767. I will first of all read your statement, in order that we may know the circumstances of the case.

"The evidence of John Roberts, Britannia Terrace, Llanfair, P.G.

"I have been a tenant farmer for many years, and my evidence will relate to the estates of Sir Richard Bulkeley, Baron Hill, and the Reverend C. B. Griffiths, Stoke Vicarage, Chester.

See 21,800 –9.

"I shall first refer to Ty Hen, Llanynghenedl, formerly the property of Sir Richard Bulkeley, whose agent is Mr. W. M. Preston. The acreage of the farm is 230, and the rent was 226*l.*, including the tithes. It was held on lease. The only value of a lease is its security of tenure for a specified period; because, when temporary abatements are given, a yearly tenant generally receives more than a leaseholder. The rent of

Chairman—continued.

Ty Hen was considerably raised within a period of 50 years. My late brother, who was the tenant, had expended about 2,000*l.* on it in permanent and unexhausted improvements, such as erecting buildings, draining, fencing, &c. This amount was paid over again to the landlord, in the increased price the farm fetched on that account, at the sale which took place a few months ago. The tenant received no compensation after farming in an economical way for over 50 years, during which time he had spent his profits and should-be interest on his capital, except a trifle, in improving the farm. I admit that Sir Richard Bulkeley gave an opportunity (if it could be called so) to the tenants of the farms that were to be sold, to purchase their holdings by private treaty, but it was only an opportunity afforded of purchasing property without knowing its price, as there was no amount fixed by the landlord.

"Prysowain, in the parish of Llechcynfarwydd, on the estate of the Rev. C. B. Griffiths, Stoke Vicarage, Chester, was formerly held by me. It comprises 121 acres, and the rent in 1862 was 111*l.* In the year 1875 the rent was raised to 120*l.* without any re-valuation, and there was no reason for the advance except the improvements, to the amount of 360*l.* odd, I had made on the farm. In 1885 I received a notice to quit, accompanied by a letter stating that the farm was to be sold by auction. In preference to breaking up my home I purchased it, the effect of which was an annual increase of 32*l.* in my rent. It is very seldom that the purchase of a farm by a tenant in the county does not result in increased rent, the auctioneer at the sale being at liberty to bid as often as he wishes.

"There is not a sufficient number of labourers in Anglesey, and their wages are much higher than formerly. In 1838 the wages of the best man on the farm were 10*l.* a year and his keeping. In 1852 they were 18*l.*, and in 1893 they are 28*l.*"

That is the statement. Now will you kindly read the correspondence that ensued upon that?—First of all I will read the letter I wrote to Sir Richard Bulkeley asking for compensation:—

"Sept. 8th, 1893.

Sir Richard H. W. Bulkeley, Bart.,

Being one of the representatives of your late tenant, W. Roberts, Ty Hen, Llanynghenedl, I beg to address you these few remarks with regard to the sale of Ty Hen. Our family have been the tenants of Ty Hen for centuries, and we were anxious for Ty Hen to remain in the family; and in order to secure that, I made an offer previous to the sale to Mr. Dew."——

20,768. I understood that Sir Richard Bulkeley has not refused to pay compensation, and that the claim will be settled after November 1893?—If you will please read his replies I think you will find that it is different.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I do not want it to appear that we prejudge this matter. We ought to guard against giving any opinion upon a matter which is now sub judice—which is a matter of legal question between landlord and tenant. If the matter is in the Law Courts I think we had better not go into it.

Chairman.

20,769. Is this a matter that is before any lawyer?—Oh, not at all.

20,770. Very well, then. Will you proceed?

"I took into consideration that there was a a lease on it, but also that the rent had been raised considerably during the last 50 years, so that the real worth of the lease was its security against disturbance, as I consider that the rent of Ty Hen is high enough. My late brother had expended about 2,000*l.* on it in unexhausted improvements, but that amount has been paid to you, in the increased price given for Ty Hen, on that account. I feel justified in drawing your attention to the manner in which the sale was effected, thinking perhaps that the merits of the case had not been explained to you in conjunction with my offer. We cannot think that you will consider taking from us all the value of the unexhausted improvements fair, I consider it unjust; so I hope you can offer us compensation for the improvements mentioned, so that there will be no need for me to appear before the Commission.

Your most obedient servant,

JOHN ROBERTS.

Britannia Terrace,
Llanfair P.G.,
Anglesey."

—That is my letter.

20,771. What is the answer to that?—Here is the reply:—

"Estate Office, Baron Hill,
Beaumaris, Sept. 11th, 1893.

To Mr. John Roberts,
Britannia Terrace,
Llanfair, P.G.

Dear Sir,
Ty Hen, Llanynghenedl.

I am desired by Sir Richard Bulkeley to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th inst., and to inform you that this is the first intimation he has received that the representatives of his late tenant, Mr. Roberts, of Ty Hen, were about to ask for any compensation. It will be within your memory that Sir Richard Bulkeley offered an opportunity to all his tenants on the farms to be sold, to purchase their farms by private treaty, the object of this offer being that as few of his tenants as possible should be disturbed in their holdings, they securing to them any subsequent benefit arising out of the expenditure made by them on their improvements. Sir Richard Bulkeley is glad in this case that the representatives of his much respected tenant have secured the farm, and the benefit arising out of the expenditure on the farm will accrue to them." (That is not the case; the representatives failed to buy the farm.) "Sir Richard Bulkeley is unaware of the late Mr. Roberts ever complaining of his rent being too high, and he certainly never asked for a reduction.

With regard to the price, the excellence of the farm, and its situation in close proximity to the railway, Sir Richard does not think it too high. In fact he has bought land himself without the advantages of this farm, at the same rate of purchase. Again the late tenant has for years reaped the benefit of his own improvements, and what benefits remain, will as before stated, accrue to his family. Under these circumstances he cannot see that you have any reason to feel aggrieved in the matter.

With regard to your appearing before the Royal Commission, that is a matter entirely for your own consideration, and Sir

Chairman—continued.

Richard is not likely to be influenced in his dealings with his tenants by their appearance or non-appearance there.

Yours faithfully,
WILLIAM M. PRESTON."

I found that Sir Richard and his agent were labouring under a great mistake there. It seems by that reply that they thought we had bought the farm. Now, here is my answer to that:—

"September 20th, 1893.

To W. M. Preston, Esq.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th inst.

"I am sorry that my letter of the 8th inst. has to a great extent been misunderstood. I acknowledge the opportunity given by Sir Richard Bulkeley to the tenants of the farms to be sold to purchase by private treaty, but as you must be aware, from my letter of the 8th and from the account of the sale given you, I suppose by Mr. Dew, I failed to become the purchaser of Ty Hen, and the farm passed out of the family with all the benefits accruing from the unexhausted improvements. You admit the excellence of the farm, and you take for granted that the improvements and benefits arising out of the expenditure on the farm will accrue to the family. I maintain that the excellence of the farm was the work of my late brother, the tenant of Ty Hen; and to show the extent of his expenditure, I beg to state the following facts. He was a tenant at Ty Hen for over 50 years. He expended in building, fencing, draining, &c., about 2,000*l.* in improving the farm. His rent during that period was considerably raised. The present condition of the farm clearly shows his expenditure. On account of the reasons above stated, I humbly beg the consideration of Sir Richard Bulkeley to compensate us to some extent.

Yours truly,
JOHN ROBERTS.

Llanfair, P.G."

Here is the reply to that letter:—

"Estate Office, Baron Hill,
Beaumaris, Sept. 25, 1893.

To Mr. John Roberts, &c.

Dear Sir,

Ty Hen, Llanynghenedl.

With further reference to your letter of the 20th inst., which I have laid before Sir Richard Bulkeley, I beg to say that when my letter of the 11th inst. was written to you, Sir Richard Bulkeley and myself were under the impression that Ty Hen was purchased by the representatives of the late Mr. Roberts. This we find was not the case, and therefore your letters shall have further and careful consideration; and I will communicate with you again on the subject.

Yours faithfully,
WILLIAM M. PRESTON."

That promised communication has not been made.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,771. What is the date of that last letter?—It is September 25th.

20,772. This year?—This year, yes.

Chairman.

20,773. That is of very recent date; it was only written about a fortnight ago, was it not?—It was written on September 25th.

20,774. And to-day is the 12th October. You do not consider the matter closed in any way, yet?—Well, it appears to me by this reply that the chance for compensation is very weak.

Sir John Llewelyn.

20,775. I hope you will get it?—Well, I hope so, but I think it is a wild goose chase. Then, my Lord, about this other case of mine, the farm where I was farming.

Chairman.

20,776. You are not the tenant of that farm now, are you?—I am partly tenant. I am one of the representatives, and my brother died without a will.

20,777. You are not a tenant of Ty Hen now?—No, but part tenant; there are three of us in a manner of speaking, tenants of Ty Hen now.

20,778. Then you are still the tenant of the new landlord?—I never was a tenant of Sir Richard; my brother was.

20,779. But the family is still on the farm. Is your brother still on the farm?—There are a brother and a sister of mine on the farm now.

20,780. They were not turned out?—No. There is a lease of it for eight years yet.

20,781. I think we understand the other case very well. We have nothing to ask you. We are very much obliged to you for coming before us?—With regard to this case of mine, on the place where I was farming which is called Prysowain, in the parish of Llechcynfarwydd, as the evidence shows, I became the tenant in the year 1862 at a rental of 111*l.* a year.

20,782. You have been good enough to tell us all about that; we need not go through all that again. You have nothing more to say? That is the whole of your story?—That is the whole of my story unless there are some questions to be asked.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Isaac Taylor called and examined.

Chairman.

20,783. Would it be equally convenient to you not to go through the tremendously long heap of questions contained in the Syllabus, because there are a great many things that we have been told over and over again, and we have a great many witnesses to take?—Yes, I have it in a smaller form.

20,784. Then you will tell us simply about Lady Vivian's estate and not go into other matters?—Very well. I will read my condensed statement:—

"Lady Vivian's Anglesey estate, situate in the parishes of Pentraeth, Penmynydd, Llanddyfnan, Llanfairmathafarneithaf, Tregaian, and Llansadwrn.

"Statement of the agent, Isaac Taylor, of Coleshill, Bagillt, Flintshire.

"I have acted as agent of this property for 45 years (with the exception of a break of two years, 1851 and 1852), having succeeded my father at his death in 1848.

"I am able to converse and generally do converse with tenants in the Welsh language.

"Plas Gwyn Estate.—The acreage of the old estate is about 3,211 acres. The rental of this portion in 1846 was about 2,911*l.* The rental of the same in 1892 was about 3,068*l.*"

20,785. It has only been raised 157*l.* since 1846?—Yes—157*l.* Then:—

"Plas Llanddyfnan Estate.—The Plas Llanddyfnan estate came into Lady Vivian's possession in 1875. It comprises about 354 acres, and the rental at that time was 382*l.*, the rental for 1892 being 364*l.* There were nine tenants in 1875. There have only been two changes, viz., Plas Llanddyfnan and Gwenllian. Six of the tenants are still on their farms, and the widow of another succeeded the husband; the reduction on this portion being 20*l.* on Plas Llanddyfnan, and an advance of 2*l.* on the mill in consideration of alterations made.

"The total acreage of the whole estate is about 3,565 acres.

"Plas Gwyn Old Estate.—Since 1846 the rental has increased from about 2,911*l.* to 3,068*l.*, showing an increase of 157*l.* This was caused principally by the falling in of old leases, in which cases the tenants or their relatives succeeded in the occupation of the farms. In one case the widow is now tenant, and new farm buildings and house have been built by Lady Vivian at a considerable cost.

"On the whole estate there are 13 tenants whose rents amount to 10*l.* and under, and 31 to 5*l.* and under. There are 22 tenants whose rents amount to 50*l.* and under, and 6 tenants to 100*l.* and under, and 15 to over 100*l.* There are 15 holdings under 2 acres, 6 under 5 acres, 9 under 10 acres, 7 under 20 acres, 15 under 50 acres, 6 under 100 acres, and 13 over 100 acres.

"The tenants generally, if able, cart materials for buildings and repairs free of charge. It has also been the custom (but it is not compulsory) for the tenants who have teams to assist in the cartage of coal to the mansion from Red Wharf and occasionally from Llanfair Station. From 1852 to 1873 and 1881 to 1887 no cartage was done by the tenants, the mansion being let for 27 years.

Chairman—continued.

"Game.—The game is preserved at Plas Gwyn, but mostly on land in hand. The rabbits are kept principally in warrens, fenced by wire netting, and very few complaints are made by the tenants. There is very little corn grown near the coverts. Compensation is paid if there is damage near the coverts. For the last five years the average value of corn, &c., purchased for feeding game was over 135*l.* per annum. In some cases, where damage was done to corn near the coverts, the crop was purchased from the tenants by agreement. Some of the tenants or their sons or servants assist in beating covers two or three times a year, and are glad to come without payment. Game and rabbits are given them.

"Rents.—1886–1887–1888, 10 per cent. abatements on rents; September 29th, 1892, to March 25th, 1893, 10 per cent. Permanent reductions on Plas Gwyn estate, 36*l.* 6*s.*, and on Plas Llanddyfnan estate, 18*l.*"

20,786. What Lady Vivian is this; is she the widow of the late Lord Vivian?—Yes.

20,787. Is she the mother of our present Ambassador in Rome?—No.

20,788. Stepmother?—Yes.

20,789. Stepmother of the present Lord Vivian?—Yes. I may state with regard to tenants beating for game, they are always very glad to come; they get a good feed, and all that sort of thing; they get game and rabbits; and they are in fact much offended if they are not invited.

20,790. There is no obligation on them to go?—No.

20,791. It is not enforced?—No.

20,792. I have some questions sent in by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Does any question of "religion or politics ever influence you in your "dealings with the tenants?"—Never, I think. I should have hard work to pick out a Churchman amongst 80 or 90 tenants. I do not think there is more than one real regular one.

20,793. "Are you a Churchman yourself?"—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,794. Do the tenants exercise their rights under the Ground Game Act?—Yes.

20,795. Generally?—They do generally, yes. I did pay a man one year, for his right to the ground game, which I had no right to do, I suppose, but it was very unprofitable; we had better have let him have it.

20,796. Are there many cases where compensation has been paid?—No, only two this year, small amounts. The pheasants are all in the park round the mansion; Lady Vivian has that in her own hands; and as soon as the birds begin to get big enough to ramble about we keep men—we have them now all round the place—to keep them in the covers and prevent them straying off.

Chairman.

20,797. Questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Is there a clause in the estate agreement bind- "ing tenants to cart coals from a ship at Red "Wharf Bay to the Manor (Plas Gwyn), a "distance of about 2 miles?"—No. I will give you a copy of the agreement [handing same]. They are not bound to do it.

20,798. "How many Welsh-speaking tenants "are there on the estate?"—Oh, I should think they are nearly all Welsh.

Chairman—continued.

20,799. "How do you carry on conversation "and negotiation with them?"—I speak to them always in Welsh.

20,800. You can speak Welsh then?—Yes. There is another statement I have here showing the principal tenants and the time they have been there.

20,801. I dare say some of them have been on the estate some considerable time?—Yes.

20,802–3. It will be interesting to have that as part of your evidence?—Very well. (See Appendix.)

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Williams called and examined.

Chairman.

20,804. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

20,805. Of Trefriw, Aberffraw, on the Bodorgan estate?—Yes.

20,806. What would you wish to tell the Commissioners?—I have something here in writing. I would rather give my evidence in Welsh, but I will try to speak English, as it will be better for the Court, I suppose.

"A few years ago the tenants were asked by the landlord, through his agent, to consider the agreement between them, but owing to the fact that the penal clauses were never enforced, and that various abatements were and are yearly granted, the tenants left things to go on as before. No doubt there is a feeling among the tenants that the agreement should be changed, and this is enhanced as the tenants are finding that large owners are continually selling small and large portions of their estates. Far be the day that such will be the case on the Bodorgan estate; but should the past and present good feeling existing between landlord and tenant be disturbed, or that unforeseen circumstances should cause a change of ownership and stewardship, &c., and the prevailing disastrous depression in the farming industry continue, the tenants feel that to occupy their farms under the present agreement, should it be enforced, is to imperil their investments and dishearten them in their efforts.

"The principle upon which the farmers and others have been and are acting, is to try and get a farm anyhow, quite irrespective of the nature of an agreement. The least clue of a farm coming vacant, endless applications are at once sent for it, under any conditions, and should the acreage of the estate be double what it is, the landlord should have no difficulty in letting the farms, and the greatest land agitators of the day are the first to take the farms and give a higher rent for them. No doubt there is a deal of truth in the saying that permanent reductions are not granted, owing to this absurd thirst for farms, and that by farmers themselves, and those that have earned little profits from trade.

"Respecting our agreement, I am of opinion that, while some of the clauses are unobjectionable, others require revision, and some to be cancelled altogether. The agreement between landlord and tenant should be very simple, such as would encourage, if possible, better farming; the landlord to have the farm kept in good repair and tenantable, with few stipulations as to impoverishing the soil, as to game, quarries, mines, &c., and the tenant to have freedom of cultivation, and full liberty to sell the produce, with few stipulations as to notice to quit, compensation for improvements of land, and building, &c.

"Should I be asked questions respecting a Land Court, whether I am for it, my reply is in the negative, as I am firmly of opinion that it would create a wide gulf between landlord and tenant. If there should be a court at all, its function should be to put a stop to this unreasonable grabbing for land. The majority of the landlords in my opinion will always be ready to meet their tenants; they are not the class of people land agitators wish to make them appear in the sight of the country. The tenants of every estate should be loyal to each other, and unite together to put their grevances before their landlord. The result of this in my opinion will be far better for the welfare of the tenants than a Land Court.

Sir George Meyrick grants one great advantage to his tenants by receiving his rents once a year only; also when Mr. Meyrick became of age, Sir George made known that all his tenants were allowed to kill all the rabbits on their farms, which allowance was granted before the Game Law Act was passed.

The law of trespass should be amended "respecting gathering mushroms, &c., the opening "of gates, and pulling the fences down."

Mr. Richard Jones.

20,808. Are you giving evidence on your own account, or do you represent other people?—On my own account. I would not come on any other account, only myself.

20,809. You have not been asked by anyone?—I am on my own account, of course I am in co. with the tenants.

20,810. But you are not representing them in any sense. You have not been sent by the tenants?—The tenants wish me to speak on the agreement.

20,811. Did you have a meeting of the tenants, and were you sent as a deputation, so to speak, to appear before the Commission?—I was with the tenants.

20,812. You had a meeting?—Yes, we had a meeting together.

20,813. And you were appointed?—I was appointed.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

20,814. To give evidence?—Yes.

20,815. I do not know whether it is too much to ask you who composed your evidence?—You do not think I have been able to do it myself, I suppose. We were together.

20,816. Who were together?—I do not see that I can answer that—as tenants.

Chairman.

20,817. Mr. Williams' question I shall not put. The following question is from Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Do you agree with Sir George "Meyrick's agent that there are several op-"pressive clauses in the agreement." You have said that?—I said that in my evidence.

20,818. "Did you say that the farms might "be let for double the rent that is now paid"?—No, I did not say anything about it. I said that if there were double the farms, there would be plenty for them, because going on to the Bodorgan estate is a good thing. Everybody will be glad to enter.

20,819. None of these questions which are handed in are very relevant. The only question of Mr. Griffith's that I shall put is: "Would "you wish to have compensation for improve-"ments?" You would like that?—Of course.

20,820. And you would like to have security of tenure?—I would not care to have security so long as this party would live, but we cannot foresee beyond that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Owen Edwards called and examined.

Chairman.

20,821. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes, my Lord.

20,822. Who is your landlord?—Sir George Meyrick.

20,823. What do you wish to say to us?—I produce my statement. Will the secretary please read it for me? I cannot read it very well.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"I am an occupier of a farm, the property of Sir George Meyrick, Bart., the acreage of which is 524 acres, and I wish to give evidence of what I find to be a great injustice to the farmers, viz., the taxation of land.

20,824. What is your rent?—My rent is 495*l.*

"The time has come that a radical change should take place in the great question of taxing, and I trust that the Commissioners will see that the subject will have full and careful attention when drawing out their report for the consideration of a higher tribunal.

"I will only very briefly run over what is clearly an injustice to the farmer, and that affects the income of the landlords, expenses of the tenant, and the wages of the labourer.

Chairman—continued.

"The most prominent charge on land and other forms of real property, is the poor rate. In remote cases the practice was that every person should contribute to the maintenance of the poor according to his means. It was a fundamental feature in the Poor Law Act, 43 Elizabeth, that, not only every occupier of real property should contribute, but every inhabitant, and thus personal property, stock in trade, and other like property in the parish was made to bear its proper share of the burden. The principles of the Act mentioned remain intact, but with a very important exception, the personalty has ceased to contribute, and, no matter how wealthy a parishioner may be, he is not asked to pay anything to the poor rate beyond the rateable value of a house occupied by him. He is exempt from paying further than this, under the Expiring Laws Continuance Acts. The radical change in personalty requires serious consideration, especially when so many fresh charges have been heaped, on what was once a pure and simple poor rate. Its name is a complete misnomer. If they are able to collect taxes on personal property for imperial purposes no difficulty should arise for collecting local and union rates.

"In my opinion the governing principle of the law as it stands does not apportion the burden fairly between occupiers who live on their means, or earn incomes from trade and occupy houses, and those that earn their living from the land. No doubt the present system is essentially wrong and very unjust, for it can be conclusively proved that under the existing conditions a farmer pays to the poor rate about ten times as much as private residents or tradesmen earning similar incomes. Were it necessary, numerous examples could be adduced to illustrate and substantiate this.

"Consider again the Land Tax; this was at 4*s.* in the pound on land, and 2*s.* 8*d.* on personal property. Subsequently it was imposed as a uniform rate on both real and personal property, but about 60 years ago personalty was entirely exonerated from liability, while the burden on land remained unchanged, and in this feature it resembles the poor rate which is a gross grievance.

"Another tax which adversely affects the farmer and his rent is the Property Tax. It is immaterial to whom it is paid. This tax differs from the two preceding ones, as it is levied both on real and personal property. So far there is nothing for the farmer to complain of, but it is necessary to compare the rules for assessing incomes from real property and those from trade and personalty; then it will be seen that the burden is not equitably borne. Trades and professions are charged on actual profits realized, deductions being allowed for every conceivable payment incurred in earning the income, these extending to rents, rates, taxes on business premises, to all labour, materials, and utensils used in the concern; and bad debts and losses are allowed. Poundage is collected only on the net profit of trades and incomes, while land is charged practically on its gross value, and this is a serious cause for reflection. So far as experience guides me, it appears that incomes from landed property are charged by rules which make the burden fall at least 25 per cent. more on land than it does on trade and other incomes, which are charged under more favourable rules. It is clearly shown by figures that value of land has fallen in the last 12 years from 69 million to 57 million pounds, while the profits from trade have increased in the same time 100 million pounds. We have avoided unnecessary detail, and some of the points involved appear at first sight to concern landlords only, but the whole subject is alike important for owners, tenants, and labourers. Every penny which is put down on land by way of taxation is a tax upon the raw material, which owner, occupier, and labourers use to obtain a livelihood. Every pound paid as rent throughout the country is taxed locally and imperially to the extent of 4*s.* in the pound, or 20 per cent. On the other hand, incomes from professions, trades, and personal property are taxed only for Imperial purposes now at 6*d.* in the pound, and pay nothing whatever to the poor rate except on the rents of houses and premises occupied. Incomes of a thousand a year are either made or enjoyed on premises valued at 50*l.*, with only payment of 6*l.* 5*s.* to the union, which is 1½*d.* in the pound on such incomes; locally and imperially, it is only 7½*d.* in the pound as against the 4*s.* in the pound paid in respect of land. We all say rents must come down: were profits and personal property taxed for local and Imperial purposes the same as land, owners of land would thus be enabled to grant larger abatements, and permanent reductions out of their diminishing incomes. Landlords incomes are so reduced that numbers of them cannot afford to live on their estates; farmers are in very bad straits; many of them have reached, and others are approaching, bankruptcy; labourers are insufficiently employed, and this to a great extent, is brought about by the inequality and injustice of the present system of taxation. If a skilled workman, earning from 25*s.* to 30*s.* a week, and paying about 20*s.* a year to the poor rate, desired to live by land, and not by his trade, he would find that directly he stepped upon the land his burden of taxation would be multiplied 8 or 10 times on a less income. Farmers receive no special benefits from the poor rate, beyond those conferred on tradesmen and private residents, and why should its operation be so grossly unequal. It provides for the poor rate, police, highway, sanitary, and education expenses, the benefits of which accrue to all classes alike, and the farmer has no monopoly whatever."

Chairman.

We have listened to your statement with much interest, and have much pleasure in having you before us to give evidence. We have no questions to ask you upon it. None of these questions which are handed in are admissible, and, therefore, they are returned.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. MORRIS WILLIAMS called.

Chairman.

20,825. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

Chairman.

I see you wish to give evidence on several points. Which are the points that you consider of the greatest interest?

The Assistant Secretary.

This witness cannot understand English. He has not sent in his statement, and therefore it has not been verified. The statement which he hands in now is in English.

Chairman.

I will ask Mr. Richard Jones to explain to him that as he has not sent in the evidence before, we are very sorry, but we cannot take it now. Will you please, Mr. Richard Jones, explain to this gentleman that as his evidence has not been verified before one of the Welsh-speaking Commissioners we cannot take his evidence until to-morrow.

[Mr. Richard Jones interpreted this to the witness.]

The Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Vincent wishes the witness to be examined.

Mr. Vincent.

I understand that there is no rule that the statement should be examined by any one.

Chairman.

But we will not take a statement from a witness in a language that he does not understand, and a statement that he has not verified, and that he has not vouched as correct.

Mr. Vincent.

I undoubtedly agree, if I may say so, in that.

Chairman.

If you wish this witness to be examined it must be done in the proper way to-morrow. It will be impossible to take that evidence to-night. See 21,449.

[Mr. Richard Jones interpreted this to the witness.]

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to 10.45 o'clock to-morrow.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

Second Court.

Llangefni, 12th October 1893.

LORD KENYON IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. HUGH WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

20,826. Has this statement been read over to you by Professor Rhŷs and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement was read:—

"Evidence of Hugh Williams, Rhyd Dafydd, Rhôsgoch.

"I am a tenant farmer occupying the above holding and I also deal in fowls, butter, &c. I have been appointed to give evidence by a meeting of the farm servants and farm labourers of the county.

"I have been a tenant of the Marquis of Anglesey's for 35 years, and have occupied the above holding for many years. I have no complaint against my landlord with regard to anything that I have asked him. The first place I occupied on the estate was on sale, and I tried several times to purchase it, the selling being by private treaty. They ceased selling before I was able to purchase, and then I received permission to proceed to cultivate my holding. Some man got to know for how much I had been offered my holding, and went in disguise to the agent, who thought he was purchasing it for me. As I was losing my holding after having gone to some expense on it, I was requested to send in a statement of the expense. I received full compensation, together with a promise of another place on the estate, as soon as one would become vacant. I subsequently had a better place on which I have built, the landlord giving what I asked towards the expense, without advancing the rent. My landlord has never interfered with the religious or political opinions of his tenants, and when he found we had objection to the payment of tithes, he took them upon himself without advancing the rents. Although we are well treated on this estate we have no law to protect us properly, and we have no security of tenure or assurance of compensation for improvements, in case our present landlord were to die. When I asked for a lease, it was only granted on half an acre of land on which the house stands, and that for a term of 99 years.

"I have made inquiries of farmers who are tenants of other estates and I find that they are much worse off. The following are some instances of hardship:—

"1. John Thomas, Glanygors, Llanbabo, when 30 years of age married the daughter of the tenant of Bodfardden Ddu, Llanfwrog. They took the farm called Clymwr on the Baron Hill estate. They spent 300*l.* on the outbuildings, but before they had finished, the rent was raised by 5*l.*, though the landlord had allowed nothing towards the expense. The tenant died, and his widow and children then occupied the farm, but about two years ago it was put up for sale. In order to provide a home for herself and children, the widow purchased it, but had to pay over again for the buildings erected by her late husband. After purchasing it, she went to Sir Richard to try and get him to allow something towards the expense, but failed.

"2. Llwyn yr Arth, Llanbabo, on the same estate. The family occupying the place had ploughed up rough land, drained and fenced it, and brought it into a good state of cultivation at their own expense; indeed they had converted what was no better than a barren and unproductive common, into arable land. They had also spent 1,500*l.* on the buildings. As the place was improved the rent was raised. The rent was advanced four times during the occupation of the late tenant. Two years ago the farm was on sale and was purchased by the tenant, who had to pay over again thousands of pounds for his own improvements, without the landlord having spent a penny on the land within living memory, except some 25*l.* compensation.

"3. Another instance on the estate of the late Mr. Bulkeley Hughes, Plascoch. Hugh Hughes had occupied the farm Brynddu, Llanfechell, for a long time, but as the landlord required the place for his brother (General Hughes) the tenant was obliged to leave, and had another farm, Clegyrog Uchaf, on the same estate. This was a farm on which several had previously failed to live, but Hugh Hughes was able to live there and improved the farm greatly. After he had erected some buildings and had done much walling, he received a notice to quit, and he knew of no reason why he should have it. He applied again for the farm, but the landlord would not listen to him and he had to leave, and this appeared to have hastened the death of the tenant's wife. The tenant with his wife and three children had to leave without any compensation.

"Small farms are generally higher rented than large farms. Farmers' children suffer, as their parents are unable to pay them wages. Farm servants also suffer for want of sleeping accommodation. Labourers' cottages are scarce and very inconvenient, and many of them are in an exceedingly poor condition."

20,827–8. You were granted a lease of half an acre on which the house stands. I suppose the farm would be of no use without a house?—I refused to accept the lease. Half an acre was not enough to get a lease upon, unless I could get a lease of the whole farm; and another thing, the rent of the farm was too high for me to take a lease upon it.

20,829. What is the rent of the farm?—5*l.* 10*s.*

20,830. The rent of the farm?—It is a small holding.

20,831. What size?—There were about 3½ acres of land and a road going through the middle of it.

20,832. Is that high, as rents of that size place go, in this district?—It is higher than places of a similar kind on the Marquis's estate.

20,833. What sort of a house is it? Is it a good house?—I built everything, but I got 25*l.* from the landlord towards it. I did not ask for anything more than that.

20,834. How much did the house cost you?—About 50*l.* including completing the place and spending money round about it.

Mr. Grove.

20,835. Who is the landlord?—The Marquis of Anglesey.

20,836. How many tenants has the Marquis of Anglesey—about?—I cannot say; he has a great number.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,837. Did that 50*l.* include the carting to the buildings?—Yes, on an average the whole expense, at about 50*l.*

20,838. Did the Marquis pay you that when you left; he gave you 25*l.*, but did he give you the other 25*l.* when you left?—I have not left; I am still occupying that place.

20,839. You said you had full compensation in the first place?—I lived on the holding under the Marquis of Anglesey, but another man bought that.

20,840. Did you not have a chance of buying that one?—I received the whole of the money I spent on that holding. When I went in on this holding there were no buildings on it.

20,841. You speak of another place, John Thomas, Glan y gors, Baron Hill?—Yes.

20,842. Who laid out 300*l.* on his farm?—He did, and more than that.

20,843. Did they compensate him?—No, not at all.

20,844. Did he not purchase the place a little cheaper owing to it?—So far as any one knows, it was a sale by auction.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

20,845. Are all these on the same estate?—Llwyn yr arth and Clynwr are on the Baron Hill estate

Professor Rhŷs.

20,846. You are appointed to represent some body, I believe?—The labourers chiefly; but I have a little land of my own, and I have been appointed by the farmers as well. I was appointed by a committee at Llangefni.

20,847. What do you say about the accommodation for labourers in the district you know?—The accommodation is not what it ought to be, by a long way.

20,848. What is wanting is more cottages, or what?—More cottages and better sleeping accommodation for farm servants.

20,849. Where do the farm servants sleep now on the farms which you know?—In stable lofts and in outbuildings.

20,850. You think such places are not fit for the accommodation of the servants?—Yes, I know so by experience, for I have been there sleeping myself for many years.

20,851. Where do the farm servants go in the evening; is there any place where they can sit down in the farmhouse?—No, there is not.

20,852. Where do they go?—I believe that they go to the villages or anywhere. I believe that partly accounts for the immorality in the country.

20,853. What do you mean by "anywhere?"—They wander about places that they are not required to go to.

20,854. You think that leads to immorality?—Yes, I know that it does in many instances.

20,855. What would you suggest as a remedy?—That either the landlords or the tenants should arrange for more suitable places for them for the evening, and that there should be fires for them.

20,856. That there should be a place where they could sit down together?—Yes.

20,857. You think that that would keep them at home more?—Yes, and to read good books possibly.

Lord Kenyon.

20,858. Whose fault is it that they have not got sufficient room, the landlords or the farmers?—I am almost afraid that it is the farmers' fault. I have been speaking to the agent of a large estate in Anglesey, and he said here that no one had been ever asking him to provide sleeping accommodation for the servants.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,859. You consider, if the landlord was to provide accommodation in the farmhouse for the outdoor servants, that the servants would submit to go there to sleep?—Yes, I believe that a great many would at any rate.

20,860. We have heard otherwise—that the labourers would not go inside if there was accommodation for them?—No; I can state for my own district that they would.

20,861. Do the female servants ramble about in the evenings as well?—Only on errands, because they sleep in the farmhouse.

20,862. Do you believe that many of the farm cottages have come to the ground, and there are fewer than there used to be?—Yes, a great many.

20,863. Then in those days I suppose the farm servants went into the cottages to spend the evening?—The cottages, I refer to, were for married men.

20,864. But did not the farm servants go to the married men's cottages to spend the evenings in olden times?—Yes, on occasions.

20,865. More so in your time than at present—they had cottages to go to where they could spend the evening—they cannot have cottages now?—There are cottages, but not so many.

20,866. Do you consider that there ought to be more cottages?—Yes, I do, a great many more.

20,867. Are you of opinion that if these cottagers kept a cow as well, that that would induce them to stay in the country more?—Nothing would do so much good to the country districts as that.

20,868. You consider it would be good to the country?—Yes, it would be a very great benefit.

20,869. I understand you are a fowl merchant?—Yes.

20,870. Do the farmers in this neighbourhood rear much poultry?—Yes, a great number, especially this year.

20,871. Why this year more than other years?—The reason is that pigs have been so dear, they thought fowls would pay better.

20,872. Do you consider a wet climate is as good for breeding fowls as a dry one?—No, I do not.

20,873. Do you not think if there was better accommodation for the farmers to keep their fowls indoors, that they could breed poultry to a better profit?—Yes, they have to go out as well.

20,874. I want to know, do you think that the farmers have proper houses for keeping fowls as they should have—to keep them in when it is wet?—No, they have not, except in very rare instances.

Lord Kenyon.

20,875. With regard to these two farms of Sir Richard Bulkeley, Clymwr and Llwyn-yr-arth, did he not offer them to the tenants before the public sale?—Yes, he offered them for more than their value.

20,876. When he offered them at auction, did they pay more than what he offered them for?—I am not quite sure of that, as to Llanbabo.

20,877. There are questions by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Do you think the farmers would be "glad to take leases, provided they were offered "on favourable terms?"—Yes, I do.

20,878. "Do you consider the manner in "which farms have been put on sale, so as to "fall to the highest bidder, fair to the tenants "who have made improvements?"—No, it is not, by a long way.

20,879. "Are there as many labourers' cot-"tages in this district as there were formerly?" —No, there are not.

20,880. These are questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "You have no complaint to make of "your treatment on Lord Anglesey's estate?" —No, I have not.

20,881. "You say small holdings are dearer "in proportion to large ones?"—Yes.

20,882. Do you consider that the cost of buildings and repairs on such holdings are out of proportion to the rent?—Yes, I consider so, and for that reason I say that the rent of small holdings ought to be higher.

20,883. "If the labourers are to have land to "keep cows, would the farmers be willing to "part with some of their land for this pur-"pose"?—No, I do not consider that they would.

20,884. Farmers would not?—No.

20,885. It is rather difficult for the labourer then. "Would not some of the farms that were "bought by tenants on the Baron Hill estate "fetch far better prices even now"?—I have no reason to think that.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,886. I only want to ask this. You said the farmers would not be willing to give them plots of ground to keep a cow or so. What would you say if the County Council, or some other authority, did that?—I should like to see that.

Lord Kenyon.

20,887. Where would the County Council get it; they would have to get it out of the farmer, would they not?—But the farmer should be compelled to allow it.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,888. Do you think that so many of these small farms being sold in the neighbourhood discourages the tenants to improve their farms as they otherwise should?—Yes, it does, and for that reason the land in Anglesey is not half cultivated, as it should be.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Hughes called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

20,889. Has this statement been read over to you by Professor Rhŷs, and do you say that it is correct and that it is the evidence you wish to give?—Yes.

The following statement was read:—

"Evidence of John Hughes, 20, Llewelyn Street, Aberffraw.

"I am a farm labourer, and have been appointed by a meeting of the farm labourers of the county to give evidence. My evidence will relate to the Aberffraw district.

"The General Condition of the Farming Population.

"Labourers.—I consider the hired labourers and members of the household very equal, with regard to the amount of work done by them. The majority of the labourers, as a rule, are lodged on the farm premises, and only about one per cent. live on their own finding (excepting those on the Bodorgan Home Farm). All the labourers on the farms live on their employers' finding.

"Wages.—Many fluctuations in wages have taken place during the last 50 years. About 50 years ago the average wages were about 6*s.* a week, but, in addition to this, the labourer was allowed grazing land for a sheep or two, for a cow, and a place to plant potatoes. Butter and milk were also often allowed in addition to the wages. At that period the labourer could get a house on the farm together with a portion of land for about 30*s.* a year, and the master and servant were more closely connected together than at present. In the course of 30 years from that date the wages gradually increased, so that about 20 years ago they were 12*s.* a week and food. As the wages increased the perquisites in connexion with the old wages of 6*s.* a week disappeared. During the last 20 years the wages have gradually decreased, so that by now they are only about 9*s.* a week and food; and the perquisites have disappeared entirely. Further, the houses which were then let at 30*s.* are now rented at about 3*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* a year.

"The accommodation at meal times is fairly comfortable, and, as a rule, there is no complaint against it. There is no accommodation whatever provided for the labourers for the evening, only to let them go where they will.

"The sleeping accommodation, as a rule, is very unworthy for moral beings. In this they are placed on a level with the cattle. The condition of the labourer in this respect is in great need of improvement. The accommodation for the maid servants is very different, as they sleep in the houses, the same as the members of the household. There were in the past many more conveniences for the workmen in their dwelling-houses, than there are at present.

"The majority of the labourers live in the villages, at a distance of about a mile, on an average, from the farms. Formerly the labourers lived generally in small holdings, but by now this is a very unusual thing, and the small holdings have been consolidated with the farms. As a rule, the labourers' cottages in this district are in a very dilapidated state.

"Gardens, allotments, &c.—These are generally rented at about 3*l.* an acre. It is but fair to add that the sand-hills are free for grazing purposes, but the rabbits are reserved, so that the labourer is not allowed to kill them.

"An average of 80 per cent. of the labourers hold their dwelling-houses under the landlord of the village, and that on seven days' notice. Some of the others hold their houses under the farmers as middlemen, and some under private individuals, subject to six months' notice."

Lord Kenyon—continued.

20,890. Then, according to your view, the labourer is not so well off as he was 20 years ago?—No, he is not.

20,891. Who erects the cottages on your estate?—Sir George Meyrick, Bodorgan.

20,892. It is done by the landlord?—Yes.

20,893. Are you a farm labourer?—Yes.

20,894. Do you think it better to hold direct from your landlord or through the farmer. Which do you think would be the best?—The farmer would be the best, because he gives six months' notice to quit instead of seven days; it would be better that we should have six months to look out for a new house, rather than that we should have only seven days.

20,895. Are you satisfied that the farmer would keep the cottage in such good repair as the landlord?—The farmer is the best of the two yonder.

20,896. Do you think that if a recreation room was put up in the village, that the labourers would make use of it?—Yes, I do.

20,897. There is no such place now, I suppose?—No, nothing whatever of that kind.

20,898. Are there public-houses?—There are three public-houses.

20,899. Do they go there much?—Yes, a great many of them.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,900. You heard the previous witness's evidence, I think?—Yes, I did.

20,901. He mentioned the lack of accommodation for the farm servants in the houses. Is your impression somewhat the same?—Yes, it is.

20,902. Do you trace any evils to that state of things in your neighbourhood?—Well, I could say a good deal on that subject.

20,903. Let us hear what it is?—The day schools teach the children until they have passed Standard V. or until they are 13 years of age, and then they go to the farmers and they are put to sleep and live with the cattle, and they lose all that they have learnt in the school, and become of the same nature as the beasts. That is the truth of the matter.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,904. You are a married man, are you not?—Yes, I am.

20,905. Have you a garden?—Yes.

20,906. Do you raise sufficient potatoes in your garden for the use of your family?—No, I cannot.

20,907. Do you plant any potatoes in the farmer's field?—No, we have lost that right.

20,908. You are not allowed to plant any potatoes in the field now?—Not as a rule, but there are some who have an arrangement of that kind as part of their wages.

20,909. Do you not consider that the price of flour and other things is cheaper now than 20 years ago?—No, it is not so.

20,910. Who has the profit? Wheat was sold at a much higher price 20 years ago?—I believe the merchant gets it in a very great measure. The farmer at any rate does not get it.

20,911. Are the hours of labour now as long as they were 20 years ago?—No, they are not. They used to be 14 hours; now they are 12 hours.

20,912. You have gained two hours in that way?—Yes.

20,913. Do you consider that the labourers work quite as hard now as they did 20 years ago?—Yes, I do.

20,914. Do they mow with the scythe now, or with mowing machines as a rule?—They do it in both ways.

Mr. Grove.

20,915. Have you any land beyond your own garden?—None at all.

20,916. What wages do you get?—9*s.* per week and my food.

20,917. Is there any benefit society or club amongst the labourers that you know of?—No, there is not.

20,918. I think you said in your evidence that only about one per cent. of the labourers now live on their own "finding"?—No, on their own "food."

20,919. Is that a less number than there used to be years ago?—It is more, I think. There were none of that class formerly.

Lord Kenyon.

20,920. Would you mind stating what your diet is?—We have not much reason to complain as to food.

20,921. We have heard one statement as to what the food is, and all the more reason if you have no complaint to make for telling us. What do you get for breakfast?—Coffee, bread, and butter-milk; sometimes bread and butter-milk; sometimes bread and milk; and sometimes oatmeal porridge.

20,922. Is it oatmeal porridge made with milk?—Oatmeal gruel made with milk.

20,923. For dinner?—For dinner we have potatoes and butter, and we very often have meat, and butter alternately with the meat.

20,924. Fresh or salt meat?—Sometimes fresh meat, sometimes salt meat.

20,925. How often do you get fresh meat?—Just as the supply happens to be; sometimes the farmer gets fresh meat and salts it for us.

20,926. And tea?—Tea and bread and butter.

20,927. And supper?—Porridge is our supper.

20,928. I suppose that finishes the day?—Sometimes butter-milk with the porridge, and sometimes fresh milk, that is to say, in summer always sweet milk.

20,929. How about "cwrw." Is there any beer given?—I never drank a drop in my life. I never drank any liquor at all.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,930. Are you able to work as well as other labourers?—Yes, more able than anyone who drinks.

Mr. Grove.

20,931. We should like you to know that two of the Commissioners are teetotallers who are before you now?—I have been working at farm-houses all my life, and coal mines and other works, and I find that those who drink lose in competition with those who do not.

Lord Kenyon.

20,932. Will you tell us whether the majority of the labourers are teetotallers or not?—No, the majority are not teetotallers.

20,933. Perhaps they would be, if there was a recreation ground instead of three public-houses?—I believe they would. They have been brought up well, and after being brought up well, they go to improper places in the evenings.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,934. Do you think it would be advantageous to a labourer to have a cow and a bit of land to keep it?"—Yes, it would be a great assistance to those who are without that.

20,935. Do you not think that farmers who have a good man would like to keep him by letting him have a bit of land to keep a cow?—It is not a custom for them to do so at present. The farms are too dear by far to the farmer. He is not able to do it.

Mr. Grove.

20,936. How much would an ordinary labourer spend in drink in a week—about?—I cannot answer that question, because I keep clear of them myself.

20,937. These are questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Is there not in almost every farm, "house a back kitchen in which the labourers "can sit if they like?"—That has been the case, but somehow the gulf has grown between the farmers and their labourers.

Mr. Grove—continued.

20,938. In this country are there parlours which the farmers do not occupy in their houses?—Yes, almost belonging to every farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,939. Do the farmers make no use whatever of these parlours?—I cannot say. I am not allowed to go into them.

20,940. What has been the cause of this gulf between the labourer and the farmer?—I believe that education is the cause of it.

20,941. Do you think that farmers' children are better educated than the labourers' children?—Yes, I do.

20,942. You mean the large farmers, not the small ones. The testimony we have heard elsewhere is that the labourers' children are able to attend school more regularly than the small farmers' children?—Well, that is the case, but farmers' children get superior education.

Lord Kenyon.

20,943. Do they not go to the same schools?—Only one out of a hundred.

20,944. What school do the farmers' children go to then?—They are sent away to be educated.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,945. You are speaking of the large farmers; you are not speaking of the small farmers?—The farmers on small holdings are obliged to send their children to the same schools as the labourers.

Lord Kenyon.

20,946. These are some more questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Is it not a fact that the "farmers have no control at all over their "labourers after the day's work is done, and "that the labourers will not be controlled in "the evenings?"—They have the right, but they have given the labourers freedom to go where they like after leaving off work.

20,947. I do not think you understood the question. [Question repeated]?—If there is necessity they will do so, otherwise they take their own freedom and go where they like.

Professor Rhŷs.

20,948. What do you mean by "necessity"?—I mean helping in the evening on the farms.

20,949. Were you not thinking of the farm servants rather than the farm labourers in that answer?—The paid labourer is allowed to go to his own house after leaving off work, but the servants on the farm do any work that is required of them in the evening; if there is none they take their liberty to go anywhere they like.

Lord Kenyon.

20,950. This is another question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "You mention that labourers cannot "kill rabbits. Where do you think they ought "to be able to kill them." That was on the common I think you said; on the sand hills?—I was speaking of the sand hills.

20,951. "Do you not think the merchants "(middlemen) are getting more profit than they "should in these bad times?"—Yes, I do, and the railway companies charge unreasonably high rates in our district, for carrying goods.

20,952. "Do you think that even if the rents "were lower the farmers would willingly give "up some of their land for the labourers to "keep cows?"—I cannot answer that question.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. R. Hughes called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

20,953. I believe you have a statement you have to give us, Mr. Hughes. Will you kindly make it?—I will read my evidence.

"The evidence of J. R. Hughes, Coeden, Llanfechell.

"I am a tenant farmer, occupying the above holding, and am a member of the Anglesey County Council, by which body I was appointed to give evidence.

"I beg to offer evidence chiefly with regard to the insecurity of tenure, and the insecurity of compensation for improvements.

"I believe the land is capable of being made to produce much more than it does at present, but the energy of the farmers is crippled, as they are afraid of going to the expense that they would wish, when they see the farms of tenants who have spent much money being sold, and the landlord pocketing the proceeds of the tenant's improvements.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

"The following is one instance out of many more:—

"Glan y gors, Llanbabo, on the Baron Hill estate. See 21,048, 21,766.

"The tenant up to November 1891 was Mr. Thomas J. Thomas, now of Glyn, Llanbedrgoch. He and his father before him had spent in the course of 51 years, the following sums on the farm:—

	£	s.	d.
"Hedges and planting thorns	63	0	0
"Opening watercourses and drains	170	0	0
"Enlarging and repairing the house	180	0	0

"In the year 1891 Mr. Thomas, together with all the other tenants in the parish of Llanbabo, found that their farms were to be sold by public auction. Before the sale, Mr. Thomas asked whether he should have compensation for his improvements, when Mr. Preston (Sir Richard Bulkeley's agent) replied as follows :—

"Estate Office, Baron Hill, Beaumaris,
18th June, 1891.

To Mr. T. J. Thomas, Glan y gors, Llanbabo, Rhosgoch, Anglesey.

Dear Sir,

With reference to your letter of May 23rd, which I have submitted to Sir Richard Bulkeley, I am instructed by him to say that it is only right you should be informed that you have no legal claim whatever against him for any improvements on your farm.

At the same time he wishes to act in a fair manner in the matter.

He will fully consider your case, and whatever compensation he may think of allowing you, will depend on the sum realised for this farm at the sale. Therefore the better the price, so in proportion will he allow (if he considers it just) you for improvements.

Mr. Laurie informs me that according to the old rules of the estate, no compensation would be allowed after the expiration of seven years from the date of the outlay.

However, Sir Richard Bulkeley will be sure to deal fairly in the matter.

I am, yours faithfully,
WILLIAM M. PRESTON."

"The day of the sale came but the reserved price was so high that neither Mr. Thomas nor anyone else could purchase it. Mr. Thomas then took another farm on the Bodorgan estate, through the kindness of Mr. Prichard, Llwydiarth, and Sir Richard had to occupy Glan y gors himself for a period. Towards the end of the year, after failing to sell the farm, Mr. Thomas received the following letter from Mr. Preston, asking whether he would wish to remain tenant of the farm.

"Estate Office, Baron Hill, Beaumaris,
October 16th, 1891.

To Mr. Thomas J. Thomas,
Glan y gors, Llanbabo,

Dear Sir,

In reply to your letter of yesterday's date I will as requested send a valuer to value hay and straw on your farm in a few days. Will you inform me if you would wish to continue your tenancy, if so I will bring the matter before Sir Richard Bulkeley, on getting your reply.

Yours faithfully,
W. M. PRESTON."

"Mr. Thomas had prior to this taken the other farm, so he applied to Sir Richard for compensation enclosing a statement, of which the following is a copy, of the improvements he had made on the place after the death of his father.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

STATEMENT of ALTERATIONS and IMPROVEMENTS made at GLAN Y GORS, LLANBABO.

		£	s.	d.
1874	Alteration and improvement of house, approved by Mr. Laurie.	150	0	0
1875	New double cattle shed - -	70	0	0
1882–90	Facing and improving boundary fence and planting 2,000 quicksets.	30	0	0
	Facing and improving other fences and laying stone foundations.	10	0	0
1880–90	Opening of four main watercourses to dry and improve bog.	46	0	0
		£316	0	0

In reply he received the following letter :—

"Estate Office, Baron Hill, Beaumaris,
December 7th, 1892.

To Mr. Thomas J. Thomas,
Glyn, Llanbedrgoch,
Pentraeth, Anglesey.

Re Glan y gors, Llanbabo.

Dear Sir,

I beg to enclose you a cheque for 30*l.*, a gift from Sir Richard Bulkeley to you towards money laid out by you at above. This without prejudice. Please acknowledge receipt of this.

Yours faithfully,
W. M. PRESTON."

"Mr. Thomas acknowledged the receipt of this sum, and at the same time made another application that his case should be re-considered. In reply to this application Mr. Preston wrote as follows :—

"Estate Office, Baron Hill, Beaumaris,
December 9th, 1891.

To Mr. Thomas J. Thomas,
Glynn, Llanbedrgoch, near Pentraeth

Dear Sir, re Glan y gors.

I will make arrangements as soon as I can to settle for the hay, straw, &c., on the above farm. As regards compensation, I beg to remind you that I offered you back the tenancy of the farm which you declined. Therefore taking that and other things into consideration, I do not feel justified in advising Sir Richard to give you further compensation.

Yours faithfully,
W. M. PRESTON."

"Of course the offer, referred to in the letter, of the continuance of the tenancy had come to Mr. Thomas too late, as he only received it in the middle of October, after he had taken the other farm Finally, Mr. Thomas addressed the following letter to Sir Richard personally, but to no purpose : —

"Glyn, Llanbedrgoch, near Pentraeth, 17th May 1892.

Sir Richard,

I beg to say that I have enclosed statement of alterations and improvements made by me at Glan y gors, Llanbabo, and I beg most respectfully to request your kind consideration of the same, with the view of my getting fair and reasonable compensation for them. I beg to inform you that I have been induced to write this, by my being impressed with the idea that it might be, that a full and correct description and information had not been given to you of the said alterations and improvements, but I am far from thinking that it arose from any unfriendly feeling towards me. I know your earnest wish to act considerately and generously towards your tenants, from your expressed sentiments on different occasions.

I beg to say that your ex-agent, Mr. Laurie, is quite acquainted with the said alterations and improvements, and I may mention that he can confirm my statement with reference thereto. I beg to state that it would have given me very great pleasure to remain a tenant of the Baron Hill estate, and I deem it my duty to thank Mr. Preston for the kind letter of inquiry of the 16th of October 1891, asking whether I would wish to continue the tenancy of Glanygors; but you will allow me to allude to the uncertainty of the said tenancy, the farm being likely to go under the hammer a second time, and having a large family, it was a matter of great importance to me to try and obtain a permanent tenancy, lest I should be without any place at all. I may also add, that I had taken the present farm previous to the receipt of the letter alluded to. You will permit me to say that I have been credibly informed that I offered hundreds of pounds more for the farm than any other bidder. It appears that the tenant of Llwyn-yr-arth (and I know of some others) has had a satisfactory compensation for what he has done, hoping the same will be extended to me. You will allow me to state, Sir Richard, that I left the farm in good order, without doing any damage or injury to anything, and I beg to say that Mr. Preston has recognised this, and expressed a wish to thank me for leaving so creditably and respectably. I may say that it is a well-known fact in the parish of Llanbabo that I considerably improved the farm during the time of my tenancy. I beg to say, Sir Richard, that I make no formal claim for a specified amount, but I beg to humbly appeal to your sense of honour and justice, hoping that you will find the circumstances of my case worthy of your honourable and just consideration.

I beg to remain, Sir Richard,
Your most obedient servant,
Thomas J. Thomas.
Sir Richard Bulkeley, Bart."

"The tenant was thus obliged to leave with only 30*l.* compensation for permanent improvements which had cost 1,113*l.* to him and his father, of which sum he personally had spent 316*l.*, within the last 17 years of the tenancy. It will be seen that the landlord had profited by the improvements from the fact that Glanygors, before the improvements were made, was only rented at 116*l.*, while some years after, the rent was raised to 126*l.*, and then, when the tenant had repaired the house, and built a shed at a cost of some hundreds of pounds, the rent was raised to 136*l.*

"There is a small farm called Gwenithfryn, in the parish of Llanfechell, which belongs to the parish of Llaneilian, and according to the parish records for the year 1814, the farm was then occupied by one David Lewis, to whom the parishioners let it at 13*l.* a year. This amount was given towards repairing the church. After some years the rent was raised to 15*l.*, and then to 17*l.* David Lewis died, and his son Richard Lewis succeeded him as tenant of the place. This tenant again died, and was succeeded by his widow. When the Reverend Hugh Thomas came into possession of the living of Llaneilian, about 20 years ago, the rent was again advanced 7*l.* to the widow, so as to make it 24*l.* The following year the widow died, and was succeeded by her daughter, who still occupies the farm, and pays 24*l.* a year. I am doubtful whether the rector had a right to raise the rent without the consent of the parishioners. If he had not, a sum of about 200*l.* has been extorted from the tenants."

Lord Kenyon.

20,954. Who was the rector?—The Reverend Hugh Thomas was the rector at the time.

20,955. The rector of Llaneilian?—Yes.

20,956. That is near Amlwch?—Yes.

20,957. Did this tenant of Glanygors send his statement of the claim with these letters to Sir Richard, or to Mr. Preston?—Yes, to Mr. Preston.

20,958. He sent the schedule which you have here?—Yes.

20,959. What were the "other buildings." Are they farm buildings—the 700*l.*, the last item?—Yes, I think, and repairing the house too.

20,960. Repairing the house is 180*l.*?—Yes, the outbuildings.

20,961. You do not know what the "other" includes, except you think it is farm buildings?—I do not know.

20,962. Is the tenant going to speak himself on this?—Yes.

20,963. Is he here?—No, he is not at present. He has not sent his name in.

20,964. You do not know what the rent of Glanygors was, do you?—Yes, it was 136*l.*, I think.

20,965. I mean per acre?—I do not know that.

20,966. Do you happen to know what the reserve price on the farm was?—No, I do not know.

20,967. Did Mr. Thomas ask you to come and give this information?—Yes.

20,968. Why did not Mr. Thomas come himself, do you know?—I do not know.

20,969. I see here is another schedule put in of Glanygors—that was by Mr. Laurie?—Yes.

20,970. As to this Gwenithfryn, do you think there should have been a meeting of the parishioners to consider that?—I do not know.

20,971. What do you consider?—It belonged to the parish.

20,972. It was not part of the glebe. Did it belong to the rector or to the parish? I suppose it was administered by someone for the parish?—Well, he raised the rent on his own responsibility.

20,973. You think that that is not right?—That is what I think.

20,974. If the rent was to be raised or lowered somebody should have done it, I suppose. Who ought to have managed it, do you know?—No, I do not.

Mr. Grove.

20,975. Do you not think trustees would have been appointed in a matter of that sort?—Yes.

20,976. You do not know whether any trustees were appointed?—I do not.

20,977. Do we gather in the case where the correspondence took place with the agent of Sir Richard that the father of the tenant spent something like 1,100*l.* on improvements altogether?—Yes, the father and the son.

20,978. And when the farm was given up by the tenants they had only 30*l.* compensation. Did we gather that correctly?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,979. Am I to understand that the claim of 1,113*l.* was sent in to the landlord?—Oh, no, not that.

Lord Kenyon.

20,980. That is the question I asked you and you said yes. The claim that was sent in was one of 316*l.*?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,981. But the other claim was never sent in?—That was not the claim, but the statement of cost.

20,982. How did the landlord come to give 30*l.* on that account?—I do not know 20,983 Did he send any one to value it, or on what account did he give the 30*l.*?—I do not know.

20,984. Someone should know and be able to tell us. What was offered for the farm?—I do not know indeed.

20,985. Are these copied out of any book, or only some random statements put down?—Mr. Thomas sent them himself to me.

20,986. You cannot say whether he has copied them off anything?—Oh, yes, here it is [handing original book].

Professor Rhŷs.

20,987. I understood that 1,100*l.* odd was only a statement?—Only a statement.

20,988. The claim was never laid before the landlord, or asked for?—There was no claim for that.

20,989. Why do you think there was no claim. Did the tenant consider he had no legal right to that compensation?—Well, he considered that it was no use, I think.

20,990. He considered it no use claiming it?—Quite so.

20,991. Why, because he could not prove it, or because he could not force the landlord to pay, or how?—It had been done so far back that there was no legal claim for it.

Lord Kenyon.

20,992. This is a question from Mr. Preston: "Do you know anything at all of your own "personal knowledge of the statements you "have put in?"—No, I do not know personally, but I have heard a good deal spoken about this matter besides by Mr. Thomas, and I know a little about the farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

20,993. Did Mr. Thomas depend more upon Sir Richard's generosity, rather than think that he would fare better if he had made a claim or sent in his claim?—Yes, he says that in one of his letters—that he trusted to the honour of Sir Richard, that he would allow him to receive the compensation. And another thing was this, Sir Richard himself had promised that he would do everything that was fair and honourable towards him.

Lord Kenyon.

20,994. This is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "I suppose you are only here as the "mouthpiece of a party"—the mouthpiece of someone else?—I am not here as the mouthpiece of any party.

20,995. Do you think at all so far as you know that any tenant farmers are afraid to come here and give evidence?—There are a few.

20,996. Is not that rather cowardly of them. I see one of the papers said so the other day?—Yes, it is. The present state of the law as between landlord and tenant is such, that the tenant is afraid to come forward and give evidence.

20,997. Do you know and do the people in this neighbourhood know of the existence of an Act for the protection of witnesses before Royal Commissions?—Yes, I have frequently heard of such a thing. I do not think they are afraid in one sense, but a landlord may do many things without bringing himself within that Act.

20,998. This is a question by Mr. R. H. Williams: "By whom were you appointed to "give evidence before the Commission?"—By the County Council.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

20,999. Have you gone through this statement with Professor Rhŷs, and do you say that the evidence therein contained is correct?—I do.

The following statement was read:—

"John Jones, late tenant to Sir George Meyrick, farm 42 acres.

"Our family have been on the Bodorgan estate over 120 years, 88 of which under lease and 32 yearly tenancy, and recently we bought the farm. The land is not let to the highest bidder. In the year 1863 the lease of Ysgubor Fadog expired. After a few days nine persons were asking for the farm before my father, and one offering a high rent for it, but the custom of the estate was to assess the rent according to the valuation of a land valuer, which was 7*l.* less than the other man's offer. The rent was not changed since assessed. We had deductions of 5, 10, 15 per cent. from 1883 to 1890. When a tenant I made many improvements in building, fencing, and draining, which I consider 123*l.* I sent in a bill for the same and it was paid in full. I prefer being a yearly tenant than a freeholder if a land is mortgaged, because the interest is too high on land."

21,000. I take it you are on good terms with your landlord?—Yes.

21,001. Do you think there would be any advantage in what we have heard so much of, namely, a Land Court?—On estates where the best feeling prevails between landlord and tenant I think it might do harm.

21,002. What is the feeling on your estate with regard to the agent?—Everybody likes him I believe because he is a practical farmer himself and a Welshman.

21,003. Would you say that the majority of the tenants on Sir George Meyrick's estate are satisfied with the present state of things?—I think they are in my neighbourhood.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,004. Suppose you were not on good terms with your landlord for one reason or another; how would you get on then?—Do you mean in regard to a Land Court or how.

21,005. How would you manage to get on with your landlord supposing there was any difference between you and you could not agree?—I would try to agree at the commencement.

21,006. Most people try to do that, but sometimes they fail to get on, as there are various sources of possible disagreement. How would you proceed if anything of that sort arose?—I cannot say; I have no experience of that.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,007. Who is the agent?—Mr. Thomas Prichard.

21,008. Have all the tenants you know of been compensated the same as you have, for their improvements?—I believe every tenant has, but I am not sure that every tenant has had full compensation for this reason: I have been making six bills for tenant farmers besides my own bill, and not one of the six took the same basis as I did.

21,009. What was the difference?—They lumped everything by guesswork whilst I have receipts for everything. I have a copy if you wish to see it.

21,010. Are you a Dissenter or a Churchman?—I am a Nonconformist.

Mr. Grove.

21,011. Are agreements generally given? Do you know of any leases?—My family was under a lease on the estate for 88 years.

21,012. Do you know anyone now under a lease?—No, I do not. I know of some in the neighbourhood who have given up their leases unconditionally.

21,013. Do you consider it is as secure to be under an agreement as it would be to be under a lease?—Yes, I do, under a good landlord.

21,014. Suppose you were under a landlord who would be likely to sell the property, how then?—I would buy it if I could get it for what it was worth.

21,015. Do you know any cases where the children of farm labourers are helping their parents—the children living away from home and sending money to their parents to help them pay the rent?—No, I do not 21,016. Do you know any farmers who have failed to pay their way?—I do not remember at this moment.

21,017. Have you any complaint to make about game?—No, I have not; there is very little game in our district.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,018. What you said suggests to me that you do not think the farmers keep accounts sufficiently?—The persons for whom I made out the bills had not kept any kind of accounts; they simply spoke from memory.

21,019. How many were there?—Six farmers.

21,020. About how many farmers would there be in the district round you, that you know on the same estate?—Possibly from 15 to 20, but I am not sure.

21,021. So that, according to your belief, out of 15 or 20 there were six that did not keep proper accounts?—They did not try to keep accounts. There were from 15 to 20 tenants remaining. As to the six that I referred to, the farms were sold about the same time.

21,022. That makes a difference, but you think there is a large number of farmers who do not keep proper accounts?—Yes, I believe that.

21,023. And that leads to their not being able to claim the compensation that they might otherwise do?—It is a disadvantage to them in giving the details.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,024. Do you think that they ever expected that the farms should be sold?—No, I do not think they did.

21,025. That is very likely the reason why they did not keep an account?—Very likely.

Lord Kenyon.

21,026. You are still on your farm?—Yes.

21,027. You get your compensation, although you are still on your farm?—Yes, I bought the farm.

21,028. This is a question by Mr. R. H. Williams: "Were you appointed or requested "by anyone to come forward to give evidence. "If so, by whom?"—No one asked me to come. I felt it to be my duty to come here to speak the truth.

21,029. This is a question by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Is not your case a very exceptional "one?"—I am not aware; there are similar cases in my neighbourhood.

21,030. What other tenant can you name who received the compensation demanded by him?—I think I could name one, who received more than he applied for.

21,031. Will you please name him?—Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, Pantysaer.

21,032. Do you know what she asked for?—No, I cannot say, but I have heard her say that she got more than the bill.

21,033. These are further questions by Mr. Llewelyn Jones: "Can you mention any other "estate in Anglesey where compensation has "been given to tenants for improvements?"—I have not been thinking of any estate, but just about my own case.

21,034. This is a question by Mr. J. Owen Hughes: "Does either politics or religion make "the slightest difference between you and your "landlord?"—So far as I know, it makes not the slightest difference.

21,035. Was the amount received by Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, Pantysaer, more than 10*l.* or 12*l.*?—No, it was only a small bill, I think.

21,036. I ask you this question myself: do you think if the accounts had been better kept, that they would have received compensation in full, like yourself?—I do not know; by putting the amount down by guesswork one is apt to put more than one should.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,037. Mr. Owen Wynne asks: "Then you "were quite satisfied with the way in which "you were treated on the Bodorgan estate?"—Yes, perfectly satisfied.

Mr. Grove.

21,038. I suppose you have never heard any tenants grumbling at the way in which they have been treated on that estate, have you?—No, I have always heard the tenants in my district praising.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,039. You said that you felt bound to come forward to speak the truth, and I understood you put some emphasis on that. What did you exactly mean?—I do not remember that I did emphasise it, but I take it that the duty of a Royal Commission is to get at the truth, and I believe it is the duty of every one in the country to speak the truth before them, on both sides.

21,040. Then you did not mean to cast any reflection on other people's testimony, I take it?—Nothing of the kind.

Lord Kenyon.

21,041. This is a question by Mr. R. H. Williams: "Have you not heard John Thomas, "Pantybugail, complaining on the Bodorgan "estate?"—I have not heard him complaining as to the estate, but of the new tenant, and the man who bought his place. See 21,19

Mr. Griffiths.

21,042. Did he receive compensation?—I think so, but I do not know how much.

21,043. You do not know whether he had what he asked for?—I do not believe that he did get what he asked for, by a good deal.

21,044. I thought you said just now that you did not know of anyone who had not been compensated?—Yes, I said that.

21,045. Now you say that this man had not been?—He has received, but not in full—not by a long way—what he asked for.

21,046. Do you know the amount he asked for?—No, I do not.

21,047. Do you know how much he received?—No, I do not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Jones Thomas called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

See 20,953, 21,766–87.

21,048. Did you give this statement to Mr. J. R. Hughes?—Yes.

21,049. You did not think of giving evidence yourself?—No, I did not.

21,050. With regard to this statement of a claim of 1,113*l.*, did you keep items; have you bills to show for that?—No.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,051. Then how did you estimate them?—I made an estimate.

21,052. From memory?—Yes, the farm has been drained every eight yards of it.

21,053. The two chief items are put as 700*l.* for other buildings; can you explain that?—They were all built by my father and myself.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,054. How far back do they go?—The first buildings were built in 1844, but part of the house had been built the year before that.

21,055. That would be 1843; they go back 50 years approximately?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,056. How many acres was this farm?—171 acres. That is what it was in my agreement.

Lord Kenyon.

21,057. Would you mind saying what the rent was?—The rent latterly was 136*l.*, after I had built a shed 20 yards long and repaired the house, that cost me 150*l.*

21,058. Did you send in a claim for that?—Yes, I had asked them before I commenced the work, whether they would make me an allowance, and they said they could not, and I said I would not do it. Mr. Laurie was the agent at that time, and he told me to do them, and to do them as well as I could, and to keep an account of what they cost me, and he said that if anything happened I should be paid it.

21,059. I thought you said first of all they refused to let you do them?—Yes, at their cost.

21,060. Then the claim you sent in was this 316*l.*?—Yes.

21,061. Then neither Sir Richard Bulkeley nor Mr. Preston knew anything about this other claim?—No; in the last statement I put down everything that my father and I myself had spent.

21,062. What was the price at which Sir Richard Bulkeley offered you this farm?—I was not informed that. He asked me how much I could give for it, and I sent him a reply.

21,063. How much?—I offered 3,600*l.*, and they refused the offer.

21,064. "The day of the sale came, but the "reserved price was so high that neither Mr. "Thomas nor anyone else could purchase it?" —Yes, it was so.

21,065. How do you know what was the price?—Mr. Dew put it at 4,150*l.*, and he asked me if I would make a further bid of 50*l.* on the day of the sale at the auction.

21,066. We have heard that Sir Richard Bulkeley offered his farm to his tenants before the sale; did he not offer it to you?—No, he did not. He did not do so to anyone, previous to that sale.

21,067. How long prior to the sale was it that Sir Richard asked you what you could afford to give for it?—This was months after the sale.

21,068. You offered this after the sale?—Yes, after the sale.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,069. Is Mr. Laurie dead?—No, he is alive still.

21,070. He discontinued being agent?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

21,071. Did you never apply to Mr. Laurie about the promise he made with regard to the building?—Yes, I did.

21,072. What did he say?—He said he could do nothing, but I ought to receive.

21,073. You never had his promise in writing, had you?—No, I had not. I took it that his word and that of Sir Richard were quite sufficient.

21,074. You consider you lost over 1,000*l.* because you had not got that in writing?—Yes, I do.

21,075. To whom did you make the offer for that farm?—To Mr. Dew.

21,076. The auctioneer?—Yes.

21,077. What did he say to your offer?—He said he could not accept my offer.

21,078. You say he ran up the price?—Yes. At all events, I saw no one else bidding.

21,079. Is it customary in this neighbourhood for the auctioneer to run up the price, to bid more than once for an article?—We were under the impression that he was doing so.

Lord Kenyon.

21,080. You put in your gross estimate 170*l.* for opening watercourses and drains; how recent are any of those?—That goes back as far as 18 years.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,081. Did you know that it was only for seven years you could expect compensation?—No, I did not know that. I received a promise of that kind, that if anything happened I should be paid. I had been asking about it. I had opened four watercourses across the marsh.

21,082. Can you tell me how much an acre it cost you to open these drains and close them?—It was more expensive, because the stones were so far off.

21,083. You could not tell us how much an acre it cost you?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

21,084. They are stone drains, not pipes?—Yes, stone drains.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,085. May I ask you one question? Have you got an agreement?—Yes.

21,086. Did not your agreement state all about the seven years' period?—I cannot be certain.

21,087. Did you ever read it?—Yes, I read it, but I cannot remember. I had not taken particular notice.

Lord Kenyon.

21,088. This is a question by Mr. J. Owen Hughes: "Did your father and yourself get "any timber, slate, lime, &c., towards the other "buildings you mention"?—No, nothing whatever.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,089. This is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you not think improvements "made 50 years ago have pretty well run out?" —I was quite satisfied with that, but I was told to make the claim.

21,090. Who told you to make the claim?—Several people told me that I ought to put it in.

21,091. Neighbours?—Yes.

21,092. Another question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "We heard yesterday that it would be "a very unfortunate thing for many farmers if "their farms were sold. Do you not think that "the present agitation will be likely to lead to "many landowners parting with their property?"—It is sure to be injurious to the tenants.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,093. Do you think that what you call this agitation, will be likely to lead to sales?—I cannot say that.

21,094. What do you mean by "agitation?" —I mean this Commission.

21,095. Will be sure to do harm to the farmers; is that it?—No, I do not think that.

21,096. You meant the sale of property?—If they sell the farms it will be bad.

21,097. Do you think there are more sales likely to take place now than formerly?—I cannot say that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Thomas called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

21,098. Has this evidence been read over to you by Professor Rhŷs, and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"John Thomas, Bwlchgwyn Farm, Tynygongl.

"I am a tenant farmer farming 74 acres on the Bodorgan estate of Sir George Meyrick. I believe matters are carried out satisfactorily on this estate. Sir George Meyrick cannot speak Welsh, and I cannot speak English. The usual time for leaving farms is the 13th November. As far as I know, leases are not usual in my district. I do not know of any instance where a lease has been asked for and refused. In my own case I feel as secure under an agreement as I would be under a lease. I do not object to any clause in my agreement. A copy of the agreement has been supplied to me, and it has been explained to me in Welsh by the agent. The rent is fixed in a lump sum, and not per acre. I believe there is uniformity in the rents on the Bodorgan estate, but I cannot say anything as to other estates. I have always considered that rents are higher on small farms, in proportion than to large farms. The tenants are not required to give their services to the landlord. I do not think farms are let to the highest bidder. My rent has not been advanced or reduced, but abatements of 5, 10, 15, and 20 per cent. have been allowed. The local rates have been about the same, ever since I can remember. I do not know of any instances where farms have been consolidated, or of underletting. Rents are due at the end of September, but they are not paid until the 20th to the 25th January. This extension was granted without any request being made. I do not know of instances of tenants who have had to borrow money, to pay rent. There is no scarcity of labourers, and no land has gone out of cultivation. Very little waste land is cultivated. Root crops have considerably increased, the reason being that larger stocks are now kept than was the case 50 years ago. The improvements are made partly by the landlord and partly by the tenant. If a tenant leaves the farm owing to its being sold, or for any other reason, within 21 years the tenant receives back the proportion of his outlay. I do not think there are any real grievances in consequence of the game laws. I know of cases where children are useful in assisting their parents to pay the rent by working on the farms. They get little if any wages. I know of farmers without children who are able to pay their way."

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,099. You say that things are very satisfactory on the estate, that the landlord cannot speak Welsh, and you cannot speak English. Does that help you to a better understanding?—No, I do not think it is a help, but I consider this, that we have a Welsh agent, and, in addition to that, he is a practical farmer and knows what a farm is.

21,100. So that you have no difficulty, because the agent understands Welsh?—Yes.

21,101. You say that the children are useful in helping the parents to pay their way. Do you know of any farmers who would have been unable to pay but for the help of their children?—I know of some to whom it would be more difficult.

21,102. Do you know of any whose children are away working, and sending money home to help their parents to pay the rent?—No, I do not know of any such cases.

21,103. You know of no such cases on the Bodorgan estate?—No, I do not.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,104. What size is your farm?—74 acres and a little in addition.

21,105. Have you made any improvements upon your farm?—Yes.

21,106. Do you know of any tenants that have left that estate that have not been adequately compensated for their improvements?—I do not consider that we do get full compensation, but we are satisfied, so far as I know.

21,107. Several farms have been sold on this estate, have they not?—A few small holdings in my neighbourhood only.

21,108. Were they all compensated?—So far as I know that is the case. I have heard several say so, and they have received more than they expected.

21,109. Are you a Churchman?—No, I am a Nonconformist.

Mr. Grove.

21,110. You say you would be as secure under an agreement as you would be under a lease?—Yes, under Sir George Meyrick.

21,111. Suppose the property were sold, how would it affect you then?—I am sure I cannot say how it would be then.

21,112. Suppose Sir George Meyrick were to die, how would it affect you then?—So far as I know, and I have heard say too, the heir to the estate is another such man as Sir George Meyrick, and I consider that Sir George Meyrick is as good a landlord, if not better, than anyone in Anglesey.

21,113. I am sure I hope that Sir George Meyrick may live for a great many years, and that the heir to the estate may be just as good as he is?—I hope he will live for another 150 years.

21,114. What is the rent you pay?—44*l.* 10*s.*

21,115. Do you know of much waste land that might be brought under cultivation?—There is only a very small quantity in my district compared with other districts.

Lord Kenyon.

21,116. This is a question by Mr. R. H. Williams: "Were you requested by someone "to come forward to give evidence?"—No, no one. I felt it was my duty to come forward.

21,117. "Did Mr. J. Jones, clerk to the agent "of the Bodorgan estate, call upon you on the "matter?"—He understood I was anxious to come forward to give evidence on behalf of Sir George Meyrick, and he came yonder and asked me if I had a copy of the questions that were usually asked.

21,118. "Have any other of the tenants on "the Bodorgan estate been requested to give "evidence by some person or persons connected "with the estate?"—I am not aware of anyone in my neighbourhood.

21,119. They have come forward spontaneously?—So far as I understand.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,120. Did you show him your evidence which you were going to give before the Commission?—No, I did not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. E. Jones Williams called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

21,121. Has this statement been read over by Professor Rhŷs to you, is it correct, and is it the evidence you wish to give?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"E. Jones Williams, Ddrydwy, Ty Croes.

20,607. "I desire to give evidence as to the case of a widow tenant of Cymmunod, Bodedern, belonging to the late Archdeacon Wynne Jones, of Treiorwerth, in the same parish. I also propose to speak on the present state of agriculture generally, and in particular as to (1) the letting of land; (2) agreements; (3) the necessity for a Land Act and a Land Court.

"Case of a Widow.

"A tenant went into a farm in the parish of Bodedern about 1860, when it was in a very poor condition as regards manuring, and also as to the buildings, which were deficient in number. They were also too small. He went on to improve the land and to erect out-buildings, and he carried out other improvements until the year 1875 when he was taken ill. He died on the 21st January 1876, leaving a widow and five children. To make matters worse she was served with a notice to quit, or pay 530*l.*

for a 20 years' lease. She was also to pay the same rent, viz., 120*l.* a year for 115 acres, although he had spent 300*l.* on the farm. She would therefore be losing the whole of this money without a penny of compensation, and be turned out of her farm without any hope of finding a home elsewhere. The lease therefore cost 830*l.* and not 530*l.* as might at first appear. The farm was bought about three years ago for 3,000*l.* by the widow of the farmer."

21,122. Had the widow any children capable of carrying on the farm?—No; at that time the boys were very young.

21,123. What was the size of the farm?—115 acres.

21,124. Had she a bailiff?—Yes, she had a bailiff.

21,125. Had she any capital?—Yes, she had.

21,126. Am I to understand that she paid a premium of 530*l.* for this lease?—Yes.

21,127. Was it a premium?—Yes.

21,128. She bought the farm three years ago for 3,000*l.*?—Yes.

21,129. But the lease had not expired?—No, there were six or seven years still to run.

21,130. Did she get anything back?—Nothing.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,131. Did she pay this 530*l.* for the lease?—Yes.

21,132. Did she pay the same rent as before?—Yes.

21,133. And you say her husband had spent 300*l.* upon the farm?—Yes.

21,134. No compensation?—No compensation.

21,135. Did he have any help in draining pipes?—No.

21,136. And nothing towards buildings?—No.

21,137. How long a lease did she have?—20 years.

21,138. What do you consider the 530*l.* were exactly paid for?—For security of tenure. If she could carry on the farm, no one would have any right to say anything to her. It was simply for security of tenure. She was compelled to pay that money or she would have to lose the farm.

21,139. Those were the conditions put before her?—Yes.

21,140. By whom?—By Archdeacon Wynne Jones.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

21,141. Was there an agent in the matter?—He had no agent in particular. It was rather a small estate.

Lord Kenyon.

21,142. This is a question put in by Mr. Vincent: "Do you know whether the farm was "sold by auction or whether the widow had "the first offer?"—By private treaty.

21,143. I ask you this myself: When she bought it by private treaty she knew she was relinquishing the seven years of her lease?—Of course she knew that.

21,144. Was not that taken into consideration in the price of the holding?—Yes, the remainder of the lease of course was taken into account.

21,145. Did the widow think 3,000*l.* was an excessive price for the farm?—It was worth about 3,000*l.*, but then she had paid about 3,830*l.* altogether.

21,146. I want to know whether it was not worth more than the 3,000*l.*?—No, by the time you paid 4 per cent. interest on the purchase money, it came to exactly the same rent. We are obliged to pay 4 per cent. for money on land.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Parry called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

21,147. Has this statement been read over to you by Professor Rhŷs, is it correct, and is it the evidence you wish to give?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of William Parry, Britannia Terrace, Llanfair, P.G., late of Rhosmanarch, Llanwenllwyfo.

"I formerly held the farm called Rhosmanarch, under Lady Neave, Llysdulas, the agent of the estate being Captain Mitchell. I took the farm, which comprised 230 acres, in 1853, and the tenancy was from year to year. I paid a guinea for the agreement, which, however, was not explained to me in Welsh.

"Management: The owner and agent of the estate were English people, Conservatives and Church people, while the tenants as a rule were Welsh people, Nonconformists and Liberals.

"Rent: The rent was fixed by the agent. It was raised 10*l.* two years after I entered the farm. Abatements were granted several times for periods without notice, but no permanent reduction took place.

"Occupation: Trees were planted on three portions of the Bryniau Brain field (size 8 acres) and 2 acres were taken for that purpose. No notice was given or permission asked, and compensation for the loss was refused. Mining operations were begun in Cae'r Office in about 10 years after I took the farm; there had been mining there before. No leave was asked, or notice given. They worked there for years, periodically opening new pits and throwing the rubbish along the field. Cart-roads leading to the various pits reduced the acreage and the value of the field. When they gave up working, the pits were left open, and I had to close them, for the safety of the cattle. The agent took no notice of my application for compensation, and my rent was not reduced.

"The agent, without giving any previous notice, enclosed two acres out of the field called Cae Newydd which measured 14 acres, and by that enclosed the water from the remaining 12 acres. The value of the remainder was thus greatly reduced. I paid the same rent as before for two years. 10*l.* was returned to me the third year and 9*l.* the fourth and fifth years, so that I had compensation for three years.

"Improvements: The agent agreed with me, when I took Rhosmanarch, to pay half the cost of all the stone walls I would make. When I went to him after finishing, he declined to take any notice of the matter, and I received nothing towards the expense. All the buildings on the estate are erected by the landowner, but the tenant has to cart everything for the work. I was obliged to contract myself out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. The only services I used to render were, carting coal once or twice a year from Dulas beach to Llys Dulas, and I never received anything for my services.

"The Game Laws: No compensation is allowed for the damage done by game. These laws engender a feeling of great dissatisfaction, if not of enmity, towards the landlords.

"The Labourers: The labourers generally sleep in lofts above the stables, &c., which are generally quite improper and unhealthy. There is no accommodation provided for them in the evenings. The food supplied is much better than that of 50 years ago.

"The Tithes: I paid a sum of 40*l.* for years; then it was reduced to 32*l.* I considered that I paid too much, but I failed to get a reduction though I tried.

"Notice to Quit: I was served with a notice to quit, but no reason was given for it."

Lord Kenyon.

21,148. Where do you live?—Llanfair, P.G.

21,149. What is the full name?—Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrobwllllantysiliogogogoch.

21,150. Do you know if it is the custom on Lady Neave's estate to pay for the improvements?—No; I do not.

21,151. Is the agent a solicitor?—No, he is not; the then agent is dead.

21,152. He was not a solicitor?—No; he was not a solicitor.

21,153. Have you a copy of your agreement?—Yes; I have a copy.

21,154. Did you see in the copy that you were obliged to cart coals?—No, not a word; it was not there. There was nothing of the kind.

21,155. Then you need not cart coals unless you like?—No; but still we dare not refuse.

21,156. You say, "I was served with a notice "to quit, and no reason was given for it." Was that notice to quit acted upon?—Yes, I had to quit; and they refused to allow me to look for another tenant, and I had to sell my effects by auction at a very inconvenient place.

21,157. Were you behindhand with your rent?—No, never; not one halfpenny.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,158. Why was your rent raised so soon after you took the farm?—A new landlord came in then.

21,159. You had nothing given you for the two acres which were planted?—No, nothing at any time.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

21,160. Was there any game in that ground?—Yes; there were a great many rabbits and birds.

21,161. They did not ask your permission to take this ground, did they?—No; they did not say a word about it.

21,162. Did you ask them to allow you something for it?—Yes, I did; I mentioned the matter to them, and asked if they were not going to make me some allowance in respect of it.

21,163. Did you ask them a certain sum?—No; I did not.

21,164. Then they enclosed two acres more?—Yes; in the field where the water was. They deprived me of the water, and they planted timber.

21,165. And you were not allowed anything for the next two acres?—Yes, I was allowed it for three years; but after they commenced to work there, I was for two or three years without getting anything.

21,166. Who was the agent that promised you to pay half the cost of the walls?—Captain Mitchell.

21,167. Did you send him the account?—Yes.

21,168. How much was it?—It was nearly 10*l.*

21,169. Did he pay it?—No; he never paid it.

21,170. He did not promise to pay it?—No.

21,171. Did he say he would not pay it?—No; he did not say that.

Mr. Grove.

21,173. When the two acres were taken off the land, did they take away entirely the right-of-way to the water?—Yes, they cut it off altogether.

21,174. And was there no water remaining on the other part of the land?—Yes, there was water on the other part of the land, but that was the chief grazing field on the whole farm.

21,175. What do you mean by you were obliged to contract yourself out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—All I say is that we had to do that or leave the farm.

Mr. Grove—continued.

21,176. You have not got your agreement with you?—No, I have not got it.

21,177. Do we understand that when they were opening those pits on the land that they left them open?—They left them open for about two years, and in the third year they closed them.

21,178. How did they close them—filled them up?—They put large pipes at the bottom, and then soil on those.

21,179. What were the pits opened for?—To get water to take to the mansion.

Lord Kenyon.

21,180. Do you know what clause it was that you had to contract out of?—That six months' notice to quit would be sufficient.

21,181. Is that all?—Yes, that is all.

21,182. You ought to have stated which clause—not the whole Act, because it makes a great deal of difference. These are questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. "Have you taken a pro-"minent part in the anti-tithe agitation, and "also in political movements?"—Yes, I was rather prominent; I admit that.

21,183. "What were the politics of the tenant "who received the farm after you?"—Quite contrary to mine.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,184. "Was the agreement you received a "stamped one?"—I do not remember whether it was stamped or not.

21,185. To be binding it must be stamped?—Yes, I know that.

21,186. These are questions by Mr. Vincent: "Will you send your agreement to the Commissioners?"—I would have brought it with me, but I failed to find it.

21,187. "Do you say that you did not under-"stand the terms on which you hold your "farm?"—Yes, I understood them perfectly.

21,188. Then there are other questions put by Mr. Vincent, but it is not necessary to ask them after that answer?—And I do not see that there was anything very stringent in the terms of the agreement, the only thing was that six months' notice was put down as sufficient time for notice to quit.

21,189. Mr. Vincent wants to know, "Then "why do you complain that the agreement was "not explained to you?"—I understood it myself. I did not want anyone to explain it.

21,190. You said, "I paid a guinea for the "agreement, which however was not explained "to me in Welsh." I do not suppose it was explained, if you understood it?—Quite so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN THOMAS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of next witness.

21,191. Have you been through this statement with Professor Rhŷs, is it correct, and is it the evidence you wish to give?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence to be given by Mr. John Thomas, Pant y bugail, Llanfair, M.E., Anglesey.

"I took a small farm called Maes Philip on the Bodorgan estate about 22 years ago, of about 18 acres. The rent was 13*l.* There were no buildings or hedges. The land was much run, about two or three acres waste never cultivated. I built the house and buildings entirely at my own expense, made all the fences and gate posts, and reclaimed the wastes. The agent said I would never be disturbed, and I worked very hard in consequence. I did not get a copy of my agreement until after my farm was sold. I was surprised to find that only 14 years was allowed as the period of exhaustion. I do not understand English. The farm was sold for 570*l.* I offered 565*l.* rather than lose the place. When I went there first I would not have given 300*l.* for it. My father bought Pant y bugail where I now live for 330*l.*, about 38 years ago. He sold a portion for 30*l.*, and gave another portion to my brother worth about 60*l.* There are about 21 acres left, and I would not take 600*l.* for it, though I improved Maes Philip more than my father improved my present farm. After increasing the value of Sir George Meyrick's property by fully 300*l.* I only received 80*l.* compensation on leaving. I would never have built a stone were it not that I thought I was safe on such an estate. I am sure I have lost fully 200*l.* on the place."

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,192. Did you present a bill?—Yes.

21,193. Had you kept accounts?—I employed men to measure the place, the drain, and the walls, and everything that I had done.

21,194. Do you produce accounts for them?—Yes.

21,195. Have you a copy?—No, I have not a copy.

21,196. Then what was the claim that you put in to Sir George?—250*l.* The place that I had cultivated from, being a common, I left out of the account, and more than half the farm consisted of common land.

21,197. What did Sir George Meyrick say?—Before the sale he refused to say how much he would give for the improvements. I could not get to know anything from him.

21,198. He gave you 80*l.*?—Yes.

21,199. What did he say that was for?—Only for part of the improvements, and he said that I had already had the rest during the time I was there.

21,200. He said that they were exhausted?—Yes, that is what he said, but I considered that the improvements were not exhausted, and that I was a loser to the extent of 300*l.*

Mr. Grove.

21,201. You have in your statement: "The "agent said I would never be disturbed." Did he say that, or did you get anything in writing?—His father told me that when I took the farm; it was said verbally.

21,202. Then you did not get a copy of your agreement until after your farm was sold. Did you ask for it?—Yes, I had asked for it, and asked what the terms of the agreement were, but I did not get a copy until after they had sold it.

21,203. When you signed the agreement was it read over to you and explained?—No.

21,204. Did you not ask for it to be explained to you?—No, I did not think anything at all about it, because people always said, to be on the Meyrick estate was exactly the same as if a lease were granted.

21,205. But people do not usually sign things without knowing what is inside the document?—No, I think they have trusted too much, just as I have done.

21,206. You say you offered 560*l.* rather than lose the place. To whom did you make that offer?—I made that offer to Mr. Dew here, when it was put up to auction, on the day of the sale by auction.

21,207. At the time of the auction, or before the auction?—At the time of the auction.

21,208. You made a bid?—Yes, I made that bid.

21,209. And someone offered 5*l.* more?—Yes, I offered 560*l.*, and another bid for 570*l.* was made.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,210. When you received a sum of 80*l.*, did you accept that as full compensation?—I expected more.

21,211. Are you quite sure that you did not sign a receipt that you accepted that as full compensation?—I signed a paper.

21,212. Did you know what was on that paper?—Yes, that I was receiving 80*l.*, and that I could not get any more from him without going to law with him.

21,213. But they explained to you that that was the full compensation you could get?—Yes.

21,214. Did you tell them that it was not enough?—Yes, not half enough.

21,215. How came you to sign it?—Well, I did not want to go to lawyers; perhaps I should have lost all in the end.

21,216. Had you a valuer to value upon your own part?—Yes, two.

21,217. Were they competent valuers?—Yes, they were builders.

21,218. Did they understand about draining and fencing?—His valuer was there as well, and he thought I had valued it very fairly, and not valued it sufficiently high.

21,219. Do you mean to say that the landlord did not pay the amount that his own valuer made it?—No, he did not.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,220. Do you know whether that valuer was acting under the instructions of the estate at that time, or simply telling you what he thought of it off-hand?—He came round all the farms to see what the valuation was, and what we had done.

21,221. Did he and your valuer come to an understanding as to the valuation?—Yes, one after the other. My valuers had been valuing, and he came there after them.

21,222. One after another. Were their respective valuations brought together at any time?—Sir George Meyrick's valuer had valued the place at a higher figure than my valuers had done. That was found when the two valuations were compared.

21,223. How was the valuation that all these men made on the part of the tenant and the landlord come to finally?—The three were not there together. My valuer valued first, and John Hughes came afterwards.

21,224. Then they never came together?—No, they did not; but John Hughes's valuation was higher than the valuation of my valuers.

21,225. How do you know that?—Because the valuations were brought together and compared in my house, that is how I know.

21,226. You told me just now that they were not brought together?—Two were brought together at the house, but they were not there valuing together.

21,227. Then the valuation was not made according to an understanding between you and the landlord?—Yes, he had seen John Hughes and I had taken the other two men to value.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,228. If the landlord's valuer sent in his valuation and it was rather higher than your valuer's why was it not paid?—I cannot say, but it was higher, and the landlord's valuer showed me things that the other two men had not valued.

Lord Kenyon.

21,229. Did you go under the Act or was it done by private arbitration?—It was a valuation outside the Act.

21,230. These are questions by Mr. R. H. Williams: "Do you consider that to be on the "Bodorgan estate is as safe as if one had a "lease?"—No, I do not by a long way.

21,231. "Have you ever heard any other "person or persons complaining that he or they "have not received sufficient compensation on "the Bodorgan estate?"—Yes, several—not one of them got full compensation.

21,232. This is a question by Mr. Prichard: "Did you not quarrel with the purchaser?"—I never quarrelled with him; he was not worth quarrelling with.

21,233. Is that the gentleman who bought the farm?—Yes.

21,234. "Was the agreement of tenancy given to the purchaser?"—I do not know.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,235. Had you not the agreement?—Yes.

21,236. What became of that agreement?—I have it at home. I did not get the agreement until the summer.

21,237. You did not have the agreement until after the place was sold?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

21,238. "Did you not tell John Hughes, of "Llangefni, you were satisfied with him, and "found Prichard a gentleman?"—No, I did not indeed. I had no conversation with John Hughes at Llangefni about that.

21,239. I ask you this myself: Did you have any conversation with John Hughes at Llangefni about that?—No.

21,240. Then this is Mr. Prichard's question: "Did you not sign an agreement to accept a "period of exhaustion?"—I signed some years after I took the farm, that the period of exhaustion should be 21 years.

21,241. Then your answer to that is, yes?—Yes, and there was only 14 years of the period of exhaustion after all.

Mr. Grove.

21,242. Did you understand what you were signing when you signed it?—I did not understand it in English. I could only understand it in Welsh.

Lord Kenyon.

21,243. Was it not explained to you in Welsh?—Perhaps some portions of the agreement were explained.

21,244. Did you think you were signing for 21 years, and you found it was 14 years?—Yes, I understood the period was 21 years.

21,245. A question by Mr. Prichard: "Did "not the late agent explain and translate the "agreement to you?"—No, he did not. He did not explain anything to me.

21,246. "Did not you refuse to pay the rent "to the purchaser?"—Yes, I did. I considered that I had nothing at all to do with him, as I had received nothing from him towards the rent. I took it to Mr. Prichard.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,247. "Did you send in a claim for compensation?"—I trusted in Mr. Prichard, and had been asking him several times, and had sent the boy there.

21,248. I want an answer to the question. Did you send in a claim for compensation?—Yes, I sent a bill in.

21,249. When?—He had received the bills for improvements before selling.

21,250. When did you send in a claim for compensation?—Before the sale; possibly two or three months before the sale, but I cannot say exactly.

21,251. "Did you or your father try to stop "a way by Pant y bugail?"—No. We wanted to have the road open. It was not wide enough for a cartway, and we wanted to have it opened up, and Mr. Prichard was then opening it himself.

21,252. "Was there not a row with the pur-"chaser about the valuation of manures?"—He made an offer for them, and got them at his own price, but he refused to take them at any price.

21,253. There was a row, or there was not a row?—Yes, there was a row. He sent his cattle and horses to eat the hay until I got promised to take it away.

21,254. Was not a case tried before the magistrates for assault?—There was no case before the magistrates so far as I was concerned, but my daughter happened to meet the purchaser, and took hold of his whiskers, and shook him, and threw him down, and she was only 12 or 13 years of age. He took out a summons against her for the assault.

21,255. Do you still stick to your first answer, that you did not quarrel with the purchaser. He was not worth quarrelling with, or something of that, you say?—Yes. I keep to that answer, considering that a little girl of 13 years of age could throw him down.

21,256. This is a question by Mr. Prichard: "When did your tenancy commence?"—About 22 years ago or thereabouts.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 21,284

Mr. Thomas Prichard re-called and further examined, his evidence being interpreted to Mr. John Thomas, of Pant y bugail.

Lord Kenyon.

See above.

tenant had removed cartloads of manure and soil from the farm, that he had destroyed the gorse, dug up the turnips, and that he also demanded 8*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* for some manure; that he had not given any kind of notice that he proposed to ask for that money, and stating that if money was due to Mr. Thomas for his improvements, I was not to pay until I had heard from him, and that the purchaser wanted 10*l.* a ton as damages. I then replied that I had not received any claim from him for improvements, but that Sir George Meyrick was prepared to stand to the agreement, and to pay him for his improvements, but that I could not do that until I heard that he had paid his rent to the purchaser, and that the purchaser had no right to claim damages from him, as he had not sent in notice, and that he had broken the conditions of the contract. After that I gave up the contract to the purchaser when he paid for the land according to the conditions of sale. I heard on the 2nd of December that the matter had been settled, and after that, after he had settled with the purchaser, I paid 80*l.* to him for the improvements, although he had agreed that 21 years was to be the period of exhaustion. Then as to the road, I should like to say he tried to stop the right of way, which was a public right of way. He says my father was the agent in those days, and that he never translated the agreement into Welsh. I know that he did, and I can swear that I also translated this agreement for the period of exhaustion to him. It was a public road set out by an award enclosing a common, and complaints were made by the tenants of the Bodorgan estate, and neighbours, and by Lord Boston's tenants, that he and his father were building a wall across this road with a view to shutting it up. In consequence, after giving notice, Lord Boston's agent and I agreed to go there to the spot and to clear the road and to remove the obstruction. There was snow 2 feet deep in one part; I drove part of the way, and had to walk the rest, about 6 miles. On the spot we met, I should think, about 20 people, and the thing was amicably settled. There was a wall built partly across the road, and it was removed.

21,258. Are we to understand, Mr. Prichard, that what you rebut is that he did send in no claim for compensation?—Certainly not, my Lord.

21,259. He says: "I only received 80*l.* "compensation." You say that was in full. Was it?—I say there was nothing due to him really, but as a matter of grace he got the 80*l.*

21,260. Also he stated that he did not obstruct the public way, and you say he did?—I say I was called upon to clear it, as agent, for the rest of the tenants.

21,261. He stated he claimed it as a public way?—He and others; I ought to say that perhaps. It adjoined his property on one side—his father's freehold property.

21,262. He obstructed it first?—He and others, I ought to say.

21,263. And the agreement gave him, not 14 years but 21 years period of exhaustion?—I have not the agreement unfortunately, because it was given up to the purchaser. He says it was 21 years.

21,264. I think he said he thought it was 21 years, but found it was 14 years?—Yes, but by the time he signed the contract to take the period of exhaustion, seven years had elapsed. He says he was there 22 years. I have not got the agreement, so that I cannot get at it, and I do not really remember.

Mr. Grove.

21,265. What do you suppose would be his object in building the wall?—To obstruct the road.

21,266. You think there could be no other object but to obstruct the road?—Certainly.

21,267. It came in the line of the road then?—It was across the road, not along it. The part that he obstructed was a wide road.

21,268. You have heard him state that you sent a valuer officially to value on your behalf?—Yes, I sent a valuer.

21,269. And he also states that that valuer valued it at a higher rate than his own valuer?—I know nothing about that.

21,270. He asked for 250*l.*?—I really cannot remember now. It is too long ago.

21,271. He says he asked for 250*l.*, but he received 80*l.*?—He received 80*l.*

21,272. We gather from you that he was not entitled to any part of the 250*l.*?—From his own account. If he was there 22 years he could not have been entitled to it. All I have got is a letter from the purchaser's solicitor, and he says, "It is hereby agreed that the tenant shall "be entitled to a period of exhaustion of 14 "years from the 13th of November 1874."

21,273. Would that 14 years apply to all the improvements that he would put there?—"In "respect of house and outbuildings erected and "improvements executed by me." Those are the words of the letter, and I can only go by that now.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,274. Can you oblige us with a copy of the valuation?—I have not got it.

21,275. You do not know the amount?—No, indeed I do not know the amount at all. When the purchase was completed I gave up all the receipts for the compensation given.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,276. To the purchaser?—Yes, the receipt for 80*l.* was given to my own employer.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,277. Do you consider when a man builds a house and outhouse upon land that 21 years is sufficient for the period of exhaustion?—It was not my bargain, it was the bargain before I entered on my duties as agent.

21,278. It seems to me a most unreasonable agreement?—That may be; that is quite a different question.

21,279. But you must understand when the man took this place he had not signed this agreement?—No, but it was an understood thing; it was not written.

21,280. He does not say so?—No.

21,281. Nor can you say so?—No, I have nothing down in writing.

21,282. It seems a great hardship for the man, I must say. Can you say why this 80*l.* was paid more than some other sum?—Almost every tenant whose place was sold up was paid some amount, as I told you yesterday, 1,169*l.* altogether.

Lord Kenyon.

21,283. This is a question the last witness wants to ask: "Did you not write to Owen "Williams, Tyddyn Sergeant, and me, to "instruct us to pull down the wall?"—Very likely. It was his father really. The father lived at Pant y bugail, and he was the tenant. His father was the owner of Pant y bugail.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 21,290.

Mr. JOHN THOMAS (Pant y bugail) recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

21,284. Do you wish to say anything?—Why should my father block up the way leading from my own house. [Mr. Prichard: I know he has another road to it. I do not know what his object was.]

21,285. Do you wish to say anthing else?—Mr. Prichard has stated in his evidence that I carried manure and soil from the place, and I sold it to John Jones, his old tenant.

21,286. Do you understand that Mr. Prichard says that he received from you no claim for compensation?—I did not understand that. I did send bills. I gave the bill to Mr. Prichard—here he is and here am I.

21,287. Which do you prefer, the lawyers or the landlords?—Since Mr. Prichard has gone like this, I do not like a man like him; he is too tyrannical.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Grove.

21,288. Do we understand you to say that no wall was built?—No, a wall was raised, but others did it. Another man built the wall. He had the place, and he built the wall to try and block up the way. That man was William Hughes, Refailnewydd and Hendy. He raised the wall, and we wanted to pull it down. Owen Williams, Tyddyn Sergeant, went to Mr. Prichard to have the wall cleared away.

21,289. So that neither you nor your father took any part in building the wall?—No, not in any way. We had nothing to do with it. We wanted to have it cleared away.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS PRICHARD recalled and further examined.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,290. There has been some talk of common land there?—Yes, it was common land at Tynrhos, where the wall was built.

21,291. When was it enclosed?—About 11 years since the wall was removed.

21,292. Was that done in consequence of an award?—No, the place has been enclosed by means of a wall; the road was 17 feet.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

21,293. Is there no land there now unenclosed?—No, there is not. I should say the enclosure took place scores of years ago, before I was born; I cannot say when.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Llangefni, Anglesey, Friday, 13th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord KENYON.
Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. NORMAN DAVIES (Carnarvon) called and examined. The evidence was interpreted by the interpreter to Mr. Thos. Edwards.

Chairman.

13,081 21,294. This rebutting evidence seems to be very well put, because it confines itself entirely to the statements you want to contradict?—It does.

21,295. It does not go into the merits of the case, but it states exactly the statements you want to rebut, and it confines itself entirely to that?—Quite so.

21,296. That is very practical. You contradict the evidence of Mr. Thomas Edwards, given at Carnarvon?—Yes.

21,297. Was Mr. Williams, Glanbeuno, agent to the landlord, Mr. Love Jones-Parry?—No; he purchased the farm.

21,298. He is an outsider, an independent person altogether?—Yes, I represent him to-day.

21,299. He was not connected with the estate in any way before it was purchased?—No; he bought the property from Sir Love Jones-Parry.

21,300. And you represent him?—Yes. Thomas Edwards stated "that the law had allowed Sir "Love Jones-Parry and Mr. Williams to take "from his pocket in effect 800*l.*, and further, "that he, Edwards, did not get a penny for "improvements." This is untrue. After the auction Edwards stated that he had claims for unexhausted improvements, &c. Mr. Williams knew nothing of the merits of his claims, but he agreed to refer the matter to arbitration. The two arbitrators fixed upon could not agree, and they referred the matter to an umpire, Mr. Thomas Roberts, of Aber Farm, one of the best known agriculturists in the county. His award showed that 87*l.* 1*s.* was due to Edwards, and this sum was at once paid over to him by Mr. Williams. Edwards further stated that the rent was now 70*l.* This is not true. 60*l.* a year has been paid since the farm was purchased. The object of buying the farm was not to secure a good investment. It was bought simply in the interests of the Llyfni River Drainage Scheme. This scheme was commenced last month, will cost 10,000*l.*, and will confer a lasting benefit upon the Nantlle Valley; it will be a benefit commercially, by enabling quarries to be worked which are now under water, and permanent employment will thus be found for additional workmen. And it will be a sanitary benefit—removing the stagnant water and drying boggy ground. These are now hotbeds of fever; the valley is never free from fevers. An unsympathetic landlord or tenant at Gwynfaes could effectually block the scheme, and Mr. Williams' sole object in buying the farm was to prevent any possible obstruction there. Notice was certainly served upon the tenant at once, so as to get absolute possession early. However, subsequent inspection of the farm showed clearly that Edwards was not a desirable tenant to have there.

Chairman—continued.

21,301. What you say is that he was paid 87*l.* 1*s.*?—Yes.

21,302. And that the rent is 60*l.* instead of 70*l.*?—Yes. I wish to give a little further information.

21,303. Is there anything in the evidence of Mr. Thomas Edwards to say it was not bought as an investment?—By inference there may be, and I would not like it to go abroad in the county amongst our friends that it was bought simply to oust the tenant. There was another object in view, the public good of the locality in the promotion of a drainage scheme which has been on the tapis for the last 20 years.

21,304. You want to give the reason why Mr. Williams outbid the sitting tenant?—Yes.

21,305. Then Mr. Edwards built a house on this farm, did he not, and then he found himself with his farmhouse and no farm?—So he says, my Lord; but he has occupied the house.

21,306. He built the house, and he says he would not have built the house if it had not been that he thought he could get the farm too?—Possibly.

21,307. Then he found himself with the house and no land?—But he had a house for occupation.

21,308. But a house that he says is no use to him without the land?—He must have a house for occupation.

21,309. That is a house to live in when he had the farm?—Yes, he must have a house in any case.

Chairman—continued.

21,310. The farm was put up for sale and was bought by the person you represent?—Yes.

21,311. And then this Mr. Edwards found himself with a house and no land of his own?—Quite so.

21,312. What you rebut is this. You say he was paid 87*l.* 1*s.* when he says he never was paid anything, and you correct the statement by saying that the rent now is 60*l.*, and he says it was 70*l.*?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

21,313. You state in your short evidence here that Mr. Williams knew nothing of the merits of the claim. He knew of his claim, I suppose?—No, he did not.

21,314. Did not Mr. Edwards say, that before the sale he saw Mr. Williams and told him that he had a claim of 800*l.*, or that he had spent large sums of money on the farm?—I do not know whether he did or not. I cannot say.

21,315. I think you will find that in the evidence. Then you said: "Mr. Williams' sole "object in buying the farm was to prevent any "possible obstruction there." What interest has Mr. Williams in this drainage scheme?—He is the principal proprietor of the Dorothea Slate Quarries, one of the largest slate quarries in the neighbourhood.

21,316. What was the 87*l.* 1*s.* for?—For unexhausted manure expended upon the said land, and for improvements generally to the same.

21,317. Partly specific and partly general?—Everything that he could bring forward as a claim against the landlord.

Lord Kenyon.

21,318. Does he wish to sell the house?—I do not know about that; he occupies it at the present day.

21,319. Did he wish to sell it. He said it was of no use to him?—He must have a house for occupation.

21,320. He said he built the house to suit the farm. Did he offer the house to Mr. Williams?—I have no knowledge of it, my Lord.

21,321. You do not know?—No.

Chairman.

21,322. Do you produce the receipt for that money which you say was paid, 87*l.* 1*s.*?—No, my Lord. I do not produce a receipt, but I produce the cheque (I cannot put my hand upon the receipt), and his endorsement on the back of it (handing cheque).

21,323. What do you say you gave?—87*l.* 1*s.*

21,324. This cheque is 69*l.* 5*s.*?—Look at the back, please. I scribbled down the figures this morning. "Less rental one half year's rent "22*l.* 10*s.* plus 4*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* the costs of the "arbitration." It was agreed to divide the costs of the arbitration between the parties.

21,325. In your evidence you say the award was that 87*l.* 1*s.* was due to Thomas Edwards, and this sum was paid to him by Mr. Williams. 87*l.* 1*s.* is not 69*l.* 5*s.*?—No; still it is a matter of account. There was a half year's rent due, 22*l.* 10*s.*, and it was agreed that the costs should be divided. I meant by that, the result of the arbitration was settled immediately.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,326. What were the costs of the arbitration?—9*l.* 9*s.* The reason why I cannot produce the receipt is that I was away in America for a few months in that year, and I do not know where the papers went at the time.

Chairman.

21,327. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Is it not the fact that unless the drainage "scheme is carried out, the whole industry of "the Valley must perish?"—No, my Lord, that is not the case.

Lord Kenyon.

21,328. What is the case then?—It would be of material assistance to the Valley. There are two quarries actually under water, and when the drainage scheme is completed they can be worked, and other quarries can be also worked. They are cramped for room. Ours was under water for a year and a half.

21,329. Do you understand that question: "Is it not the fact that unless the drainage "scheme is carried out, the whole industry of "the Valley must perish?"—Oh, no, my Lord that is an exaggeration.

21,330. But it is partially the fact?—At the present time there are two quarries under water. The trade of those two quarries has perished for the time being.

Mr. Grove.

21,331. I suppose the existing industries would still go on?—Yes,

21,332. This would add further to the industries of the Valley?—Yes, exactly.

Chairman.

21,333. And would be a great personal advantage to Mr. Williams?—Only as he is the principal proprietor of the Dorothea quarry.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Edwards re-called and further examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

21,334. Have you had the statement of Mr. Norman Davies explained to you, and do you perfectly understand it?—Yes, I understand it perfectly.

21,335. Do you still adhere to your statement that you made on the 21st September at Carnarvon, that you received no compensation from anyone when the property was bought by Mr. Williams?—I do.

Chairman—continued.

21,336. How do you explain this cheque having been paid to you by Mr. Williams?—I had received notice to quit from the farm, the first opportunity he had after buying the farm, as I stated at Carnarvon. At that time I went to Mr. J. H. Roberts, solicitor, Carnarvon. I asked him if I had read the notice properly, or if there was a mistake in it, and whether I could hold the farm for two years afterwards, as the notice was not correct. He told me that I was right, and I said, "I suppose I can rely on your word, and not give up the farm." He asked me what good would that be to me. I replied that I could make a little money out of it in two years by letting it to various people. I did not say anything to Mr. Norman Davies or to Mr. Williams about that interview. When the notice to quit expired the new tenant removed manure to the farm, took possession of the farm. I told his man to take a little more time lest it was too soon for him. That is all that took place then. This was the first communication I received from Mr. Norman Davies (handing letter).

21,337. "Memorandum from Mr. Norman "Davies, of the Dorothea Slate Quarry, to Mr. "Thomas Edwards, Gwynfaes.—DEAR SIR,— "We are given to understand that you have still "some cattle grazing on Mr. Williams' land at "Gwynfaes. If such is the case, will you please "get them taken away, as your tenancy of the "farm has expired.—N.D."—Then I got this (handing letter).

21,338. "7th November 1887,

"Dorothea Slate Quarry, North Wales.

"To Mr. Thomas Edwards, Gwynfaes.

"DEAR SIR,

"REFERRING to our recent conversation, I am instructed to ask you to be good enough to take away everything belonging to you from Gwynfaes farm. We want the place to be cleared for the new tenant without delay.

"Yours truly,

"NORMAN DAVIES."

(A.) Here is another letter from Mr. Charles Jones, solicitor, Carnarvon.

"5, High Street, Carnarvon,

"SIR, "18th January 1887.

"I AM instructed by Mr. J. A. A. Williams, your former landlord, to inform you that unless you immediately give up peaceable and quiet possession of the land at Gwynfaes, proceedings will be taken against you. I have further to inform you that if after this notice you continue to hold over the said premises, you will be liable for double value.

"Yours, &c.

"CHAS. A. JONES."

"Mr. Thos. Edwards,

"Gwynfaes,

"Llanllyfni."

21,339. Does that "1887" mean 1888?—Yes, it should be 1888.

21,340. That was received in 1888, but is incorrect in date?—Yes. After receiving those letters, Mr. Charles Jones, solicitor, wrote to me a copy of a letter in Welsh, which I was requested to sign. He sent me a copy of a letter with a request to see if I should sign it, so that I might live on the honour of Mr. Williams.

Chairman—continued.

21,341. How do you mean, "live on the honour of Mr. Williams?"—That Mr. Williams might give me what he thought proper, if it was only 1*l.*, for giving up the farm.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,342. Did you send a reply to the first letter of Mr. Charles Jones?—No, I did not. This is the letter, dated the 4th February 1888: "Sir, "I hereby inform you that I have this day given "up the land which was in my taking, and I "rely on Mr. Williams that he will do what "is fair towards me. Yours, &c."

Chairman.

21,343. Did you sign that letter?—I did not, my Lord.

21,344. What has all this correspondence to do with this cheque?—This is a copy of a letter sent by me to Mr. Charles Jones in reply to his letter of February 3rd, 1888: "Dear Sir,—Illness "in my family is the reason that I have been so "long in replying. I am prepared that an inde- "pendent man should come to settle between us, "or I will sell the house and grounds to Mr. "Williams; that is how I did with the tenant "who was here before me; that course, or that "I should have the farm in future, would be "the fair thing to do to me. I hope to receive "a reply after you have seen Mr. Williams. "Yours, &c., THOMAS EDWARDS." Mr. Charles Jones did not tell me that he would lay the matter before Mr. Williams, until he got to know from me what I proposed to do. I told Mr. Jones that the proper course to take would be, in accordance with my letter, that they should either buy my house and effects and that I should leave the place, or I should have the whole of the farm. He replied to me would I not come to some arrangement to give up the farm, as they had let it to some one else? I replied that I would do so, if they would buy the house and the other things in consideration of my giving up the farm then, instead of holding it for two years. It was in consideration of that, that I received what money I did receive.

21,345. What we understand is that you did not receive that cheque for improvements, but you say you received that money as a bonus to go out of the farm at once?—Yes, that is it exactly.

21,346. Was there any arbitration on that point?—Yes, there was.

21,347. Where are the notes of that arbitration?—I do not know, unless Mr. Charles Jones of Carnarvon has them.

21,348. You do not produce them?—No, I do not. I wish to make a statement as to the drainage scheme.

21,349. We do not want to hear anything about the drainage scheme; all we want to know is whether you distinctly state that you have received no money for compensation?—Nothing, except for giving up the farm, and what the arbitrators took into consideration at the time.

21,350. Was that the rent that was due?—I do not remember.

Chairman—continued.

21,351. Did you owe 22*l.* rent?—Very likely, but I do not remember. 22*l.* was the amount of the rent for half a year.

21,352. Your story is, that you received that money to induce you to give up peaceable possession of the farm before you need have gone out of it?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

21,353. You say you did offer the house to Mr. Williams?—Yes, there was a letter to that effect.

21,354. Did he refuse to buy it?—Yes, he did, and he refused to do anything with me. Every word I stated at Carnarvon is perfectly true, and with the permission of the Commissioners I should like to say a word or two about the drainage scheme.

Chairman.

21,355. We cannot hear anything about the drainage scheme?—Very well.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,356. When you went into this place you paid 460*l.* for this house?—Yes.

21,357. How much did you lay out besides upon it?—As near as I can say the amount, including 460*l.*, it reached nearly 800*l.*

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

21,358. All you wanted of the new tenant was to pay you, as you had been obliged to pay yourself?—That is it exactly, and I would have gone away readily then.

21,359. Is the house now in your possession?—Yes.

21,360. What is the value of the house as it stands now?—It has cost me 350*l.* or 400*l.*; there is no house on the farm even yet, nor a cowhouse, nor a stable, nor any other outbuildings, except what I myself put there I paid the previous tenant for them, and they have not paid me anything in respect of them, although they have taken possession of them.

21,361. As you have lost the farm, the house and the buildings are of very little use to you?—I would be very glad if I could let the house for 8*l.* a year, so that I might go to some other more convenient place.

Mr. Grove.

21,362. Did you tell Mr. Williams before he bought the farm at the auction, that you had spent a lot of money there?—Yes, I told him I had spent 800*l.* I named the money I had spent.

21,363. What was the rent you paid?—45*l.* per annum.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. NORMAN DAVIES recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

21,364. You have the report of the arbitrators?—Yes.

21,365. Will you read it out?—It is a copy which I can swear to. I may explain that immediately after the property was purchased, we made application to the agent of the vendor as to the date when the tenancy commenced, so that we might give notice at the proper time. We could not get the proper information from him; he could not give us the date; and we were a month or two too late in giving notice. For that reason the late tenant remained there in possession, and also as he was stating that certain claims of his were in existence against the property, we agreed that the matter should be referred to arbitration, when all these things would be gone into fully without reservation.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,366. What do you mean by "we agreed?"—Mr. Edwards and his representative and Mr. Williams and his representative.

21,367. Has Mr. Edwards had that agreement in writing?—Yes, he signs his own agreement. This is signed by himself: "Signed by the said "Thomas Edwards, in the presence of J. A. "Vaughan, High Street, Carnarvon."

21,368. That is the reference to the arbitrators?—Shall I read the clause referring to that specific part. The clause itself is this: "And whereas "the said Thomas Edwards claims to be entitled "to certain compensation upon the determination

"of such tenancy as aforesaid for any unex-"hausted manure expended upon the said pro-"perty and for improvements generally to the "same." So that the whole affair was submitted to arbitration.

Mr. Grove.

21,369. Is there any word in that as to the early giving up of the farm?—That was so small a matter that it was scarcely considered worth naming in the agreement. The claim for improvements was the principal thing. The whole affair was submitted to arbitration. He could explain the matter fully, and it was explained fully to the umpire, everything.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,370. Was it sold by public auction?—It was.

21,371. Was there anything in the conditions of sale with reference to any claim that might be made for compensation?—Unfortunately there was; the vendor absolved himself from such claims. And further, these figures that are named as regards improvement on the place and the buildings and so on, are very much exaggerated. In fact, I have here the award of his own arbitrator before they submitted the affair to the umpire, and even his own arbitrator says:—"The amount of compensation that Mr. Thomas "Edwards is justly and fairly entitled to for "giving up possession of Gwynfaes farm and "other buildings, unexhausted manure and

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

" and other improvements in general thereon is " 150*l.*" That is his own arbitrator's award.

Mr. Grove.

21,372. You notice there it says, " For giving " up possession ;" it does not say, " upon giving " up ?"—That is understood, because we entered into the arbitration immediately to get possession at once ; we did not lose a day.

21,373. His argument is this, that the money was paid in consideration of his giving up early possession ?—That is not even mentioned here, it is for improvements and manure. It was so small a consideration that it was not even mentioned in the award.

Chairman.

21,374. I do not think we need go any further into that. That is signed by Mr. Edwards ?—Yes, it was my Lord, and the figures given in evidence are all exaggerated grossly.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,375. You understand the case perfectly, of course ?—I do.

21,376. This man was induced or thought he would be justified in buying the house. He thought he would be able to buy the farm with it ?—He knew we should be trying to get the farm, and this I explained to him fully, and that we should give a very high price for it with that sole object.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

21,377. How should he know ?—Because our own agent, our quarry manager, was there on the spot buying the property, and it was perfectly well-known he was going to buy, everybody knew that, and they knew the object of the purchase.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,378. I suppose, Mr. Davies, you are aware that when you gave these instructions to Mr. Charles Jones to write this letter, that it was not a legal thing to do, that really you could not compel this tenant to leave his farm ?—No, we did not know, as we could not get to know when the tenancy terminated. We could not get dates, whether it was March 29th or May 15th.

21,379. Then when you gave instructions to Mr. Charles Jones, you did not know when the tenancy terminated. I take it the tenancy terminated in November and that was written the following January, three months afterwards ?—Exactly ; we thought our notice, according to this letter, was in perfect order, but as there was a matter in dispute, we agreed to refer the whole affair to arbitration,—claim, notice, and everything else.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Edwards re-called and further examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

21,380. What have you to say to that ?—They did not offer to refer the matter to arbitration until I declined to leave the farm.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,381. Why did you buy the house when you had no certainty of buying the farm, what did you think of doing ?—I bought the house nine years ago. The preceding tenant had built it.

21,382. Did you know that the land was going to be bought for the purpose they mention ?—There were rumours about the country to that effect, and when I heard those rumours I sent a man to Mr. Williams, and asked him if I could be allowed to buy the farm, as I had spent so much money upon it, and if he had any ideas of that kind. I would willingly have signed a paper, that he could have had what he wanted, according to the valuation of independent parties.

21,383. Did you write that to him ?—No, I did not. I sent a gentleman from Carnarvon who was trustee for him. I considered that I could not send anyone better.

21,384. What was the answer ?—He came and stated that Mr. Williams had not said what he intended to do. He said, " He will not " buy either." I replied, " He is certain to do " so ;" and he said, " If I had pockets full of " money, and wanted land very badly, I would " not do such a thing with anyone ;" and I replied, " You shall see that he will do so." I had a particular reason for saying so.

21,385. Did you still go on spending money on the farm ?—No, not a penny after that. I had done so previously.

21,386. Do you admit that reference to arbitration, that signature which has been put in ?—Yes, I do. I agreed at the end, what else could I do ?

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Norman Davies.

[What he states about his offer to give us permission to go through his land, in case he purchased the farm, is perfectly true ; he did send to Mr. Williams making that offer. That was considered, and we were advised that he could not enter into any binding agreement with reference to property which was not his own at that time, and further we preferred having the property in our own hands rather than have any risk.]

Mr. Norman Davies—continued.

Mr. Edmund Kyffin Lenthall called and examined.

Mr. John Pritchard was called, but did not answer.

Chairman.

See 14,283 –331.

21,387. You own the Belmont Estate?—I do.

21,388. What do you wish to rebut before the Commission, if you please?—I wish to rebut nearly every answer that John Pritchard gave before you at Llanrwst.

21,389. Is he a tenant on the Belmont estate?—On the Belmont estate.

21,390. Are you his landlord?—I am.

21,391. Have you erected farm buildings?—I have not, because there are sufficient on the place.

21,392. He says you did not; that is right. Was he obliged to lay the whole of the farm into permanent pasture?—By his own wish.

21,393. Did he sustain an annual loss?—He says so before, when he cultivated the land.

21,394. He complains very much about rabbits. Are there many rabbits on the farm?—No, I looked over the farm yesterday and I could not see a trace of them, and more than that, the rabbits were in part of a wood that he occupies. The rabbit burrows are in the wood, and he is at perfect liberty to trap or kill them in any way.

21,395. Is there a wood on his farm?—Yes.

21,396. Is it full of rabbits?—No, there might be half a dozen rabbits there perhaps.

21,397. Do you allow him to lay traps?—In the burrows certainly.

21,398. Not on his farm?—Not in the runs through the hedgerows.

21,399. Are the workmen's cottages in a good state?—Yes.

21,400. Have seven workmen's cottages on your estate fallen into ruins, three of them being on this gentleman's farm?—I know nothing of them. In fact there are no workmen's cottages in ruins.

21,401. Do you compel tenant farmers to cart coal for you?—That is part of the condition of the taking of the farm.

21,402. The answer is "yes"?—The answer is "yes"—well, they are not compelled because they agree to the conditions when they take their farms.

21,403. That is to say it is in the agreement?—It is in the agreement.

21,404. Then there is no rebutting evidence upon that. Do they work in the hay harvest for you?—It was a condition of their taking to my late brother, to whom I succeeded about a twelvemonth ago. He would not take them without payment for their labour.

21,405. At one time did they work in the hay harvest?—Yes, in the former proprietor's time.

21,406. Have they been compelled to carry coal this year for you?—They comply with their agreements.

21,407. That is to say they have carried coal?—Yes, they have carried coal, a small quantity, perhaps four tons in a year.

21,408. He says they do not work in the harvest now?—No.

Chairman—continued.

21,409. I think that is all?—No, I do not think that is anything like all. I should like to say a little more. He was asked why he could not lay traps and he said because the keepers took them. I asked my man yesterday and he said six years ago he found some traps set in the runs.

21,410. Does he say that the keepers take them?—He says that in a subsequent answer. "I am not allowed to lay traps and the keeper "watches everything."

21,411. He says, "I cannot set a trap in a "hole and in the runs and the hedges"?—The keeper found some traps set in runs, he sprung the traps properly, and complained to the tenant. A few days after he found the traps set in runs again, and a cock pheasant in one. He took the pheasant and the trap, and since then the tenant has taken a gun license out and shoots.

21,412. "I know the keeper took some of "the traps." Did he take some of the traps?—He took one with a cock pheasant in it. With regard to the question as to grass seeds, he is asked if he pays out of his own pocket for the grass seeds.

21,413. "'Did you go to the expense of laying down the farm with permanent grass seed'?—Yes. By an agreement or custom of the country, two thirds of the land is laid down in grass at the cost of the tenant. But he was asked if he recovered anything. 'Supposing you received 'notice to quit could you recover anything for 'laying down this farm with grass?'—No, 'nothing'"?—My answer to that is that the landlord is in the tenant's hands without an agreement. There is nothing to prevent him from ploughing up the grass seeds, taking the crop and removing the crop both straw and corn. We are in the tenant's hands completely. He can recoup himself and more.

21,414. He is right there technically?—Yes, technically; but he blinks the question—it is a suggestio falsi.

21,415. With regard to the value of the land he pays about 32*s.* an acre. He is asked, "How "does your land compare with the land which "is from 35*s.* to 2*l.*? It is far worse land"?—Well, the 12*s.* an acre land is separated by a valley and brook from him; the 35*s.* to 40*s.* land is separated by a hedge. I may say I heard yesterday, he has let a field of five acres last year at 14*l.* a year, and before that 15*l.* for the five acres.

Lord Kenyon.

21,416. Did I understand you to say that he had no agreement?—He said he had not, but it was let to him by a Miss Kyffin, who was a cousin of mine.

21,417. Would you give him an agreement?—Yes, but now he is in possession, I do not suppose he would sign it. When once a tenant enters on the land there is the greatest difficulty to get him to sign an agreement.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,418. He was asked this at question 14,327, "Was there a clause in your agreement compelling you to cart coal and work with the team in harvest" and he says, "I never had an agreement; I never signed an agreement. They have tried but the reason I gave was that I cultivated my land better than they asked." Then he is asked by Professor Rhŷs (14,328) the reason for that, and he says—"My reason for not signing the agreement?"—In answer to that, he said he never had an agreement. Then Mr. George Bovill asks (14,329), "If the tenants never had an agreement to cart coal were they not paid for it," and he says "No, nothing." Then another question (14,330), "Did they know before they took their farms they would be expected to do so?—Yes, quite well." That is the agreement and they knew it. With regard to game he says he did not know whether it was reserved?—My cousin would have been the last person in the world to let the land without reserving the game. I do not believe I have anything else to say, except that if the tenant is aggrieved in any way, I should be quite willing to take the farm off his hands without notice and repaying him for any seeds.

Chairman.

21,419. And pay him for all the improvements he has put on the farm?—Yes. I saw no improvements excepting a hay barn which he put up himself—he applied to my brother, and he had leave to do so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,420. What do you say in answer to this statement. He says there were no buildings on the farm and in consequence he was obliged to lay down the land in pasture?—I looked over the farm yesterday and I found ample buildings for the size of the farm. I found two pig-styes, a cart-shed, I found a stable, I found a granary, and I found two cowhouses which would hold ten cows, five in each, and a comfortable house, and in fact sufficient buildings on the farm to cultivate the 35 acres—ample. But more than that, he says when he cultivated the land he lost, but now he has laid it down in grass I am told that he is a money-making man. It is a grazing farm. It pays better to fatten cattle and sheep than to cultivate the land.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

21,421. Are there any shippons on the farm?—What do you call a "shippon"?

21,422. A shed for young cattle?—Yes—not besides the cowhouse. Then he keeps five cows and two calves for the winter. I consider that a very good stock indeed for a farm of that size. Some little time back, I asked a neighbour what profit he was making for a cow, and he told me 23*l.* per head per annum, was the profit made by him from his cows, and that farmer kept three.

21,423. That he sold them for that price?—No, the profit from the cows, the milk and calves, the return from a cow.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,424. On this farm?—On the farm of a neighbour of this man.

21,425. Are you prepared to say that there were never cottages upon this farm?—Most certainly, so far as I know; I have known the property for 30 years, and I have never known any. There was only one cottage in ruins; that was built for an old woman, not for workmen, and that is in ruins.

21,426. Is it not useless to lay traps to catch rabbits in any other place besides the runs?—No; you will excuse me, the burrows and rabbit holes are the proper places to lay traps in.

21,427. They come through his fence on the farm?—He should kill them at the headquarters of the rabbits. The burrows are on his farm in his occupation, and that is a place where they might be ferreted out, and every rabbit killed. I may say I never had a complant from the man or my agent.

21,428. Can you tell us who pays the rates and tithes on this land, let at 3*l.* an acre?—I should apprehend the tenant; it was let for grazing, I take it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT SMITH called and examined.

Chairman.

14,256. 21,429. You are farm bailiff to Lord Penrhyn?—Yes, my Lord.

21,430. You wish to rebut a statement of Robert Roberts, question 14,256, which is as follows:—"Did Lord Penrhyn give you the whole of the seeds you required for one year? —(A.) He order them, and I paid."—That is not right.

21,431. Will you tell us what you have to say about that?—I received a letter from the late Lord Penrhyn, dated 19th February 1872, which I produce.

21,432. Had you not better read that letter?—I will read it. "Mr. Smith, I received the enclosed letter to-day from a tenant at Yspytty." That is the letter referred to (handing in letter).

Chairman—continued.

21,433. That being Robert Roberts' letter?—Yes, my Lord.

Lord Kenyon.

21,434. It is in answer to that that Lord Penrhyn wrote?—It is enclosing that letter. His Lordship enclosed that letter to me with instructions. His Lordship says: "He is an improving man, and I have helped him in draining, and I told him last year that he seemed to have used bad seed, and he seemed to have not forgotten my remark. I wish you would get some good clover seed and turnip seed of the sort you recommend. Let me know the amount, and I will send you a cheque for it. You could write to him and

" ask how and when it is to be sent." That is all the letter relating to that matter.

21,435. Will you kindly go on; did you order the seed, and did Lord Penrhyn pay for it; that is what we want to know?—I ordered the seed in accordance with his lordship's instructions, and paid for it.

21,436. Did you get the receipt?—I have got the invoice and my bank book to show the transactions. (Witness handed in bundle of documents.)

21,437. These are only the invoices, are they not?—Yes, my Lord, that is all.

21,438. Where is the receipt?—Here is the bank book showing the payment of the amount (producing).

Lord Kenyon.

21,439. You have not got the receipt?—The receipts are in my lord's possession.

Chairman.

21,440. What is the date of it?—September 28th, to Dickson and Sons.

Lord Kenyon.

21,441. April 18th, is that it?—That is the original; that is the seed account for Robert Roberts; it is the one sent to Bettws y Coed for Roberts.

21,442. To Bettws y Coed Station; is that it?—Yes.

21,443. 25*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*?—Yes.

21,444. I see it is included in the invoice here, 25*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*; that is included in a big bill of 119*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.*, which is there?—Yes, and passed through my banking account, as you will see there, paid by Lord Penrhyn, I do not think there can be anything plainer; I am very sorry that it has happened so for Roberts, for I believe that there must be some mistake in his evidence, or else he could have never come forward to deny such a statement as that.

21,445. You think there is a mistake?—There must be a mistake on his part, surely.

21,446. But you think Mr. Roberts is an honourable man, and would not have made a statement of that sort, unless he was under a misapprehension?—I should hope not.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,447. Is it not possible that this amount might have been added on to it, when he paid his half year's rent?—No, nothing of the sort. You can see from Lord Penhryn's letter the intention to pay, and it was paid by me, most certainly.

Mr. Grove.

21,448. Was the seed sent to him from you, or direct from Dicksons'?—Direct from Messrs. Dickson and Sons. You will see the invoice. The invoice proves that.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. MORRIS WILLIAMS called and examined (through an interpreter).

Chairman.

21,449. Have you been through this statement with Professor Rhŷs, is it correct, and is it the evidence you wish to give?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"Evidence of Morris Williams, Penygroes Farm, Llanrhwydrus.

"I am a tenant farmer occupying the above place.

"Common Land: Many labourers to my knowledge had enclosed small plots from the common at Llanfechell, and they had to purchase it, and some to purchase it twice from the Government.

"I am on the best terms with my landlord and the agent, though I never see my landlord."

Chairman.

21,450. Who is your landlord?—Sir George Meyrick.

[Statement continued.]

"Though I never see my landlord, and I could not understand him, neither could he understand me, but yet I do not experience any inconvenience.

"The letting is from year to year. I consider that I have greatly improved the farm during my tenancy in draining and building, and I was assisted by my master, but not as much as I would wish. This year my landlord is building an addition to the house.

"I have an agreement, and it is no hindrance to my carrying on the work of the farm.

"My rent is fairly reasonable if trade were brisk, but under the present depression almost all lands are too high. Abatements have been granted on the farm during the last 10 years.

"Labourers are scarce, and their wages are high, as trade is so poor.

"If all the landlords and agents were in my circumstances there would be no need of a Land Court, but I cannot shut my eyes to the great necessities of the country, taking it as a whole. There are many charging an unnecessarily high rent on their land, and it is quite unreasonable and even impossible for the tenant and his family to live on and pay all demands, without saving anything for himself and children for their labour. The only remedy I can suggest is to have a Land Court, fixed on a good basis between landlord and tenant.

"It would be desirable to have a law to prevent trespassing on land.

"There is no doubt but that there are many farmers in great straits in the country, one standing as surety for the other to have the means of paying their rents to the landlord."

* Subsequent to the receipt of this evidence, the original witness, Mr. Robert Roberts (see question 14,256), pending an opportunity for him to tender rebutting evidence, has forwarded to the Secretary several documents (including a receipt for a payment by Mr. Roberts of 24*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.*) with the view of substantiating his original statement that he had to pay for seeds ordered by Lord Penrhyn. The date of the receipt is "March 24th, 1875."

Lord Kenyon.

21,451. With regard to the Common of Llanfechell, have they to purchase it from the Government?—Yes.

21,452. Can you say anything more about that?—They had to buy it twice.

21,453. How was that?—Within my own knowledge my father-in-law bought a small holding on the side of the mountain; he bought it from the tenant at its full value, and in a considerable time after that, the Government stepped in and sold the portion that had been enclosed within a shorter period than 21 years, and then they came for another part under the 60 years.

21,454. Would you not call that a case of buying on bad title?—I consider that the Government have done an injustice.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,455. Is your farm arable or grass land?—Both.

21,456. Do you keep cows?—Yes.

21,457. Do you agree with the witness we called just now, that you can make 23*l.* profit from a cow?—No, I do not.

21,458. Do you think it can be done in Wales?—No, I do not. I never had a cow that I could do that with.

21,459. Have you a cow that could do half that?—Yes, no doubt.

21,460. You say that many farmers go security for others. Is it at the bank?—Yes, there are many throughout the country.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,461. You say, Mr. Williams, that you are on good terms with your landlord and yet that you cannot understand him and he cannot understand you?—Yes, on the best possible terms. The agent is a Welshman and understands everything.

21,462. Do you not think it would be more satisfactory if you had any grievance, that you should go to the fountain head instead of through the channel?—I have never felt that necessity.

21,463. Is the landlord building the house at his own expense?—Yes, this year.

21,464. Entirely, only that you do the carting?—Yes, I do the carting.

21,465. You say, "If all the landlords and "agents were in my circumstances there would "be no need of a Land Court." What do you mean by a Land Court?—The law that you are about now. I cannot explain it.

21,466. Do you call a system of arbitration a Land Court?—I suppose that is what it is.

21,467. I will just ask you this: Do you think a system of arbitration would be a good thing between a landlord and a tenant to settle questions of improvements made on a farm?—I do not think it is necessary for us to have it, but it would be beneficial to the country.

21,468. Have you made any improvements on your farm?—Yes, a great many.

21,469. Supposing that you yield up possession, do you feel confident that you can recover compensation for those improvements at the end of your tenancy?—The whole of the improvements?

21,470. Yes, what you consider yourself entitled to?—I do not know, I am sure, what I would get.

21,471. Do you know what you would get according to the terms of your agreement?—No, I do not know.

21,472. So that when you carry out the improvements you do something, as to which you do not know whether you will get a return for it or not?—Yes; no one compels me.

21,473. Do you think that is satisfactory?—It is satisfactory to me. I have carried them out without being asked to.

21,474. I will put it in this way to you. Do you think it just that you should spend 500*l.*, say, in improvements on your farm and you leave in the course of five years, before you get an adequate return on that outlay—without recovering what you are justly entitled to?—No, it is not.

21,475. Do you think that a court of arbitration would be a good thing to assess rent where you and the landlord failed to agree?—I cannot prove that, but I consider it would be an advantage to the country.

Mr. Grove.

21,476. How long is it since the common at Llanfechell was inclosed—I mean, since those plots were bought by the people you have mentioned?—I do not remember.

21,477. Will you say about how many years?—The last portion was inclosed about 15 years ago.

21,478. When were the lots sold to the various parties that you have named?—I cannot say exactly, but somewhere about that time, or perhaps a little earlier.

21,479. Are you acquainted with the whole of the circumstances of the case?—No, that is all I know.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,480. You mentioned an agreement just now, I think. Have you got an agreement?—Yes.

21,481. Have you ever read it?—No, never, but I heard it read.

21,482. Was it translated to you?—Yes.

21,483. Do you know what conditions you are under?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

21,484. Arising out of what Mr. Richard Jones asked you just now, do you or do you not think that Sir George Meyrick would deal fairly with you when you gave up your farm?—I expect that he would at any rate.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,485. You are doing some hauling now for your new house, are you not?—Yes.

21,486. Have you entered into any fresh agreement with your landlord with regard to the expiration of the term of exhaustion for that building?—No.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

21,487. No agreement whatever? — No, nothing.

21,488. Do you think the tenants on the estate are always paid for all the permanent improvements they make?—If times are good, they might get compensation.

21,489. Is it not in bad times they require it most?—Yes, certainly.

21,490. Do you know a place called Pantybyr on this estate?—No, it is not in our district. I do not know anything about it.

Chairman.

21,491. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Owen Wynne:—"Are there not a "good many farmers in Anglesey who hold "several farms, in some cases under different "landlords"?—There are very few in my district.

21,492. "What is your opinion of this"?—I cannot say anything about it.

21,493. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent:—"Is not the reason you do not "see your landlord that he is an invalid"?—No, it is not. He is poorly now, but I never saw him even when he was not poorly.

21,494. "Till last year did he not reside for a "part of every year at Bodorgan"?—Yes, but we live on the other side of the county.

21,495. "Is he at Bodorgan now"?—I do not know where he is.

21,496. These are Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith's questions:—"Was a house built on your farm "about 16 years ago"?—Yes.

21,497. "Who built it"?—Partly by each.

21,498. "Was the rent raised in conse-"quence"?—No, not after that.

Chairman—continued.

21,499. "Are you in favour of the tenant "obtaining compensation for improvements"?—Yes. Certainly that would be comfortable to us.

21,500. "Are you in favour of fixity of "tenure"?—Yes, certainly; everyone is in favour of that.

21,501. "Is there any way of obtaining these "changes except the appointment of a Land "Court or a compulsory reference to arbitra-"tion"?—I am not aware.

21,502. Have you any grievance?—Not amongst us as tenants.

21,503. "Not a single one"?—Not one, so far as I am aware.

21,504. These questions are handed in by Mr. John Hughes:—"Will you name some of "the landlords who are charging exorbitant "rents"?—I would rather not. See 21

21,505. "Is it within your knowledge that on "some estates abatements are made on farms "that have been taken on lease"?—I cannot answer that for certain.

21,506. Do you, or do you not, know that such is the case on the Honourable Lady Neave's estate?—No, I do not.

21,507. "Penyrorsedd Farm which is in your "district, for instance"?—Yes, it is in our parish.

Lord Kenyon.

21,508. Do you know anything about that?—I believe she does.

21,509. She has reduced it?—She allows an abatement.

The witness withdrew.

Captain PRESTON called and examined.

Chairman.

21,510. You are agent to Sir Richard Bulkeley and to Lady Neave?—Yes.

21,511. You give evidence for the Baron Hill Estate belonging to Sir Richard Bulkeley, and also with regard to Lady Neave's estate?—I do, my Lord.

21,512. You have prepared your summary of evidence in a joint manner, have you not?—In a joint manner, it will save a great deal of time.

21,513. So that all the answers are applicable to both estates, except in those cases where they happen to differ?—That is so, my Lord.

21,514. What is the acreage of the Baron Hill, Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate?—About 25,000 acres.

21,515. And Lady Neave's?—5,000, about.

21,516. I take that to be the present acreage of Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate?—The present acreage.

21,517. Have you anything to say as to garden allotments?—On the Baron Hill estate the garden allotments are let to the tenants and labourers in Beaumaris and Llangefni. Garden allotments are always granted where asked for on the Baron Hill estate. On the Llysdulas estate, the Honourable Lady Neave's, they are granted in the Pensarn district.

21,518. Then I take it that language, religion, and politics do not affect you in either estate?—In either estate. If you will allow me to mention it, during last year and the present year I appointed tenants of three of the largest farms on Baron Hill, with Sir Richard Bulkeley's sanction, and to this present day I do not know anything about their politics or their religion, nor do I care. I take them on their merits as farmers.

21,519. Then you are a farmer yourself, Captain Preston?—I farm 100 acres for myself and up to the present time I have been farming 600 acres on the Baron Hill estate.

21,520. Is that the home farm?—The home farm.

21,521. The usual date of entry is what?—The 13th of November on both estates.

21,522. You have a few farms let on leases, I believe?—A few farms on both estates.

Chairman—continued.

21,523. Is there any demand for them?—There is no demand worthy of mention, because tenants do not care, in the first place, to bind themselves to a fixed rent for a long period; in the second place, they believe themselves to be quite as safe in a yearly tenancy, but whenever leases are asked for on either estate, they are readily granted.

21,524. How do you compare leaseholders and yearly tenants with regard to their condition?—They are about equal. There are good farmers under leases, and bad farmers.

21,525. Have you many changes in your tenants?—There are very few changes. Many are tenants now whose families have been tenants for generations, descending from father to son.

21,526. Are there any cases of hardship, in your opinion?—Not to my knowledge.

21,527. When you resume the occupation of fields or plots out of holdings, for the sake of planting and so on, what do you do generally?—The question is: "In resuming the occupation "of a field or plot out of a holding, for the sake "of planting, building, or for other purposes, do "owners generally serve their tenants with "proper notices for the purpose, and grant them "compensation?" Yes, on Baron Hill and Lady Neave's estate in such cases it is mutually agreed to revise the rents in proportion.

21,528. And as regards damage done to the land in timber cutting, do you always compensate?—Yes, we always compensate where such occurs.

21,529. In the case of any mining, brickfields, quarries, or other industrial operations being commenced upon land, has the rent been re-adjusted or compensation granted?—The rents are always adjusted, and the tenants get full and reasonable compensation for damage.

21,530. Have you any penalising clauses in your agreements which are struck out?—There are penalising clauses, my Lord, but they are never acted upon, I may say, on either estate.

21,531. Do you think they are of any use?—They are of use in case of a bad tenant.

21,532. Then you think you would not advise their omission in fact?—Well, I think they are a safeguard.

21,533. But only used as such, and are never enforced?—Never enforced.

21,534. Tenants, of course, have a copy of the agreement?—Always.

21,535. Will you put one of your agreements in?—That is the Baron Hill agreement, and that is the other [handing agreements]. The counterpart lease is always given. The contents are always explained to a Welsh speaking farmer, and the draft of a proposed lease is always sent to the lessee for perusal, and its terms discussed before the settlement.

21,536. As to rent?—The rent is usually fixed at so much per acre, or at a gross sum, both on the Baron Hill estate and on Lady Neave's.

21,537. What is the usual rent of average lands of different qualities in your district?—

Chairman—continued.

With regard to the Baron Hill estate; about 1*l.* an acre for the lowland, and 1*s.* 6*d.* an acre for the upland, and on Llysdulas at about 15*s.*

21,538. Then do you have any other services rendered besides payment of rent?—None whatever.

21,539. Do you fix rent on the basis of valuation?—On a basis of valuation, and it is done also by private treaty.

21,540. Of course you do not take the highest bidder?—On no consideration.

21,541. Do you ever have to go to arbitration?—Never.

21,543. Have you anything to say about abatements. Do you make any permanent reductions?—They were reduced. I could instance two, Castellior and Lledwigan on the Baron Hill Estate. As to temporary abatements, there were some in 1886, 1887, 1888, 1892, and 1893, and on Lady Neave's estate there were temporary abatements.

21,544. Since what time?—On Baron Hill estate in 1886 there was 1,687*l.* 18*s.* or at the rate of 12½ per cent.; in 1887, 1,135*l.* 12*s.*, or at the rate of 8¾ per cent.; in 1888, 617*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, or at the rate of 5 per cent.; in 1892–3, 1,261*l.* 3*s.*, or at the rate of 10 per cent. Then on the Llysdulas estate in 1886 at Lady Day there was 15 per cent. allowed; at Michaelmas 10 per cent.; at Michaelmas, 1887, 15 per cent.; at Lady Day, 1888, 10 per cent.; at Michaelmas, 10 per cent.; at Lady Day, 1889, 10 per cent.; at Michaelmas, 10 per cent.; at Michaelmas, 1892, 10 per cent.; at Lady Day, 1893, 10 per cent.

21,545. Then I take it that notice was given to the tenants of those intended abatements?—There was.

21,546. How are rents raised or reduced?—By the advice of the estate agent, subject to agreement with the tenant.

21,547. On the Baron Hill estate when do the rents fall due?—They fall due on the 25th of March, the 24th of June, the 29th of September, and the 25th of December.

21,548. That is four times a year—That is four times a year, but they are only received twice a year. They are paid in the first week of July and January in each year. On the Llys Dulas estate the rents are due Lady Day, and they are generally paid the last week in August, and Michaelmas, in January.

Chairman—continued.

21,549. The tithe, land tax, and so on, are paid as usual?—As usual.

21,550. And the average size of farms on the Baron Hill estate is what?—80 acres.

21,551. And onLady Neave's?—70 to 80 acres.

21,552. Is there any consolidation of holdings?—There were a few in some localities, before my time, none during my time, but about 30 or 40 years ago. On Lady Neave's estate there are none.

21,553. I suppose they are generally lowland farms that are consolidated?—Upon the Baron Hill estate; they are lowland in Anglesey; they are mountain farms in Carnarvonshire.

21,554. Do you object to consolidation on account of less labour being employed?—I do not object to it.

21,555. But you think the effect of consolidation would be, that less labour is employed?—To a certain degree it would be.

21,556. Do you allow sub-letting?—None, on either estate.

21,557. How about labourers?—There is no scarcity of labourers, and the fences and watercourses are properly attended to.

21,558. Is land going out of cultivation?—There is none going out of cultivation.

21,559. You have got, I suppose, some waste land which is still capable of improvement?—Yes.

21,560. Then with regard to repairs, who builds the new houses and repairs the buildings?—On the Baron Hill estate within 30 years about 7,868*l.* have been spent by the landlord in building new houses, farm buildings, repairing old buildings, and other improvements. In some cases the rents were raised, but subsequently reduced. On the Honourable Lady Neave's estate the houses and out-buildings have been erected, as well as general repairs, without increasing the rents. In every case where repairs are necessary, timber and slates have been allowed. Drainage pipes have been given to all that require them.

21,561. Do you give compensation by agreement on improvements?—By agreement.

21,562. Of course there is no contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not on Baron Hill. I think there is a clause in some of the Llysdulas agreements.

21,563. Then there is no tenant right, I suppose?—No tenant right.

21,564. On the Baron Hill estate is the incoming tenant obliged to buy the sheep according to the custom of the county?—On the mountain farms they are; that is the usual thing.

21,565. What can you tell us about game?—The rabbits cannot be preserved except on the land in the occupation of the owner. Hares for the most part are very scarce, and other game cases vary.

21,566. Do the tenants usually avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act?—They do.

21,567. What do you know about game damage?—I may mention that when applied for, game has been let to the tenants on the Baron Hill estate, but game in the whole parish of Llanbabo was recently let on lease to the tenants who re-let it at a profit.

21,568. Of course you do not expect them to beat the coverts, or anything of that sort?—Certainly not, not on either estate.

21,569. What do you say with regard to instruction being given in butter and cheese-making and so on, and lectures?—There have been a few cases in the neighbourhood of Beaumaris and elsewhere, and in the University College as to dairy-work—butter making.

21,570. Does anybody go near them?—They were rather poorly attended.

21,571. Who insures the buildings?—On the Baron Hill estate the buildings are generally insured at about two-thirds of their value. On Lady Neave's estate they are generally insured, the whole of them at two-thirds of their value.

21,572. Can you tell us what happens if any farms are sold—whether the tenant farmers buy them themselves or buy their farms if they are put in the market?—On the Baron Hill estate a good number were offered for sale. At the last two sales, all the tenants had the first refusal by private treaty.

21,573. There were no sales at Llysdulas?—No.

21,574. Then what were the dates of the purchase on the Baron Hill estate?—March 16, 17, and August 5, 1893.

21,575. Then I suppose the children of farmers do not usually receive wages. We have heard that very often?—Not to my knowledge.

21,576. When did the trade depression begin in your district?—About 1882 or 1883.

21,577. And what was the principal cause of such depression?—Foreign competition.

21,578. I suppose I can take it from you that the relations between Sir Richard and Lady Neave and their tenants are perfectly friendly?—Perfectly friendly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

21,579. Would you kindly tell us whether, in your opinion, the rents as compared with other estates, are high or low—whether they are more or less on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate than other estates in the county?—I think they very much on the same average.

21,580. On the same level?—Yes, I do not know very much about the other estates.

21,581. We have been told that the large landlords will let their land at a lower rate than the small landlords. Are you of that opinion?—I am decidedly.

21,582. With regard to buildings, the custom on your estate is that you find the building materials, and the tenant finds the labour?—That is so. Timber and slates are granted by both estates.

21,583. You said there was no tenant right?—None.

21,584. Do you not consider that that implies a certain amount of tenant right?—Well, there is no fixed rule; they need not do it if they do not like to. We do not compel them to do it if they do not wish to do so.

21,585. Do you not consider that the house is a necessary part of a farm?—I do.

21,586. But that is the custom of this county, the ordinary custom?—Yes, it is, and has been for generations.

21,587. Do you know the rest of Wales at all, other parts of Wales?—I know a good deal of Carnarvonshire.

21,588. Do you know whether it is the custom in other parts of Wales?—I believe it is in Carnarvonshire.

21,589. It is a custom that you found in existence and in operation in the county when you first came into the county?—Precisely so.

21,590. With regard to the insurance of buildings, you said, if I understood you aright, that they are insured up to about two-thirds of their value?—That is so.

21,591. Who pays the premium?—The tenant.

21,592. That is part of the agreement?—Part of the agreement.

21,593. Have you had any cases of fires?—Not in my time. There was one.

21,594. I wanted to know who would benefit by the money received from the insurance company. How would it be employed?—In rebuilding.

21,595. Who would receive the cash from the insurance company?—To the best of my belief the tenant.

21,596. There was one case. What was that one case?—Mr. Crewdson, who is the tenant of the Bull Hotel. His farm buildings were burnt, some of them, I think it was in 1891, and they were rebuilt.

21,597. Is the insurance made in the joint names of landlord and tenant?—I think not.

21,598. In some cases that we heard yesterday it was so. But you think that the money would be claimable by the tenant?—Yes, it would be receivable by him.

21,599. Who received it in the particular instance to which you allude?—Mr. Crewdson, to the best of my belief, received it himself.

21,600. And it would be applied to the rebuilding?—It was applied to the rebuilding.

21,601. Then you mentioned abatements over a series of consecutive years. If abatements of rent are made over a series of years, would the tenant receive any reduction of his rateable value in consequence of the abatements, in the assessment of his land?—No, I do not think so—none.

21,602. Do you think he would in the case of a permanent reduction?—I think he would.

21,603. Do you not think that he might receive it if he applied, even in the case of temporary reductions over a series of years?—I think he might if he applied for it.

21,604. Are you on the Assessment Committee?—No, I am not.

20,768, 99. 21,605. I should like to ask you a question about a case that came before us yesterday. Mr. John Roberts spoke about compensation for improvements, and he spoke of having made an appeal to Sir Richard Bulkeley for compensation?—Quite so.

21,606. Have you got that case under your consideration at this present time?—That case is under our consideration. The purchase is not complete, and Sir Richard Bulkeley fully intends to go thoroughly into the matter with other cases. We have other claims for compensation on various farms that were sold, but Sir Richard Bulkeley is considering the matter, and in due course it will be attended to with the others.

21,607. I am glad to hear that from you, because I think that the witness yesterday was rather afraid that the adjournment was an adjournment sine die?—If I might be allowed to explain, we were expecting our London solicitors down here to attend, but they were obliged to go on other business; and when they came down here those questions were all to have been settled.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,608. Does the tenant always have a copy of his agreement?—Always.

21,609. And he has time to look over it before he signs it?—Plenty of time. They can always take it home with them, if they like.

21,610. And after signing it he takes a copy with him?—Certainly, on both estates.

21,611. You have not got a Welsh agreement in use on the estate, have you?—No, but it is always explained to them in Welsh.

21,612. With regard to building, I think you mentioned that the landlord gives timber and slate. What about the stones, or the bricks for the walls?—In many cases the farmers supply the stone.

21,613. They quarry them and cart them?—Yes; they quarry them and cart them.

21,614. And also pay for the mason's work themselves?—In the case of the last buildings that were erected by the Baron Hill estates in Carnarvonshire, the landlord paid for everything except the haulage, and he did not raise the rent in any of them.

21,615 But what is the custom on the estate in this county? What is the usual practice in this county?—It varies; in some cases the landlord builds.

21,616. Entirely?—Entirely.

21,617. Then you do not raise the rent over here?—In one case we did raise it five per cent.

21,618. A witness we had before us yesterday thought that foreign competition told very much against the labourer. Do you think that is correct?—I think foreign competition does.

21,619. It tells against the labourer?—I think it tells against everybody.

21,620. We are pretty well agreed that it tells against the farmer. Would you say it was also hard upon the labourer? What about the price of bread, for instance?—I should say, in reply, the price of corn being unremunerative to grow it, they necessarily employ less labour, and men flock to the towns. I think that the imposition of 5*s.* or 10*s.* duty upon a quarter of corn would be a sufficient increase to make corn-growing profitable, when about twice the number of men would be employed, and, by draining the surplus population of towns, it would improve the lot of labourers.

21,621. That is going beyond my question. I ask you what would be the effect, do you think, on those labourers that are employed. Are they not better able to buy what they want when the provisions are cheap?—Yes, they are, but then I think a less number are employed, owing to foreign competition.

21,622. You think it brings down the wages in that way?—I think so.

21,623. A labourer yesterday, in the other room, where you attended I think, mentioned that they have lost a good many perquisites since 1842 or 1849—in the last 40 or 50 years at any rate—and that the labourers are not so well off for that reason, as they used to be. What do you think of that?—I do not quite follow it.

21,624. He said that the labourers had lost a good many perquisites during the last 40 or 50 years; what they used to have from the farms, and that they now do not have them, but only the bare wages as a rule?—I do not know anything about that.

21,625. Allusion was made just now to the lectures given in the neighbourhood of Beaumaris, I think?—Yes.

21,626. Why were they poorly attended, do you think?—The farmers did not take sufficient interest in them to attend.

21,627. Were the lectures suited to their state of information?—Yes, they were dairy lectures. I attended some myself, and there was a practical illustration of the newest kind of dairying exhibited there.

21,628. Would they be in Welsh or in English?—It was in English that they were delivered, but there was a practical demonstration given; milk was churned and butter made, so that everyone could follow it.

21,629. Do you think the difficulty of language told against these lectures being a success?—I think it was more than that; they did not take sufficient interest in attending.

21,630. Do they depend on dairy produce much in that part of the island?—A great deal.

21,631. You mentioned upland and lowland property; how much upland property would you say you had on the Baron Hill Estate in this county. You see, Anglesey people will call the hills about here mountains, and so on. We have heard a good deal about the Llanfechell mountain, and I think that some of us, who know the rest of Wales would scarcely call them mountains. I want to know how much you would reckon as upland ground?—There is 7,827 acres of upland.

21,632. Of upland property in this county?—No, in Carnarvonshire.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

21,633. I wanted to know with regard to Anglesey. Do you reckon that any of the land in Anglesey on your estates is upland property?—No, there is none. What do you mean—mountain property?

21,634. I think you used the words upland and lowland. I will allow you to define it according to the way you used the word yourself?—Quite so.

21,635. Is any of the upland property you speak of in Anglesey?—No, it is all in Carnarvonshire.

21,636. Then you practically have no upland property, as it would be called, in Anglesey?—None on Baron Hill. There is a copper mine on the Llysdulas estate. That is mountain land.

Professor Rhŷs.

That is probably Parys mountain.

Mr. Grove.

21,637. You stated that when farms are for sale, they are first offered to the sitting tenants?—At the last two sales they were.

21,638. When that offer is made, is a price named, or is it a matter for private negotiation?—A matter for private negotiation?—That is a copy of a letter which was written to the tenants before the sales (handing same).

21,639. You mentioned garden allotments About what rent do you get for allotments of that kind?—About 45*s.* an acre.

21,640. Is there any scarcity of labour on your farms generally?—Well, no; I have never found any.

21,641. Do you consider the cottage accommodation ample for them?—I think so.

21,642. Do we understand you rightly to say that the expenditure for repairs was 7,876*l.*; I think that is the figure you gave us?—The amount actually spent on Baron Hill since 1863 was 8,585*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*

21,643. You have not given us the total rent-roll; you did not put that in as evidence, but you tell us that the abatements were 10 per cent. on about 1,200*l.* a year, therefore the rent-roll would be about 12,000*l.* Is that approximately the figures. There is no need to go into details?—On Baron Hill about 21,000*l.*

21,644. Then taking 30 years and dividing that sum of 8,585*l.*, it would be about 280*l.* a year that has been spent in repairs and new buildings, I suppose. Are we right in that?—I can give you the exact expenditure in each year.

21,645. It would be very desirable. We have had that in other places; and the per-centages of rent that there has been expended upon the land seem to vary so much, that it would be very interesting to us if you would put in that table, and very useful to us, no doubt. You do not object to put it in, I suppose?—No, I do not. (Witness handed in the following table):—

Mr. Grove—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,646. I have just one or two questions to ask you on the agreement. There is one clause "not to take two successive crops of hay off "any portion or portions of the said lands without having previously amply top-dressed the "same with farmyard manure or bones." Would you enforce that clause?—Is this Baron Hill?

21,647. Yes. Would you enforce that clause in a year like the present, when hay is so very scarce?—Well, as a matter of fact, I have shut my eyes to the fact, but I have seen several tenants taking second crops off their land and I have not interfered with them. There was only one case in which a tenant asked me leave, and he voluntered then to carry out this clause himself, and I gave him leave. In the other cases I shut my eyes to it; I knew that they were doing it, but I did not interfere in any way whatever.

21,648. Is this eighth clause enforced: "Once "in every three years to paint the outdoor "woodwork of the buildings and windows, doors, "and gates on the said premises"?—It is in the agreement, but I am sorry to say that it is not very often carried out.

21,649. You shut your eyes to that as well?—Well, I have to a certain extent, but I think it is to the benefit of both the landlords and tenants to keep the timber work painted.

21,650. The eleventh clause seems to give the tenant more liberty than he usually gets on other estates. He is "not to sell or convey, or "allow to be conveyed off the said lands and "premises any hay, straw, roots, or manure "without replacing the same with artificial "manures or feeding stuffs of one-third money "value of such produce sold." Do you know of a tenant who makes use of this liberty to sell hay and straw off their land?—I do.

21,651. I should think it must be a great boon to the tenants?—It is a great boon to them

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

There is a great deal of wheat straw sold in the district of Beaumaris, and the price they get for their straw is almost more than they can get for the wheat. They get from 3*l.* to 4*l.* and sometimes 5*l.* a ton for the wheat straw, and we allow them to sell it.

21,652. That clause is a great credit to the landlord I must say: Again "Not to sell by public "auction any of the live or dead stock off the "said farm or lands without the landlord's "sanction in writing." What is the object of that clause?—It is possible that the tenant might sell off all his stock unknown to us, for instance, at the far end of Anglesea or away in Carnarvonshire, without my noticing it in the paper, and I might find that the tenant has sold everything off. But it has never been refused if they ask us permission to sell by auction.

21,653. Is clause 15 enforced: "To keep one "dog for the use of the landlord if required"?—It has never to my knowledge been enforced in any possible way.

21,654. I think you say you are prepared to grant leases if they are applied for. On what terms do you generally grant leases?—I do not quite understand the question.

21,655. I am mistaken; you say there is no demand for leases. You do not know of any cases where a tenant has applied for a lease?—And been refused?

21,656. And been refused?—None; they never are refused.

21,657. Have you had any application for a lease?—Oh, yes.

21,658. Then I suppose you failed to agree as to the terms?—Yes. We mutually agree in the estate office, and then a draft lease is sent to the tenant for approval, and if he agrees to it, then he gets his lease.

21,659. Have you any leaseholders; have you any tenants under lease on your estate?—On both estates, yes. I have a copy of the lease of each, in case you would like to see it.

21,660. What are the terms on which you grant leases as a rule?—What do you mean by terms? I do not quite understand you.

21,661. As far as the rent is concerned?—I will put in a copy of the lease on each estate if you please. (Documents handed in.)

Mr. Griffiths.

21,662. I was not here when you first commenced your evidence, but if I rightly understand, you are a practical farmer yourself?—I farm 100 acres of my own and about 600 acres for Sir Richard Bulkeley.

21,663. Can you speak Welsh?—I can a great deal, quite enough to make myself understood, and to understand the tenants.

21,664. Could you give us the size of these allotments that you speak of; you need not be very particular; just give us round figures?—They are three acres in Beaumaris.

21,665. Do some of the allotment holders keep cows?—They are more for gardens.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

21,666. Are they attached to or adjoining any of the cottages, or what?—No.

21,667. Apart?—Separate and apart.

21,668. Do the labourers eagerly take them up?—Yes, but there is no further demand. All the demand has been supplied both in Llangefni and Beaumaris.

21,669. Are they generally taken by agricultural labourers or by artizans?—I think they are more, people with shops and small business that want ground to grow their vegetables.

21,670. None of them keep cows?—Not on the allotment grounds.

21,671. Do you think it would be advantageous for a labourer to keep a cow—a farm labourer?—Oh, I think it would in some cases.

21,672. Do you think the tenants as a rule would be willing to part with the land?—I think they would if there was a demand for it.

21,673. What I mean is, it would be the means of keeping the farm labourer in the country instead of running into the towns?—Quite so.

21,674. I suppose you keep a dairy?—Yes, I do.

21,675. What is your experience; what do you think is the profit a man can make of a cow in a year?—Well, it is so different in different localties. For instance, about Beaumaris there is a tremendous demand for milk, and then away in the far parts of Angelsey it is a difficult thing to get it to market.

21,676. But take Wales as a whole; what would you consider would be about the sum a man could make of a cow?—I have not studied the matter, so I am afraid to give an opinion.

21,677. You would not like to express an opinion?—No, I would not.

21,678. When farms are sold on the estate, what is your general custom with regard to permanent improvements effected by the tenant?—Well, we consider every case on its own merits, and then we compensate according to what we think to be just and fair.

21,679. Is it ever referred to arbitration?—In my time it has not been.

21,680. The tenants generally have to submit to what you propose?—Well, that is so.

21,681. Have you any period marked out as a period of exhaustion with regard to building walls, outbuildings, and so on, when a tenant has to leave the farm, after having made great improvements?—I thought that came under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

21,682. But you do not abide by the Agricultural Holdings Act on your estate, as a rule, do you?—Yes.

21,683. You do?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

21,684. Am I right in supposing that your agreements are under consideration. Has there been any conversation with Sir Richard about your agreements?—That is so.

21,685. There is some idea of revising them?—That is so.

21,686. Comparing the system of the tenants in this county, putting up and erecting their own buildings and doing repairs, and the system which prevails elsewhere of the landlord doing it, which do you consider the better system?—I think it is better for the landlords to do it.

Mr. Kenyon—continued.

21,687. You stated that 7,868*l.* had been expended in 30 years in buildings. That is not a very large sum of money in 30 years. I suppose the smallness of that sum is attributable to its being the custom of the country for the tenant to do the buildings?—That was the sum actually expended, but if you will kindly refer to that paper you will find there was a considerable amount of interest, as well as I remember, making it up to 15,000*l.*; I think that is so there; it came to a total of 15,000*l.*

21,688. It is owing to the custom of the country that more was not done, I suppose?—Quite so.

21,689. Does this apply to the Carnarvonshire property as well?—It does.

21,690. What is the system with the Carnarvonshire property?—Just the same as in Anglesea.

21,691. Just the same as this?—Just the same, excepting that lately all the buildings were put up by the landlords. There was one new house and all the farms except one were put into a thorough state of repair.

21,692. Do you consider that the estate is lowly rented in consideration of that fact, that the tenants do the buildings?—I do, very lowly rented.

21,693. And on that account?—It was proved by the sale.

21,694. In granting these leases do you exact any premium?—From the tenant?

21,695. Yes?—None whatever. He has got to pay the solicitor.

21,696. For the lease?—For the lease.

21,697. Yesterday a case was mentioned to us where a man had to pay 50*l.*, apparently as a premium for the lease. There is nothing of that sort in your case?—There is nothing of that sort on this estate, nothing.

Chairman.

21,698. I have several questions handed in by Mr. Vincent. "Have you had any experience of "the working of the Irish Land Court?"—I have.

21,699. "Does it satisfy either owner or "tenant?"—No.

21,700. "Do you think that if there were a "Land Court here, the landlords whom you "know would expend money on buildings, "repairs, or improvements?"—I do not think they would.

21,701. "Were the prices at which holdings "were offered to the sitting tenants frequently "lower than those realised in the market at the "auction?"—Very much so.

21,702. Will you put in the conditions?—Yes, these are the conditions of sale (producing same).

21,703. Then I have several questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffiths. "Have any tenants on the

Chairman—continued.

" estate ever complained of the game ? "—Yes, one.

21,704. " Have you ever given notice to quit " in consequence of receiving such complaints ? " —No, not in consequence of receiving the complaint. I would respectfully submit, my Lord, that the question alluded to has been amicably settled between the landlord and the tenant, and, unless you think otherwise, I think it is a pity to allude to anything that has been already settled. The tenant referred to is at present in his holding, and is perfectly satisfied.

21,705. And that is the only complaint you have had ?—That is the only complaint.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,706. You say you have amicably settled; would you mind giving the date?—It was settled, as well as I remember, the beginning of this year.

Chairman.

21,707. " What is the rule as to building on the " estate; does the landlord or tenant build ? "—I have already answered that.

21,708. " Do you know Neuadd, Cemlyn ? "—Yes.

21,709. " What proportion, if any, of the ex- " penses incurred in building upon this farm, " two years or so ago, did the landlord con- " tribute ? "—That is on Lady Neave's estate.

21,710. Can you call that to mind ?—Well, it was before my time, but I have a sub-agent here who can answer the question.

21,711. " Can you name the three farms on " which you say there has been recently a " change of tenancy ? " Which estate is that on ?—Baron Hill estate. Yes, I can.

21,712. " Is Cremlyn one of them ? "—Cremlyn is one of them.

21,713. " Is the present tenant of Cremlyn a Conservative ? "—I do not know.

Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: I should like to ask for the names of the three farms, if your Lordship pleases.

Chairman.

21,713*a*. Will you name the three farms on which you say there has been recently a change of tenancy ?—Cremlyn, Lledwigan, and the Home Farm at Baron Hill.

21,714. " You have spoken as to the re-valua- " tion in 1876; on how many farms was there " a reduction of rent in consequence of such re- " valuation ? "—I cannot say.

21,715. " Can you name one farm on which " there was a reduction in consequence of such " re-valuation ? "—Well, I am not now prepared to say.

21,716. " Do you know Hafod onen ? "—I do.

21,717. " Did the tenancy of this farm ter- " minate on the 29th September;" do you remember ?—I do not remember.

21,718. " Was Hugh Owen compelled to give " up the tenancy because he refused to agree to

Chairman—continued.

" this clause as to the time when the tenancy " determined ? "—His son whilst claiming his vote, two or three years ago, said, in open court, that his father never signed an agreement. The contention that my agent had in opposing his claim was that Mr. Owen had no right to sub-let his land. He was requested, in course, to sign the ordinary agreement. He refused. He ultimately gave Lady Neave a notice of his intention to quit the holding.

21,719. " In case of a tenant leaving on the " 29th September, might not the tenant be com- " pelled to leave some of his crops on the farm ? " —No.

21,720. " What is the present arrangement on " the Baron Hill estate as to manure left on the " farm by an outgoing tenant, and made pre- " viously to the 1st July immediately preceding " the determination of the tenancy ? "—" On the " determination of this tenancy the landlord or " the then in-coming tenant shall take all hay, " straw, green crops, and manure at a valuation, " such valuation to be on the basis of what is con- " sidered a consuming price on the farm, the " value of green crops to be computed by their " weight. Manure made previous to the said " 1st day of July and not applied to the land, " to become the property of the landlord or the " then in-coming tenant, the tenant claiming no " compensation whatever for the same."

21,721. " The witness Morris Williams was " this morning asked as to Lady Neave's abate- " ment on Penyrorsedd. Do you know that " when a lease was granted to this tenant about " two years ago, the rent reserved under the " lease was an increase of 26*l*., or how much on " the rent previously paid ? "—There was an advance of 16*l*. Sec 21,504.

21,722. " Do you agree that previous to the " time when the lease was granted the tenant " had spent many hundreds of pounds on im- " provements ? "—Yes.

21,723. You agree to that ?—He built a great number of walls.

21,724. What compensation is he now entitled to ?—He does not want any compensation, he has got his lease.

21,725. He has no compensation beyond the lease ?—No, he never asked for any.

21,726. " When was the first sale of land on the estate ? "—On Baron Hill.

21,727. When was the first sale of land on Sir Richard Bulkeley's estate [Mr. E. J. Griffith: I mean the first of the recent sales—1891] ?—I think it was 1891.

21,728. " Have you given compensation to all " the tenants whose farms were then sold ? "—No, there are some under consideration.

21,729. " How many tenants are still uncom- " pensated ? "—I think there is only one who has asked for compensation, as well as I remember.

21,730. " Have some of these cases been under " consideration for two years "—or has this one case ?—There is only one case, and the tenant was in my office some days ago and expressed himself as quite satisfied to leave the matter open till November when we intend to settle the whole of the cases.

21,731. "Do you carry on negotiation and "conversation with Welsh speaking tenants in "Welsh?"—When I visit the farms I do. If they can speak English, I speak English.

21,732. "When you correspond with such "tenants is the correspondence in Welsh or "English?"—In English.

21,733. "You have said that the penal "clauses are only used against a bad tenant?" —That is so.

21,734. "Do you agree that they may become "a power for mischief in the hands of harsh "landlords, presuming that such landlords are "possible?"—Well, a bad landlord can inflict injury on his tenant without those penalizing clauses.

21,735. I now have a number of questions by Mr. R. H. Williams: "When does the tenancy "expire on Lady Neave's estate?"—I think I have already answered that.

21,736. Is it the 29th September?—The 29th September.

21,737. "Does that not cause much in- "convenience to an outgoing tenant, as "tenancies generally expire on 13th Novem- "ber?"—I have never heard of any complaint.

21,738. "You stated that buildings on the "Baron Hill Estate were insured to two-thirds "their value. Does the tenant under the present "agreement not agree 'to insure and keep insured "for their full value' all the houses and buildings." Will you just look at the agreement?—It says "to their full value" in the agreement.

21,739. I have some other questions handed up about the game. You say there is only one dispute about game, and that has been settled and you think it would be a pity to reopen it?—It would be a pity to reopen it, and both parties are satisfied.

21,740. "Does Sir Richard Bulkeley sublet "the game on any and on how many farms on "his estate?"—He does sublet it on some. He lets it to a shooting tenant.

21,741. "Have you had any complaints that "such persons to whom the land is sublet for "the purpose of game, cause damage to farmers "by leaving gates open and otherwise causing "injury to the farmer's property?"—I have, a few days ago—the day before yesterday; we shall endeavour to have that case amicably settled and I have no doubt I can do so.

21,742. "At whose expense were house and "outbuildings erected on Bodwrog farm some "years ago?"—I do not know. It was before my time.

21,743. You do not know whether Sir Richard Bulkeley allowed anything towards the erection at the time?—I do not think he has ever been asked—to my knowledge he has not been asked.

21,744. "Was any compensation allowed the "widow and executrix of the late tenant, in "respect of the buildings when the farm was "sold this year?"—None has been asked for.

Chairman—continued.

21,745. "You have said there has only been "one dispute as to game, and that this year?" —That is so to the best of my belief.

21,746. "Will you read this letter" [Letter handed to witness]?—Am I permitted to read this out?

21,747. Yes, please read it out?—"From W. "M. Preston, Estate Offices, Baron Hill, Beau- "maris. To Mrs. Mary Owen, Park Manor, "Llansadwrn, 8th October 1891. Madam, In "reply to yours of yesterday's date I beg to "say that a few days ago I went over the land "which you complain of, and inspected the "crops which you allege have been damaged by "game. The only thing that I could see was "a small field on which was grown what was "supposed to be corn; on looking at it, I found "that the crop consisted principally of weeds "and dirt, and the very shameful way in which "it was left out exposed to the weather would "have ruined any crop however good it might "be. I therefore decline to send anyone to "inspect your crop further and I also decline to "pay any damage whatever for the alleged "trespass by game. Yours faithfully, W. M. "Preston." That is perfectly true.

21,748. Now I have some questions by Mr. Owen Williams. "What was the rent of Fferam "Uchaf to John Jones?"—146*l.* 10*s.*

21,749. "By whom were the tithes paid?"— The tithe was paid by the tenant.

21,750. "By whom was the game let?"—The game was let to the tenant, who sublet it at a profit.

21,751. "Do you know in what state the "buildings of Fferam Uchaf were when the "farm was sold two years ago?"—Well some of them were out of repair.

21,752. "Do you know that the house was "upheld by a buttress?"—No.

21,753. "Had the wall of the house leaned "six inches from the loft?"—I do not know.

21,754. "Had a portion of roof of the stable "fallen in?"—It may have. I do not know.

21,755. In what state were the buildings at Fferamgyd, Tynrhos, and Llanol in the parish of Llanbabo?—I do not remember.

21,756. I have some further questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "At the sales on the estate "did you give instructions to anyone to bid "against the sitting tenants?"—Certainly not.

21,757. "Do you say that you have no know- "ledge that there was bidding against the "sitting tenant either before or after the "reserve price was reached?"—None whatever. I have no knowledge whatever of such a thing.

21,758. "Were the sitting tenants acquainted "with the reserve price before or at the sales?" —The tenants were never acquainted with the reserve price.

21,759. "Were they pressed, or asked, or "induced to make an offer?"—In no way whatever.

Lord Kenyon.

21,760. Were they not asked to make an offer?—I have put in a copy of a letter that was sent to all the tenants giving them the option.

Chairman.

21,761. But there was no pressure?—None whatever.

21,762. "Referring you to Tywian, was this "farm offered to the tenant at 3,500*l.*?"—It was.

21,763. "Did the farm fetch in public auction 2,820*l.*?"—Yes, that is so.

21,764. I have some further questions by Mr. R. H. Williams. "At the sale on the estate, "whether a farm was sold to the sitting tenant "or not, was the purchaser entitled to the "benefits of all improvements on the farm "when possession was given up?"—That is embodied in the conditions of sale.

21,765. But was that so or not, do you remember?—I do not remember. I have put in a copy of the conditions of sale.

Lord Kenyon.

The clause in the conditions is this:—"All "the lots are sold subject to the tenancies, "tenants' rights (including such compensation "as the tenants may be entitled to on the "expiration of their tenancies, whether under "their agreements, the custom of the country, "statute, or otherwise)."

Chairman.

I now have some questions by Mr. Owen Wynne, relating to the case of Thomas J. Thomas, who gave evidence yesterday.

0,953, 8. [The Witness Thomas J. Thomas was recalled, and the examination of the present Witness, W. M. Preston, was interpreted into Welsh.]

21,766. [To W. M. Preston.] "Did you hear "Thomas J. Thomas, tenant of Glangors, give "evidence yesterday?"—I did.

21,767. "Was Thomas Thomas offered to "remain in the farm as tenant, and did he "decline to do so?"—That is so.

21,768. "Can you produce the only claim sent "in for compensation by him?"—I can (producing a document).

21,769. [To T. J. Thomas.] Did you send in that claim for compensation?—Yes, I did.

21,770. It is a claim for compensation, and the total is 316*l.*?—Yes.

21,771. [To W. M. Preston.] "What are the "years during which the improvements were "made?"—1874, 1875, 1882 to 1890, and 1880 to 1890.

21,772. "What are the items with the dates?" —In 1874, "Alteration and improvement at the "house approved of by Mr. Laurie, 150*l.*" In 1875, "New double cattle shed, facing, and improving, 70*l.*" In 1882 to 1890, "Facing and "improving boundary fence and planting 2,000 "thicksets; facing and improving other fences "and laying stone foundations, 30*l.* and 10*l.*; "total 40*l.*" 1880 to 1890, "Opening out four "main water courses to dry and improve the "bog, and draining of different parts of the "farm, 10*l.*"

Chairman—continued.

21,773. Is that all?—That is all; total 316*l.*

21,774. "Was he allowed anything in respect "of the more recent improvements?"—He was allowed 30*l.*

21,775. 30*l.* instead of 316*l.*?—That is so.

[Witness T. J. Thomas.] Yes, I received that.

21,776. [To W. M. Preston.] "Did you hear "Thomas express himself as having been "satisfied with his treatment in his evidence "yesterday?"—Yes.

21,777. [To T. J. Thomas.] Is there anything in what we have just heard that you want to rebut?—The letter in which I was told that I might remain on the farm was dated the 16th October. I produce the letter.

21,778. What has that to do with it. Mr. Preston has told us that it is the fact that you had taken another farm previous to the offer. Is there anything else?—I have only to say that he refused to ask Sir Richard Bulkeley for compensation for me, because I had refused to take the farm.

21,779. Did you yesterday, before Lord Kenyon, express yourself as satisfied with the treatment which you had received from Sir Richard Bulkeley?—No, I did not state that I was satisfied.

21,780. You never made that statement?—No, I did not.

21,780*a*. And you are not satisfied now?—No, I am not.

[Witness W. M. Preston.] Am I allowed to rebut the evidence that has just been given?

Chairman.

21,781. Certainly. Mr. Thomas states that I refused to bring it before Sir Richard Bulkeley. I utterly deny that. I laid the whole matter before Sir Richard Bulkeley.

[Witness T. J. Thomas.] Here are letters stating what I say (handing several letters).

Chairman.

21,782. [To T. J. Thomas.] There is nothing at all in these letters to show that Mr. Preston refused to lay the matter before Sir Richard Bulkeley?—There is in one of the letters.

Lord Kenyon.

21,783. No. In one of the letters he says he advised Sir Richard Bulkeley not to give any more compensation. I suppose that is what you mean?—Yes, that is what I refer to.

Chairman.

21,784. Mr. Preston says that he advised Sir Richard Bulkeley not to pay any more compensation, but he never refused to lay your case before Sir Richard?—He said that he would not ask.

Chairman.

21,785. No; all he says is that he cannot advise Sir Richard to give more compensation. I do not think we can carry that further.

[The Witness T. J. Thomas withdrew.]

Chairman—continued.

21,786. [To Witness W. M. Preston.] Two questions are sent up by Mr. R. H. Williams:—"When "was Thomas J. Thomas offered to remain "tenant?"—I do not remember the exact date without referring.

21,787. Perhaps this question will settle it. "Had he not taken another farm previous to "that?"—He had, but not to my knowledge. I was not aware of it.

Chairman.

That refers to another holding altogether.

[Mr. R. H. Williams.] Yes.

[The Witness Owen Williams was recalled and directed to listen to the evidence of the present Witness W. M. Preston.]

21,788. These are questions sent up by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Did you hear the evidence of "Owen Williams, of Tyn y buarth yesterday?" —No, I did not.

See 20,494.

21,789. "Was he or was his wife ever a tenant on the Baron Hill estate?"—Never to my knowledge.

21,790. "He was an applicant, I believe, for "a farm called Ty mawr, Llangwyllog, on the "death of Thos. Parry, was he not?"—I think that is a great many years ago.

21,791. "Thos. Parry died a bachelor and without any near relative, did he not?"—I do not know; I do not remember.

21,792. [To Witness Owen Williams.] Did you ever state that you were or that your wife was a tenant on the Baron Hill estate?—I do not understand that I said that, but I stated that my wife was executrix of Mr. Thos. Parry and represented him.

[Witness Owen Williams withdrew.]

21,793. [To Witness W. M. Preston.] "Have "you read the evidence of John Thomas, Ty wian, "given on Tuesday, the 10th instant?"—I read it in the paper.

[John Thomas was called, but did not answer.]

See 18,839, 21,814.

21,794. "Has Mr. John Thomas a lease, originally for 21 years, of which there are six or "seven years to run?"—That is so.

21,795. "Was the sale made, subject to lease, for 2,820*l.*?"—It was.

21,796. That is the price the place was sold for?—Yes.

21,797. "If there had been no lease, what do "you think the farm would have sold for?"—It would have been more valuable if there had not been a lease, very much more.

21,798. "Do you think 24*s.* per acre is the "present letting value of Ty wian, or for how "much do you think it would let if let at rack "rent?"—I think a fair rent would be about 30*s.* an acre.

See 20,767, 21,605.

21,799. "Did you hear the evidence yesterday "of John Roberts as to Ty hen, Llanynghenedl?" —I did.

21,800. "Is John Roberts the brother of the late tenant?"—He is.

21,801. "Did the late tenant die last year?" —That is so.

Chairman—continued.

21,802. "Was a lease of 10 years granted to "the late tenant, William Roberts, last year?" —It was.

21,803. "Did he ask for any further compensation or security?"—None whatever.

[John Roberts was called, and did not answer.]

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,804. In the letter that you wrote to John Roberts, and which he put in yesterday, I think you said that the question should have further consideration?—That is so.

21,805. And he took it for granted that as he had not received any letter from you, the matter was closed?—Oh, it is not closed.

Chairman.

21,806. He did not ask for any compensation, you say, and he got no compensation?—He never asked for any.

21,807. He never got any compensation?—No.

21,808. He has left the farm?—No, he did not leave the farm.

21,809. He has got a 10 years' lease?—Yes.

21,810. And he spent 2,000*l.* upon permanent improvements?—So they state.

Lord Kenyon.

21,811. So he says?—So he says.

Chairman.

21,812. Then he has got his 10 years' lease, and he has got to work out the 2,000*l.* permanent improvements in that time?—If the 2,000*l.* was spent.

21,813. Assuming that the 2,000*l.* was spent?—Assuming that the 2,000*l.* was spent.

21,814. I have a further question by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Can you explain why the "tenant of Ty wian was asked 3,500*l.* when he "himself was the holder of the lease?" Why did you put it at that figure?—That is by private treaty, I presume.

21,815. That is by private treaty?—That is the value we considered it.

21,816. Then you were disappointed when 2,820*l.* was made out of it?—Very much disappointed.

21,817. Further questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Has Sir Richard Bulkeley purchased "any farms during the last five or six years?"— A great number.

21,818. "If so, what farms, and where are they situate?"—During the last five years he has bought the whole of the Rhianva estate, offered for sale in the parish of Llaniestyn, near Beaumaris, his object being to consolidate his estate. This purchase he made at the express request of the tenants, all of whom have been retained as tenants. He has also bought other farms in the same neighbourhood, all from the owners, who were also the occupiers. They had bought from the Craig y don estate within the last six or seven years; for example, Ty mawr, Llanfihangellyusilwy Penbenllys, Llaniestyn. In these cases the sellers to Sir Richard Bulkeley made handsome profits on the transactions. He has purchased other farms; for instance, Fferam ucha and Brynfelin, and retained the sellers as tenants.

21,819. "Were these farms bought at the request of the sitting tenants?"—That is so.

21,820. "And have they been retained as tenants?"—That is so.

21,821. "At the sale of part of the Baron Hill "estate this year, did the whole of the tenants "in Penmynydd parish, purchase their holdings?" —That is so.

21,822. "Have they since sold them to Lord Anglesey?"—That is so, with one or two small exceptions.

21,823. "Are you aware of other instances in "which the tenants, having purchased their "holdings, have resold at profits?"—I am. I can name one instance, at Cerrig ddewi, in the parish of Llangwyllog. The purchaser has made a handsome profit by reselling about one half of the farm. He gave 9,900*l.* for the farm, and he held to the amount of about 6,300*l.* He has now remaining somewhere about 130 acres at 3,600*l.*, and I consider those 130 acres worth 5,000*l.*

21,824. Further questions by Mr. R. H. Williams: "What is the condition of the house and outbuildings at Tynymynydd, Penrallt?"—I do not know.

Chairman—continued.

21,825. "Is part of the house down for years?" —I do not know.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,826. Just one or two questions arising out of what has been said just now. Would you say that it was true that Sir Richard Bulkeley is getting rid of his landed property?—Only the outlying portions.

21,827. It is not true to say that he is getting rid of his landed property because it is troublous times for the landowner?—Certainly not.

21,828. He is consolidating his land?—He is consolidating near home, and selling the outlying portions, or has been doing so.

21,829. It has been suggested here that certain great landowners were inclined to get rid of their landed property just now. That does not apply to Sir Richard Bulkeley?—That does not apply to Sir Richard Bulkeley.

21,830. Then, a question was put by Mr. Vincent just now as to a Land Court. I am very hazy about this Land Court question, I must confess, and I am very glad to hear anything I can about it. Supposing a Land Court were ever to be established in Wales, must it go exactly on the lines of the Irish Land Court?—I hope not.

21,831. We have had it in evidence, I think, that the Crofters' Commission would supply a better model in regard to land tenure in Wales. Are you acquainted with the working of the Crofters' Act?—I cannot say that I am.

The witness withdrew,

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES called and examined.

Chairman.

21,832. You are, I believe, chairman of the Anglesey County Council?—I am, my Lord.

21,833. And you are a farmer, and live at Bodednyfed, Amlwch?—Yes.

21,834. Do you farm your own land, or are under any landowner?—I am under a landlord.

21,835. Who is he?—The Rev. Robert Hughes, of Gaerwen.

21,836. Is it glebe land? Is he a member of the Church of England?—No, my Lord.

21,837. What is he?—A Calvinistic Methodist.

21,838. I think you have a statement prepared?—I have.

21,839. Will you kindly read it?

(The witness read statement as follows):

"Occupation.

"Farms are let as yearly holdings, and very few leases are granted or are asked for, as it is generally understood that when leases expire, which they do in 14 or 21 years, a rise in the rent will take place, and that upon the occupiers own improvements.

"Also tenant farmers have a suspicion that leases are not in favour by the agent, and therefore they dare not ruffle the equanimity of that person by even asking for one.

Chairman—continued.

"I am not ready to say that changes of tenancy are more frequent than in former years, but when there is a change, it is my conviction that politics and religion influence the changes to a certain extent.

"As for agreements, I consider it a great hardship, and an injustice, that the tenant must pay a considerable amount for the same.

"Rents are usually fixed at a gross sum, and then calculated to be so much per acre, and more uniformity as to rents of land of similar qualities might and ought to be obtained. The small tenant pays much more per acre than the large farmer.

"Some estates, when there is a change of landlord, are re-valued by a surveyor, and almost in all these cases the rents are raised, and that on the improvements of the present or former tenants, and never to my knowledge has the agent or landlord allowed an arbitrator to interfere.

"There has been no permanent and substantial reduction during these last and greatly depressed years, and tenants appear very grateful and satisfied with the temporary deduction, which I consider to be wrong in principle, and its misapplication to rates, &c.

Chairman—continued.

"When a change in rent takes place it almost invariably changes for an advance, and that not so much upon any principle, or fluctuations of the market, but on account of some land encumbrances, or the landlords want of resources, and that the farm has been greatly improved through the energy, and at the expense, of the tenant.

"Holdings have been consolidated to some extent, and have resulted in less productions, less employment of labour, and a decrease in the population.

"Cultivation.

"Many farms in this country are thoroughly cultivated where the farmers have capital, and some sort of security, but on the whole they are neglected in many respects, and that on account of the uncertainty about them as to the landlord's selling, or some accidental advance, or the danger of being obliged to pay over again for their own improvements.

"I consider it quite wrong that farmers must build their own houses and outhouses, with only perhaps an allowance of timber and slates. The landlord ought to find such commodities on his land for his tenant.

"The Agricultural Holdings Act is a dead letter on almost all the estates, as well as the Ground Game Act, with the exception of rabbits, but very hard restrictions are laid by the landlord as to how to catch the rabbits.

"The general Relations between the Landlord and Tenant.

"Landlord and tenant are on most friendly terms towards one another at the rent audit, when the farmers, after hard scratching and borrowing money, pay their rents. The farmers again in return are treated to a sumptuous dinner and a glass of beer—the better class with their agents (the landlords being strangers and foreigners), and the smaller tenants at some lower room and on inferior diet.

The friendly feeling between these two classes is not what it ought to be. It may be the landlords are not aware of this, inasmuch as they have no intercourse with each other. Language is also a barrier, as well as their absence from their estates, and the tenant, whatever his grievance or burden is, when appearing before the agent or landlord, grins, smiles and bows with all complacency. I am very sorry to think and to say that the Anglesey farmers as a class (but of course there are exceptions) are of such a servile disposition, and will go through any amount of drudgery, rather than face manfully, and yet respectfully, their superiors, and openly lay before them their real and just grievances."

Lord Kenyon.

21,840. You say you feel it a great hardship and injustice that a tenant has to pay a considerable amount for his agreement. Am I to understand that you have had to pay for your agreement?—No, my Lord, I have not paid for it.

21,841. Have you been asked to pay for it?—No. At the farm where I was before, under another landlord, I was obliged to pay for it or not to receive it.

21,842. Do you think that is commonly the case?—I think it is, my Lord.

21,843. Would you name the estate?—It was not a large estate. It belonged to some person in the parish of Trefdraeth of the name of Hugh Williams; he is dead now. It was the farm where I was before, and Mr. Pritchard was the agent of it.

21,844. You put it down here as if it was generally the case or often the case. Do you think it is so?—I think it is so, my Lord.

21,845. You said the Ground Game Act is a dead letter, excepting as regards the rabbits. What do you mean by that? Are hares excepted; because it does not refer to anything else?—The tenants would not take very much for shooting a hare or catching it in any respect. The tenants would be very careful not to catch any hares.

21,846. Is that on account of Lord Anglesey's Harriers, or something of that sort?—That is one reason.

21,847. I want to get your reason for its being a dead-letter?—My reason is, that they want to preserve those for the landlords.

21,848. As a matter of fear, or as a matter of good feeling, or what?—It may be both, my Lord.

21,849. Which would be the most likely?—A matter of fear, I believe, most generally.

21,850. I am sorry to hear that. Then you say with regard to changes of tenancy you think that politics and religion, influence the changes to a certain extent. Can you give any instances of that?—The changes that have taken place in the district where I now live have been so, that Tories and churchmen have had the farms when the change took place, in the last few years.

21,851. On what estate was that?—On the Llysdulas estate, Lady Neave's estate.

21,852. In many instances?—No, not to my knowledge in many instances.

21,853. How many changes have there been there?—There have been two or three—three.

21,854. And in those cases, Nonconformists leaving, Churchmen have been placed in. Is that so?—Yes, my Lord.

21,855. In all three cases?—Yes, my Lord, except one of them, in two of them.

21,856. Do you happen to know whether there were any relatives who were Nonconformists applying?—I do not know that, my Lord.

21,857. I mean, I suppose we may take it for granted, that a Churchman may be a good farmer as well as a Nonconformist?—They are rather scarce in Anglesey, my Lord.

21,858. But you grant he may be a good farmer?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,859. What I want to know is whether they were preferred when the relation a Nonconformist applied, or when there was some reason why a Nonconformist should have been put in?—I cannot say in those cases.

21,860. Because it may have been accidental?—It may have been.

21,861. We heard Captain Preston say, that he did not know the religion of the three last tenants he appointed on the Baron Hill estate?—Yes.

21,862. So that it would be perfectly accidental, according to him, if he had appointed a Churchman?—It may be, so far as Mr. Preston is concerned.

21,863. He is now agent for Lady Neave's estate?—He is.

21,864. Was he agent before those tenants were appointed?—I will not be sure. I rather doubt it.

21,865. Do you consider a man ought to hold more than one farm?—One farm is quite enough for a man, especially if it is of a pretty moderate size.

21,866. Do you know cases in your neighbourhood of a man holding more than one farm?—I do not, my Lord.

21,867. There are such cases in Anglesey, are there not?—There may be.

Mr. Griffiths.

21,868. You have no complaint to make about the holding you have, have you?—I have not.

18,530. 21,869. Do you consider the statement made by Mr. Prichard on the first day a correct one?—Which Mr. Prichard.

21,870. Mr. Prichard, of Holyhead?—I partly heard it. I dispute a great many statements that I heard from him.

21,871. I mean with regard to Conservatives and Churchmen, and on the other hand Nonconformists—Class A and Class B. He divided the parties?—Yes.

21,872. Class A were good landlords, and Class B were not so good?—Yes.

21,873. You have no complaint to make in your case, have you?—I have not.

21,874. You have noticed a rise in the rent on tenant's improvements round you, have you not? I do not mean to say in your case?—Not in my case.

21,875. In the neighbourhood round you, there has been a general rise in rent on the tenant's improvements?—Yes; when the tenant would be leaving, the other tenant would pay a higher rent, or on a re-valuation on his own improvement, he would have to pay more rent again.

21,876. The outgoing tenant is not paid then for the improvements he has made on leaving?—No, he is not.

21,877. Then the landlord takes advantage of that, and raises the rent to the next tenant?—So I believe.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

21,878. You say again that agents do not seem to be in favour of leases. What is the reason that agents should not be?—Indeed I cannot suggest it now.

21,879. I think you have said so in your evidence?—I have said that tenants felt suspicious that agents were not favourable. I do not believe I said that the agents were unfavourable, only that the tenants thought so.

21,880. That the tenants had a suspicion that it was the case?—Yes.

21,881. You have no reason that you can assign why they should be?—I have no reason.

21,882. Why do you consider abatements wrong in principle? You mentioned that, I think?—I think a reduction in the rent ought to be made, and not a deduction from the rent annually. That comes as a relief in kind to someone from the landlord to the tenant, and not of his own right.

21,883. So as to enable the tenant to have a reduction in his rates as well?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,884. Have you any complaint to make in your own case against your landlord?—I have not. He is a very good landlord.

21,885. How many acres have you?—70.

21,886. I suppose you have an agreement with your landlord?—I have not.

21,887. Do you feel perfectly confident that he will not deal hardly with you?—Quite confident.

Mr. Grove.

21,888. Although you feel that he may sell your farm. The farm might be sold, perhaps. How would you be then?—I would be on the safe side.

21,889. You think you would even then?—Yes.

21,890. Have you at all thought out the desirability or otherwise of a Land Court?—I believe it would be very beneficial to the farmers of Anglesey to get a Land Bill, and a Land Court too.

21,891. Do you think if there was fixity of tenure that it would encourage the tenant farmers to put more capital and more labour into the land, and thus make it more productive?—I do, especially compensation for improvements.

21,892. Is there any unpleasantness caused by the question of game, to your knowledge?—Not so very much to complain of, in my neighbourhood.

21,893. Do you think there are sufficient cottages upon the farms as a rule?—They go to the villages and towns.

21,894. Then do you think there are sufficient labourers upon the land, generally speaking?—We find no scarcity of labourers.

21,895. Do you think if more cottages were erected that it would develop their sticking on the land more than going into the villages?—In general I think so.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,896. You have heard, I daresay, other witnesses speaking as to the accommodation for farm servants?—I have heard some of them.

21,897. What is your view of that?—That they are not at all what they ought to be, as to efficiency and comfort.

21,898. What do you suggest?—I would suggest that the landlords should build proper accommodation for the workmen on the farm.

21,899. Would that be a part of the dwelling-house of the farmer, so that they would be under his control more than they are now, or what?—That would be the best plan, I daresay; but I believe the labourers would have an objection to that too.

21,900. I am speaking more particularly of farm servants?—Quite so.

21,901. Those who have their meals at the farmers' houses?—Quite so.

21,902. You understand—not the day labourers?—I quite understand.

21,903. Well, go on please, and say what you were going to say?—What I was saying was that I believe the labourers themselves would prefer being separate from the house of the farmers.

21,904. Do you mean the farm servants?—Yes, but I think it would be more beneficial for them to be indoors in the same house.

21,905. What would the farmers say to it, do you think?—I do not think the farmers would have any objection.

21,906. Now the custom is not so, is it?—It is not so.

21,907. Would you say that the feeling of the country was rather against their being housed in the farmer's own houses?—The better feeling of the country is against it.

21,908. Against their being housed in the dwelling-houses?—No, against their housing them outside.

21,909. That is against the present custom?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

21,910. Do you mean by that, that the feeling of the majority, or the feeling of the better part?—Yes, and the feeling of the best people too.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,911. You would like to have more control over the farm servants, and try to stop some of the evils arising out of the present state of things?—I am sorry to say that the farmers are not so attentive to their labourers as I should like them to be.

21,912. Do you think there is a general desire on their part to improve the condition of the labourers?—I should say so.

21,913. You think that the best farmers would not object to having their servants, both men and women, in their own dwellings?—The women are already.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

21,914. I know; but the men as well, the farm servant men?—I could not say; I could not answer you one way or the other, positively.

21,915. You are not sure that they would not rather object to that?—I am not sure.

21,916. Then what would you say as to the position of the labourers. I am rather uncertain in my mind with regard to them; I have heard contradictory evidence; is foreign competition favourable to the labourer. Does it make things cheaper for him or the other way?—I should say there is no doubt about it that things are much cheaper.

21,917. You would say that the position then of the labourer was perhaps better than it has been?—Much better than it ever was, I believe.

21,918. I was inclined to think the same, but we have had several witnesses who think otherwise. What have you to say further?—All food, whatever they consume, is much cheaper than it ever was, and the clothing again is much cheaper than it ever was, and the salaries are quite as high. Perhaps they have been a little higher than they are this year.

21,919. A few years ago?—Yes, a few years ago, but the wages are still high too—there are good wages still.

21,920. We heard one of the witnesses in the next room saying that they had lost a good many perquisites, and that they were no better off. I rather think he suggested that they were rather worse off. He came from the neighbourhood of Aberffraw?—I would not say so. I do not know what they have lost. When they did get a place for a sheep or a cow they had not so much wages. But the wages are better now although they have lost the other, perhaps.

21,921. You would have some difficulty in believing that they are worse off?—I am quite sure that they are not worse off.

21,922. He came from the neighbourhood of Aberffraw. Do you know that neighbourhood well?—Yes, I do.

21,923. They are much the same, I suppose, in your part?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

21,924. Who does the permanent repairs at Aberffraw, who makes the buildings, the landlord or the tenant, or is it joint?—The tenant does the buildings.

21,925. And does he also do the repairs afterwards?—Yes.

21,926. Is that customary over the county?—Not at all, quite the reverse.

21,927. What should you say was the custom?—I beg your pardon, I misunderstood your question. I mean to say that the tenants do build on their farms.

21,928. That is customary?—That is the custom, but I am allowed for all expenses that I go to, on my farm.

21,929. Are you repaid them in cash?—Yes.

21,930. Then it is the owner of the farm who does them?—Virtually, yes.

21,931. He does the permanent buildings?—Yes.

21,932. Who does the repairs?—I do the repairs.

21,933. The tenant does the repairs?—Yes.

21,934. But the custom, as we have heard, I think, in the county generally, is that the owner of the farm finds the materials, and the occupier pays the labour?—It may be so; it is so, I believe.

21,935. That is customary in the county?—Yes, I believe so. The owner finds timber and slates, and the farmer does the work and cartage and everything.

21,936. You say that abatement in rent you thought was bad in principle?—Yes.

21,937. Lord Stanley held, I think, the same view, that it was bad in principle; he used I think the same words, that it was bad in principle?—Yes.

21,938. I should be very glad of your opinion a little further upon that point; do you think that the rent ought to be uniform over a series of years?—I rather believe it ought to be.

21,939. What would you think would be a fair period to fix a rent?—I have not been thinking of the question very much, but I should say seven years.

21,940. But there have been great variations in seven years?—Yes.

21,941. The principle to which you allude would be, that you would take a good year with a bad year in the period, so that upon the whole it would strike a balance?—Yes.

21,942. Is that customary on most estates now?—Not customary at all.

21,943. The custom is to give abatements?—Yes. I have not heard of a single reduction.

21,944. The abatement would probably be in the worst years?—Yes.

21,945. I should like to know your view as to the principle of that which you think is wrong?—The abatement?

21,946. Yes.—I believe the farmer ought to make out his rent from the farm, and not to pay more than he should make from his farm; I mean a farmer that farms his farm properly, and that abatement is not a proper thing.

21,947. Do you consider fixity of tenure would be a good thing?—I do.

21,948. That is providing against both parties, against both the landlord and the tenant?—If I had a choice between them I would rather have compensation for unexhausted improvements, but fixity of tenure no doubt would be very beneficent. Of the two, if it was asked of me, I would rather have compensation for unexhausted improvements.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,949. You would rather have good compensation than fixity of tenure?—Yes, of the two.

Sir John Llewelyn.

21,950. Do you know the three schedules of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not very well.

21,951. The basis of that Act, I think, was compensation?—Yes.

21,952. Perhaps you think it does not go far enough?—That is my opinion, so far as I have studied it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

If you have not studied it, I will ask you no more about it.

Lord Kenyon.

21,953. Is your landlord a Class A or a Class B landlord? Is he a big landlord or a small one?—Rather a small one.

21,954. Has he got more than one farm?—Yes.

21,955. How many has he got, can you tell me?—He has three or four other small farms.

21,956. About the same size as your own?—No, mine is about 70; there are two others, one about 30, and the other about 7 or 8.

21,957. Would you mind saying what your rent is?—60*l.*

21,958. For 70 acres, I understood you?—For 70 acres.

21,959. Then I suppose you have had no abatement?—No.

21,960. You would not have accepted it if you had been offered it, according to your principles, I suppose. One word more with regard to the accommodation for labourers. I did not understand whether you meant any accommodation downstairs in the house, say in the back kitchen?—Only for their meals, my Lord.

21,961. But would you wish the landowner to put up more accommodation for them downstairs?—Yes, better accommodation for them downstairs for their comfort in winter time.

21,962. Is there not, as a rule, a parlour and back kitchen, and a kitchen, in most farm houses in this country?—Yes.

21,963. How many more rooms would you require?—I do not want more rooms.

21,964. A farmer would not keep a fire in more than two rooms, would he?—No, I suppose not. But the farm labourers are not looked upon kindly if they stay in the house on a winter's night; they expect them to go out to their stable, and to their loft.

21,965. How is the landlord to remedy that?—The landlord ought in my opinion to build proper outside—if it be outside—buildings for them, a chamber.

21,966. A sleeping place, and a recreation room of some sort?—I do not say so much about recreation, but they ought to receive some comfort.

21,967. I mean you cannot expect a labourer to go off to bed directly he is turned out of the house, can you?—No, my Lord.

21,968. He must have some sort of room?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

21,969. Do you think that ought to be outside the house?—I think that they (the labourers) ought not.

21,970. Is it rather a new idea, I mean to say. I suppose it is more the case in this country, because the labourers live on their master's finding more perhaps than they do in other places?—Yes, they do so here. They live on the farm, have their diet there, and sleep there.

21,971. What is your opinion of a recreation room in the village, or something of that sort?—I think there should be some sort of temperance house there, with periodicals and some books.

21,972. Would that answer?—Yes, I believe, they would attend, if they were properly encouraged by the farmers. I believe those places would be better encouraged by the labourers, if they were encouraged by the farmers.

Sir John Llewelyn.

21,973. Do you say there is such a house in your village?—Not in my village; there is one not very far off.

Lord Kenyon.

21,974. How would you manage that?—Would you manage it by a committee of the labourers and farmers together, or the labourers alone, or what?—Well, the labourers and farmers—the leading men of the locality.

21,975. I heard a labourer yesterday in the other room (I daresay you were not there), who said there was a great gap between the labourers and the farmers in this county?—I am afraid that is true.

21,976. And he said that that gap was caused by education mainly. He said that not one per cent. of the farmer's children went to the same school as the labourers' children. Is that the case, do you think?—I could not say so. They go to the board schools generally at first; the farmer's children go again, perhaps, to a boarding school, but at first they go to the same school.

21,977. He said not one per cent.?—I could not agree with that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

21,978. I think you said that you are in favour of a Land Court?—I am.

21,979. And that the periods for which rent should be fixed would be seven years?—Yes.

21,980. Sir John Llewelyn intimated that in the course of seven years there might be a great fluctuation of prices, and I think you agreed with him upon that point?—Yes.

21,981. Would you under those circumstances give a right of appeal to either the landlord or the tenant for an advance or a reduction in the rent, and that the person who lost should bear the cost?—I should not like to disturb the rent very often. I should not like to have the rent disturbed and re-fixed often.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

21,982. No, but you would like to have the rent somewhere in accordance with the prices, would you not?—Quite so.

21,983. Supposing that the landlord and the tenant failed to agree in case there was a difficulty about the prices, would you consider it advisable that there should be a right of appeal in cases of that sort?—Yes, I should.

Sir John Llewelyn.

21,984. In your opinion would a sliding scale or a fixity of seven years be the better of two alternatives?—I should rather say so. I am in favour of a fixed rather than a sliding scale, so far as I understand them.

21,985. But if you have it fixed for seven years, you would have it fixed on both sides. I take it, you would not?—Quite so.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,986. Have you known anything about the tithe difficulties?—I have a little.

21,987. You know the tithes were paid according to a sliding scale?—Yes.

21,988. That sliding scale is fixed according to prices for seven years?—Yes.

21,989. That was a great source of complaint on the part of the farmers—that the seven years period was too long?—Yes.

21,990. Would not this case be still worse? You fix an absolute rent for seven years, which does not slide at all?—Perhaps so.

21,991. And you would not approve of any abatement, either?—But I would approve, as Mr. Jones said, if the landlord and tenant agreed to consider the subject.

21,992. How would you fix your rent to begin with?—I am not quite prepared to answer that question—according to the market value of the produce and the cattle.

21,993. How do you get at it? According to whose account of the matter do you fix it. You see we want to understand something that would work?—I do not know. We could find the prices; they are stated, I believe.

Lord Kenyon.

21,994. What is the value of those statements?—I do not know, indeed, my Lord.

Professor Rhŷs.

21,995. You see there is nothing self-acting, like the barometer quite. How would you manage this?—I am not prepared to say.

21,996. You see all districts do not produce the same things, and then you do not get the same prices for things. I should always like to buy chickens at Llangefni, for instance, rather than at Oxford. What scheme would you propose to meet that state of things. I ask you the question as a practical man?—Indeed I am not prepared to answer.

21,997. You know you have to put things into some intelligible shape?—I must say I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. Grove.

21,998. But seeing that a farmer has to live by the sale of his produce, would you allow that to be a principle in fixing the rent, to start with?—I should think so.

Lord Kenyon.

21,999. But the difficulty is to arrive at the value of the produce, I think?—Quite so.

22,000. It varies between one market town and another?—Quite so.

22,001. And a farmer would not like always to have his values assessed upon the best beasts—upon the highest prices?—That is so, indeed.

22,002. They do not all sell the best beasts; and it would not be fair for the landlord if it was always put upon the worst?—Quite so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,003. But could not the value be arrived at by the local valuers putting a price on the different farms?—I do not see but that they could do that. If there was a Land Court I should say that that would be one of its functions.

Chairman.

22,004. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent "Is your landlord your uncle"?—He is.

22,005. "What Anglesey landlords do you say are foreigners"?—Lord Stanley is not a Welshman; Sir George Meyrick is not a Welshman.

Lord Kenyon.

22,006. Do you consider England a foreign country?—Rather.

22,007. Foreign to the Isle of Anglesey?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,008. You would say alien?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

22,009. Is Puffin Island a foreign country?—Between.

Chairman.

22,010. These questions are by Mr. Vincent: "If landlords provided the whole of the buildings would the tenants be content to have "5 per cent. on the outlay added to their "rents?"—I do not think they would.

Lord Kenyon.

22,011. Would they pay any interest?—They do. They are compelled to do so in some cases.

22,012. But I think the question is this, if the custom of the country were changed. Supposing instead of the tenant doing the buildings the landlord did them, would the tenants be prepared to pay a higher rent?—They would pay them, but they would grudge to pay them.

Mr. Grove.

22,013. Do you not consider 5 per cent. excessive upon that?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,014. Is it not expected that when a tenant takes a farm he has suitable buildings upon it?—Yes, but there is such a demand for land that they will take a farm, whatever buildings there are upon it, almost.

Lord Kenyon.

22,015. I suppose the tenants perfectly understand the custom of the country, just as well as the landowners do in the district?—They do, my Lord.

Chairman.

22,016. These questions are by Mr. John Hughes: "Is it not a fact that in the three last "farms that became vacant, two incoming "tenants were Nonconformists and one a Churchman. They were Rhosmanerch, and the home-"farm Llys Dulas, Nonconformists; and Hafodonen, a Churchman." Is that so?—They were, my Lord; but when they found that a farm could be got by becoming Churchmen, they would rather look towards the church, and now they go to church and chapel alternately.

22,017. The following questions are by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith. "Do you know the case of "Ysgellog?"—I know something about it.

22,018. "Do you know that a brother of the "late tenant applied for the farm, and that he "was defeated in his application for the farm by "a Churchman and a Conservative, who was in "no way related to the previous tenant?"—I do. The brother told me himself that he applied to Lord Stanley for the farm and it was refused. He had a promise from the agent at first that he should have the farm, but it was afterwards refused, and the present tenant is a Conservative and a Churchman.

Lord Kenyon.

22,019. That is on Lord Stanley's estate, is it not?—On Lord Stanley's estate.

Chairman.

22,020. These questions are all by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffiths: "In case of re-valuation of "estates, do you know of any instance of the "tenant being consulted in the appointment of "the valuer?"—I do not know, my Lord.

22,021. "Is the valuer always appointed by "the landlord?"—I should say so.

22,022. "Can you give a single instance of "rent being reduced as the result of a re-valuation"?—I do not remember any.

Lord Kenyon.

22,023. Is Lord Stanley a Churchman?—That is beyond my knowledge.

Chairman.

22,024. The following question is by Mr. John Hughes:—"Will you again say that Mr. Richard "Hughes, Home Farm, Llysdulas, and Mr. "William Thomas, Rhosmanerch, are now "Churchmen?"—I do not believe that I said so before.

22,025. Are those the two gentlemen that you say go to church and chapel, too?—Quite so.

22,026. These questions are by Mr. John Hughes:—"Is it not a fact that there are dozens "of empty cottages in and near Almwch?"—I am very sorry to say that there are.

22,027. This question is by Mr. Hughes:—"Do you know of a Nonconformist landowner "who has let a farm to a Churchman?"—I do "not remember, my Lord.

22,028. The following question is by Mr. Vincent:—"Do you know the property in Llan-

Chairman—continued.

"dona parish called Tyn-y-pistyll?"—No, I do not, my Lord.

22,029. Then the other question is withdrawn. This question is put by Mr. Prichard:—"Have "you not heard that the rents of Rhos Badric, "Tyddynhowel, and Rhen blas were per-"manently reduced on purchase by Sir George "Meyrick?"—I have not heard, but I could not dispute that it was so. I have no recollection that I ever heard of it.

Sir John Llewellyn.

22,030. I suppose I need not ask you whether you have any objection to a man going to church or chapel, according to his convictions, so long as they are convictions. You have no objection to a man going to church if it is his conviction?—I have not the least, if he prefers so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. C. F. PRIESTLEY called and examined.

Chairman.

22,031. You are a tenant farmer. Under whom do you live?—I am a tenant of my late cousin, F. W. Lloyd Edwards (his son is a minor) and of the Marquis of Anglesey. Two of my farms are in the Bangor and Beaumaris Union; the third is in the Anglesey Union.

22,032. You have three farms?—I have three farms.

22,033. What is the acreage of all those?—1,106.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,034. What is the rent?—922*l.* 10*s.*

22,035. For the purposes of comparison could could you give them separately?—They are as follows:—Hirdrefaig, 300*l.*; Mynachdy, 420*l.*; and Nant, 202*l.* 10*s.* Would you like to have acreage of each

Lord Kenyon.

22,036. They are all on the same estate, are they not?—No. The acreage of the 300*l.* one is 294 acres; of the 420*l.*, 562 acres; of the 202*l.* 10*s.*, 250 acres.

Chairman.

22,037. You have no cause of complaint to make about your farms?—Certainly not. I have no complaint to make as to the rent of either farm, as they have not been raised for years, excepting one, on which there was a rise of 20*l.* for sporting.

22,038. November is the usual date of entry?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

22,039. Have you anything to say about tenants being prevented from selling hay, straw, and roots?—Yes, I have. I think it is a stupid arrangement; if the tenants are good they ought to be allowed to do it; if they are bad, the more they are looked after the better.

22,040. On most estates is it a matter of course that they are allowed to farm as they like?—I think so, pretty well.

22,041. Did you ever make any objection to those clauses in your agreement?—I did in the lease which I have, and which I could hand in, if anybody wishes to see it.

22,042. And they were struck out?—They were struck out.

Lord Kenyon.

22,043. On which estate is that?—On Mynachdy, my cousin's estate. I have a 40 years' lease of that farm, I should say, and I have the agreement of the Marquis of Anglesey's estate to hand in if you wish to see it. (The witness produced documents.)

22,044. With regard to these penalising clauses, we have heard a good deal about them. Are they generally enforced?—I believe not.

22,045. What is your opinion about the rents on the big estates—the old estates in the county?—I think they are very reasonable.

22,046. On small estates they are screwed up at all?—Yes, and the smaller they go, the tighter the screw is, as a rule.

22,047. Are there any services in Anglesey besides paying the rent?—No, I think not.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

We have heard about carting a load of coal from Red Wharf. That is almost the only one that I know of.

22,048. With regard to permanent reductions, have you had many of them in your neighbourhood?—The Marquis of Anglesey pays the tithe now, which he did not do before.

22,049. Have you had any temporary abatements?—No, nothing but that.

22,050. No other temporary abatements?—Well, not even that in my own case, because the farms have not been re-valued for a long time. They say they would not do it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

22,051. That would be permanent reduction, would it not?—Paying a tithe?

22,052. Yes.—No, it is an abatement I consider. I should have no cause of complaint if his lordship said he would not do it. I do not understand that it is a matter of course. I take it as an abatement.

Chairman.

22,053. You put down here that there have been temporary abatements, varying from 5 to 20 per cent. Is that so?—Yes, I believe so.

22,054. And rents are generally raised by a re-valuation by land valuers. Is that so?—I believe so.

22,055. There has not been much change lately. What do you say about preferential claim for rent?—I do not see any harm in it.

22,056. Of course the rates have risen in your neighbourhood?—Yes, they have the new rates, certainly. I believe the poor's rates are less.

22,057. Do you agree with what they generally say about the average size of farms, that it is from 30 to 40 acres?—I believe that is about it.

22,058. Is there any consolidation of holdings?—No, that is stopped. It was going on some years ago, but it is not so now, it is the other way.

22,059. What is the effect of it, bad?—I should say by now, it is bad, certainly.

22,060. What do small farmers do best with?—Stock, I should say.

22,061. Pigs and cows, and poultry and so on?—Pigs, cows, and poultry.

22,062. Can you tell us anything about labourers?—I think we get quite as many labourers, as we can find money to pay for.

22,063. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—I should say a good deal.

22,064. With regard to buildings, who pays the expenses of the buildings?—To the best of my knowledge, some landlords give timber and slate.

Chairman—continued.

22,065. Then the tenants to the haulage?—The tenant does everything else.

22,066. I suppose on some estates they give drain pipes, and on some they do not?—On some they do not. I should say that I believe landlords now do more of the building than they did.

22,067. Will you tell us about compensation for improvements. What do you say about that?—I think that is not as it should be. The Agricultural Holdings Act wants revising, certainly. I believe everybody allows that to be so.

22,068. Everybody agrees to that?—Yes.

22,069. Is tillage and cultivation pretty good in your neighbourhood or not?—Oh, yes, I think so. We are allowed perhaps in some cases, so far as the land goes, to do too much as we like. There are many people who run their farms out too much.

22,070. I suppose the manure that is left on the land is bought by the incoming tenant, as rule?—Yes.

22,071. When a man leases a farm, I suppose he leaves it in a bad state, as a rule?—Well, often it is so.

22,072. Now about tenant farmers who have bought their holdings. Can you say anything with regard to that?—It is my view as a rule that they do well.

22,073. The purchase money I suppose is not excessive?—No, and it depends of course very much on the individual.

22,074. Where do the tenant farmers get the money from. Do they borrow it from the banks, or from each other?—I do not know. I fancy they go to their lawyers, and get who they can to advance the money.

22,075. The children, I suppose, work at home. That we have heard a good deal about. Do the children get a fair education?—Very fair. I think the farmers as a rule make a point of educating their children as well as possible, and I fancy that is considered their fortune, I may say.

22,076. Then the cottage accommodation for labourers, I take it, is indifferent?—Indifferent certainly, and people are much more particular about where their cottages are now. On my own farm I have three or four cottages, or rather where there used to be cottages. The children now have to go to school, and the women are more particular about tramping through mud and so on. I think that has a good deal to do with it. They like to get to villages and towns, villages particularly.

22,077. When did trade depression begin here?—I should say about 11 or 12 years ago

22,078. Do you think that people are doing with less labour than they did?—Certainly.

22,079. And that will be very hard upon the labourers?—I fancy it will be in two or three years very hard.

22,080. How are the local rates levied?—I consider they are far too much on land at present. They should be on personal property also.

22,081. Are you in favour of any protection at all, any protective duty?—I do not see how it can be escaped, how we can get out of it. I believe it must come to that ultimately.

22,082. What remedies do you suggest?—I think there should be something to prevent all these enormous steamers working rate free, while we farmers, have to keep the sailors, that have been spending their lives on these grand steamers, which are ruining us. I do not think that is as it should be.

22,083. Do you suggest anything about compensation for improvements, or anything of that sort. What is your idea about a Land Court?—Oh, I hate the name of it.

22,084. Have you any other remedy to suggest?—I think that the whole of the agricultural holdings compensation ought to be thoroughly looked into, and I think also that, there should be a clause for what I may call wanton disturbance. If a man is sold up, I think there should be a substantial fine in the way of a year's or more rent, if his farm is in A1 condition, or more than one year's rent. I think it is utterly wrong, that people's homes should be sold up from them, without compensation.

22,085. How would you enforce that without some authority to do it. You would have to have some sort of tribunal to do that?—My idea is that we have the Board of Agriculture now, which is of quite recent date, and I think inspectors from that, might see to it.

22,086. You would have the authority from the Board of Agriculture?—I think so.

22,087. Then you think bad tenants ought to be looked after sharper than they are at present?—I think so.

22,088. Then where money is not procurable from the owner or the tenant for building and other improvements, where ought you to get it from?—I think the Board of Agriculture might be empowered to advance money, the same as it is done by the Local Government and Education Board, in that sort of way. I know of a case in which one of the best farmers in Anglesey has had his operations crippled for years for want of buildings; the estate being heavily mortgaged it was almost impossible for the landlord to do anything.

22,089. In consequence of that, the tenant farmer, if he is a very enterprising man, is prevented from improving his farm?—Yes. It seems to me hard; with millions of money going all over the world out of England, why in the world cannot it be done with our own money, while we have clever financial managers in the various Government offices. I cannot believe but that it might be managed.

22,090. You object to the name of a Land Court, but you would have it managed by a Board of some kind?—I think there might be interference.

Chairman—continued.

22,091. Legislative interference?—I do not say legislative interference. Of course it would have to come through the Legislature in that way, but we want a lot more done to the land in many cases, where estates are mortgaged, and for other reasons, people have not got the money to do it, and I think there might be some power of stepping in and helping.

22,092. Do I understand you to say then, with your great experience, that although you dislike the name of a Land Court, you think the state of agriculture in Wales calls for some legislative interference. Would you go so far as that?—The question is, I believe, as to what remedies I should suggest for improving the profits from land, and I think that I am not far off the right line in suggesting something of that sort.

22,093. I am trying to follow exactly what you mean?—Yes, I hope I am making myself understood.

22,094. You think the time has come when there ought to be some security for tenants?—We certainly want better security for what we do.

22,095. You want better security?—Yes, and I think that might be done through amending the Agricultural Holdings Act.

22,096. By the amendment of the Agricultural Holdings Act, and also by the Government?—By the Board of Agriculture, I think they should have the power of advancing money where it is wanted.

22,097. Yes, quite so. You think that the state of agriculture in Wales renders that desirable?—I think it is the same all over the kingdom. I do not think it is peculiar to Wales, but that it is all over the kingdom.

22,098. You think that all over the kingdom that is becoming imperative?—Yes.

22,099. What about the relations between landlord and tenant, so far as you are concerned?—I believe they are very good. I have no right to say otherwise, and I believe they are the same all over Anglesey.

22,100. If a man of property has a man of common sense as an agent, they can get on fairly well together. Will you go so far as that?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

22,101. I was rather surprised to hear you say that a good deal of land was going out of cultivation?—Yes, I believe there is.

22,102. May I ask what you mean by cultivation?—Less green crop—more pasture.

22,103. Then it is not becoming derelict?—No.

Chairman.

I misunderstood that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

22,104. It is not going back to prairie?—No.

22,105. But it is being turned from arable into pasture land?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

22,106. Is that because it pays better as pasture land?—Yes, because we cannot get the money for wages.

22,107. That is another point. Does dairying pay better than arable produce?—Yes, certainly.

22,108. Then does that require less labour?—Certainly.

22,109. Both of those reasons operate in making pasture land pay better than arable land?—Yes.

22,110. Is that what you mean by going out of cultivation?—Yes.

22,111. Do you think that is a bad thing for the country or a good thing?—Oh, a bad thing, I should say, certainly.

22,112. Because it employs less labour?—It employs less labour.

22,113. With regard to the lease which you took, you struck certain conditions out of the agreement because you thought they were onerous?—Yes. It was only as to the sale of hay and straw and roots.

22,114. As a matter of fact do you sell much of your hay and straw on that farm now?—No, it is the other way, but I wish to have liberty to do as I think best.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,115. Do I understand you to rely chiefly for your profits on dairy produce?—No, not particularly. I do a good deal in dairying, but not more than other things.

22,116. Under the head of dairy produce, do you make cheese?—No.

22,117. Why not?—I do not think any cheese is made in Anglesey. I do not know that I could get a dairymaid who could make it, supposing I wanted it. I would have to go to Cheshire.

22,118. Would you like the County Council to supply some teaching with regard to dairy work?—That has been done.

22,119. Is that making any progress?—Well, a little. I do not think there are as many girls going to those schools as we have a right to expect.

22,120. If you had girls fit for work in these dairy occupations, would it pay in Anglesey?—I do not know. I doubt it myself. I suppose if it did pay it would be done. They made cheese when I was a boy, and they have left it off, I suppose, because it did not pay.

22,121. You mentioned just now the case of people borrowing money to buy their holdings. Have you any idea as to the rate of interest they pay? I think you said they went to the lawyers for the money?—Yes. So far as I know myself they pay from 3*l.* 10*s.* to 4*l.*, I should say.

22,122. Then you mentioned the case of the sailors who come home after working during their lives,—the best part of their lives—on board the great steamers?—Yes.

22,123. They come home to be chargeable to the parish?—Yes

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

22,124. Does that frequently happen?—It does happen, of course. Anglesey is a sea-girt place, and we have, I believe, a good many paupers from shipping on our books. I believe there was a case from the "Naronic" that was lost; a woman came on the rates through her brother, who used to support her (she kept house for him) being lost on the "Naronic" this last winter. That is one case that I mention as an example.

22,125. I understand you to suggest that farms on encumbered estates are unfavourably placed?—In cases where they want buildings, it is harder to get them, naturally, is it not?

22,126. We have had one witness who has told us something to the effect that it did not make any difference. You would not agree with that?—No, I should not.

Mr. Grove.

22,127. In the case where you objected to those clauses in the lease, and they were struck out, the farm belonged, I think you said, to your cousin?—Yes.

22,128. Supposing that had been the case with regard to the Marquis of Anglesey's farms, would you have had them struck out in the same way?—The Marquis strikes them out himself, at least the agents do.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,129. You say in your evidence, Mr. Priestley, that the tenants are too idle or too careless to think about their agreements and leases. Would you go so far as to say that they are so idle, or that it is indifference?—It is indifference. It has been so in my own case. I sent for an agreement of one farm, but I have never seen it, and I have never thought about it until this winter. Perhaps I should not judge others, but that is how I was myself.

22,130. It seems to me from the evidence which has been already supplied to the Commission, that they are very careless on this matter, I must say that?—Yes.

22,131. You say that you think the tenants do not write to the landlords in order to obtain their consent to specific improvements?—No, I fancy not as much as they should do.

22,132. Do you think they are aware generally that it is necessary to do so in order to comply with the Act?—I think so, but we are generally in a hurry when we start a thing, and that is how it is I fancy. I know it has been the case with one person in the room.

22,133. I will just ask you one question on this. Supposing that you had protection, what would be the effect, do you think, on the land, so far as its marketable value is concerned?—As to land?

22,134. Yes.—Well, I should think it would be better, for everybody concerned with the land.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

22,135. You think, of course, it would go up?—I do not see well how it could go up in Anglesey very well, because land is higher here than elsewhere.

22,136. You think as a tenant that you would get more for your produce and your stock?—Certainly.

22,137. The landlord would very naturally conclude that you are better able to pay more rent, would he not?—No, I do not think he would; certainly not.

22,138. It seems rather natural, does it not?—My rents have been the same for the last 50 years, I believe, and when times were very well my rent was not touched, and I do not suppose if they came right, we should be treated differently to what we were before.

22,139. It would strike one as being natural that if the landlord thought the tenant got more for his produce, that he would be better able to pay a higher rent?—May I ask you one question?

22,140. No, I am not here to answer questions but to ask them. What do you say to that?—Yes.

22,141. If you get more for your stock and your produce and you have to pay more rent what better are you?—I do not believe nine-tenths of us would pay more rent.

22,142. That is simply a matter of opinion?—Well I believe I am competent to judge.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,143. You speak in your evidence of sporting rights. Have you purchased the sporting rights from the landlord?—Yes.

22,144. In which way do you consider that there are hardships when farms are sold in the neighbourhood?—I cannot help thinking it is a hardship when a man loses his home, and I think that in itself, is a thing which a man should get paid for.

22,145. And very often he leaves some improvements as well?—Yes, naturally he does. We all think we improve, at all events.

22,146. You say you have no abatements but you have had your tithe taken off. Did you have a reduction of rates as well?—No.

22,147. They should be reduced, should they not?—I doubt it myself.

Lord Kenyon.

22,148. As to what Mr. Richard Jones said to you about whether it was a matter of opinion as to raising rents. I suppose you remember the time of the Crimean War?—Yes.

22,149. Was not the price of wheat higher then?—Yes.

22,150. All produce?—Yes.

22,151. Did you have to pay more rent then?—No.

22,152. You remember what is called the 'Seventies" when farming was good?—Yes.

22,153. Did you have to pay more then?—Yes.

22,154. So that from that you infer it was a matter of opinion entirely?—Yes.

22,155. Have you anything to say about game preserving?—Damage by poachers and rabbit stealers done to fences is a very serious item. Many questions have been asked as to game preserving. How about men who cannot afford keepers?—I do not think 40*l.* would cover my loss as to rabbits and damage done to the fences, let alone stock being harassed, and gates left open. One night a neighbour's flock of scabby sheep came on to my land. I heard there had been a great poaching expedition over his land, every single gate being left open on the farm. I mention that as an instance of, I think, the infamous trespass and loss and damage, we suffer. I cannot afford to keep a keeper, and I have no doubt there are hundreds of others in Anglesey the same, and here we are perfectly unprotected.

22,156. What remedy do you suggest for that?—One of the great remedies would be not to give men who were known to live by poaching the opportunity of keeping dogs. The Government give them a licence to keep dogs and in some cases to carry guns. I think that some local authority might have the power of sifting these gentlemen.

22,157. How are you going to prove that a man lives by poaching?—If he does not do an honest day's work.

22,158. Is it not rather hard to label him "This man does not do an honest day's work"?—They are known well enough.

22,159. Would you suggest that the Board of Agriculture Court should fix rent?—No, certainly not.

22,160. Would you suggest it should grant a fixity of tenure?—No.

22,161. Do nothing but see that proper compensation is enforced?—I think so—something of that sort; classify farms, I should say. Let them do that. If a tenant has farmed his land in A1 order, and having everything in A1 order, I do not see but what it would be right that there should be some one he might call in for his protection and say "Now, I want you to "certify that my farm is in such and such con-"dition."

22,162. That you think might be done by an officer of the Board of Agriculture?—I think so.

22,163. With regard to the penalising clauses we have heard that landlords put them in order to restrict a bad tenant farming his land out. If they were cut out, how would you suggest he should have any power over the bad tenant?—Perhaps I did not think of that.

22,164. I mean that you will admit that that is possible?—Yes, it is possible, but I think, I have said bad tenants want more looking after, than they get at present.

22,165. But you must have one agreement after all. You cannot say to a man before he takes his farm "I know you are a good tenant "and I shall leave the penalising clauses out," nor say to another "I know you are a bad tenant, and "I shall leave them in"?—I should be inclined to stick to them with a bad tenant.

22,166. You admit that a harsh landlord might use them unduly against a good tenant?—Well, that is possible, too.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,167. You say that in your own case the rent was not advanced when prices of stock and produce went up. That is so, is it not?—Yes.

22,168. Of course you remember the period from 1872 up to about 1878, when it was a prosperous time?—Yes.

22,169. What was the effect on the rents then. Did they go up during that period?—Yes, but not so much as the prices went up.

22,170. Do not you think that if prices went up in consequence of the tariff, that there is a probability of the rents going up similarly?—No, I do not. We are working so much below par at present, that I think that that is amply guarded against by something very slight in the way of protection. If I manage to convey what I mean, they are working so much below par at present, I do not think there is the least danger of that taking place. It would be something very small, because taking off one and putting on to another brings horses together very soon, does it not?

22,171. I suppose the average of the Anglesey farms would be about 50 acres?—Yes, I believe so.

22,172. Take a 50 acre farm of average quality 20 years ago, what amount of produce would be sold from that farm?—Well, that is a biggish question to ask one all at once. We generally reckon we must make three rents. That will bring you somewhere near the mark.

22,173. Say land worth 1*l.* an acre?—That will make it 150*l.*

22,174. What amount of produce could you raise on that farm at the present time?—I was working up the difference this morning on two farms that I pay something like a little over 500*l.* a year for, and the difference now and 12 years ago, is something like 350*l.*

22,175. On a rental of how much?—On a rental of say a smooth 500*l.* I may say in talking of agriculture, I consider that freeholders and labourers have as much right to be considered, as landlords and tenants. The general weal; that is what I am aiming at, in anything I suggest.

22,176. You take the community as a whole?—Yes, the community—labourers, freeholders, landlords and tenants.

Lord Kenyon.

22,177. A co-operative society?—Well the whole nation generally. Then I wish to say that we have heard a great deal about the question of farm lads sleeping inside the farm houses.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,178. We have heard more about servants sleeping outside?—Well, it has been carried the other way I think. These are my notes: "Also "I consider the question of farm lads sleeping "in the house is quite impracticable for obvious "reasons." I say that as a farmer, and I am a magistrate also, and I should think from the evidence that comes before us in certain cases,

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

I cannot imagine anyone suggesting for half-a-minute, that such a practice should come about.

22,179. I am not sure that has been suggested. It has been suggested that the accommodation should be very much improved, and that a room outside should be furnished for them?—I think I heard it suggested, unless I am totally wrong, in the other room yesterday.

22,180. That they wished the men to sleep in the house?—Yes, it was mentioned repeatedly.

Chairman.

22,181. These are questions by Mr. R. H. Williams: "You have referred to a mortgaged "estate. Can you tell us who is the owner of "the estate to which you refer?"—No, I distinctly decline.

22,182. "Do you agree that the fact of any "estate being mortgaged hampers the proper "cultivation of the land?" You agree to that?—Yes I should say so; well, in that way.

22,183. "Do you suggest any remedy for this "state of affairs?"—I think I have suggested it.

22,184. These are questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Do you know that there has been a "great fall in prices in recent years. Do you "think there has been a proportionate fall "in rents?"—Well, I should say they have done very well indeed. Twenty per cent. I consider very handsome.

22,185. "Do you think that in the last few "years the farmer has been properly remu-"nerated for his labours?"—Most decidedly not.

22,186. "Do you state that unless there be "Protection the farmers cannot live?"—That is my firm impression; and the labourers too very shortly.

22,187. "Do you therefore agree that in the "absence of some legislative enactment or other "general remedy, that farmers cannot possibly "pay their rents?"—Well, I really do believe we are going to the dogs at present, if these bad times continue.

22,188. "You have stated that there is much "'screwing' on single estates. What remedy "do you suggest for the protection of tenants so "'screwed.'" That I think you have told us?—No, I do not think so.

22,189. Do you suggest anything on that?—If these times continue there will be less land hunger, and they will never give these high rents.

22,190. You are distinctly against a Land Court for fixing rents?—Yes, certainly.

22,191. This is a question by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "Do you think a Land Court or com-"pulsory arbitration, would protect tenants so "screwed up, as you have described?"—Well, I think it would be out of the frying pan into the fire.

22,192. "Do you think that fixity of tenure "would enable a farmer to cultivate the land "better."—No, I do not go in for fixity of tenure.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. E. R. Owen called and examined.

Chairman.

22,193. You are a farmer?—Yes.

22,194. Do you live on your own farm?—Yes, now.

22,195. What do you wish to speak about. Will you read your statement?—The evidence I would like to offer is mostly personal. In the first place I wish to speak of the farm on which I live, namely, Bodsuran, in the parish of Llechcynfarwy" ——

See 20,007. 22,196. I think we can pass over that. We have had the whole details of that farm?—Not the whole.

22,197. Then perhaps you had better go through it?—"The farm was lately the property "of General Owen Williams, formerly at Craig-"y-don, now of Temple House, Great Marlow, "and I wish to speak of it as an example of the "unfair advantage taken by some landlords of "the tenants own improvements to increase the "rents.

"From 1850 or 1855 to 1873 my father, who "was tenant, expended over 2,000*l.* in improve-"ments such as buildings, reclaiming of waste "land, draining, building of stone walls and "gate pillars, making new water courses, dams, "and power, &c., and bringing the land into "a good state of cultivation. To within a "few years of the death of Colonel Thomas "Peers Williams (General Williams' father), "and during the whole time of Mr. Williams, "the able barrister of Treffos; the Craig-y-"don estate was considered the most secure "in the county, and all the tenants had im-"plicit confidence they would be fairly dealt "with, whatever improvements they would "execute at their own cost. My father did all "his improvements with the knowledge and "consent of Mr. Williams, who, I was taught "to believe, had always the welfare of the "county deeply at heart, and his knowledge "of everything pertaining to agriculture was "undisputed.

"Unfortunately for the tenants, about 1872 "he was succeeded in the agency by a person, "an ex-serjeant of militia, who I am sorry to "say, and I am not alone in this opinion, had "not a single quality to recommend him for "such a post.

"When my father was just commencing to "reap a little benefit from his improvements in "1873, his rent, which in 1850 was 170*l.*, was "raised to 210*l.* In May 1875 he was served "with a notice to quit on the 13th November "following, with the alternative of paying a "further increase of 70*l.*, and accepting a 14 "years' lease renewable to 21 years.

"Now, as trade was very brisk about 1875, "it would have been entirely impossible to find "a suitable holding to let, especially in so short "a time as six months, so he was obliged to "accept the terms offered or go homeless, and "leave his work for others to enjoy. He re-"peatedly wrote to the landlord to ask for

"a re-valuation of the farm and to have his "improvements on it as well valued, but to no "advantage; but in justice to General Williams "I must state that he returned 15 per cent. of "the rents for one year, and did not avail "himself of the terms stipulated in the lease "that the rents were to be paid quarterly, but "they were received, as was always the custom "on the estate, in two instalments, the first "about the middle of December, and the second "the beginning of April.

"During the years 1888–89 most of the "Craig-y-don estate in Anglesey was sold by "public auction, when owing to the high rents "which had been extorted, the farms reached "considerably higher figures than they would "had the rents been reasonable, but not a "farthing's compensation was offered to those "who had improved their holdings to make "them so much more valuable. The amount "paid General Williams for Bodsuran was "7,500*l.*, which for a stranger might probably "be considered reasonable, but for my father, "who had spent the better part of his life, his "skill, and so much of his earnings in improving "it, was, I am sure it will be admitted, a very "unfair price to pay."

"I also wish to put this agreement in evidence "(handing same) as showing the unreasonable "shortness of the 'periods of exhaustion,' that "are allowed on improvements, even when they "are of a most permanent character, and the "inadequacy of the compensation granted "tenants on quitting."

"In the year 1881 my father took the farm "referred to in this agreement, namely, Fferam "fawr, Llangwyfan, on the Bodorgan estate."

22,198. Your father took this farm, did he?—Yes.

22,199. In what year?—1881.

22,201. Your father paid 350*l.* to come in, did he, for the walls and so on?—Yes, my Lord, for the walls alone. "At first I believe it was not his (my "father's) intention to live there himself, but as "he was told his son would not be accepted as "tenant he went there. Desiring naturally to "end his days at Bodsuran, in 1889 he asked the "agent if his son—meaning my brother—should "succeed him in the tenancy, or failing that, "would he allow him the same advantage as he "allowed the former tenant if he quitted. He

" took no notice of the first request, neither " would he promise him the same favour as was " granted to Mr. Roberts, and referred him to " the agreement as to compensation. My father " therefore continued to occupy the farm until " his death, which took place in June 1891."

" During his occupation he had repaired the " outbuildings at considerable expense, had con- " verted portions of the house and adjoining " outbuilding into a dairy, improved the roads, " and had reclaimed some waste land, which " together cost him no less than 200*l.*, besides " the improvement which took place in the " general condition of the land, of which the " neighbours can testify. My brother applied " to succeed him in the tenancy, but was not " the accepted applicant, and consequently had " to quit on the 13th November last year.

" We in due time sent in our claim for com- " pensation, and received for the agent a counter " claim for dilapidations on fences and repairs " to buildings. Several items in the claims being " disputed, we offered to submit both to arbitra- " tion. This, in regard to our claim, he (the " agent) refused to agree to, telling us to sue " him for the amount if we wished. In regard " to his claim he, however, agreed to send his " arbitrator to meet one named by us and go over " the farm again, after we had time to repair " the dilapidations mentioned in the claim. " The arbitrators failed to agree as to the " amount of damages to fences or repairs to " buildings, the amount in dispute on the build- " ings being 5*l.* 6*s.* I do not know what the " other difference was, so two umpires were " named, one to award on the buildings, the " other on the fences, the award on the fences " being 7*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* which included a sum put on " a fence or hedge which my father had partly " carried away as he thought it was not required, " and I understand the present tenant is of the " same opinion, for by this, I hear it is all carted " away. The other umpire having refused to " act, and as we were desirious of having an " end of it, I wrote to the agent offering to " divide the 5*l.* 6*s.* which he eventually agreed " to.

" In respect to our claim against the landlord, " we had no alternative, on quitting, but to " accept the agent's offer, of an allowance of only " 80*l.* for improvements made by our father. " This together with the amount allowed as per " agreement on the stone walls, namely four- " fifteenths of 350*l.*, made a total of 173*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, " which sum, less the umpire's award of " 7*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* on repairs to fences and 2*l.* 13*s.* as " agreed on repairs to buildings was all we " recived out of at least 520*l.* expended; not to " mention the improvement in the general con- " dition of the land, the balance obviously " having gone to improve Sir George Meyrick's " property. The walls when we quitted the " farm were not a sovereign's worth less valu- " able than they were in 1881, and the other " improvements not in the least exhausted."

22,202. What did your brother get for improvements when he went out of the farm? I did not understand the end of your statement. The agent you say refused arbitration; is that so?—Yes, in regard to our claim.

22,203. What was your claim?—Our claim was for compensation.

22,204. What was your claim for compensation? How many pounds did you want the landlord to pay you for going out?—This is a copy of the claim (handing).

22,205. You have not added this up?—No.

22,206. How much did you get?—On that claim we had 80*l.*

22,207. This comes to about 400*l.* and you had 80*l.* out of that?—Yes.

22,208. Did you put it in like that without adding it up?—I cannot say; that is only a copy.

22,209. Some questions are handed up by Mr. Vincent: " Has General Owen Williams left this country, and is his agent dead "?—I think so.

22,210. " Is this Fferam the same farm " referred to by Mr. David Owen the other day "?—Yes.

22,211. " Did your father occupy Fferam and " Bodsuran simultaneously "—at the same time?—No.

22,212. He did not?—No.

22,213. " Do you complain that your brother " was refused as tenant of Fferam "?—Yes.

22,214. " Was not your brother refused as a " tenant because, at your father's death, when " administration was taken out, his personal " property turned out to be 575*l.* only after all " the debts had been paid "?—The agent said so.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,215. What years does that claim which you handed in, cover—how many years back?—I cannot say for certain; I think from about 1882, some items were in 1882, perhaps.

22,216. And altogether it makes about 400*l* I think?—This includes the sum that was to be granted according to the agreement—four-fifteenths of 350*l.*

22,217. Did you buy that farm of Fferam-fawr?—No.

22,218. But you bought General Williams' farm?—Yes.

22,219. That is your property now; that is the property you are living on at this moment?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,220. Your complaint is this; that you had to pay for your improvements twice over?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

22,221. You made them, and then you had to buy them?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,222. You only got a sum of 80*l.* out of a sum of about 400*l.*?—It would make more than 400*l.* It would make something about 520*l.*, I believe.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,223. Between 400*l.* and 600*l.*?—Yes, that would be it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,224. Is that claim put in in accordance with your agreement?—Yes.

22,225. What provision is in the agreement in case you and the agent or the landlord fail to come to a settlement; is there any provision for the settlement of any dispute?—I am not quite sure, but the agent refused us to send this claim of ours to arbitration.

22,226. But did you proceed to make a claim under the agreement or under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Under the agreement.

22,227. Did the agent dispute any of the items in the claim?—Yes he did.

22,228. What were they?—I believe they are marked on the claim.

22,229. I see the item here for drainage is disputed, is it not?—Yes.

22,230. Did you before commencing the drainage write to the agent for consent to drain?—I do not think so.

22,231. Then I am afraid you have not complied with one of the conditions of the agreement?—That may be; I do not know.

22,332. It says here distinctly, "the tenant "shall not be entitled to compensation with

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

"respect to an improvement of the first class "unless he has executed it with the previous "consent of the landlord." Was the consent of the landlord obtained before reclaiming this waste land?—I cannot say that it was in regard to that, but it was for the other items. He did the other items with his consent, I know; the repairs on the buildings and so on.

22,233. Is it the landlord or the agent that generally pays the outgoing tenant for the laying down of pasture and the application of artificial manures?—The incoming tenant pays.

22,234. But of course, unless the place was bought by your father the landlord would have paid the claim under the agreement?—That is Sir George Meyrick's farm that you are speaking of.

22,235. I do not see anything in the agreement providing for a settlement of any dispute there may be between the landlord and the tenant. In other particulars you have not complied with the agreement; you have not specified the period of years at the expiration of which the improvements shall be considered to have been exhausted. You do not know what were the objections raised by the landlord against these items?—No, I do not.

Chairman.

22,236. There are questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "When you went with your brother "to apply for Fferam, did you not offer to leave "the whole stock at Fferam for your brother, "so that the personalty of your father is not "material?"—Yes, I did.

22,237. "I understand you to put the agreement in evidence?"—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Prytherch called and examined.

Chairman.

22,238. You speak English?—Yes.

22,239. Will you read through your statement?—It would take a long time to read; I should prefer to be asked questions upon it.

22,240. You are a tenant farmer?—I am.

22,241. Under whom, who is your landlord?—The trustees of the estate known as David Hughes' Charity Estate.

22,242. That is managed by a Board of Trustees comprising some of the principal land owners in Anglesey?—Yes.

22,243. And you have no special grievance?—No, so far as I am concerned.

22,244. You are deputed by a society of agriculturalists to give evidence, and you say, "perhaps I could do nothing better than give a "rough account of how my own farm has been "dealt with for 50 years"; but have you any grievance to complain of?—No.

Chairman—continued.

22,245. Fifty years ago was a very complete set of farm buildings built by the tenant at a considerable expense?—Yes.

22,246. From that time forward have there been about four miles of stone walls built in place of old fences?—Yes.

22,247. Has the wet land also been drained and redrained at the expense of the tenant?—Yes.

22,248. And you say all these improvements could not have cost less than 2,000*l.*?—That is so.

22,249. What was the rent 50 years ago?—80*l.*

22,250. What is it now?—160*l.*

22,251. Did you put in a claim for compensation on the outlay you made?—I did.

22,252. And your claim amounted to 620*l.*?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

22,253. Did you get your rent reduced?—I did.

22,254. And you are quite contented?—Quite contented, as far as the rent goes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,255. How much did you get your rent reduced?—From 200*l.* to 160*l.*, 40*l.* reduction.

Chairman.

22,256. Is that a fair instance of the general management of estates in Anglesey?—I believe it is.

22,257. Some are treated more generously than you and some are treated worse, but as a rule, the sitting tenants on the largest estates have not much reason to complain?—That is so.

22,258. You say that on the whole, the best of feeling exists between tenants and landlords, and you believe that no county in Wales has a better and more honourable class of landlords, than you have in Anglesey. Is that your opinion?—That is my opinion.

22,259. You say, "Landlords are human like "others, and when they are forced to dispose of "their property, they wish to see it realising as "much money as it possibly can?"—Just so.

22,260. "And if the law of our land shelters "them to transfer the tenants' improvements "along with the land, it is the law that is 'wrong,'" and you want to see the law altered?—Yes.

22,261. And you think that the present law is wrong?—I do.

22,262. Then you are not so contented on that point as you are with the landlords?—No, I am not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,263. Would you go so far as to say that the landlord is justified in confiscating another man's property, because the law is wrong?—Well, morally he is not, of course.

Chairman.

22,264. The landlord is wrong morally for taking advantage of the law, but the landlord is human and he will do the best he can for himself?—That is it.

22,265. Is the present scale of compensation adequate?—I say it is not.

22,266. You say no tenant can recoup his outlay on a substantial building in 21 years?—No.

22,267. What would you advocate. First of all that every tenant should be allowed full liberty to cultivate his holding in the manner he thinks best?—Yes.

22,268. And there is no oppressive clause in farm agreements?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,269. Would you kindly mention the clauses that you wish to see struck out of the agreements that are in use on the Anglesey estates?—Well, I have no agreement myself, and it is only hearsay. Some of the tenants are tied down not to cultivate all their holdings. Others, again, are not to drain some parts of their holdings. They have to keep some swampy land for sheltering game, and so forth.

Chairman.

22,270. Do you consider the tenant should have full liberty to improve his holding, as regards building and fences, draining, &c., so as to be in a position to produce as much as he possibly can from the holding?—Yes.

22,271. And when the landlord does not contribute towards the necessary specified improvements, what ought to happen?—There should be some outward authority to advance the money, I should say.

22,272. At a low rate of interest, I suppose?—Yes.

22,273. Are you in favour of a Land Court for that purpose?—No, I am not.

22,274. You are not in favour of a Land Court?—No.

22,275. But you are in favour of the Board of Agriculture doing it?—Yes, or to extend the provisions of the present Small Holdings Act.

22,276. You do not like the term "Land Court?"—No, I do not.

22,277. Do you go so far as to suggest that if a tenant is disturbed, he should be allowed compensation for his being taken away from his home and his place of business?—I do.

22,278. If he breaks off all his long acquired connexions he ought to be compensated for it, that is your opinion?—Yes, it is already acted upon in trade circles.

22,279. When a farmer is obliged to quit his holding he should be allowed a year's rent?—Yes.

22,280. Would that suffice for fixity of tenure?—Not that alone, but compensation as well.

22,281. You say, "This would amply suffice for fixity of tenure." Do you say that one year's rent would suffice?—With my former suggestion that all improvements should be compensated for.

22,282. All the improvements paid for, and one year's rent for disturbance?—Yes, this would suffice for fixity of tenure.

22,283. And you think it would benefit the landlord because he would get his property back in a tidy and tenable condition, and the machinery left on the farm would be left in a working condition, and ready to bear its burden of produce the first year to the succeeding tenant?—Just so.

22,284. Is a great quantity of land in Anglesey held by the yeomanry class?—I should say nearly half of it.

22,285. Nearly half of it?—Well, a large percentage whatever.

22,286. Is it very highly mortgaged?—I should say it is, by the small owners.

Chairman—continued.

22,287. Who has lent the money generally, the bankers or private individuals?—Private individuals as a rule, trustees to orphans, widows, and invalids.

22,288. Then it would ruin the private individuals who have lent money on that security as well; these suggestions of yours would benefit the people who have lent money on the land as well as the occupiers themselves?—Yes; I put it rather than a Land Court. Of course if a Land Court was established, it would reduce the security for the investments, and ruin a great number of people.

22,289. What will be the result if the depression and unfavourable seasons continue for another five years?—Well, there will be less competition for land for one thing, and the rents will be reduced—they must be—it is a natural sequence.

22,290. Do you think the system of rating is fair?—Scarcely, I believe.

22,291. Do the additional rates, introduced lately in the Holyhead Union, amount in the aggregate to as much as the poor rate?—Very nearly.

22,292. And you think the owners ought to bear half this burden?—Well, that is only a suggestion.

See 18,533, 18,589–95.

22,293. Then about Mr. Moreton Pritchard, what do you wish to say?—There was a statement he made about a farm in my district. He said there were a great many farms on Sir George Meyrick's estate that were equal in fertility to that farm, and were let for 17*s.* and 18*s.* an acre, whereas this farm was let at 60*s.* an acre.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,294. That is Henllys Wen?—Henllys Wen. The tenant of that farm is here to-day, and he is willing to back his own statement. He pays only 50*s.* an acre for the farm, and that including the tithe rates and taxes and everything, and he has no repairs or anything to do. The farm only lets at 40*s.* an acre, and it is cheaper than the average land of the county even at that. It is an exceptionally good farm.

22,295. It is as cheap as the other farms at 17*s.* or 18*s.* an acre?—I should say it is.

22,296. But it is not true in your opinion that it is a specimen of lands much the same in that district?—Oh, no, it is far from being so.

22,297. It is an exception?—Quite an exceptional farm.

Chairman.

22,298. You think that is a very good farm?—It is an exceptionally good farm.

22,299. And it is spoken of as one of the best plots of land in Anglesey?—So it is.

22,300. You say, "It is let now as grazing land to the highest bidder?"—That is the case.

22,301. "Such land to a farmer who has no good grazing land on his farm is worth paying good rent for it to finish his stock for the butcher?"—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

22,302. Is there anything else in Mr. Moreton Pritchard's evidence in reference to inclosures?—There is about the inclosures of commons.

22,303. What do you say about that?—He said that the hotel, which was built on the common at Rhosnegir benefitted the common, and that it was through that hotel that Rhosnegir, which is a little bathing place, was discovered. As a matter of fact, the inhabitants of the district complain about it, and contend that the land which the occupier of the hotel claims should be left as common. The occupier of the hotel claims a great portion of the common, and he shoots rabbits, over it all. There is a lake touching on that common, a very famous lake for fishing, and as the place is getting known as a good bathing place, it would greatly help the inhabitants of the district if this lake were free, whereas the occupier of that hotel claims one portion of the lake. The commoners are not allowed to launch a boat on part of the lake, abutting the common.

See 18,5 18,677–

Chairman.

22,304. Who is the occupier of that hotel?—They change very often.

22,305. But who is the proprietor of the land on which the hotel stands?—He was a man from Liverpool at first.

22,306. A man from Liverpool has bought this land, and bought the hotel on it?—That is the case.

22,307. And he claims the fish in the lake, and the rights of the common?—That is so.

22,308. Where did he get those rights?—From the Woods and Forests.

22,309. From the Crown?—Yes.

22,310. And the people of the district complain of those rights being taken away of them?—They do.

22,311. Was there an inclosure made by Captain Thomas?—Yes, on the same common again.

22,312. What did he claim?—He claimed at first 2,000 or 3,000 acres.

22,313. Did he fence it?—He fenced it.

22,314. What was done to the timber that was heaped on the beach?—It was burnt once or twice.

22,315. Was it ever fenced?—It was for a while.

22,316. And did a great law suit spring up?—Yes.

22,317. Is the question now settled?—It was settled by a compromise, that he should have 180 acres, or something like that, of the land.

22,318. And has the piece been cultivated by Captain Thomas?—Yes.

22,319. Has he begun taking the common again?—He has completed, not begun. His own stock over-runs the whole of the place.

22,320. Has he put any asses, ponies, and sheep on the common?—Yes.

22,321. How many?—I cannot say, they are numberless.

22,322. A hundred?—Yes; I should say several hundreds.

Chairman—continued.

22,323. What is the result—that the stock of the commoners gets pushed off the ground?—That is the result.

22,324. And you fear that in a few years he will have established his right all over the common?—Quite so.

22,325. Do you think that the authority in these commons ought to be transferred to the local authority?—I do.

22,326. You think the local authority ought to deal with all common rights?—I do, they could utilise them to some benefit.

22,327. In the centre of the common, is there a narrow strip of land belonging to the Bodorgan estate, extending to the beach?—Yes.

22,328. And has that been disposed of by public auction?—Yes.

22,329. What did it realise?—Good sums; from 200*l.* to 400*l.* an acre I should say.

22,330. Then you have put in a summons to pay the rent on the common, is that so?—No; there are some remarks on that page which will explain it. That is only an instance of the claim.

22,331. Your rent is 2*s.*?—On one demand it is.

22,332. And what is the other?—1*s.* 9*d.*

22,333. And they charge you 8*d.* for the receipt?—Yes; and I do not know what the rent is for.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,334. You cannot discover what the rent is for?—No.

22,335. It is paid to the Woods and Forests?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,336. You mean you cannot discover the receipt, not what the rent was for?—I cannot discover what it is for; I do not know where it comes from. It is only a claim that has been sent in every year. It is the custom of the country.

Chairman.

22,337. Has this been done for many years?—I have paid that for many years, yes.

22,338. For a great number of years back?—Since I have been tenant.

22,339. And did the previous tenant pay it before?—I suppose he did.

22,340. You have no reason to doubt it?—Not to doubt the application, but I do doubt the claim.

22,341. Then as to agricultural education; is there any of that in Anglesey. (Results handed in.) You say some attention is paid to fruit culture on a small scale, and also to horticulture, but very little to forestry?—Very little.

22,342. Trees do not grow in this part of the world. Now about labourers, how are the wages paid?—In cash as a rule.

22,343. And they get 15*s.* a week?—That, I should say would be about the average.

22,344. And lads 12*s.* a week?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

22,345. The accommodation I suppose in the farm houses is indifferent?—It is. It is not as good as it should be.

22,346. It is not what it ought to be?—No, it is far from being so.

22,347. Is there cottage accommodation for labourers?—There is.

22,348, But that is indifferent too, I think?—That is in a very bad state.

22,349. The sleeping compartments are not properly separated, are they?—Not the cottages.

22,350. Parents and children are often huddled up together in a very objectionable way?—Yes.

22,351. And of course that has a very bad effect on the morals of the family?—That is my opinion.

22,352. Who built the cottages, the tenants or the landlords?—The tenants as a rule.

22,353. Then, of course, you could not expect a very good cottage, built by a tenant. This, you think, is a matter where tenants should be assisted by law when it is necessary to get funds at a reasonable rate of interest, and their security should be charged on the cottage, and the landlords should get a nominal ground rent?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,354. When you put in a claim of 650*l.* for improvements, you accepted a reduction of 40*l.* in the rent, as a settlement of the claim?—Yes.

22,355. Was there anything mentioned as to the period this reduction should cover?—Only during my tenancy, about seven years I think it was, do you mean the reduction in rent?

22,356. Yes.—Oh no. I thought you meant the compensation. There is no security for the reduction.

22,357. Then it was to go on, as long as you and the landlord agreed?—Yes, I expect so.

22,358. Would you have power to renew your claim say if you wanted a further reduction in the course of a year or two?—Well, I had the Agricultural Holdings Act at my back. That is all we had. We have no agreements. The estate is now under the provision of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

22,359. I suppose this settlement was only by word of mouth. The reduction of the rent was only done by word of mouth, I suppose?—Of course, yes.

22,360. Do you think the Agricultural Holdings Act is satisfactory?—I should say it is far from being so, far from being what it should be.

22,361. Do you think it should be revised?—Yes, that is my opinion.

22,362. In what particulars?—First of all the terms and provisions of the Act are conditional, the tenant must seek the consent of his landlord to do everything. That in a great way cripples the tenant, and prevents him going on with his improvements until they are very urgent. We have often read in the evidence that you had before, that tenants go on with their improvements even without the consent of the landlords and then the landlords not very willingly give their consent. Again, the scale of compensation I should say is very inadequate, only 21 years to cover the most substantial outlay.

22,363. Supposing a tenant thinks an improvement is necessary, and is a first class improvement, an improvement within the first schedule of the Act, and he writes to the landlord to obtain his consent, and the landlord refuses to give it; what would you suggest should be done in a case of that kind?—Let the tenant be at liberty to do it, as he knows best what is wanted.

22,364. But you know very well that he would not have any claim afterwards on his landlord if he did it without his landlord's consent?—But I say that the Act wants to be revised, and that is one of the things in respect of which it wants revision.

22,365. Would you give a tenant permission to carry out any improvement he chose, without any check at all upon him?—Full liberty, I should say.

22,366. Without any check whatever?—Without any check whatever.

22,367. You know there are many tenants as extravagant as there are landlords, and they might go and lay out great expense, build a new house perhaps, when it was not necessary. Would you not consider it a hardship on the landlord to have to pay for an improvement of that kind, which was really not an improvement?—I should say that the improvement should be valued on his leaving, according to how much it enhanced the value of the holding. If the tenant happens to go on spending of his own will, he should be his own loser. It should be valued only according to how much it enhanced the value of the holding, how much it added to the value of the tenancy.

22,368. You would rather give the tenant that permission, than to suggest the reference of a question of that kind to arbitration?—Very likely it would be settled by arbitration.

22,369. Do you not think it would be more satisfactory if it were referred to arbitration in the first instance?—Yes, if landlord and tenant agree to it.

22,370. Before the improvement was carried out?—Yes, of course.

22,371. You think it would be very well to refer a question of that kind to arbitration?—Before he incurs the expense do you mean?

22,372. Yes, before he incurs the expense.—Well, yes. It would avoid any misunderstanding arising, but if the landlord declines that arrangement, then I believe in the tenant having full liberty to work the scheme out in any way he thinks best. Let it then be referred to the arbitration of the arbitrator, to decide whether it enhances the value of the holding or not. If the tenant has done anything unreasonable, let him pay for it himself.

22,373. What about the sliding scale of compensation. You were going to say something about that?—It is too short; 20 years is not enough for a man to recoup his outlay. I should say that the limit should be put at 35 or 40 years, and it should be settled by arbitration, what the improvements are worth to the holding in that course of time.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

22,374. You think many of these first class improvements would be as good in 30 years as when they are first made?—Some of them are better in 30 years, than when first made.

22,375. Such as hedges and fences?—Yes; they improve as they grow old, some of them.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,376. When you pay those small imposts, to whom do you pay them. I mean the 2*s.* and the 1*s.* 9*d.*?—The receiver of Her Majesty's Crown Rents in Wales. He is the receiver on behalf of the Woods and Forests.

22,377. Where does he live?—The collector who came round first, I believe, lives in Criccieth, and when we missed to attend the audit, another demand was made from Carnarvon.

22,378. Cannot you get to know from the collector, what you pay for?—No; unless I pay.

22,379. But if you ask him, will he not tell you what you are paying for?—I did ask him, and he could not tell me.

22,380. He could not tell you?—He could not tell me. He could not give any explanation.

22,381. If you refused to pay, what would happen then?—Oh, he would come on my stock, and distrain on my stock to make up the difference.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,382. Just one further question. You say here, that the whole burden of the rates falls on the tenant?—So it does now.

22,383. When you take a farm, do you not take the rates and taxes into consideration and bid accordingly?—Of course we do in taking a farm, but a good many of the tenancies run back for 10, 15, and sometimes 30 and 40 years, with only the same taking continuing ever since. There are a good many new rates laid on, and those all fall on the tenants. In the case of almost every Act that comes into force, the cost is put on the rates, so that every new rate that comes on the land, falls on the tenant. The Education rates and all these rates fall on the tenant.

22,384. Suppose a tenant entered a farm three years ago, will he not have taken the rates into consideration and calculated what they would amount to, and bid accordingly?—Yes; but very likely if he has taken it only three years ago, he will be in the farm for another 10 years. If we are to measure the next decade by the past, there will be a burden of at least 1*s.* 6*d.* or 2*s.* in the pound added to his burden.

22,385. Then, according to your process of reasoning, you would modify that statement, and say that the tenant pays the increased rate, and not all the rates?—Of course; that would amount to it.

22,386. And your suggestion is that increased rates should be divided between the landlord and the occupier?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,387. Do you pay Game Tax ?—No.

Chairman.

22,388. Two questions are sent up by Mr. John Hughes, of Frondeg: "Is there a scarcity "of labourers in your district?"—No.

22,389. "What do you pay your labourers per day?"—Well, we find everything for them, and the general wages run about 1*s.* 8*d.* to 1*s.* 10*d.* a day.

22,390. Questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "What is the name of the society of agricul- "turists who deputed you to give evidence?"—The Agricultural Union it is called.

22,391. "Where and when does it meet?"—In Llangefni; it meets occasionally. We have to meet every quarter.

22,392. "How many members are there?"—I cannot say from memory, but I should say there are 80 or 90.

22,393. "You say that the law is wrong. In what respect?" I do not think we can go into that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

He said that it was wrong in that, it allowed the tenants' improvements to be sold along with the land.

Chairman.

Yes; he gave capital evidence about that.

22,394. "Then you say, 'No oppressive clauses "in agreements.' Whose agreements do you refer "to?" That we have already heard enough about. Then, "Do you approve of fixity of tenure?" Are you in favour of that?—In one way I am, but I believe that a good scale of compensation would be more pliable than that.

22,395. You have told us all that before—Yes; and good compensatian for all the tenants improvements.

Sir John Llewelyn.

22,396. That, in effect, would ensure security of tenure?—So I believe.

Chairman.

22,397. "How long was your rent at 200*l.*?"—Seven years.

22,398. "When was it reduced to 160*l.*?—In 1884.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN RICE THOMAS called and examined.

Chairman.

22,399. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

22,400.—Who is your landlord?—I hold under Lady Vivian.

22,401. You say your family has been on your present farm, Bodeilio, Llanddyfnan, for 50 years?—Yes.

22,402. And you have been a tenant yourself 17 years?—Yes.

22,403. Are you satisfied with the conditions of your tenancy?—I am.

22,404. If a field or a plot of land is taken away on Lady Vivian's estate, compensation is given, is it not?—It is; it has been the case with my farm.

22,405. You keep the farm and buildings in proper repair?—Yes, to the best of our ability.

22,406. And the penalising clauses are in existence, but they are not enforced?—They are in the agreements, but they are never put in force—never.

22,407. They, practically, are a dead letter as far as Lady Vivian's tenants are concerned?—Yes.

22,408. A copy of the agreement is given to every tenant?—Every tenant who applies for one.

22,409. The rent has not varied during the last 50 years?—Not at all.

22,410. Trifling services are rendered to the landlord, and they are usually mentioned in the agreement; I think that is about coal?—That is about a load of coal occasionally.

22,411. That is mentioned in the agreement?—Usually; I am not quite positive. I would not be certain; I am under the impression it is.

Chairman—continued.

22,412. Have rents been generally raised all over Anglesey in the last 20 years?—Yes.

22,413. And no permanent reductions much have been made, I take it?—Not to my knowledge.

22,414. But temporary abatements from 5 or 10 to 15 or 20 per cent.?—Yes.

22,415. Notices are given when such abatements are intended to be made?—Yes.

22,416. When rents are raised the land is generally re-valued, is it?—Yes.

22,417. The price of stock, of course, has decreased?—Decreased.

22,418. What about the charges on land; what rates have diminished, and what rates have increased?—The poor rates have diminished, the sanitary and highway rates have increased, and the school board rate has been added.

22,419. They are all paid by the tenant?—All paid by the tenant.

22,420. What about the size of farms?—They are about 30 acres, on an average, I should say.

22,421. Is there any sub-letting?—Some tenants do sub-let.

22,422. Is it allowed, or is it winked at?—Well, it has been the case with the farms that I know of, for a good many years. I cannot tell whether it is allowed or not.

22,423. I suppose labourers are scarce?—No, they are not.

22,424. About the improvements; do the landlords provide materials?—Generally.

Chairman—continued.

22,425. And the tenants pay for the work done?—For everything else.

22,426. Do you approve of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—It is not satisfactory.

22,427. It wants altering and improving?—It wants amendment.

22,428. Then about game; are you yourself troubled with game?—I am not troubled so myself.

22,429. Are any of your friends and acquaintances troubled?—Well, I know of some that are troubled.

22,430. Are they generally compensated?—They are.

22,431. What do you say about the law of trespass; are you troubled with that?—It is very unsatisfactory indeed.

22,432. That wants altering too?—Oh, yes.

22,433. Of course you complain of the railway rates?—We do.

22,434. What do you think is the cause of this depression in the trade of farming?—Well, chiefly the foreign competition, I suppose.

22,435. Then as regards bonâ fide improvements; do you think there ought to be compensation paid for them?—Fully.

22,436. And about security of tenure do you think a man ought to be secure in his holding?—I do not suggest so much upon that question.

22,437. Do you think a man ought to be secure in his holding so long as he pays his rent?—Well, if he farms his farm properly, and so on.

22,438. If he farms his farm properly, and pays his rent, you think he ought not to be disturbed?—Well, not unless the landlord would want the farms for himself, or something like that.

22,439. And if he is disturbed, you think he ought to be compensated for the disturbance?—Fully for all improvements.

22,440. Fully for all improvements, and for disturbance as well?—No.

22,441. You do not go so far as that?—I do not.

22,442. Do you think rents are too high or not?—I think they are too high, according to the price of agricultural produce in these years.

22,443. As regards your relations I take it they are extremely friendly with her ladyship?—Oh, very friendly indeed.

Sir John Llewellyn.

22,444. I suppose like everybody else you think that if a tenant makes permanent improvements, he ought to receive due compensation for them?—I do.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,445. Suppose a tenant believes, that he farms well, and his landlord believes that he farms badly, what would you do in that case?—If I was put up to judge between them, it would be a different thing.

22,446. How would you suggest that it should be settled. If the tenant farms badly, and the landlord wishes to get rid of the tenant, while the tenant perhaps believes that he farms all right, how would you settle that?—I have never seen a case of that sort.

22,447. What would you do supposing there was such a case. We have had tenants saying that they were good farmers, and we have had their landlords saying that they had turned away those tenants because they were bad farmers. How would you settle a question like that?—I do not suggest anything on the question at all.

22,448 You cannot suggest anything?—No.

22,449. What about improvements, would you allow the tenants to make any improvements they liked?—Not any improvements; I do not suggest that, but all bonâ fide improvements, what is quite necessary for the farm.

22,450. Suppose there was a difference of opinion there also, the tenant saying, "Such and such an improvement is necessary," and the landlord saying, "No, it is not?"—They should have a perfect understanding between them before the improvement is made.

22,451. But suppose they cannot come to an agreement, what would you do?—You cannot do anything with them then.

22,452. What materials do the landlords supply in the case of buildings?—Timber and slates, lime, nails, bolts, and so on.

22,453. Who supplies the stones for the walls?—The stones are generally on the farm. The tenants pay for breaking them up and carting them.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 10 o clock.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

Llangefni, Friday, 13th October 1893.

Second Court.

LORD KENYON IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. R. R. PARRY called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

22,454. You are a farmer and relieving officer for the Aberffraw district?—Yes.

22,455. You wish to bring a case before our notice. Will you please say what it is?—First of all, a farmer and his wife occupy a farm of 39 acres 3 roods 4 perches. The land was in a very poor condition before they entered the place, most of it such that plovers could scarcely live upon. The land was not half fenced, and the tenant had to build gorse and straw sheds for cattle; the rent being 50*l.* a year for the first few years (exclusive of the rates and tithes), while the rateable value of the Union is only 16*l.* Two of the children are obliged to remain at home to help their parents, and the other two, who are in service, bring home their wages to assist their parents to pay the demands of the farm. The tenant has spent some years in cultivating the land with the assistance of the children, and has invested their capital in improving and manuring the land, so that its produce and the stock might not be third and fourth rate in the market, and that the cows might improve in their milk and butter, &c. But this year, though they could hardly get "both ends to meet," and could not get proper clothes for themselves and children, or pay the rent except in small sums, the tenant is obliged to pay 55*l.* in future, or quit his farm and leave his labour and improvements. The landlord lets the game at a high rent, and the sportsmen traverse the ground almost daily, through the turnip and potato crops, &c., which brings no profit to the tenant; while a deal of his time is taken up to repair the hedges after them, to prevent the cattle following their paths. I can name another instance of similar circumstances, with the exception that the acreage is 32, and the rent 47*l.*, while the rateable value of the Union is only 15*l.*, and I can name two or three other cases which bear much resemblance to this. Penyrallt: estimated extent, 9 acres; rateable value, 4*l.* 10*s.*; rent, 15*l.* Glangors, 15 acres 3 roods; rateable value, 5*l.* 10*s.*; rent, 19*l.*

I may also mention the case of a successful farmer. It cannot be said that he is a better farmer than the others, only that he has security of tenure, viz.: a lease and the rent is a little lower, his farm is called Clegir Bodwrog, estimated extent, 31 acres 1 rood 27 perches; rent,

26*l.* All the above are with a radius of two miles.

As to agriculture in our county at present, my opinion is that an acre of land cannot produce any crop to repay the expense in Anglesey markets, viz.:—

	£	s.	d.
Ploughing an acre of land will take three days to a man and a team of horses, which will cost 8*s.* a day	1	4	0
(3 storad) 6 bushels oats as seed for same at 2*s.* per bushel	0	12	0
4 cwts. super-phosphate manure at 3*s.* per cwt.	0	12	0
Harrowing, rolling, and manual labour to put seeds in ground	0	10	0
Cutting oats, gathering together and thrashing	0	10	0
Cartage to station	0	6	0
Rent	1	0	0
Tithe, poor rate, &c., highway rates	0	3	0
Total expenses	£4	17	0

Returns.

	£	s.	d.
Oats, 6 qrs. at 15*s.* per quarter	4	10	0
Straw consumed on farm	1	0	0
Returns	5	10	0
Total expenditure	4	17	0
Profit per acre towards living, &c.	0	13	0

Lord Kenyon.

22,456. That is supposing the whole country to be under oats?—Yes.

22,457. You do not give any table as regards grass pasture?—No, I do not.

22,458. Is not the bulk of the country under pasture?—Yes, I am sure of that.

22,459. Therefore your table would hardly apply?—Only for ploughing land, in respect of which, we must pay for the labourers and keep horses.

22,460. Would not that be an argument in favour of laying down to pasture?—Yes, if the land would bear it, but a second and third class quality land would not bear it.

22,461. Is there much of that in this country?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

22,462. On what estate is it where the rent has been raised 5*l.* this year?—It is the property of Mrs. Owen, Church Street, Llangefni.

22,463. Is she a large owner?—No, she is not.

22,464. Is she what Mr. Prichard would call in Class B?—I am sure she is.

22,465. And as to the other case, is that on the same property?—No. It is the property of Mr. William Jones, Tynllan, Llanfwrog.

22,466. Is that a large or a small property?—In Class B.

22,467. And is the successful farmer in Class B or Class A: the one who has a lease?—Under the late Reverend C. W. Edwards, Llanfair P.G. It is called the Eirianallt Groes Estate.

22,468. Is he a large landowner or not?—Yes, he may be in Class A as to that.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,469. You say this is rather a hard case. There are two children working at home with the mother on the farm?—Yes.

22,470. Are they grown up?—Yes. They could get 9*l.* to 10*l.* per term salary.

22,471. That would be something like 20*l.* a year?—Yes, to each of them.

22,472. If they were working elsewhere?—Yes.

22,473. Then there are two that are not working at home?—Working outside.

22,474. What wages do they get?—One gets 20*l.* a year, and his board and lodging of course.

22,475. Do you say they assist the mother to pay the rent?—Yes they do, the father and mother.

22,476. Do you think that they would not be able to pay the rent without that assistance?—I believe they could not.

22,477. Why is the tenant obliged to leave, do you say?—He is obliged to leave if he will not agree to pay an additional rent of 5*l.* in future.

22,478. Has the place been re-valued?—No.

22,479. Not by a surveyor?—No, only by the Union.

22,480. That is for rating purposes?—Yes, of course.

22,481. It has not been re-valued by any land agent?—No.

22,482. Does the landlady herself raise the rent 5*l.*?—Yes.

22,483. Have they made any improvements upon the farm?—Yes, a great deal of draining and fencing on the place has been done, and manuring and improving the land by ploughing it and cleaning it.

22,484. You say that they work very hard?—Yes, very hard.

22,485. You say the game is let. Do you know at what price the game is let on this little farm?—I do not. The landlady lets it to Mr. Horten of Gwalchmai.

22,486. Then we come to another case where the extent is 32 acres and 47*l.* rent?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

22,487. You speak of one being very prosperous under a lease. Why should he be more prosperous than the rest?—Because he has security of tenure, no doubt.

22,488. He is able to lay out his manure on the land?—Yes, buy manure for the land, &c. He is on the boundary of that 32 acre farm.

22,489. His rent is very much lower in proportion to the rest?—Yes, by far, but there is a great deal of waste in his land in the 31 acres.

22,490. Has he so improved his farm as to make the rent lower?—Yes.

22,491. Then with regard to the table you have brought us, do you consider in this part of the country it will take a man three days to plough an acre of ground?—Yes.

22,492. What time do they go to field in the morning?—Eight o'clock.

22,493. How long do they stop at noon?—They come to the stable at 12 o'clock after being four hours out.

22,494. They stop at noon for how long?—Two hours.

22,495. And then?—They go to work until 6 o'clock.

22,496. They work eight hours?—Yes, eight hours a day.

22,497. They will take three days to plough an acre of ground at that rate?—Yes, with our ploughs.

22,498. How deep do you plough?—Five by seven we call it.

22,499. That would not do in our part of the country?—We should expect an acre of ground to be ploughed in one day.

Lord Kenyon.

22,500. Is it very stiff soil?—Yes, it is.

22,501. Is it clay?—Yes, mostly.

22,502. Bad to work?—Yes, heavy.

Mr. Grove.

22,503. In the case where you speak of this damage by game is there any allowance made for that damage by game?—To the tenant?

22,504. Yes.—No, not a penny. If the gentleman, who takes the game from the landlady, likes to send a couple of partridges, that is all.

22,505. Is there much game on that little farm?—Yes, there is much waste around it.

22,506. Do you know other cases, where children working away from home, have to send part of their money home to help their parents to pay their rent?—No, I am not ready to give evidence as to any other than that.

22,507. This case you are clear about?—Yes, I know the people.

22,508. You say that this first farm you speak of 40 acres has been re-valued for assessment purposes?—Yes, by the Union.

22,509. What is the rateable value put at now since that assessment?—That is the last assessment, 16*l.* Before that it was 17*l.* 10*s.*

22,510. It seems a strange order of things. The Union, then, are reducing the rateable value, and the landlady wants to stick up her rent?—Yes.

22,511. That is the reverse order of things, is it not?—Yes; but this was a new place when he came there, and it was sold from a big farm, and then the overseers of the parish made up the difference in the rateable value. Then afterwards the Union sent on their valuer to value it. They did not agree exactly.

22,512. There may be a little difference arising from that?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

22,513. With regard to the game trouble, would the difficulty disappear if the landlady had the game and kept the game in her own hands?—Yes, it might.

22,514. You think it is because the shooting is let? Yes, it would not be so much, if the landlady would take the game into her own hands, or leave it to the tenant.

22,515. You say you are a tenant farmer?—No; I am a freeholder.

22,516. You think yourself well off as a freeholder?—In what way?

22,517. I mean to say as compared with the tenant farmers.—Yes, if you can buy your land cheap enough, but it is almost impossible to do it.

22,518. Land is rather dear?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

22,519. Do you consider you bought your land very dear?—No, not very.

Lord Kenyon.

22,520. Have you bought recently?—Three and a half or four years since.

22,521. How many years' purchase did you pay?—It was 42 acres, with good buildings thereon, at 1,350*l.*

22,522. What was the rent?—Say the rent on such land ought to be from 18*s.* to 1*l.*

22,523. Then it is about 32 or 33 years' purchase; that is a very high price?—Yes.

22,524. These are questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Is not almost five-sixths of the land "in Anglesey in grass?"—Yes, I am sure. I was speaking of plough land.

22,525. "If it takes a man three days in "Anglesey to plough an acre of land, how long "will it take a man to mow an acre of grass "with a scythe?"—It might turn out to be profit and loss.

22,526. How long would it take to mow an acre of this land?—He has to work very hard to do it in two days with a scythe, for the first crop.

22,527. "Are not the first two landowners you "mention instances of class B; landlords who "let at high rents and do very little repairs, and "are they not both Liberals and Nonconformists?"—They are mixed.

22,528. You mean one is a Liberal?—Some Liberal and Nonconformists, and Churchmen and all.

22,529. I do not think that is an answer. Do you know what the politics or religion of Mrs. Owen, Church Street, Llangefni, are?—I believe she is a Nonconformist.

22,530. Of course, she has no vote. And the other one, William Jones?—He is a Conservative.

22,531. And a Churchman?—I do not know what he is at present, really.

22,532. This is a question by Mr. J. Owen Hughes: "Do you let any of your own land?"—No.

22,533. This is a question by Mr. J. Hughes: "Did you say that it would take a man three "days to plough an acre of land; you say yes?"—Yes, I mean from the grass ploughing up pasture, aredig tyndir, we call it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Rowlands (of Gwalchmai), called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

22,534. I believe you wish to give evidence principally with regard to agricultural labourers, their employment, their food, their wages, and their sleeping accommodation?—Yes.

22,535. What do you say about their employment?—My idea is that the wages are rather low.

22,536. Will you say what the wages are?—Well, varying from 7*s.* 6*d.* to 12*s.* a week.

22,537. On their master's finding, of course?—Yes, of course.

22,538. How would that vary. Is it according to the labourer or according to the place where he is employed?—Well, according to the labourer, perhaps.

22,539. The "hwsmon" would get 12*s.* 6*d.*?—Well, the head man, as you call it, would get 12*s.* 6*d.*

22,540. Have you anything further to say about employment?—The wages ought to be higher, but perhaps the farmers cannot afford to give them big wages at present, considering their present condition. Perhaps some of them would be willing to do it, if they could afford to do it.

22,541. Do you think the labourers are better off than they were, or worse off?—They are better off than they were 20 years ago, in some places anyway.

22,542. Do you think there is a great gap between the farmers in this country and the labourers?—Yes, in some places too wide a gap.

22,543. What do you think is the cause of that?—Well, it is a custom that has grown in the country.

22,544. And it is hard to get over?—I think there are many farmers who do not consider their servants or labourers, as made of the same flesh as they are.

22,545. As to their food; have you something to say upon that?—Their food, in one way of speaking, is better; that is, the farmers prepare better food for them, but there is a lack, in the cooking of it.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

22,546. Do you think that could be improved at all by cooking classes or anything of that sort?—Well, very likely it would.

22,547. Have there been any such classes?—No, not in this island now, I think, although I understand that there are in some parts. The servant girls, as a rule, are very young; they are too young to know; they have no experience in cooking, and of course farmers employ them because they get them for little wages.

22,548. Would you mind saying what the diet is, and what sort of food you get?—Well, it is very plain food.

22,549. Do you get bread and milk for breakfast, or something of that sort?—Yes, in some places and broth in others, and that is not always of a very good quality; most of it is water.

22,550. And for dinner, I suppose, you get meat?—In some places meat; in others, not.

22,551. Salt meat or fresh meat?—Salt meat, as a rule.

22,552. And bacon or salt beef?—Salt beef and bacon.

22,553. Any oatmeal?—Not at dinner.

22,554. But at supper?—Oatmeal at supper.

22,555. You think the improvement in the food should be in the cooking? Yes, I think the farmers have better stuff than they used to have, if it was cooked better.

22,556. What do you say as to the sleeping accommodation?—That is very poor.

22,557. Do you think that, the farmers' fault?—Yes, mostly; they have no proper accommodation for them only in very poor places; most of them have better places for the cattle than for their servants.

22,558. Is it not the landlord's fault in not building proper accommodation for them?—Perhaps so; perhaps if you go to the root of it, it is the landlord's fault.

22,559. Do you think if the landlord was asked he would put up proper accommodation?—I do not think he would.

22,560. It is the custom in this part of the country for the tenant to do the buildings, is it not?—Yes.

22,561. As to other accommodation, is that good or bad. In the evenings are they turned out of the back kitchen for instance?—Well, there is a back kitchen in every farm, and they allow them to go there for some time. In most places they will be turned out, as the farmer wants to do something else there; and then they have no place to go to but to the villages. They have no place adjoining their sleeping rooms to stop, and they are forced to go somewhere else for consolation or whatever you may choose to call it.

22,562. Where do they generally go; is it to the public house?—The public house, and they group together in the villages.

22,563. You think the standard of morality would be higher if they had better accommodation?—I do.

22,564. Is there anything further you wish to say?—No.

Mr. Grove.

22,565. What accommodation do you suggest that it would be reasonable to find for the labourer in an ordinary farm. Would you suggest that the landlord or the farmer should make a building outside, a room in which they could sit and have light and fire, and read?—Yes; I would do that, but I cannot say who will do it or who is to do it.

22,566. This is a very important point, as it affects a great many hundreds, and a great many thousands of men, and we want to get it from someone who understands the matter—what the farm labourer has to do and the circumstances under which he lives. Do you think a room opened in a village, or a cottage as a reading room, where the labourers could go and get their cup of tea or cup of coffee and read the papers, would be beneficial?—Yes; I believe so.

22,567. They sleep I suppose in the stable loft as a rule?—Yes.

22,568. You have just said a very serious thing, namely, that the cattle have more comfortable places than the men?—Yes; in some places.

22,569. As to the cooking of the food, one is sorry to hear it is not cooked in some cases properly, surely the farmers' wives understand cooking, and the general superintendence and arrangement of the kitchen, do they not?—They ought to do so, but generally they do not look to it.

22,570. Do you think that they do not give themselves sufficient care about it?—Quite so.

22,571. That they do not think it important enough to think about it?—Yes.

22,572. And they leave it to an inexperienced servant girl?—Yes; a very young girl who does not understand it properly.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,573. Are you a farm labourer?—Yes; most of my time.

22,574. Have you been asked by others to come and speak on their behalf here?—Yes.

22,575. Do you occupy any land as well?—A small place of about three acres.

22,576. Do you keep a cow?—One cow.

22,577. Do you think it is advantageous to a labourer with a family to keep a cow?—In some cases it is not, not always.

22,578. In what cases is it not advantageous?—When the rent is high, as it is, as a rule in some places.

22,579. Supposing he has a moderate rent, what rent do you pay for your three acres?—About 4*l.* 10*s.*

22,580. Do you think, as a rule, that it helps a labourer and his family to rear up his children to have some milk?—Yes.

22,581. Do you think that if the labourers round the country in the farmhouses, at least in all the farms, had a cottage and a plot of ground to keep a cow that they would be induced to stay more in the country, and not go into the towns?—I think so myself.

22,582. Do you think the farmers at the present time could afford to give you better wages ?—No, I do not think they could, unless they get some reductions in the rent.

22,583. How are you to increase your wages if that is the case; what remedy do you suggest? If the farmers cannot give you more wages, what is to be done?—More equality in rent; what I have heard many times to-day; a Land Court as you call it.

22,584. You want the rent lowered ?—Yes, so that the farmer can afford better wages.

22,585. Do you suppose the land will produce sufficient to keep the landlord, the tenant, and the labourer ?—Yes; land is always very honest.

22,586. The question is which is to have the first bite of the cherry. If the labourer has his full pay, and the farmer has his pay and a little interest for his capital, do you think the landlord can have the rent that he now gets ?—No, I do not think so.

22,587. Then you propose that the land should be lowered a little ?—Yes, and divided between the farmer and the labourer.

22,588. Then with regard to the food you do not mean to say you get nothing but this broth for breakfast. You have something with it, surely ?—Yes.

22,589. What do you get with it ?—Bread and butter.

22,590. Cheese sometimes ?—Very little cheese in this country.

22,591. Do not the farmers' wives, as a rule, understand cooking ?—Well, they do not take much to cook for the labourers, but they understand cooking for themselves.

22,592. They do not attend to the cooking for the servants the same as they do for themselves ?—No.

22,593. Is it not the case that because they cannot afford to pay for better servants that they employ such young servant girls, who do not understand the cooking ?—Very likely; that is mostly the case.

22,594. What wages do they pay the girls who have charge of the cooking as a rule ?—From 9*l.* to 12*l.* a year.

22,595. They teach cooking in our schools at the present day. Do you know that ?—That has not reached this country yet.

22,596. Then you say the sleeping accommodation is very poor, and that the labourers have no place to go in the evenings. We have heard that the farm boys behave very roughly, and that the farmers cannot put up with them in the house, because they break everything they come near ?—Some of them may be rough, but it is, because they are accustomed to be where they are now.

22,597. How are we to get them out of this custom ?—Prepare a better place for them, and try what they would do.

22,598. Do you suppose that if the landlord builds another room where they can go in the evenings that that would have the desired effect ?—Most of them would stop there I believe.

22,599. And suppose that the tenant prepares a fire for them do you think the farm boys would find candles ?—I think they would. They do find candles for themselves now.

22,600. Then it would be divided between the three parties ?—Yes.

22,601. That would be the way to get at it I think. You consider that labourers are now better off than they have been for many years ?—Yes.

22,602. With the exception of accommodation ?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

22,603. These are questions by Mr. John Hughes: "Are you able to employ labourers at "the rate of 7*s.* 6*d.* a week? Is that in your "opinion the market value of labour?"—No, that is not the market value, but there are some employed at that.

22,604. That would be the lowest ?—That would be the lowest perhaps.

22,605. "Will you kindly name the farms that "the labourers are sent out from the house "immediately they finish their supper?"—I could name some of them, but I would rather not name them here.

22,606. These are questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Have there not been cooking classes "here. And has not the stove just behind "where you are sitting now been erected for the "purpose of cooking classes?"—I did not know about that.

Mr. Grove.

22,607. You had not heard of that I suppose ?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

22,608. "Do you think the farmer has any "control at all over his labourers after the day's "work is done?"—He has very little I know.

22,609. "Would not that 4*l.* 10*s.* be considered "a very reasonable rent for a cottage with three "acres?"—Well, something like right, I should think.

22,610. These are questions by Mr. J. Owen Hughes: "What do you think a Land Court "would do for the labourers?"—Well, if it would do good for the farmer, of course the labourer would get some benefit from it, because the labourer and the farmer are joining one another, they are close neighbours.

22,611. "Do you know what a Land Court is?"—My idea of it is one thing, to secure a tenancy and to level the rents. There are some rents too high in comparison with others in this country.

22,612. To level rents and give security of tenure ?—Yes.

22,613. "Do you not know of instances where "the farmers have prepared good accommoda-"tion for the servants, and these places have "been made quite unfit by the labourers them-"selves?"—No, I do not.

22,614. This is a question by Mr. R. H. Williams: "Which is the wider—the 'gap' "between the labourer and farmer, or that "between the farmer and landlord?"—Very likely the gap between the landlord and the farmer is wider.

22,615. Perhaps it depends upon circumstances?—Yes.

22,616. These are questions by Mr. Evan Williams, of Llangefni: "Who is the owner of Spite Inn?"—It is not very easy to tell at present.

22,617. "Who is the tenant of Spite Inn?"—I am.

22,618. "What is the acreage and what is the rent you pay?"—4*l.* 10*s.*

Lord Kenyon—continued.

22,619. You say you do not know whose property Spite Inn is?—No; we have failed to decide lately.

22,620. "Did you not offer to pay 6*l.* rent to "Mr. Laurie, the solicitor of Llangefni parish?"—Yes; if he would re-build the cottage for me.

22,621. "If you did not promise to pay 6*l.* "how much did you offer?" You say you offered 6*l.*—If he would build the cottage.

22,622. To whom did you pay the 4*l.* 10*s.*?—A part the parish of Llangefni and part to Mrs. Vaughan. It is a charity to the parish of Llangefni.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

22,623. Has this statement been read to you by Mr. Griffiths, is it correct, and is it the evidence you wish to give?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"The evidence of John Williams, Parc Newydd, Llanerchymedd.

"I am a farmer occupying the above farm, and a county alderman.

"I beg to offer evidence as to the sale of farms, where the tenants had spent much money to improve the holding, and that without any compensation whatever.

"(1.) Rhiwgoch Fawr, Llantrisant, on the estate called the estate of Mrs. Lewis, Llanddyfnan. The farm comprises about 51 acres. The tenant built a very good house and most of the outbuildings. He dug a very deep pump in the rock, and improved the land considerably. He faced many hedges with stones, and he had to cart the stones for these and for building purposes from a long distance, as there are no stones on the land. He also drained much of the land, and he had to do all the improvements at his own expense. The whole expense was estimated by his neighbours at from 350*l.* to 400*l.* The farm was sold by public auction, and the tenant left without receiving any compensation.

"(2.) Ffridd. A farm of about 28 acres, in the same parish, and on the same estate. The tenant of this place also built a new house, and thoroughly repaired the outbuildings by roofing the straw-thatched buildings with slates, &c. The place was sold by public auction, and the tenant left without any compensation. The tenant had made all the improvements at a cost of at least 150*l.* out of his own pocket, and he only occupied the place for a short time.

"Instances of tenants signing agreements, not to claim compensation for improvements made by them at their own expense.

"I know of instances where tenants signed agreements not to claim compensation for improvements they had made at their own expense (and those improvements having been approved of by the landlord or his agent) if their holdings were sold, or if they were obliged to leave for some reason or other.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

"When permission is asked of the tenants to make use of these facts, they unhesitatingly admit the truth of the facts, but positively refuse permission to make them known publicly, and that for fear of the possible and probable consequences.

"Rents are raised on improvements made almost exclusively at the expense of the tenants.

"I am the tenant of a farm called Parc Newydd, in the parish of Llantrisant. My uncle was born and brought up on the place, and was the tenant for over 60 years, having become tenant on the death of his father, I became tenant after my uncle. The farm comprises about 72 acres and is the property of E. H. Verney, Esq., Rhianva, Bangor. Many years ago there were only a few acres of the farm under cultivation. The remainder was left as waste, and produced, gorse, thorn-bushes, rushes, &c. The rent at that time was 7*l.* a year, but the place was subsequently cleared, and hedges and water-courses were made so as to form fields. Previous to that there were no hedges except along the boundaries, and a few plots that were inclosed near the house. In time all the land was improved so as to become arable, but about 40 acres of it was still so wet that it was not much good without being drained. This was also done, and lime was applied to the land. About 40 tons of lime (sometimes more, sometimes less) were carted on it for many years. A house and outbuildings were also erected on the farm. The house was built at the expense of the landlord almost exclusively. The tenant had to pay 12*l.* 10*s.*, and to cart the materials. The timber and slates for the outbuildings were allowed, except for one building, when they were refused. The tenant had to do all the remainder at his own expense. All the improvements (except what was allowed towards the building) were made by the tenants of the place at their own expense without any assistance or compensation from the landlords. As previously stated, the rent at first was 7*l.* It was then raised to 14*l.*; then to 28*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*; and then to 45*l.* It was subsequently reduced to 40*l.* About 20 years ago the place was re-measured and re-valued at the instance of the Trustees of the estate, with the result that the rent was advanced from 40*l.* to 52*l.*, but the increase was not claimed during the life time of my uncle (the former tenant). The re-valuation resulted in a general increase in the rents, and general complaints on the part of the tenants that the rents were too high by far, and that they were obliged to pay over again for the improvements, they themselves had made. This is a complaint not only by the tenants of the Rhianva estate, but a general complaint of the tenants of almost every estate, large and small, throughout the island. The rents have been raised almost generally in the course of the last 30 or 40 years, either through valuation or by the agents, when a tenant left or died in letting the farm to his successor; or when the farms change hands by public auction, &c., so that between everything the farmer often suffers much hardship—indeed, much injustice, and he has no place, or court, or any Act of Parliament worth mentioning to appeal to for fair play. If he appeals to his landlord or his agent he is told that they can have plenty of tenants ready to accept the terms offered; and if he tells his grievance to his neighbours, perchance some of them will only be too glad to betray him, and take his house from him.

"As matters appear at present, some change must take place soon or else the circumstances of many farmers will be ruined, and the cultivation of the country will suffer greatly, which would mean a national loss."

Lord Kenyon.

22,624. How far back was it that the rent was 7*l.*?—Over 80 years ago.

22,625. Who did all the clearing of the fields?—My uncle, or it was in my uncle's time that the greater part of it was done.

22,626. The tenant?—Yes.

22,627. In the first two statements about the places which were sold, was any claim for compensation put in?—No, none at all.

22,628. Why was that?—The notion of claiming compensation is only of recent origin.

22,629. Why did they do anything on their holdings, if they never thought that they would get anything?—They expected that they would be allowed to remain there to enjoy the improvements themselves.

22,630. When the farm was sold first, the tenant of Rhiwgoch Fawr had to leave?—Yes.

22,631. How was that?—Because he could not pay the rent which the purchaser demanded.

22,632. Was the purchaser a small landowner or a large one?—I believe he was a farmer.

22,633. In the case of Ffridd, was that bought by a large landowner or a small one?—That was bought by the then agent of the Rhianfa estate.

22,634. You say, "When permission is asked "of the tenants to make use of these facts they "unhesitatingly admit the truth of the facts, "but positively refuse permission to make them "known publicly, and that for fear of possible "and probable consequences?"—That is perfectly true.

22,635. Do you know that there is an Act in force now for the protection of witnesses?—I know that it protects witnesses, but it does not protect tenants.

22,636. It protects anyone who is a witness, whether tenant or landlord or labourer?—If I received notice to quit in six years, I could not compel a landlord to give me a reason for it.

22,637. You are giving the landlord credit for bearing a grudge a very long time, I think?—I can prove that similar cases have occurred after a great lapse of time.

22,638. You can prove the reason in the landowner's mind, you think?—I do not say anything about the landowner's mind.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,639. Have you been asked to come here with your testimony on behalf of others?—No.

22,640. Only on your own account?—Yes.

22,641. As to this case you name where the tenant had spent from 350*l.* to 400*l.*, did he ever send in an application for compensation for that sum?—No, he did not.

22,642. Then do you consider that the tenants now have the same confidence in their landlords as they used to have years ago?—A great quantity of land goes into the market now, compared with old times.

22,643. Is it not the fact that in years gone by, if a master promised anything the tenant would rely upon his word, and think no more about agreements or anything else?—I believe that is the fact.

22,644. Then with regard to the farm at Ffridd. There appears to have been a good deal of money spent there again, a sum of 150*l.* They did not claim compensation, did they?—No, they did not.

22,645. Then you say you remember instances of tenants signing agreements, not to claim compensation for improvements. On what estates do you find that?—As I am not able to go into details, I do not think it would be fair for me to mention the names.

22,646. But you are sure you know of instances of that kind?—Yes, I am prepared to swear it, if need be.

22,647. Did you ever see any of these agreements?—I have not seen the agreements, but I have seen a copy.

22,648. Why did you not bring that copy here?—The person who signed it, would not consent to my bringing it here.

22,649. Why not?—He was afraid of the possible and probable consequences.

22,650. Was he afraid he would have notice to quit, if he gave it to you?—That was one of the things that he feared.

22,651. What others?—That the rent might be increased.

22,652. Why is a tenant induced to sign such a clause?—The reason was that they were completely in the hands of the landlord.

Lord Kenyon.

22,653. Is that a large or a small landlord?—He is a large landowner, class A.

22,654. Do you mind mentioning the landlord's name?—I object; I do not consider it fair, unless I was at liberty to give the name of the witnesses as well.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,655. Then you consider that the rents are very often raised on the tenant's improvements?—I believe that 9 out of 10, if not 19 out of 20 advances of rent, are due to that cause.

Lord Kenyon.

22,656. These are questions by Mr. D. Lloyd George, M.P.: "How long has the distress among "the farmers in Anglesey prevailed?"—During the last 10 or 12 years.

22,657. "Have farmers upon average holdings "made much more than a bare subsistence out "of their farms, during the last 10 years?"—It is very rarely they have been able to live and pay their way.

22,658. "Even on large estates where rents "might be reasonable 12 years ago, do you "consider that farmers can go on paying these "rents, if the average prices of the last three "years are maintained?"—If they had very much money in hand before the present depression commenced, they might do it, if they were foolish enough to pay their money in that way.

Mr. Grove.

22,659. Supposing they had nothing in hand, and had to go, on the circumstances of the moment?—In most instances I know of, they would not be able to do so.

Lord Kenyon.

22,660. These are further questions by Mr. Lloyd George: "While the price of cattle and "farm produce is much lower now than "formerly, is there any appreciable reduction "in the outgoings on a farm?"—Artificial manure is cheaper than it was at that time, and I believe the agricultural seeds are a little lower. I cannot bring anything else to mind at present.

22,661. "Do you know of any case where the "labour bill of a farm has been curtailed in "order to pay rent?"—I believe I could name cases where fewer labourers are employed for that reason.

22,662. I ask you this question myself. Is the labour bill curtailed also by employing machinery such as mowing machinery?—I do not understand that there is very much difference in that respect.

22,663. Surely one man with a mowing machine can mow more than one man with a scythe?—That is very true. We were in the habit of mowing hay, when prices were high, with mowing machines.

22,664. These are questions by Mr. J. Owen Hughes: "Did not Mr. Verney, after buying, "consolidate by adding a small tenement to "your farm?"—No, he did not, not at that time.

22,665. Did he do it afterwards?—I could explain that if I am allowed.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

22,666. I had better follow on the question. "Does not this account for the advancement of "your rent, of which you complain?"—The advance in rent I spoke of, is in respect of Parc Newydd itself.

22,667. From the 40*l.* to 52*l.*?—Yes, that is so.

22,668. "Are there any buildings at Ffridd "now?"—There are exactly the same as there were, when the place was sold.

22,669. "If so, who pays the rent, and to "whom is it paid?"—I pay the rent, and Mr. E. H. Verney receives it.

22,670. At Ffridd?—Yes.

22,671. You are at present tenant of Ffridd?—Yes. I was with my uncle when he was tenant of Parc Newydd and did not receive any wages, and I asked whether they would let the place to me.

22,672. You said the tenant of Ffridd was not able to pay the rent which is demanded, I understand?—I do not say he could not pay the rent, but he refused to take the place at that rent.

22,673. Did you consider it a fair rent when you did take it?—Yes; to answer my purpose it was.

22,674. What was your purpose?—I had been working with my uncle for about 15 years without receiving one penny wages, and if he had died without a will, I should have been left on the world without anything at all.

22,675. How did you get the capital to take this small farm?—My uncle allowed the stock on the farm to be given to me.

22,676. Was that not in lieu of wages?—Of course it was quite as good as wages.

22,677. These are questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Is not Captain Verney a Liberal?"—He was a Liberal.

22,678. What is he now?—I cannot say, I have not heard that he has changed his politics.

22,679. "Is it not a fact that the ministers and deacons of the chapel, have interested themselves very much in getting witnesses to appear before this Commission?"—So far as I am aware, and I am in a position to know, it is utterly untrue, it is a shameful untruth.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,680. You say that there is much less labour employed than formerly?—Yes; I could name instances where they have reduced by one-half.

22,681. Then is it not a fact, that there is much work left undone in hedging and ditching which ought to be done?—Undoubtedly there is.

22,682. If this state of things continues, the ditches will get full and the hedges will all come down, and we shall get into a wilderness in a short time, shall we not?—There are many farms in the county which are in that state at present.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Town Hall, Llangefni, Anglesey, Saturday, 14th October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

LORD KENYON.
SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ELIAS JONES WILLIAMS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

5,481 22,683. What is it you want to rebut in the evidence of Mr. Ellis Pierce which was given at Conway?—There are six different charges, my Lord, and I should be very much obliged if you would allow me to take them point by point. The first grievance is about a certain letter being written to the "Baner." First of all, I do not take the "Baner," and never see it; but remember hearing of a deprecatory letter concerning the Yspytty tenants describing them as in abject poverty, and tending to maliciously create ill feeling between Lord Penrhyn and them, which was refuted by them publicly in the "Baner" and signed with their own proper names and addresses. It was in Welsh I believe; they can all read Welsh, and write it. As to the imputation that they signed it in ignorance of its contents, I do not believe such respectable and substantial people would sign any document without first of all knowing what it contained, especially when it was in their own mother tongue. The second charge is about a place called Talar-y-gerwyn. The buildings are not in ruins; they are old, and Griffith Pritchard prides himself upon his care of the old buildings. Repairs are regularly done every year on the Estate on the instructions of the principal agent; the worst places being attended to first. Col. Sackville West makes the selection, and instructs me accordingly. He always comes over for the purpose. Griffith Pritchard contemplates retiring from Talar-y-gerwyn to live upon his savings, and has had permission for the last three or four years to select his own successor.

22,684. Does Mr. Pritchard do the repairs himself?—Yes, he does to a certain extent. He prides himself upon the care he takes of the old buildings; but he is always supplied with the materials, and he never asks for any repairs.

22,685. You have given him materials?—Yes.

22,686. He says that Mr. Pritchard asked several times for consideration of the local agent, and that was of no avail. Is that true?—No; utterly untrue. I may also mention that I have personally befriended him by paying his rent for him on one occasion (when he had forgotten the audit day) in order to maintain his credit with the principal agent. The tithe story has no foundation whatever. Fresh Agreements were issued, including the tithe in the rent, at a permanent reduction on the rent of about 15 per cent. Griffith Pritchard made no difficulty in accepting it and signing the counterpart. Here is a letter I wish to submit to your Lordship.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

22,687. Do you wish it to be read?—Yes, if you please.

22,688. I will read it: "5th October 1893." It is a recent letter?—Yes.

22,689. "Post Office, Penmachno, 5th October 1893, Welsh Land Commissioners. Dear Sir,—I am very much pained to read in the 'Herald Cymraeg' the evidence of Ellis o'r Nant at Conway reflecting on you, and I hasten to remind you that his statement with regard to Talar y Gerwin is misleading, if not something more; inasmuch as it was, I myself that took the agreement mentioned, to Talar y Gerwin on the 23rd of March, 1887. I can unhesitatingly say that Griffith Pritchard made no objection about the tithe, and not a word was said about a notice to quit or anything in that direction. My instructions from you were not to press upon him in any way to sign it. Yours truly, John Richards. To E. Jones Williams, Rhydlanfair, Bettws y Coed." Who is John Richards?—The Postmaster at Penmachno.

22,690. Was the farm let to another tenant?—No.

22,691. What he said was, "A word came one "morning that the farm would be let to another "tenant unless he would sign, to pay tithe with "rent"?—And that is the man he refers to who writes that letter.

22,692. Then there was no such word came?—No.

22,693. Have you anything more to say about that?—I may mention further that Griffith Pritchard and myself are on very friendly terms, and he was most anxious to get me on the County Council.

22,694. We cannot go into that?—There is good feeling existing, and this man goes about as an agitator trying to destroy this good feeling. That is what I want to point out.

22,695. I have these questions to put to you: "How long is it since you visited this farm"?—It may be five or six months perhaps. It is a very much out-of-the-way place.

22,696. "Have you visited it since you went "round to solicit his vote for candidature to the "County Council in 1888"?—I never went round to canvass votes and never do.

22,697. You have visited it since 1888?—Oh, yes.

22,698. "If so, when?"—I could not tell you definitely. I go round the estate very often indeed, and there is hardly a part of the estate, but that I may say I go and visit in less than three months—every three months at the very least.

22,699. "Did he ask you for lime for repairs?"—No.

22,700. "Did the tenant Pritchard have to buy "lime with his own money?"—I am not aware of it. It is not the practice on the estate to give them lime in any shape or form, but repairs are done for them. If this man wants repairs it will be done in its turn. They are done regularly. They are not called upon to pay for lime nor anything else. The repairs are done.

22,701. As a matter of fact did he have to pay for the lime?—No, they have not to pay for any lime.

22,702. Do you know that he did not, or do you think he did not have to pay for the lime?—Certainly I do know. If he went and bought lime for his own land for agricultural purposes, it is his own look out.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,703. You say that the repairs are made in their turn, one farm after another?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

22,704. Can you give any idea how long it is since he has asked for any repairs?—I have said before he has not asked for any repairs. I might say that the repairs are done systematically; we do not wait for any one to ask. The buildings are taken from bad to worse regularly every year, and so much money spent, and the tenants are perfectly satisfied because they know when their turn comes they are attended to.

22,705. You do not have any complaints that they are waiting too long? That is what I want to know?—No.

22,706. Then we come to Pen-y-bont?—There is a grievance about the manure there. I say that the manure is provided for, by the agreement. When there are sheep to be taken by the incoming tenant, it is a practice among themselves to allow whatever little manure there may be to go, free of charge. But here again, although the outgoing tenant was allowed to sell all the crop without any manurial compensation which we could charge according to the agreement, I distinctly told him that if he considered he had a fair claim for the few loads of manure, he could send in a bill for it. This was not done. Great forbearance was shown these tenants, who for the last 10 years at least were carrying on the farm in a state of insolvency, to its great deterioration, employing hardly any labour but their own two selves. William Hughes chiefly following the occupation of ordinary carrier, conveying slates from Penmachno quarry and coal, &c., &c., from Bettws-y-coed. The late Lord Penrhyn was much distressed at the negligent and wasteful state of the farm and the slovenly condition of the new house and outbuildings (which had been erected at a large expense, not much less than from 900*l.* to 1,000*l.* I believe) and wished the tenant to give up and take a smaller place; pointing out that he was causing much injury and loss not only to himself as tenant, but also to the community at large, by not employing sufficient labour, thus raising very inadequate produce and impoverishing the locality. Yet they were allowed to continue on. Since 1886 they were invariably backward with the rent, and the cultivation of the farm getting from bad to worse, they were repeatedly advised to look out for a smaller farmer of sufficient capital to exchange farms with them. Thomas Williams, of Llechweddhafod, was pointed out as a likely party, but no endeavour was made to carry out the suggestion. Some four or five years ago they were backward with, and having difficulty to gather, their hay crop; the estate men were sent to help them free of any charge. The farm is admittedly, by common consent, one of the cheapest on this portion of Lord Penrhyn's estate being only about 4*s.* 6*d.* per acre, exclusive of a sheep walk for about 500 sheep. In order to try and help them on, a boundary wall over a mile in length was erected for them free of charge, and a wire fence of similar length.

22,707. You deny the statement "they had no "cowhouse, shed, nor any kind of building on "that side where there was one much wanted "to feed the cattle"?—The buildings at Pen-y-bont are adequate.

22,708. "All the buildings that they used to "have were all in ruins." Is that so?—Those are all disused buildings, and the present farm buildings are all in one block together, and were built at an expense of over 1,000*l.*

22,709. Were they short of buildings to feed the cattle during the winter months?—Oh, no, they had not sufficient cattle to fill the buildings.

22,710. You say, that rent was very reasonable?—It is 4*s.* 6*d.* an acre—500 acres at 115*l.*

22,711. Was the new tenant "hoodwinked"?—No, he selected this farm of his own accord in preference to many farms in our own locality, and in his locality near Criccieth, and he took a great deal of time. If you will allow me I will give the particulars.

22,712. It is quite sufficient to say that?—He brought two of his friends, a man from near Harlech, a very sharp farmer, to look at it first; he brought another farmer from near Criccieth, and then he brought his wife. I do not think more care could have been taken to look at a farm.

22,713. "Why were new buildings not built "for the old tenants at Oernant"? Because they did not want them, and I believe as a positive fact that they were offered buildings at Oernant, kind of outbuildings, and they refused to have them about 20 years ago, and they had not sufficient cattle to fill what they had already.

22,714. Has your previous evidence referred to Oernant?—No.

22,715. What has Oernant to do with Pen y bont?—They are two separate divisions of the farm; one place is called Oernant, and the other Pen y bont. The buildings are concentrated for the convenience of the farmer in one block, at Pen y bont, and this is only a delusion of Ellis o'r Nant.

22,716. He says, "If they were wanted for the "new tenant, were they not wanted for the old "tenant as well"?—The new tenant has capital.

22,717. He is keeping more stock?—He is going to keep more stock.

22,718. Did the old tenant ask for them?—Never; he refused to have any buildings made there.

22,719. With regard to manure: "How was it "that payment for the manure referred to was "refused"?—It was not refused. It was a matter entirely between the outgoing and incoming tenant.

22,720. "Did Mr. Llewelyn the new tenant not "promise to pay, and was he not going to pay "until you stepped forward and instructed him "not to pay."?—No.

22,721. Bryneithin is the next?—Yes, Bryneithin. The whole statements here are absolutely untrue. Robert Roberts could not possibly do any ploughing for me, as he left Bryneithin in 1880 or 1881, and I did not take Rhydlanfair until 1884.

22,722. That disposes of that?—Yes.

22,723. Could the stars and the moon be seen through the roof of the farmhouse in which he lived?—I do not think so.

22,724. Were the outbuildings in a dilapidated state, and not fit to store cattle?—No, they were not. They might be in a negligent state of repair, owing to the man's own negligence,—a slate off the roof, here and there, owing to his negligence.

22,725. Were they in a condition that was dangerous to life?—Not at all.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,726. Was he expected to keep up the repairs himself?—No, they are not expected, although according to their agreement they are bound to do so. When houses and outbuildings are put into repair, the tenants are expected to keep them in repair, but on this part of Lord Penrhyn's estate they do not even do that. We go and do the repairs afterwards, even after the buildings have been up ten years, and I should like some of the Commissioners to see what has been done after ten years.

Lord Kenyon.

22,727. You think they may be in that state on account of the tenants' own negligence?—Yes, if there are any slates off the roof, it is their business to come and inform us, and it is done for them.

22,728. They are expected to keep them in repair, then?—No, they are expected to give us information.

22,729. Did Robert Roberts tell you that he was going to leave?—No, he did not. He took another farm without ever telling us. He did not give us any notice of his intention to do so.

22,730. Now we pass on to Bronddu?—I have this statement to make, Henry Williams (on Monday, September 25, 1893, in the presence of Mr. Robert Parry, Tŷucha, and Mr. John Edwards, Dylasau uchaf) emphatically denied that I ever asked him for the loan of any money whatever, and that he ever told any one I had done so. He said he was prepared to affirm it in any court or anywhere, and I believe he is here present.

22,731. "He soon after had a notice to quit, but "succeeded to get his farm back upon the under-"standing that he was to pay two years' rent in "advance, which he did, as far as I can under-"stand." Did he do anything of the sort?—He did not. Col. West is present, and he can prove that, and you can have the receipts. With regard to Fronddu, would you like to call Henry Williams first? He is present in court.

22,732. I will put these questions to you first—"Do you deny that Harry Williams reported far "and wide at Ysbytty about the 200*l.*"?—He is here himself. I never heard of it.

22,733. "Was it not the clergyman that suc-"ceeded to get the farm back for him"?—I do not quite understand the reference to the clergyman. Will you make it more explicit.

22,734. Well, I am afraid I cannot?—What is the question?

22,735. It is so badly written, I can hardly tell. It is, "Was it not the clergyman that succeeded "to get the farm back for him, Henry "Williams"? What clergyman does he mean?—I suppose he means the clergyman of the parish.

22,736. I suppose so?—I am not aware of it. Would you like to ask Col. West, the principal agent? I have nothing to do with the letting of the farms, nor the receiving of rents. Col. West receives the rents and gives the official receipts for them, and if there is a notice to quit, he gives it.

22,737. I may explain that. Mr. Ellis Pierce has sent a number of questions to ask the witness, but Mr. Ellis Pierce is not here, and we think in order to get to the bottom of this matter, it is better to put his questions so that he may be in no position to say the Commissioners treated him badly. I am simply doing my best to explain Mr. Ellis Pierce's questions?—I am perfectly content, my Lord.

22,738. Do you deny he got notice to quit?—No, I am giving you the full information there. Henry Williams having become totally insolvent through some cattle dealing transactions in 1887, his brother ——

22,739. We think you need not go into that further?—But it is a very serious charge against me, is it not? And I think when we consider the scandalous character of this man ——

22,740. You had better go on with your statement?—I will commence it again. Henry Williams having become totally insolvent through some cattle dealing transactions in 1887, his brother William Williams of Rhydyrychain, Yspytty, applied for Fronddu, stating that Henry Williams was a complete bankrupt, and all the stock there belonged to him (William Williams). He was answered that his application could not be entertained until Henry Williams had first of all, given it up, and admitted his inability to carry on, but if the stock was his and his brother wished him to go there, this matter might be considered. Under the circumstances it became my duty to report the application and the insolvency to Col. West, who then sent Henry Williams a notice to quit simply to protect the landlord's interest, and to afford Henry Williams an opportunity of proving his ability or inability of continuing his tenancy. The notice was not enforced, neither was he disturbed in any way whatever, nor made to pay any rent in advance, as is clearly proved by his enclosed official rent receipts, and Col. West can prove that by the books of the estate.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

22,741. Then "was he less capable at that time "than nine-tenths of the tenants on the Penrhyn "Estate"?—Less capable of what?

22,742. I suppose of farming. You say he was insolvent?—He was insolvent, but he was allowed to go on and has pulled up, and I believe is doing well. He was not disturbed in any way whatever.

22,743. You do deny that he paid two years' rent in advance?—Yes, and with your permission the official receipts can be sent on to you to look at.

Mr. Grove.

22,744. Do you deny that any request of that sort was made to him?—Absolutely, I have nothing to do with receiving the rents or giving notice to quit. It is the principal agent who does that, but I can say as a positive fact, that no rent was charged in advance.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Henry Williams (Fronddu) called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

22,745. Did Mr. E. J. Williams, the local agent, ask you for a loan of 200*l.*?—No, he did not.

22,746. Did you pay two years' rent in advance?—No, it was not in advance, except a few months.

22,747. Was it in payment of arrears?—No, it was not arrears. It was due to them a little.

Mr. Grove.

22,748. Did you pay any rent before it was due?—No, it had become due, but the time for payment had not arrived.

22,749. Then the usual time granted for payment was not given in that case. If the rent is due, say in September, they give up to December to pay it. Then was it paid before the rent would have been due in the ordinary sense?—Yes, by two months.

Lord Kenyon.

22,750. Did the clergyman succeed in getting the farm back for you?—The farm came back to me.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

22,751. Was it the clergyman who succeeded in doing it?—He sent to Colonel West, but I can say nothing more.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,752. Was it the clergyman who sent to Colonel West?—Yes, he sent.

22,753. You put your case before the clergyman? Did you talk it over with him?—Yes, a little.

22,754. And the clergyman wrote to headquarters about the farm?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

22,755. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Was not the fact simply that owing to your "unfortunate position, Colonel West was obliged "to ask for the rent when it was due, instead "of waiting for the rent-day"?—Yes, I had got into very unfortunate circumstances.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. E. J. Williams recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

22,756. Have you anything to say on the last point?—Yes, I have this to say: the half-year's rent is due on the 25th March, and under these circumstances Hy. Williams paid the half-year's rent on the 30th April, a month after it was due, so that there is no truth in the statement that it was asked in advance.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,757. What time was it usual for him to pay that rent?—In June. That is only a favour.

Lord Kenyon.

22,758. "Did you take any land from Mrs. Jones, Bryndraenan?"—It was an adjustment of boundary. There are five or six acres perhaps adjoining another farm, and the boundary was in a very bad state. This next farm was valued and found to be excessively rented, and this small adjustment of the boundary, was added to another farm, and no change whatever made in the rents of either of the two.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,759. Did that lessen her acreage?—That did lessen her acreage, but it improved her land by having a thorough good boundary.

22,760. By how much did it lessen her acreage, do you know?—I cannot say, possibly eight or 10 acres.

22,761. Then it is true that it lessened her acreage?—Yes, certainly, but it improved the farm. She had no boundary before; the cattle were trespassing upon each farm and the boundary has made that farm now one of the best farms on the estate. It is nearly 100 acres and the rent is only 29*l.* It is all arable land. As to Bryndraenan there is no cheaper farm in North Wales.

Lord Kenyon.

22,762. It was a readjustment of the boundaries of the two farms?—Yes, and readjustment of rent, if you wish to put it in that way.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,763. Was there a readjustment of the rent?—In that light that this land added to the other farm would help that farmer on.

Lord Kenyon.

e 15,537. 22,764. Colonel West said at Conway: "I rearranged the boundaries and readjusted the rents according to what I believed to be the actual value then of the farms after the readjustment of the boundaries, and the consequence was, although one farm possibly was a very little reduced, the other, perhaps, was a little raised, but there was no change whatever made in the total rents of the two farms. It was simply a readjustment of boundaries." Is that so?—Exactly so.

22,765. With regard to Bryndraenan: "Did you not tell Ellen Jones, when she said she would write to Lord Penrhyn about her fields, that you would take another field from her, if she dared to mention a word?"—Never. There is another grievance about Dyffryn Mymbyr, Capel Curig, if it is worth noticing.

22,766. It was stated "When the last tenant, Mrs. Roberts, died it came on the hands of Lord Penrhyn to farm, I notice every year that many tenants from the estate at Yspytty and Penmachno are in the habit of going there to shear the sheep?"—I have only a few words to say. It is absolutely untrue that the tenants are compelled to do any work. It is grossly untrue, and the tenants are never compelled to do any work for the landlord. They certainly do volunteer to go from our part of the country, about 10 miles or so, up to this Dyffryn Mymbyr for curiosity sake. They like to go and see the young stock reared there on a different principle to theirs, and they like to see the sheep, which are a different class of sheep to theirs. They go there as a kind of outing or holiday, and the greatest difficulty we have is to stop too many going. We can easily do the clipping without these our friends (the Yspytty and Penmachno friends) in the ordinary change of labour between neighbours, all the people of Capel Curig help and we help them. We could easily do without these people, if necessary.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,767. Is there an impression abroad that you wish them to go?—No, they speak of it, weeks in advance.

Lord Kenyon.

22,768. Then he made this statement: "The landlords, at least the agents, are in a position to get the tenant to commit suicide in some sense. They can get them to do any work for their landlords as well as for themselves free of charge. If they refuse they have to bear the consequence." Have you ever attempted to induce them to do any work for you?—No.

22,769. Is there anything else you wish to rebut?—I wish to point out what this man's public character is.

22,770. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Has Ellis o'r Nant had a libel action brought against him"?—Yes.

22,771. "Did he fail and fly the country"?—Yes, and was mulcted jointly in 400*l.* damages and the publication in every newspaper.

22,772. "Has he been convicted of using false weights"?—Yes.

22,773. "What is the general reputation of "Ellis o'r Nant"?—That he is not worthy of credence. He has been also fined for defrauding the railway company.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,774. Will you tell me the position you occupy on this estate?—I am the local agent on this estate.

22,775. Are you a practical farmer?—I am a practical farmer. I occupy land from two landlords. I occupy land from Lord Penrhyn, for which I pay him 90*l.* rent, and I occupy land from Earl Ancester, and pay him 45*l.*

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

22,776. Is it customary on the estate to take land from the tenant, without giving notice?—No, not for any purpose whatever, even for planting; they always get notice and always get compensation.

The witness withdrew.

Lord PENRHYN called and examined.

Chairman.

22,777. Your Lordship is chairman of the North Wales Property Defence Association, I believe?—I am.

22,778. When did the association come into existence and where?—The association came into existence at a meeting which was held in the month of December, 1886.

22,779. Have you anything to state to the Commissioners on that point?—I have. It is suggested in the syllabus issued by the Commission, and also by questions which have been put by some of the Commissioners, that there exists in Wales combinations of landowners, for the purpose of accepting or rejecting tenants of a particular class. I say, firstly, that no such combination exists so far as I am aware. To my knowledge there are only two organisations of landowners. The first is the North Wales Property Defence Association, of which I will speak later; the second is the Landowners' Association of South Wales and Monmouthshire, of which Mr. J. E. Vincent is the secretary. He is here and is ready to explain the objects of that association at any moment, which may be convenient to the Commission. I have never heard of any other combination of landowners, and I am sure that if any such combination did exist, I should have heard of it. The sole object of the North Wales Property Defence Association is summed up in its title, and that object is explained in the rules of the association, which I am ready to produce if called upon.

22,780. Perhaps it would be as well to put in the rules of the association, I think?—Is it the wish of the Commission that I should read them, or simply put them in?

22,781. Will you simply hand them in?—(The witness handed in copy of the rules.) If you would kindly allow me to say so, the Commission will notice that part of that document I have handed in is torn off, and that contains the list of the members of the executive committee. I am not at liberty to produce the list of members. In order to give additional emphasis to my statement of the objects of this association, I desire to put in evidence a circular issued by it early in 1887, and I desire to call particular attention to the last paragraph but one, which I submit shows clearly that there never was any hostile attitude shown towards tenants. The circular I refer to is as follows:—

"The serious attention of Welsh landowners is called to the objects of the above association, of which a copy is enclosed.

Chairman—continued.

"The important question of property defence was fully discussed at a very influential meeting, held at Chester on the 11th December 1886, and largely attended by gentlemen interested in land in Wales.

"The meeting expressed the utmost sympathy and good feeling towards the tenant farmer, and it was agreed that landowners should meet their tenants fairly and liberally in the existing depression of their business, and an opinion prevailed that, if allowed to arrange their own affairs, no difficulties would arise. At the same time it was felt by all that the incessant interference of outside agitators, often totally unconnected with any interest in land, and the open encouragement given by a large portion of the Welsh press to schemes practically of confiscation, make imperative the establishment of an organisation for mutual self-protection.

"It was therefore resolved (with only two dissentients) to establish this association, which it must be clearly understood is formed in no hostile spirit, or as a combination against the tenant farmers in any shape or form.

"Should you be desirous of becoming a member, you are invited to fill up the enclosed form of application, and forward the same as directed as early as possible."

Then it gives the names of the honorary secretaries. I may say that no idea of entering into the question whether this or that class of tenants was acceptable or should be accepted has ever been entertained, and that, if any such idea had ever been suggested, I, as chairman, should have repudiated it most emphatically. There is no truth whatever in the suggestion, that the circular referred to, at the Dolgelley sittings, was issued by or on behalf of any member of this association.

22,782. What is that suggestion?—The circular was referred to.

22,783. Yes, we remember that perfectly. You say, "There is no truth whatever in the sugges- See 8809
"tion that the circular referred to at the 9685.
"Dolgelley sittings was issued by or on behalf
"of any member of this association." That was an anonymous statement, an anonymous circular. I remember it well?—I had not seen the circular referred to, and I notice that it is anonymous. I know nothing about it whatever.

22,784. You knew nothing about the Conservative registry as a medium of communication between landowners wanting tenants and tenants wanting farmers, nor have you anything to do with it at all?—I know nothing whatever of any circular such as that which I have in my hand here, addressed to the clergy, landowners, and tenants, and which was referred to by Mr. Brynmor Jones at Dolgelley.

22,785. Where did this circular issue from?—I do not know. I know nothing of it.

22,786. So far as you are aware no member of your association knew anything whatever about it?—So far as I am aware no member of the North Wales Property Defence Association has anything to do with that circular.

22,787. Neither have they repudiated it?—I do not know. Being chairman, and never having heard of the circular myself till my attention was drawn to it the other day, I do not know that anybody has taken the trouble on the part of the North Wales Property Defence Association to take any notice of it. Having explained the object of this association, I desire to say, first, that an investigation into the so-called Welsh land question is welcome to the association, and that, on the 27th April 1892, the association resolved to approach the then Government with a suggestion that a Royal Commission should be appointed to examine into the conditions of tenancy in Wales. In proof of this I produce a copy of the minute passed on the aforesaid date. The minute is as follows:—

"After a discussion the following resolution was agreed to:—

"That this association considers that the time has arrived for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the relations between landowners and tenants in Wales, in consequence of the grave charges brought forward in the press and in Parliament, against owners of land in the Principality, and that the Government be requested to take steps for the appointment of such a Commission at the earliest possible opportunity."

I next desire to lay before the Commission in the most earnest manner, and as being vital to the whole question, facts which, in my opinion, prove that the agitation upon the Welsh land question was unreal in origin, and had not its source in any genuine sense of grievance on the part of the agricultural community. The said facts consist of articles and letters published in the Welsh vernacular press. From the foundation of this association, and for some time prior to that date, careful watch has been kept on the publications, of the vernacular press, and translations of articles and letters affecting the interests of landowners have been made for the Association. The accuracy of such translations can be proved to all reasonable satisfaction and in the vast majority of instances the originals can be produced. The said translations have been submitted to Mr. J. E. Vincent, who is present, and I now tender them to you, believing that they will prove that this agitation was deliberately fomented by journalistic sensational writings, with the object of creating a feeling in the country which would tend to the advantage of the proprietors of the vernacular press, and to the detriment of the Church and landowners in Wales; for this purpose I rely on extracts which I shall quote briefly. I shall, moreover, be able to show from those extracts that the agitation on the land question for some time was a failure, and that for years past landowners have been abused persistently and without regard to truth in the vernacular press, that obsolete prejudices against England have been resuscitated, and that all manner of threats and contumely have been poured on those tenants who might not be inclined to join in the movement. I hand in the extracts believing that no argument of mine is necessary for explaining their obvious meaning. I hand in also a list of the articles, giving the date of each, the paper in which it was published, with a few words indicating the nature of the article. I now, with the permission of the Commission, propose to read some of the extracts referred to. From the "Herald Cymraeg," published at Carnarvon, May 26th, 1886:—

"It is understood that vigorous preparations are being made by the committee of the Agricultural Society of the counties of Denbigh and Flint with regard to the meeting at Rhyl. It is not yet finally settled whether it is to be on the 15th or the 22nd of June, but this will be settled soon. Mr. John Roberts, M.P., Mr. Sam Smith, M.P., and Mr. Thomas Gee, and several of the foremost men in the land movement have signified their readiness to accept the invitation given them to come and take part in the proceedings. The chief object of this meeting is to sketch the means of establishing amongst the farmers of North Wales a society like the Irish League, and to plant branches of it in every county in North Wales. All the farmers in the Principality are earnestly requested to be present, so that a prosperous and thorough beginning may be made of the parent society."

The "Genedl," June 9th, 1886.

"You labourers and working men do not keep like Dan in the ships while we are fighting our enemies, but come with us and you shall get a share of the spoil.

* * * * *

"Within less than three hundred years ago all the land belonged to the people, but by this time it has been usurped by a class of men who call themselves the lords of the land, which is hideous unrighteousness."

* * * * *

The "Gwyliedydd," September 29th, 1886.

"Arrangements are being made in Liverpool to hold a meeting for setting up a Welsh national movement on the plan of the Irish one."

* * * * *

Chairman.

The Commissioners think that the originals should be put in with these extracts.

Assistant Secretary.

I have them here. Of course they are not verified. [Bundle of newspapers produced].

Chairman (to Witness).

22,788. Then you will allow us to keep these so to have the opportunity of verifying them. These are put in?—They are put in, I understand, as the originals of these quotations from which I am reading now.

22,789. Of course it must be distinctly understood that the Commissioners are not responsible for any of this evidence. By whom have these quotations been translated? — These translations were made on behalf of the North Wales Property Defence Association by a gentleman who will be guaranted by the Association to be sufficiently respectable, to have made truthful translations.

22,790. Will you supply the name of the gentleman who guarantees that these are accurate and faithful translations?—Mr. George Owen will guarantee it.

22,791. Mr. George Owen is the guarantor that these are proper translations?—Mr. George Owen is the guarantor that these are proper translations.

22,792. And these are the originals?—So far as I know.

Chairman.

Mr. Owen guarantees that these are the originals and that they are all there.

Mr. George Owen: There are two or three missing, my Lord.

Chairman.

Then I think those that are missing had better be left out.

Witness.

I do not know which are missing, but it is possible that there may be one or two from which I am going to read, which are not forthcoming at this moment, but which will be forthcoming.

Chairman.

But which you will pledge yourselves to produce?

Mr. George Owen: I will, my Lord.

Witness.

In the "Baner" of November 3rd, 1886, there are threats against the landlords if they support the Church; that is the subject of this quotation:—

"Neither can the landlords, at this time, afford to come between the farmers and the parsons in the present contest. The land question is far from being in a satisfactory condition, and undoubtedly they will have need of every help that is within their reach to settle it satisfactorily. And we would advise them not to forget the relics of good feeling that subsists between many of them and their tenants by this unnecessary intermeddling. Let it be remembered that the first cry which was raised in Ireland was 'No tithe,' and then because of the meddlesome and molesting behaviour of the landowners was raised the shout 'No rent.' Circumstances in Wales are not greatly to be distinguished from what took place in Ireland, and if the latter shout should be raised in Wales they will have no one to blame but themselves."

The "Baner," November 24th, 1886.

"The battle of the Welsh nation against landlordism is beginning in earnest. The feeling of fairness and justice which the nation possesses has condemned the operation of the system long since; but now, need and poverty and misery have begun to put the verdict into operation. The days of soft and sweet words about the landlords, are quickly passing away. The farmers, the countrymen, and the villagers of Wales have been praising and showing respect to the landlords with their lips, whilst they knew in their hearts they were thus paying a discontented tribute to the devourers of the marrow of their bones.

* * * * *

"There has been a generation or two of Irish farmers trampled down by landlordism, hundreds of them and their families have been starved to death, and thousands have left their beloved land for America, with a curse in their hearts for the system that trod them down.

"The Welsh farmers are going through the same sufferings. But the farmers of Ireland awoke and they have bruised the head of Irish landlordism. They sought, as the Welsh farmers are seeking, for a reduction in their rents by humble petitions to their landlords; but the burden of the landlords' song is warning the farmers against forming themselves into associations. But united and determined associations won the battle in Ireland. This alone will win in Wales. One of the chief duties of these associations, and friends of the farmers, is to publish the villainous and horrible acts of landlordism, in particular crushing down families to poverty and wretchedness by exorbitant rents. In this manner the Irish reformers worked upon Mr. Gladstone and on the public conscience of Britain."

The "Baner," December 11th, 1886.

"We confess that the unfaithfulness of farmers to each other is a very exceptional thing in Ireland. More the pity, in Wales this is a common evil. In the 'Emerald Isle,' the landlord's oppression and 'boycotting' have wonderfully cemented the tenants together; at the same time there are a few examples to the contrary even there, and the Tory papers make a great stir about them as independent and fearless people. Traitors and servile followers, rather like their Welsh brothers."

From the "Baner," December 22nd, 1886.

"The landlords ought particularly to beware of giving the slightest support to this measure."

Chairman.

22,793. What measure is that?—That measure was for transferring the tithe from the tenant to the landlord. The article continues:—

"Because if they do, if—to use the words of 'John Jones, Bryniau Iâl,' in one of his talented letters in the 'Baner'—they insist upon making themselves shields to the clergy, let them be informed that the fate of shields will be their lot. The country is determined to insist upon having the tithe from the parsons for the sake of having it to lighten their own burdens."

The "Baner," December 18th, 1886.

* * * * *

"The object of this, of course, will be to give timely notice to owners of land that it is at their peril they agree to the trick of the Ministry in letting themselves to be made shields between their tenants and the parsons, for the question that will arise then will be 'No rent' as well as 'No tithe.'"

The "Baner," July 13th, 1887.

"This week we will only suggest the two following changes:—1. That the scope of the league be enlarged. Now only the tithe is taken into account. But could not many other important questions connected with the land, and that too without relinquishing anything as to the tithe? We believe it can be done. If so, would it not be prudent henceforth to use this name and call it the Land League instead of the above?"

The "Baner," August 13th, 1887.

"Notes:—Of one thing we are quite certain. If the Church and Tory landlords were to leave their tenants alone, they would make short and unceremonious work of the tithe. The landlords are fools enough to shield the clergy. The effect of this will be to change, or rather to extend, the battlefield."

The "Baner," August 31st, 1887.

"They ought to have them for half their present rents. 'He that denies this, let him deny that the sun rises.' Also there is need for more unity amongst us as farmers. We ought to stand out for a general reduction in our farms. And if any 'Judas' happens to come to sight, he ought to be chased out of the country."

The "Baner," September 10th, 1887.

"It is not right for us to publish as much as is known regarding the intention of establishing the above league in Wales, and we had not thought of making known the intention at all, till the anti-tithe society at its yearly meeting had declared its opinion that it was advisable for it to extend its sphere, and take under its notice other questions besides the tithe, and take, besides that, a more appropriate name for its new position.

* * * * *

"After full and careful consideration, the following were unanimously agreed upon:—

"I. That it would be wise to change the name of the association, and henceforth call it 'The Welsh National League.'

"II. That the operations of the association should be extended so as to take in the following:—(a) the tithe; (b) the disestablishment and disendowment of the Church of England in Wales; (c) all the important questions connected with land.

* * * * *

"Allow us to state that the movement would have taken place some months ago, except that the leaders of the movement in the Vale of Clwyd were desirous of seeing if some other towns were not ready to take the responsibility. It was expected that Carnarvon or Aberystwyth or some other large town would have taken the lead, and the Liberals of these districts would have given every possible support and assistance to the League, wherever it made its home. But since there appeared no such sign it was determined to undertake the work in these districts, since it is high time to begin operations.

"We will now leave the question by saying this: If the above proposals are approved of, the association will appear in a new guise, and be much stronger, and will be known by the name of 'The Welsh National League.' We believe it will receive the warm support of the nation everywhere."

From the "Baner," October 12th, 1887.

"In a report of the Aberystwyth Liberal Conference, Dr. Pan Jones, of Mostyn, in proposing a resolution (which was passed unanimously) that reform of the Welsh Land Laws was necessary, said that no reform would be sufficient, unless it put a stop for ever to the oppressive power now exercised by the landowners. The landowners claimed all things in heaven and earth. The landlord system was insufferable in the extreme, as it made the tenant bow down before a trinity of robbers—the landowners, the agents, and the clergy. The blackest spot on the history of the country was the conduct of the landowners."

afraid that many of you are quite content to remain in deep ignorance of the important questions which bear the closest relation to your comforts and your prosperity. In other words, I am afraid that many of you do not see or read the newspapers which advocate your rights. I do not say this at a venture, but from knowledge. There are three national newspapers in the Welsh language which serve you with praiseworthy fidelity, namely, the 'Baner,' 'Herald,' and 'Genedl'; and several Nonconformist newspapers, as the 'Goleuad,' 'Tyst a'r Dydd,' do the same. And yet—which is almost incomprehensive to me—I know many of you into whose houses not as much as one of these faithful servants is received one day in a year. You complain of your burdens and sigh for release from them, but yet ignore those who are doing their best for your deliverance. Is that kind of you? Is it fair? Their price is not in the way, because the highest of them is only twopence a week—the price of a half pint or half an ounce of tobacco. Believe me, it is you that lose by it. It would not be so much in my sight to see the circulation of the newspapers of the Principality increasing, as it would to see you as a class increasing in knowledge of the great questions now before the country, and which are so closely connected with your future. You will see what my object in this letter is. I admit that I cannot reach the eye nor the ear of the careless by it; but I trust to be able to increase the zeal of those under whose notice this will come, to move others to follow their examples, because it is indispensable that there should not be one farmhouse throughout the whole of Wales into which one newspaper or other is not received and read.—I am, &c.

"Re Horace and Welsh Farmers.

"Will the letter of the above correspondent in your last number have a good effect upon Welsh farmers? Indeed, it ought to have. It had a wonderful effect on me. I felt when I read it that it was the request of a man whose heart was bleeding on account of the distressed state of the agricultural classes, and who wish them (the farmers) to know that, and to recognise the labours of those who labour on their behalf, and exert themselves to remove the burdens which oppress them, and make them (the farmers) acquainted with the points discussed for them by societies and individuals. They can do this by reading the accounts of meetings which are published in our newspapers every week, as well as the strong articles published in their columns week after week. Six Welsh newspapers were named by Horace, which the Welsh farmers would do themselves a service by reading. Remember, friends, that the day of your deliverance is not far off, but before that, perhaps some of you will be called upon to state your opinion on the position of things and the way in which you would like to see them settled, as was lately the case in connexion with the tithe inquiry. And such fools you would make of yourselves if you did not know the A B C of what you grumbled about. If you took "Horace's" advice and purchased one of the newspapers mentioned you would be enlightened on many subjects which are dark to you now.

"YSBRYD LLEWELYN."

The "Baner," November 2nd, 1887.

"Some of the Welsh landowners are about the best men who ever wore shoes. They are kind and affectionate, and have shown their sympathy with their poor tenants in a substantial way. But it is surprising how few of these there are. It is almost as difficult to get hold of a white rook in Wales, or a white elephant in Bengal, as it is to find a kind landlord. It is necessary for a man to walk scores of miles over hills and vales, through the wilderness and the forests, past many a village and hamlet, before he will see the cheerful face of one of these characters. A kind landlord! He is a lamb amongst wolves, a Liberal amongst Tories, a John Howard amongst slaveowners, a kind John amongst bums and scamps. A kind landlord! Let every child lisp his name, every maid sing his praises, every philanthropist declare his praise, and every bard make a crown of roses for him. The common idea of a landlord is a man who has the mouth of a hog, the teeth of a lion, the nails of a bear, the hoofs of an ass, the sting of a serpent, and the greed of the grave. The sailor knows well about the sharks of the sea, and the farmers know well the sharks of the land. The landowners of our country are, in general, cruel, unreasonable, unfeeling, and unpitying men. It does not matter to them who gets drowned so long as they are allowed to be in the lifeboat; it does not matter to them who suffer the mortal pangs of poverty and hunger, if they have plenty of luxuries. Many of them have been about the most presumptuous thieves that have ever breathed. When a man kills thousands of his fellow-men he is called a hero, and his praises are sung by the bells and trumpets of the kingdom, but when he kills one he has the privilege of shaking hands with the hangman and of feeling the rope rather tightly round his neck."

This appeal for subscriptions was made, as will be observed by the Commission, on December 21, 1887, and I have here a copy of the financial statement of the Land, Trade, and Labour League for 1887 and 1889, that is to say, 1889 as far down to the end of the month of June; and a perusal of this will show that the amount subscribed during that time, 1888 and 1889, amounted altogether to the total of £82 13*s.* 2*d.* If you examine the list further you will find that of this £82 13*s.* 2*d.*, £10 was promised by Mr. Gee, the editor of the "Baner," and £10 was promised by a Mr. G. W. Taylor, who was a gentleman from Australia, and was an intended candidate for one of the Liberal constituencies, so that that leaves altogether the sum of 62*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, contributed in all that time, to show the kind of interest that was taken in these writings of Mr. Gee. I put in the financial statement (handed in).

The "Baner," April 25th, 1888.

"How many landlords also are acting upon the same principle? The majority of them (i.e., landlords) live in England, and the poor Welsh through the sweat of their brows, are collecting every halfpenny in the neighbourhood, for them to have the pleasure of spending them in England or on the continent. Remember that the above are facts and not groundless dreams, our country is in a truly serious state, and we ought to acknowledge gratefully the services of the Liberal Press and the 'Baner' particularly for bringing our cause before the world.

Witness—continued.

The "Baner," September 26th, 1888.

"And we should also have a new land measure instead of the present disgraceful oppression that is like a plague consuming the strength of our country. And instead of our farmers being like slaves, being compelled to give more than all their earnings to their landowners, and those living on delicacies, fatness, and splendour, in baronial palaces, quite regardless of the sweat on the face of the sons of toil, and the hard corns that are on the mighty hands of the children of the soil.

* * * * *

The "Baner," September 26th, 1888.

"It is very little that I have read these last weeks on the Land League in the 'Baner.' Surely not too much can be written on the subject 'many a knock breaks the stone.' Quite true, but many a double knock is required to break the prejudice of the farmers and shopkeepers also about the League. They are as dull as moles. There are many of my brethren the farmers spending sixpence or ninepence for tobacco, but a penny or two for a newspaper they consider too much. Poor fellows! I know of some farmers they must have two, three, and four to buy the "Baner." They are capital smokers for all that, and all ending in smoke. But if a good newspaper was bought, such paper would bring some blessing with it both to them and their children. And we would have better hope for success to the League. The League is progressing in this neighbourhood, but not fast enough. Those who believe in it should induce others to join them. If what I have heard concerning some farmers is true, it is a great shame. Some run after a farm when the tenant has given notice in order to have a reduction. The Irish in their rags are better people than us, as true as bread is in a loaf. Shame to the grasshoppers, I say."

* * * * *

The "Baner," October 10th, 1888.

"Secondly, the agricultural class of all classes read least newspapers. Perhaps the hard times, scarcity of money, and want of time have a deal to do in this matter. Our farmers will not spend a penny a week for a newspaper as they consider that waste, and it is looked upon as a penny given away for nothing! When many a penny is spent by the tin-workers and colliers of Glamorgan, Monmouth, and Carmarthen, and the quarrymen of Carnarvonshire and Merionethshire, and by the artizans of all kinds. But the poor farmer: he does not feel that he can spare a penny a week! Very few in comparison are received of any newspapers in the rural districts, to what could be and ought to be received."

name of their able editor creates alarm through the foreign Church's camp and especially amongst its officers—the persons who get the fat of the tithe—getting hundreds and thousands annually for doing almost nothing. Thirdly, there is no class so unadventurous and cowardly as our farmers. They bear everything from the agents that on one else would do, so appropriare are those words of the prophet to the farmers of Wales, 'As sheep to the slaughter they were led, and as lambs in the presence of their shearers, dumb, so they open not their mouths.'"

"A great number of persons believed that the aristocracy was one of the essentials of life, and that if the aristocracy was lost, that peace also would be lost from the country, and life certainly become a failure. While people were consoling themselves with these reflections the sick was getting worse. At that time a letter would be occasionally sent from the office of Dr. Gee, Dr. E. Pan Jones, and Dr. M. D. Jones—three old experienced doctors who have spent years in the study of aristocracy. In those letters they called the attention of the people to the state of the aristocracy in Wales. It was little notice their letters received for years.

The "Baner," October 12th, 1889.

There is a terrible feeling in the neighbourhood of Prion about P——. This farm is to let, and a good and respectable man applied for it, with a reduction in the previous rent, but while negotiation was proceeding another well-known man came forward and offered four pounds more than the previous rent for it. This latter is a prominent man in the parish, but it is considered an extremely shameful act to raise rent against a neighbour. One farmer the other night, regretted that this person was not in Ireland, that the Irish are more plucky than the Welsh when such foul play takes place."—This effusion is signed by "Humphrey the Poacher."

The "Baner," October 30th, 1889.

* * * * *

"It is plain to every man who is possessed of any common sense, that if disestablishment and disendowment were obtained that it would lighten to some extent the demands that are upon the tenants. But many of the landowners must be too dull to see a thing so evident, and they are so foolish as to be led by their "tails" against their tenants—the men who are doing their best towards supporting them. The existence of an established church is at the root of all this. The established church is a greater curse in Wales than is known to anyone. Hence arises the coolness and disagreement between the landowners and the tenants these years. What is the reason but that, for widows and others in some counties getting notice to quit? And it is said that blacklegs from the neighbourhood have been so inhuman as to take their homes from above their heads. Many things of this kind are carried on these years. Boycotting from all directions is carried on, and not the farmers only are boycotted, but Nonconformists in general—tradesmen, artizans, and workmen of all kinds and degrees. There is nothing too low and inhuman for the Tories and parsons to do, in the way of boycotting the Dissenters and the Liberals. It appears that the landlords (English mostly) and the parsons have leagued together to stamp Dissent out of the country if they can. It may be supposed that the great sin of the Welsh, in the opinion of that class, is going to the chapels."

* * * * *

In the "Baner" of November 20th 1889, is an article headed "To arms! To arms!!"—

"To arms! To arms!! is the cry heard from afar, and if there be any foundation for what is published these days as to the conduct of landowners and clergymen in Wales, no doubt this cry will get louder and louder continually until it resounds through the Principality and every other place where Dissenters are located. If it be found that circumstances call for the national newspapers of Wales to join in the shout 'To arms!' we believe the nation will rise as one man in obedience to the call and that all will be ready for the battle.

* * * * *

And if the landowners and clergy are for boycotting care will be taken to pick up the glove at once, and fight the battle in earnest. There is mention made of behaving towards some as if towards leprosy; perhaps the Welsh can show the meaning of Mr. Gladstone's words when he refers to a people's right as to 'exclusive dealing'—to deal with whom they please."

I will now read another extract from a paper called "Y Celt," of February 27th, 1890: it is headed "The 'Baner' wavering.—Misleading with all breeze of learning." This article is written by Dr. E. Pan Jones, and is as follows:—

* * * * *

"Probably no such wavering has been witnessed during the centuries of Christendom as took place in the history of the 'Baner' during the last ten years, and still during these years of inconsistency and instability, Mr. Gee will have us believe that its education on all subjects is like that of an infallible oracle and everybody was expected to say 'Abreck' before it.

* * * * *

"Time, space, and words will not allow me to particularise on the wavering of the 'Baner' in its various connexions since the days of the American war, I shall merely confine myself to its wavering with its recent political leagues.

"1. Mr. Gee's League.—The first was the Denbighshire and Flintshire Farmers League, which was to bring the landlords into order, bring them to obey the law issued from Denbigh, and by fair promises he succeeded to enchant and entice many of the Vale of Clwyd farmers to the belief that he was somebody. That league was going to reduce rents, secure perpetual tenancy for farmers, and give them privileges compared with which the blessings of the Irish three F.'s were nothing better than childplay. These prospects were set forth in colours more brilliant than those of the rainbow. He describes those blessings as things, if not actually attained, were available at any time. The meetings of the league were held alternately at Denbigh, Rhyl, and Holywell, to which none were allowed admission, except simple and credulous farmers.

* * * * *

"2. Mr. Gee's League.—This was called Land League. It was admitted that the first had failed, and must be removed to make room for the second.

* * * * *

"3. Mr. Gee's League.—The Anti-tithe League. This league was not in the design at the beginning—this grew out of the failure of previous leagues, as D. Roberts says, and we would never have heard of this had the others succeeded.

* * * * *

"4. Mr. Gee's League.—Farmers, Tradesmen, and Workmen's League. They began to feel that it was impossible to proceed without the masses. It was asked at the meetings at Denbigh and at Rhyl, whether the workmen were to have fixity of tenure as well as the farmers, that his house and garden were so important to the labourer as the farm is to the farmer, that the farmers by employing machines, and by cultivating less of their lands, are able to do with less workmen than formerly, and in their greed for more land, that they often push the workmen away, demolish their dwellings in order to have gardens to their tenements. No, nothing of the kind. In view of these things, I desire simply to ask Mr. Gee, or Mr. D. Roberts, who bears Mr. Gee's shields, what part or portion is there for tradesmen and workmen in the one or the other of the Denbigh Leagues? They are welcome to shout hurrah, to give their vote when an election comes, to buy the 'Baner,' and subscribe towards the expenses, but is there any tendency in one of the Denbigh Leagues to afford a remedy to any beside the farmers?

Thus Mr. Gee has been throughout the years, hatching on leagues, baptising and burying them. It is a pity to see the people, many of them poor, kept in ceaseless agitation until after wearing out their strength pecuniarily and temporarily, and by then behold the league vanishing like smoke under our hands, a new league again commencing, that again vanishing, and so on until the people are like sheep without a shepherd. Here they are now after ten years of wild goose chase, without having as much as a sparrow of blessing gained. The pockets of the people have got considerably lighter, but the 'Baner' has sold well, and very likely has a quiet conscience."

"The ravens of Henry VIII. were not more wild for the land of the religious houses, than the farmers of North Wales are for every small farm they can snatch. Within less than a hundred miles of this place there are a number of landgrabbers who cannot be satisfied with land, and they do not half cultivate what they have got. Is there no way of boycotting these men?"

The "Genedl," September 29th, 1886.

The "Genedl," December 8th, 1886.

"A few days ago the 'United Ireland,' a newspaper on the Irish side, published 'a new 'scheme for compelling the reduction of rents' and already this scheme has been successful beyond all expectation. We do not think any better or more effectual scheme has been ever contrived.

* * * * *

"Having seen the success of this scheme in Ireland, we should not be surprised if it was adopted in Wales. In the present war against the tithe we should not wonder at all if the scheme came into general use. The only difficulty with regard to Wales is that the agricultural class have not been educated thoroughly enough in the affairs that combine with the profits, and it is with a good deal of difficulty that more than a very small number of farmers brave enough to plead for their rights, can be had. In a word, spiritless timid ones, ignorant, fearful—yes, and, worse than all, traitorous, are the very great number of them. If the farmers of Wales were more intelligent and more courageous, and above all, more like men and less like unconfiding pigmies, the question of the land and of the tithe in Wales would have been settled in a very short time."

* * * * *

The "Genedl," November 9th, 1887.

"Is Wales loyal? It is not! And how can it be? We know that we would be ready to go side by side with the Englishman, Irishman, and the Scotchman to defend the country from foreign invasion. But we would be guilty of misrepresenting the true feeling of Wales if we said that we would do so from love of the Sovereign. Wales is not loyal in the sense of loving the Sovereign. The Welshman loves his country, but he cannot love the powers which prevent him from getting his liberty. What wonder is it that our great assemblies hoot the National Anthem when some Englishman or some worshipper of the English tries to commence it in our meetings. What wonder is it that a meeting in Portdinorwic last week sang 'The old land of my Fathers' when a curate commenced to sing 'God save the Queen?'

Witness—continued.

What wonder is it that in Wales the 'March of the men of Harlech' is sung a thousand times, for every time the 'Rule, Britannia,' is sung. It is not wonderful at all. What is wonderful is that the country is at this time so quiet and undisturbed."

The "Genedl," December 28th, 1887.

* * * * *

"Suppose the farmers of every county formed associations in convenient places, similar to the club lately established in Bryngwran, Anglesey; that these associations elected a committee of experienced and able gentlemen of the highest character, like the committee recently appointed at Llangefni; and that this committee should value every farm, the rent of which is thought to be too high. After that, the tenant is to give up the holding, unless his landlord will let him have it, for what the committee consider to be its value. If any holding is given up on the advice of the committee, every farmer in the county should bind himself that he will not apply for it, and that he will consider any man who applies as an enemy. That is, that every farmer in the county should bind himself to 'boycott' anyone who applies for a holding, which has been given up, because its rent was too high, according to the honest opinion of a committee composed of the most acceptable gentlemen in the country. Do you not think, Mr. Editor, that if they did this their sorrow would be turned to joy, and that servile followers would become honest men? That they would adopt this or some similar method soon is the wish of Bryngwron.'"

The "Genedl," May 2nd, 1888.

"The two deadly curses of Wales at this time are landowners and titheowners.

* * * * *

"The landowners, I set down as the curse of our country, are those who measure their acres by the thousand, weigh their gold by the ton, and carry away the resources of Wales to spend them in foreign countries."

* * * * *

I will now read an article from "Y Celt," 27th February 1885. I must explain this to the Commission, that this article was written in consequence of two men in the late Lord Penrhyn's employment, quarry men, having been convicted of an assault upon an old policeman and an old river-watcher. The assault was of such a nature that it was described by Mr. Louis, their solicitor at the trial as a "most dastardly offence." The report of the trial will be found in the "North Wales Chronicle," of December 27, 1884. Mr. Louis appeared on behalf of the prisoners. They were discharged from their employment, and the late Lord Penrhyn gave them notice to quit cottages in which they had hitherto resided; upon which the article which I am about to read appeared in "Y Celt," of 27th February 1885:—

Witness—continued.

"Here is landlordism with a vengeance. Libel action brought against Dr. Pan Jones, who had to pay, but absconded to America before trial came on.

"I would scarcely have supposed that the Bethesda quarrymen were sufficient cowards to let the landlord from Penrhyn play his barbarous tricks with two of his tenants. We shall expect them on all accounts to call public attention to such oppression and extremely despotic boycottism. Here is landlordism with a vengeance. Here it is at all times in principle, but in this circumstance it appears in its colour. My lord should thank that he does not live in Ireland. The Irish, fairplay to them, are able to settle such points as these with much facility, and there is but little doubt in my mind, but that they will before long succeed in teaching the Welsh the same lessons. And with reference to the two houses from which the two transgressors were turned, we could easily look at them being beaten into ashes, and remaining with no one even to repair them, and I trust that every Welshman will look upon them in future, until the dawning of the resurrection, as void places under the curse of God. And if there be any Welshman whose humanity is so degraded as to take one of the two houses to live in, let the inhabitants of Bethesda be manly enough to take away from such, that they receive him not into their houses, neither bid him God-speed. Before the workmen can fight effectually with the lords, they must be faithful to each other.

"Let the case be laid before one of the Members of Parliament, Mr. Rathbone, and let him call the attention of the Senate to the occurrence, so that it may bring shame to the lord's face. If Mr. Rathbone will not do that, remember, there are those who will do so, and that without any demur."

That is signed "E. Pan Jones."

22,794. Was that the gentleman's real name?—"E. Pan Jones," I must explain, is the Reverend Dr. Pan Jones.

22,795. He signed this article?—He signed this article. Before writing this article a prosecution for libel was instituted against him, and the trial came on at Chester. Dr. Pan Jones, as was explained by his counsel, had found it convenient to be in America; he had gone to America, and was not to be seen till after the trial. He was found guilty of having published a libel, and, although the damages which were given were small, because the jury were of opinion that no material damage had been done by this libel to Lord Penrhyn, the costs, I believe, were considerable, and the result of that action, I think you will see perhaps explained in one of the articles which I am going to quote by-and-bye.

Mr. Grove.

22,796. Lord Penrhyn being the prosecutor?—The late Lord Penrhyn who was libelled. In the "Baner" of the 30th November 1887, appears an article headed "To the landowners of Wales," which is as follows:—

"Gentlemen,—It is known that some of you are excellent people, possessing sense, feeling, and principle. You sympathise with your oppressed tenants in their trouble, and behave towards them as masters ought. Your names will be respected for generations, and your kindness will be remembered when your tabernacles of earth will have mixed with the soil of the valley. You are an honour to Wales, and philanthropists of the right sort. May the sun of Providence smile on your steps, and may the birds warble over your graves. But remember this, that the best of you is only what he ought to be.

"But the greater part of you do not possess either sense, sympathy, or conscience. As a rule, the landowners of our country are the most unreasonable and cruel men that ever wore hats. Compared to some of you, the old slave masters of the Southern States of America would be gentlemen of first class. But there—they and their whips have gone to perdition, and if many of you had gone after them, not even so much as a sparrow would utter a groan."

* * * * *

From "Y Celt," which was Dr. Pan Jones's paper, on June 13th, 1891, I take this extract which appears in the Notices to Correspondents: "Gwyddno:—If we publish your letter we will place you and ourselves in the dangers of libel law. The Tories in these districts have men appointed to look over the Welsh newspapers in search of a chance to bring them before court a of law. This is one of the weapons they use in these days to prevent freedom of opinion. The ballot has taken the thread off the screwing, the threatening, the boycotting, and now the refusal of a farm, a house, or place to all who are not Churchmen and Tories is their plan."

It will be noticed by the Commission that, with the exception of the quotation from "Y Celt" of June 13th, 1891, which I have read, I have so far only dealt with extracts of not later date than 1888, but I could give proofs that the agitation versus landlords in Wales has of late years been conducted on much the same lines as in its earlier stages, but with, if anything, greater virulence and disregard of facts. I must now explain that in January 1892 a company was formed under the title of the "Welsh National Press Company," which assumed control over three long-established journals in Wales, namely, "Y Werin," "Y Genedl Gymreig," and the "North Wales Observer and Express." The articles of association were signed by Thomas E. Ellis, M.P. for Merionethshire, Samuel T. Evans, M.P. for Mid Glamorgan, Alfred Thomas, M.P. for East Glamorgan, William Abraham, M.P. for Rhondda Division, D. Lloyd George, M.P. for Carnarvon Boroughs, David Randell, M.P. for Gower, and Evan Rowland Jones (editor of the "Shipping World" and candidate for Carmarthen Boroughs). I may add that Mr. Stuart Rendell, M.P., is a shareholder in this Company.

Chairman.

22,797. What is the date of this?—The date of the Articles of Association being signed, I take from this paper here, which is "The North Wales "Observer and Express," of Friday, May 19th, 1892, and has a leading article headed "The New Company," giving the names I have just quoted as having signed the Articles of Association. That the tone of the above-mentioned papers has not improved since the formation of the new company, and since the senators, whom I have just named, took special interest in that particular portion of the Welsh press, might easily be proved by a very few extracts, but of the scurrilous personalities which, for the purpose of creating ill-feeling against landlords, have been made use of in these journals since they became the property of the new company, I will say no more at present than that if I were to read the report of some of them to the Commission I feel sure that they would be pronounced to be as discreditable to journalism as they are false in their statements; and it is by means of misrepresentations of that description that the agitators have succeeded in raising the cry of "A Welsh Land Question." I will conclude with one more quotation taken from one of the papers, the property of this new company.

22,798. You have now got to 1893?—I am taking one of the very last issues of this paper to show, as I say, that the objects of the people who are pulling the strings of this agitation is not to ameliorate the condition of the farmer, so much as it is to bring about a revolution; at all events it will be a matter for consideration whether it amounts to a revolution in matters affecting the land and in matters affecting the well-being of the nation generally, I think I may say. I will now read a quotation from the "Observer and Express," of September 29th 1893.

"It is all very well talking about compensation for improvements, fixity of tenure, land courts, and so on, I say nothing against these things. At the same time, so long as there is private property in land, so long will there be tyranny and oppression. The evils of landlordism cannot be done away with, except by abolishing landlordism itself. To prevent a landlord from tyrannising is a task beyond the will of legislators, so I say if you want to make your farmers truly and really independent, you must nationalise the land."

With regard to the quotation from "The Herald" of June 5th, 1888, I did not think it worth while troubling the Commission with it, and I may remark that the only point of it really was, that it was dated one year after the book that was written by "Adfyfyr." "Adfyfyr" wrote a book reflecting upon the conduct of landlords in Wales, and that was written one year, as you will see from the printed matter before the Commission, prior to his asking for information on the subjects about which he had written the year before. In conclusion, I wish to protest most emphatically before this Commission against the insult which was offered to the memory of my father by Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., for Merioneth, at the sitting at Bala on October 6th, when he said that "The "action of the late Lord Penrhyn" (with regard to certain enclosures) "could only be described as infamous"; and I venture to submit to the Commission that when the true facts of the case concerning these enclosures are made known, it will be found that the late Lord Penrhyn had no more to do with the sending of police into the locality of the enclosures, than any other magistrate had, as the order for police protection was not made by the Lord Lieutenant or any other single individual, but by the magistrates for Carnarvonshire collectively assembled at Quarter Sessions, and I feel assured that it will be the opinion of all right-minded persons that the attack of Mr. Ellis on one who devoted himself to doing good to the people of Wales, was unwarrantable and ill-judged. The assertion made by Mr. Ellis (in reply to Sir John Llewelyn) that "many of the Acts of "Parliament" (relating to enclosures) "were "smuggled through both Houses of Parliament "without the knowledge of the district," and that therefore by implication this particular Act might have been so smuggled through, is disposed of, so far as this case is concerned, by the heads of a memorandum in the handwriting of the late Lord Penrhyn, which I will now read. This is a memorandum which I found in his handwriting:—"The Annual Act of 1850 "recites that the Provisional Order for the "enclosure of Caerhun and Llanbedr y Cenin "was made in February 8, 1849, and it enacts "that the enclosure shall be proceeded with. "The final award of the Commissioners under "the 8 and 9 Victoria, chapter 118, was not "made until 1858, when, under that Act, it "became binding as law. So that those parties "who objected had from the year 1849 to "the year 1858, in which to urge their objec-"tions or claims." As to other facts connected with this matter, Mr. Beaver Roberts, who was concerned with the business of the enclosure awards, and who is also a magistrate for Carnarvonshire, will give the necessary rebutting evidence to the statements of Mr. T. E. Ellis.

See 16,915–7, 17,083–9, 23,015.

Chairman.

22,799. That is as regards the enclosure of commons?—That is as regards the enclosure which was spoken of by Mr. T. E. Ellis in his speech in the House of Common, and a reference to which was made at Bala the other day in his evidence, and repeated by him there. I think there was some reference to it in the House of Commons. He stated that my father had used his power as chairman of Quarter Sessions, and I believe Mr. Ellis has receded from that position, and he speaks of having used his powers as Lord Lieutenant.

22,800. We are very much obliged to you, my Lord, and we express our thanks to you for giving such full evidence about your own properties. I think I have only one or two questions to ask you, Lord Penrhyn, upon this statement. The association came into existence in 1886?—The first meeting, I believe, was actually held in December 1886.

22,801. You are not at liberty to give us the names of the Committee, nor a list of the members?—I do not know whether it is necessary to hand in the full list of the members or subscribers to the association. I should hardly like to do so without asking their permission.

22,802. Would there be any objection to that?—I do not know whether there would.

22,803. May I ask why there should be any objection?—I myself should have no objection to my name being known, and I know a great many would not. I do not know that any of them would have any objection, but at the same time I do not like to hand in their names without having consulted them.

22,804. Might I ask, if you will be good enough to ask the members of your association to give us their names—whether they have any objection to publishing a list of the members of the association?—I have no objection to doing that.

22,805. The association, on the 27th April 1892, considered that the time had arrived for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the relations between landlords and tenants?—Yes.

22,806. Then was a petition sent up to the Government of the day, asking for the appointment of such a Royal Commission?—There was a request, I do not know whether it was in the form of a petition or not. I do not recollect any petition being sent up.

22,807. But a request was made?—A request was made to the Government of the day, and the reply of the Government of the day to that request was, that they did not think that there was sufficient reason for granting such a commission.

22,808. The resolution which was passed, which you have been good enough to read to us, said this Royal Commission was necessary "in con-"sequence of grave charges brought forward in "Parliament and in the Press against land-"lords"?—Yes.

22,809. Was there any other reason, in the opinion of the association, why a Royal Commission might be necessary?—The object of having a commission appointed was to have the case of the landlords laid thoroughly before the public, and to be able to refute the stories that have been told about them for so many years; we wanted to have the truth told.

22,810. That was not the real reason why they considered a Royal Commission to be necessary, they thought there might be other reasons as well?—I do not know that there were other reasons for asking for a commission; the main object of asking for a commission was that the landlords might have an opportunity of showing, that they were not what they have been painted.

Chairman—continued.

22,811. Were you, as chairman of the association at that time, perfectly satisfied with the state of the law with regard to compensation to be given to the tenants, in the case of their having to leave their farms, or in the event of estates being sold?—There was nothing whatever to call for any separate legislation for Wales, in what had come under my notice. There may be instances of hardship; there may be bad landlords in Wales, of course, as there are in England and elsewhere, and their tenants may suffer. But that was no reason, to my mind, why there should be any separate Act of legislation for Wales in the matter of land.

22,812. That I quite understand—in your own personal capacity?—I think, I may say, that that was the opinion of the members of the association.

22,813. May I take it from you, speaking for association, that the association did not consider that there was any necessity for any change in the law with regard to compensation for tenants, on the occasion of their having to leave their farms, or in the event of farms being sold by public auction?—Certainly that there was no occasion for any legal interference in the matter of compensation; if there was any necessity for compensation, it might be a matter for adjustment between landlord and tenant.

22,814. That it was simply a matter of adjustment between landlord and tenant?—Simply a matter of adjustment between landlord and tenant.

22,815. And they were satisfied with the present condition of things?—We were satisfied that there was nothing calling for special legislation.

Lord Kenyon.

22,816. I take it you consider, having regard to your knowledge of landlords, that they, as a rule in Wales, deal fairly and liberally with the tenants?—The majority of landlords in Wales — certainly in North Wales, as far as my inquiry is concerned—are kind to their tenants.

22,817. Would you say that some alteration, some improvement, in the Agricultural Holdings Act might be a good thing, as affecting the case of a bad landlord—admitted that there may be a bad landlord?—It would help me very much if the particular points to which you refer, could be indicated where improvement could be made. If any improvement could be made in the Agricultural Holdings Act for the benefit of the tenants, I should be very happy so long as it was equitable to support any such improvement.

22,818. What I had in my mind was what Lord Carrington said just now with regard to compensation to tenants on sales and on quitting holdings. We have heard of cases during our sittings certainly suggesting hardship in the case of sale or in the case of quitting a holding; and I was going to ask you whether you thought some amendment of the Act in that respect might be beneficial?—Any amendment that was consistent with justice to the landlord, as I said before, would certainly be supported by myself, and I have no doubt by every member of the association.

22,819. I see here that "it was agreed that "landlords should meet their tenants fairly and "liberally in the existing depression of busi- "ness"?—That is so.

22,820. And you think they can do that without being forced to do so by law?—That is my opinion.

22,821. What do you think would be the effect of there being what is commonly called a Land Court and rents being fixed?—Well, I think that in many cases the tenant would feel that he was not on the same footing as before with his landlord, which as far as my own property is concerned I should be very sorry to see disturbed. I think he would feel that a power had come between the landlord and himself, and of course if the Land Court fixed his rent he could not expect to have any abatements made in time of distress. There would be a legal rent fixed, and he could not look to the Land Court for the same sort of treatment, which he would expect and probably meet with at the hands of his landlord. Therefore, I think it would create an ill-feeling to some extent between landlord and tenant.

22,822. You think it would lead to a more hard-and-fast line being drawn?—I should be afraid of it.

22,823. Might I ask if the Landlords Property Defence Association represents the majority of acreage in North Wales?—If I might be allowed, I would refer that question to Mr. Owen.

Mr. Geo. H. Owen.

I should think it did.

Lord Kenyon.

You could not answer it off-hand.

Mr. Geo. H. Owen.

I have not calculated it in any way, but I should think it did.

Witness.

If that point is one of importance I think I shall be able to ascertain the exact acreage, which is represented by the Property Defence Association. That can be supplied to the Commission.

Lord Kenyon.

22,824. I think it is of importance because your evidence to-day shows what the intentions of the Landlord's Property Defence Association are with regard to their tenants?—Yes.

22,825. And I should like to know whether that represents the majority of the landowners in the principality?—The statistics on that point shall be supplied to the Commission.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,826. Are you prepared to say that no cases of hardship, by tenants not receiving adequate compensation for their improvements, have arisen?—I am not prepared to say anything of the sort, because the evidence before the Commission may prove something to the contrary. That I cannot say. I do not know in my own locality of any cases of hardship.

22,827. You consider, then, that in every case the tenants have really had compensation for all improvements that they have made?—I consider that a tenant should be compensated for all his improvements.

22,828. But you do not deny that there are many cases in the neighbourhood, where they have not had that compensation?—To my knowledge, I cannot say what cases there are where tenants have failed to receive compensation.

22,829. We have had many cases before us, where they have received no compensation, and other cases, in which they have received very inadequate compensation, though they have made permanent improvements?—Well, I hold that a tenant should receive compensation for his improvements.

22,830. As that is the case, how can you remedy that state of things without legislation?—It is possible, as was suggested by Lord Kenyon, that there might be some amendment of the Agricultural Holdings Act, which would bring about that result in a manner which would be fair to both parties.

22,831. There are cases of that kind. I know on large estates we have not much to complain of, but in many cases we have found that there is hardship?—I am glad to hear that expression, that in the large estates you have nothing much to complain of, because the large estate owners have been principally attacked by those who have been working this agitation.

Mr. Griffiths.

Quite so; we only want to get at the truth.

Mr. Grove.

22,832. Lord Kenyon has asked you as to acreage; I should like to ask you as to the number of landowners in the counties covered by your association. Is it possible for us to get at that at all?—Yes, that can be supplied; I think it can be supplied separately. The number of landowners, and the acreage which they represent, should be given certainly.

22,833. And then, how many landowners are there in your association?—In my association—the North Wales Property Defence Association—that is the only association.

22,834. Yes, how many landowners are there in that?—I cannot speak off-hand.

22,835. I am asking two questions. I want to know the number of landowners in the counties covered by your association on the one hand; then I want to know how many landowners there are in your association?—Well, those particulars could be got, I should think; I do not myself know, I cannot say. I could supply the number of the landowners in the association, but I do not see how I am to give them separately.

Mr. Grove—continued.

22,836. You can give us the approximate number possibly. We have had an analysis of the landowners in this county presented to us by Mr. Prichard, and he divided the landlords into two classes—Class A and Class B. He told us that there were about 15 in Class A in this county, and about 300 of Class B. Therefore, when you give us your evidence, is it not possible that a great many grievances may exist amongst the Class B landlords, that you would not be in any way acquainted with?—I think that with the opportunities of the Press those grievances would have been made known by the farmers. I do not believe in the grievances having been so very great as they now make out, because I think that they would have written to the papers; they would have found some means of making them known. Wales is a land where the people are particularly addicted to sending anonymous letters, and I think some information on the subject would have come to light, if the grievances had been as oppressive as they are made out to be. I do not deny that there may be grievances and hardships felt by some tenants.

22,837. Then, when you speak of your willingness to grant compensation for improvements, we may take it, I suppose, that all the members of your association are of the same mind?—I should say certainly that it would be their view.

22,838. With reference to your answer to Mr. Griffiths about a Land Court, would it not be quite possible for the landlord and tenant to always confer together, and try to make an arrangement, before they went to the Land Court as a Court of Appeal?—I think if the landlord and tenant were to meet and confer together, there would be no necessity for going to the Land Court.

22,839. Would not that do away partly with the objection to the Land Court?—You mean, if they met before.

22,840. Yes?—I think they could settle the matter amicably without any necessity for the law being enforced by the Land Court.

22,841. Yes, but if they could not succeed in doing that, what would you propose then?—I should like to see in that event some such improvement introduced into the Agricultural Holdings Act as would meet the difficulty, and avoid the necessity of having a Land Court set up.

22,842. I should like to ask one question about the circular handed in at Dolgelly. You state that it has not been issued in any way by your association?—No.

22,843. Is it not possible that some members of the association, or some of the committee when you were absent, might have approved of a circular of that kind?—The impression it has made upon me is, that it is a treacherous thing and that it is intended to prejudice the Welsh landowners and so on. I think myself it is a treacherous circular.

Mr. Grove—continued.

22,844. And that the Conservative Register that is mentioned there is not existing at all?—I know nothing of it; I never heard of it. I believe the whole thing to be an attempt to represent the association in an unfavourable light, by some enemy.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,845. I should like to call your attention to that last extract from the "Observer," I think it was in 1893. From the language of that, I should gather it was not a leading article?—It is not a leading article, but it occupies a very leading place in the paper, and it was written by a regular contributor to the paper.

22,846. Did he give his own name?—He writes under an anonymous signature, but he is a well-known man whose name could be forthcoming; he is a regular contributor, as I said, of the paper, apparently.

22,847. I see another extract here from the "Baner" in 1887 where a man gives the nom de plume of Horace?—Yes.

22,848. That is not from a leading article?—I do not know whether it is from a leading article or not, I cannot say. I have not read the "Baner" of that particular date, and I cannot say whether that was a leading article or not. I should think it was a letter addressed to the paper; but the paper at all events, is responsible for the letter which appeared in it.

22,849. That letter apparently is anonymous?—It was an anonymous letter, undoubtedly, but the paper is responsible for the letter which appeared in its columns.

22,850. That I can quite believe, but still you would make some distinction between anonymous correspondence and the leading articles in a paper?—I hold the editor of the paper responsible for what appears in its columns.

22,851. I have no doubt he is legally so, but still, we practically make a distinction between what is in a leading article and what there may be in anonymous correspondence?—That may be, but still there is the legal fact that the editor is responsible.

22,852. I think the distinction is one that is usually drawn, and what I wanted to arrive at was, what proportion of these extracts would be from anonymous correspondence and what would be leading articles or from leading articles?—I cannot say at this moment what proportion are written under anonymous signatures.

22,853. There is one extract, for instance, from the "Genedl" of September 29, 1886, and it runs thus:—"What can be done to arouse the heedlessness of our nation?" That is so short and so general that it may mean anything?—The article, I think, refers to the land question, and says, "What can be done to arouse" the people? The people were apparently not at all distressed by the land question.

22,854. But you see that that extract without some explanation, might mean anything. It is too short to explain itself?—I think if the article is read, it will be seen what it means.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

Perhaps I had better, if I am allowed, read the whole of the article, and then it will be seen what is referred to. I only took the first line of it. That particular article is as follows:—"What can be done to arouse the heedlessness "of our nation? We ought to be very clear on "this point, because there are two courses that "can be taken, and the whole depends upon which "of the two is chosen One of the chief effects "of the subjection of our nation is the decay of "the national spirit, and of the nourishing of sel-"fishness in classes as well as in individuals, so "that by this time the majority do not think "about anything but their temporal and per-"sonal prosperity. The farmer, the tradesmen, "and the artizan rest contented, quiet, and "fearless if their own livelihood is safe; they "rest entirely without thought of the benefit "of the nation; they do not possess an 'ideal' "outside their narrow circle of self, nor are "they able to give any attention to national "aims, and consequently our nation is destitute "of that spirit and fervour which carries people "beyond selfishness, and causes every single "person to bend his own self will to the benefit "of the multitude. The consequence of the "destitution of this spirit is the seeking of "improvements in order to benefit classes, sel-"fishness which comes uppermost rather than "patriotism in all our agitations, which are "neither 'for evil nor for good.'" So that it admits or rather complains that the farmer, the tradesmen, and the artizan "rest contented and "quiet and fearless if their own livelihood is safe."

22,855. That was in 1886?—That is September 29, 1886.

22,856. Do you recollect in what years the tithe agitation was at its height in North Wales?—That was prior to the land agitation.

22,857. There were several riots in different parts of North Wales, and soldiers were brought down, who, I think, assisted in collecting the tithes. That would be about how long ago?—I am advised, that the dates lay between 1887 and 1890 when those riots occurred.

22,858. Your extracts, I notice, more than half of them belong to the years 1886 and 1887?—Yes.

22,859. But there would be a great deal of agitation and bad feeling on account of the tithes in those years?—No doubt there was a bad feeling on account of the tithes. The anti-tithe feeling was strong in many parts of Wales I know, and I have no doubt there was bad feeling on that account; but those people who were conducting the anti-tithe movement, as is proved by those extracts which I have read, thought it better to enlarge their anti-tithe league which they had found, and to take in the land question as well.

22,860. Is that league, do you think, in existence now?—I am not aware.

22,861. But would you not think that the tithe difficulty and the irritation on both sides would account to some extent for the acerbity of some of these extracts that you have read to us? I notice that more than half of all the extracts we have had belonged to 1886 and 1887?—I have only troubled the Commission with extracts which refer distinctly to the land and the landlords. Whether the ill-feeling—or strong feeling I will say, rather—which was aroused on the subject of the tithe would justify the very un-Christian-like expressions which are used towards landlords, I leave the Commission to decide.

22,862. I did not venture any opinion on that, but do you not think it would to some extent account for the bitterness of some of the public expressions?—I cannot at all account for the private views of the editors of these newspapers; I cannot say.

22,863. Even then, in 1887, with all this deep feeling, they make some exceptions. For instance, in this addressed "To the landowners of Wales," in the "Baner" of the 30th November 1887, the writer says, "It is known that some "of you are excellent people, possessing sense, "feeling, and principle. You sympathise with "your oppressed tenants in their trouble, and "behave towards them as masters ought?"—That is only intended to bring out the following paragraph in stronger relief.

22,864. You admit that there might be some landlords who do not act up to the standard of the best landlords—the landlords in what has been called Class A.?—Landlords in Wales, I take it upon the whole, are much like landlords in England and elsewhere.

22,865. I am not prepared with English instances, but I see that there are certain charges made against landlords in England; I notice it, in reading accounts in the public press of what is doing in the presence of another Royal Commission?—My contention is that the landlords in Wales, are not such as to call for any special act of legislation for Wales, to interfere between them and their tenants.

22,866. But I think you have just admitted that something wants to be done. You are not satisfied with the Agricultural Holdings Act for example?—If the Agricultural Holdings Act requires amending, it would apply with equal benefit to England as well as to Wales.

22,867. That is your view of that statute?—That is.

Sir John Llewelyn.

22,868. Are you able to form any opinion as to whether the larger or the smaller landlords let their land at most reasonable rents?—I cannot help seeing that the evidence goes to the effect that the larger properties have charged lower rents.

22,869. If the rents were fixed by some outside authority, would that tell most against the smaller landlords, then?—The smaller landlords, I should say, would not suffer so much in that point, because if now they charge higher rents than the larger landlords, the larger landlords probably would find that their rents were raised.

22,870. And what is your opinion as to the effect of such a change upon the outlay made on buildings; would that be as freely made as it is now?—I do not think so.

22,871. You think it would not be so?—I think not.

22,872. Have you any experience of the working of the Act in Ireland?—No.

22,873. Speaking of land nationalisation, do you consider that the State is capable of making a good landlord?—I do not see why the State should be any better landlord than any other landlord.

22,874. Do you remember a speech of Mr. Gladstone's upon that point?—On the subject of the nationalisation of the land?

22,875. Yes?—No, I do not.

22,876. If I remember rightly, he said that, in his opinion, the State was not capable of making a good landlord?—I should think it would be dangerous to centralise to that extent. There are evils arising from centralisation on every side, and the centralisation of everything in the matter of land, making the State the universal landlord, would, I think, be extremely dangerous.

22,877. I believe the experience of other countries is that the State is parting with the land to private individuals; do you know that?—I do not know.

22,878. In America and Australia, and so on?—I do not know.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,879. When did this land agitation commence in Wales?—The land agitation in Wales has taken really a strongly developed form since the date of all those articles to which I referred.

22,880. 1886 or 1887?—1886 I think was about the time.

22,881. I suppose you admit the period from 1870 up to about 1881 or 1882, was a fairly prosperous period?—I do not know that I can fix the date, but about that time there was a period of prosperity. We never heard, at all events, of there being any great want of prosperity.

22,882. Since that time it has been a period, more or less, of distress generally?—Well, the distress in my part of Wales was not felt till the prices of stock came down very low. Really about two years ago was when the pinch was felt.

22,883. Did you make any abatements about 1883 or 1884?—That was before I came into possession of my property. I would rather refer that to Col. Sackville West.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Perhaps Col. Sackville West can tell us.

Col. Sackville West.

It is given in my evidence.

Witness.

Do you mean on my property or generally?

Mr. Richard Jones.

On your property. Can Col. Sackville West tell us, without referring to his evidence?

Col. Sackville West.

It was in 1886 that the first reduction was made—the first abatement.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,884. Then, Lord Penrhyn, that was coincident with the starting of the land agitation?—Possibly.

22,885. Then does it not strike you that the circumstances of the farmers, had something to do with the starting of the land agitation?—Well, the farmers themselves did not take any leading part in the agitation.

22,886. Are you in a position to speak on that question with authority?—I am only speaking on the authority of these papers I have quoted. They themselves complain that the farmers do not take any part in it.

22,887. I have not seen those extracts?—If you read the evidence I have given, it goes very strongly to the point. The papers complain of the want of support of the farmers in these matters, and complain that they will not even spend a penny to buy one of their papers to enlighten them on these matters. One of them says "such fools you would make of yourselves "if you did not know the A.B.C. of what you "grumbled about." You will find all that set out in the extracts I have given, from the papers, which were edited by people, who were taking a leading part in the agitation.

22,888. But if there was not some foundation for the complaints, I do not think that writings of that kind would go down, would they?—To tell you the truth, I think that abuse of landlords has been found to be rather paying. It amuses people, and I think it is paying. That is really why a great many of these papers are written—with the object of bringing money into the pockets of the newspaper proprietors. Abuse of landlords is very popular.

22,889. That is only a matter of opinion on your part?—Yes; I can only give my opinion.

22,890. I think Colonel Sackville West told us the other day that you have made a reduction of 25 per cent., that is so, is it not?—Yes, I have lately. Circumstances have seemed to me to require it.

22,891. We have had evidence submitted to us, to the effect that in some cases there were no abatements, and that abatements are not even made at the present time. Do you not think there is some foundation for complaints in cases of that kind where old rents are exacted in such depressed times?—I think those tenants who have not received abatements have a very good reason for complaining, unless their rents were so low as to put them on a footing with the others who received abatements. There may be difference of circumstances.

22,892. There may be proper complaints in cases of that kind?—I think, if a man saw his neighbour receiving an abatement, and he himself, whose rent was upon the same scale, did not receive an abatement, he would have a very reasonable ground for grumbling.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

22,893. Mr. Pritchard classified the landlords of Anglesey into Class A and Class B the other day, and he told us that there were from 200 to 300 in Class B, those who exacted much higher rents than those in Class A. So we may take it from that, that a great many of the tenant farmers in Anglesey have very good grounds for complaint?—If those facts have been proved, undoubtedly there must be, from what you tell me, some farmers in Wales who have not been treated as liberally as others.

22,894. Is there any incitement to outrages in any of the extracts which you have cited?—I think the one of Dr. Pan Jones decidedly points to outrage. I think these words an incitement to outrage:—"My Lord should thank that he "does not live in Ireland. The Irish, fairplay "to them, are able to settle such points as these "with much facility, and there is but little "doubt in my mind but that they will before "long succeed in teaching the Welsh the same "lessons. And with reference to the two "houses from which the two transgressors were "turned, we could easily look at them being "beaten into ashes, and remaining with no one "even to repair them, and I trust that every "Welshman will look upon them in future, "until the dawning of the resurrection, as void "places under the curse of God." I think that such a passage as that distinctly suggest outrage. There are other extracts I have read which point to boycotting, and that is contrary to law.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,895. There was a conviction in that case?—There was a conviction.

22,896. It was for assault, was it not?—No. The two men about whom this article was written were convicted of an assault, and they were punished by the local magistrates, whereupon this paper took up their cause, and wrote an article which resulted in the editor of the "Celt" himself, being brought up for libel.

22,897. This had nothing then directly to do with the question of the land?—He had nothing to do with the matter beyond writing. He took up the cause of this man in an article which he called "landlordism with a vengeance," and that resulted in his being found guilty of libelling the late Lord Penrhyn.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,898. What amount of influence has Dr. Pan Jones in Wales?—That I am not prepared to say. He has, I believe, a very large chapel at Bethesda, near Bangor, and he is the leader certainly of, I suppose, one section of political nonconformity.

22,899. Is it the case that he has a chapel at Bethesda?—He has a chapel at Bethesda, near Bangor. I beg pardon; I was misinformed about that, or rather I should say it is a misunderstanding. I am rather deaf, and I misunderstood what was told me. I beg to withdraw that, it is a misstatement.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,900. You probably mean Mostyn?—It may be Mostyn. I have been altogether under a false impression on that point. I admit that mistake. I misheard something that was said to me upon the subject.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,901. You have not told us yet. I am waiting for an answer to my question? What amount of influence has Dr. Pan Jones in Wales?—He has the influence which his newspaper, the "Celt" brings him. He was employed by the Land Nationalization Society, whatever that is, to go about lecturing in Wales, with a van.

22,902. With what measure of success?—The result of that I cannot say, but he misrepresented the landlords to the utmost of his ability; that is all I do know about it.

22,903. Possibly so, but we should like to know what kind of meetings he had, whether they were successful or not, whether he succeeded in making many converts?—That I cannot say.

Lord Kenyon.

22,904. With regard to what Mr. Richard Jones said about the landlords in Class A. and Class B., I may as well point out that Mr. Prichard in his evidence said that Class A. owned three-quarters of the land, and Class B. one-quarter; so that I presume the majority of the landlords of Anglesey would be fair landlords, and the majority of the acreage of Anglesey would be dealt fairly with?—I was not here and I do not know. I suppose the Class A. represents the best landlords.

22,905. In his evidence Mr. Prichard said Class A. represented the Tories and the Churchmen, and Class B. the Nonconformists?—I did not know what the A. and B. referred to. I thought A. referred to the best landlords possibly.

22,906. I understand he was a Nonconformist himself; whether he is now, or whether he is a Liberal or not, I do not know. I suppose you would contend, that the farmers might be supposed to know more about their own affairs than these newspapers, which they refused to take in?—Well, I should be very sorry to employ a farmer who did not.

22,907. I mean with regard to this agitation?—The agitators, as a rule, have nothing whatever to do with farming.

22,908. Mr. Jones thought that possibly there was some ground of complaint because it appeared in the newspapers. I take it, you consider that the farmers understood more about their own affairs than a paper, which they would not even pay a penny for?—There is nothing in any of the articles I have quoted which goes to show that it was a bonâ fide complaint of a farmer.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

22,909. Are you acquainted with the name of Michael Davitt?—I have heard the name of Michael Davitt, an Irishman, and a member of Parliament—or he was a member of Parliament.

22,910. He is a land reformer?—He has got very advanced views on many subjects, and I daresay land is included in them.

22,911. Do you know that he paid a visit to Wales in 1886?—I do not know that he did, but I heard that he did.

22,912. You do not know what was the measure of his success as an agitator in Wales?—I should think it was possible that he did not get on very well, because his not being acquainted with the language would militate very much against his chance of success in agitation.

Chairman.

22,913. I have several questions handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Is it not the fact that the "'Baner' is edited and owned by a Minister of "the Gospel"?—To the best of my belief, from what I have been told, the editor and owner of the "Baner" is the Rev. Thomas Gee, who is the chairman of the County Council of Denbighshire.

22,914. "Do you think the creation of a Land "Court would tend to diminish, if not destroy, "the personal interest of the landlord in his "property and in his tenantry"?—I think I have already answered that question.

22,915. Then I have several questions from Mr. Lloyd George which the Commissioners have read, and which they would ask you to be good enough to answer: "Are you aware of the dis-"tress prevalent amongst the farmers, and "whether it has existed for the last three "years"?—I am aware that there has been a pinch felt by the farmers; I do not know whether for three years, but during the last two years, at all events, there has been a pinch felt, and I have shown my sense of that knowledge by my abatements.

22,916. "Do you consider that landlords have "fairly participated in that distress with their "tenants"?—To the best of my belief the majority of them have.

22,917. "Speaking generally, have not prices "of all agricultural produce for the last three "years gone down over 30 per cent."?—I cannot say what the exact per-centage of diminution is.

22,918. "Have wages and other outgoings on a "farm not remained stationary during the same "period"?—I should fancy wages are much the same.

22,919. "Has not the fall in prices without a "corresponding reduction in outgoings been, that "the fund available for payment of rent has "been diminished by 75 per cent.?—I am not prepared to answer that question.

22,920. "If owing to the distress a farm had "been left on your own hands would you not

Chairman—continued.

" have to pay a bailiff for managing the farm " and also invest capital in stocking the farm "? —That is so, as a matter of course; that would be the natural result.

Sir John Llewelyn.

22,921. As a matter of fact, have you any farms thrown on your hands?—None.

Chairman.

22,922. " Do you not consider, that a deduction " ought to be allowed in favour of a tenant " farmer, of interest on capital sunk by him in " stocking and improving his farm, and of a " reasonable remuneration for managing the " farm, before the rent is fixed "?—I do not know that I follow that.

22,923. " If you dispute this proposal will you " maintain that a farmer ought not to be allowed " to make a subsistence wage out of his farm, " whether there is anything left for rent or " not "? I do not know whether Mr. George presses those two questions.

Mr. Lloyd George.

I should like those questions put.

Chairman.

I think they answer themselves.

Mr. Lloyd George.

I should like to know what Lord Penrhyn's opinion is.

Chairman to Witness.

22,924. Can you give us an answer to that?—I do not know that I can give an answer offhand about it. I should like to consider such a question as that. I rather like considering a question of importance fully, before I give my answer upon it. I do not know what there may be in this exactly, at first sight I may not see what the point is.

22,925. I believe what Mr. George means is, ought a farmer to be allowed to have enough to live on and pay his way, before he pays his rent? —Most certainly, I think that a landlord ought to take care that he does not have tenants who have not capital enough to work his farm with that object, and with that result. I think that no landlord should take a tenant who has not got capital enough to keep his farm so that he should have a profit out of it.

22,926. Then as to the second question?—That covers the second as well.

22,927. Mr. George wants to know, ought the farmer to be allowed to live out of a farm though there may be nothing left for rent? I understand that to mean that a landlord should ask for no rent at all if the farmer has not got enough to make his living on the farm?—I should think if the landlord was a prudent man he would reduce his rent in that case, rather than have no rent at all.

Chairman—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,928. This I understand to be a case of reducing it to zero?—He would find a tenant with more capital if he thought the farm was capable of standing it. It is want of capital on the part of the farmer; it appears to me that would lead to that condition of things.

Chairman.

" Having regard to the fall in prices, what " would you consider a fair abatement to make " in rents, which prior to that fall, might be " reckoned to be reasonable?" These questions Mr. George, are so involved that if you could put them a little more clearly it would be a great convenience to the Commissioners and to the witness too. They are almost like problems in Euclid.

Lord Kenyon.

Mr. Lloyd George has been two or three hours preparing the questions, and expects Lord Penrhyn to answer them in one minute.

Chairman.

22,929. I think I had better put the questions and then you will answer them if you can, that will be the best way. " Having regard to the fall in prices "?—May I interpose for one moment and express the hope that it will be understood that the questions are such, that you, my Lord, find it difficult to put them so as to make their meaning clear.

22,930. Well, some of them are very involved; " Having regard to the fall in prices, what would " you consider a fair abatement to make in rents " which, prior to that fall, might be reckoned " to be reasonable "?—I cannot say, it would be a matter of consideration. I would rather refer to my agent, Colonel Sackville West, who would be better able to form an opinion on that matter.

Lord Kenyon.

22,931. It would be some sliding scale probably?—I cannot undertake to say myself what the proportion should be.

Chairman.

" Whether all the Welsh landowners have " made such abatements steadily during the " whole period of the depression." I do not know what is meant by " such abatements "?

Mr. Lloyd George.

Reasonable abatements.

Chairman.

22,932. Do you think the Welsh landowners have made reasonable abatements?—I think the majority of the landowners in Wales have made abatements.

Chairman—continued.

22,933. "Are you not aware that several land-"owners in Wales have either declined to make "any abatement at all or have made inadequate "abatements"?—I am not aware of any such thing.

Lord Kenyon.

22,934. Is it not the fact that some people object to an abatement on principle?—They may prefer making reductions perhaps.

22,935. Lord Stanley the other day, said that he objected to an abatement on principle, as being wrong, and he made reductions?—They may do so, but I do not know of such cases. No such cases have come under my notice.

Chairman.

22,936. "Whether the landowners who failed "to make reasonable abatements are not, gene-"rally speaking, those whose rents are high"?—I cannot say from my own knowledge.

22,937. "Whether you do not consider such "landowners much more responsible for agrarian "discontent than violent newspaper articles"?—No. I maintain that the newspaper articles have done more to create a sense of—I cannot say even that there is ill-feeling between landlord and tenant; there is no ill-feeling in Wales—but have stirred up the agitation, I will say—and are the sole cause of the agitation.

22,938. "Whether you have ever publicly con-"demned them"; that is, the landlords, I suppose?

Mr. Lloyd George.

The landlords who refused to make abatements.

Chairman.

22,939. "Have you publicly condemned the "landlords who have failed to make reasonable "abatements"?—I have myself, it seems perhaps egotistical to say, set an example, and I have done my best to show that I thought the tenants' difficulties ought to be recognised.

22,940. "Has the Property Defence Association sent a formal manifesto to its members to make rent abatements"—It certainly has not done so, but you will see in the circular which was put in regarding the object of the association, that one of the objects was to meet the tenants' difficulties in a kindly manner.

22,941. "Whether the protection of tenant "farmers from harsh treatment by bad land-"lords, is amongst the objects of the associa-"tion"?—All the tendency of the association is to maintain good feeling between landlords and tenants by all means in its power.

22,942. "Is it amongst its objects to bring its "combined influence to bear against cases of "rack-renting, unjust evictions, and forfeiture of "tenants' improvements"?—If I may quote the Duke of Argyll upon the question of rack-rents, I believe there is no such thing as a rack-rent in the sense of an unjust rent. Rack-rent as put now would to me seem to imply a rent such as that which puts the tenant to the greatest possible difficulty; in fact, almost torments him by having to pay it, but the term "rack-rent," I believe, means only the real rent. It is a misapplication of terms altogether.

22,943. I suppose we may say excessive rent? Is that one of the objects of your association?—As I said before, I can answer it in those words, that the object of the association is, by all possible means in its power, to maintain good feeling between landlord and tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

22,944. The association, as I understand, does not interfere between landlord and tenant in the management of the property at all?—Not in the least.

Chairman.

22,945. "Do you consider the articles you have "read have anything to do with the agricultural "depression"?—Yes, they all bear upon land, those that I have quoted.

Lord Kenyon.

22,946. Agricultural depression?—Agricultural depression—no, I do not know that they have.

Chairman.

22,947. "Do you consider that the agricultural "depression has anything to do with the preva-"lent discontent"?—I think that the present low prices are, of course, a source of discontent in the farming world.

22,948. I do not know whether you will be able to answer this question: "How do you apportion "the disaffection between the agricultural de-"pression and the Welsh press"?—Oh, I would not undertake to do that.

22,949. "Is the article from the 'Observer' "referred to by you, a leading article or merely "a contribution from a correspondent?" I think you have answered that?—I have answered it. The article, which I read last, was in what is a prominent part in the paper. I have it here (handing the newspaper). It is under the heading "Sparks from the Anvil." It is a leading part of the paper. It is a weekly correspondent or a weekly contributor rather.

Professor Rhŷs.

22,950. It is a sort of comic contributor?—It is not burlesque altogether.

Chairman.

22,951. It is not a leading article?—It is not a leading article, but it is a weekly effusion in the paper.

22,952. It is a contribution?—It is a contribution on political and other subjects.

22,953. "Do you regard all schemes for "abolishing landlordism as revolutionary?"—

Chairman—continued.

For abolishing landlordism altogether, most certainly.

22,954. "Do you not consider that the Irish "land purchase proposals of the Tory Govern- "ment tend to abolish landlordism in Ireland?" —It is setting up another class of landlord. It is not abolishing landlordism altogether.

22,955. Would you therefore stigmatise such proposals as revolutionary?—It is not on all fours with the proposal to abolish landlordism altogether. It does not apply.

22,956. Here is a long question: "An anony- "mous letter appeared some time ago in the "'North Wales Chronicle' urging that Church "landlords should let their vacant farms to "Churchmen in preference to Nonconformist "applicants. Would Lord Penrhyn consider "the editor of the 'Chronicle' or himself as "part proprietor of it responsible for that "suggestion? If not, why should he hold the "editors of and shareholders in the Liberal "press responsible for the contributions of "anonymous correspondence?" Then a second question is, "Is not the correspondence columns "of the Welsh Liberal papers generally pre- "faced by a statement that the editor does not "hold himself responsible for the opinions "expressed by his correspondents?"—In reply to that, I would say that the editor of the "North Wales Chronicle" is in no way exempt from the penalties which attach to his infringement of the law of libel, and that if anything is inserted in his columns he has to take the consequences like anybody else.

22,957. Would the part proprietor of a paper be responsible?—I believe the editor is respon- sible. As Mr. Lloyd George has asked me so many questions, I was going to ask whether the Chairman would allow me to put a question to him, upon the subject of a speech in which he endeavoured to describe me as a landlord in the eyes——

22,958. If he wishes to go into the chair we will put him in, and then we will put any questions you like to hand up in writing through the Chairman. That is the invariable rule that we have adopted. We will just go through these questions now, and then you can put your question afterwards. I have now some questions by Mr. Owen Wynne:—"Are "not Dr. Pan Jones and Dr. Michael Jones, as "well as Dr. Gee, ministers of the Gospel and "Doctors of Divinity?" Can you answer that question?—I cannot say whether they are Doctors of Divinity, but they bear the prefix of "Reverend."

22,959. You cannot say whether they are Doctors of Divinity?—But they are "Reverend." They are ministers of religion.

22,960. I have now some questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith. The first is disallowed, and I shall be obliged if questions of that sort are not sent up. "Do you say that landlords in Wales are popular"?—I say they are popular with the tenants.

Chairman—continued.

22,961. "If so, how do you reconcile this "opinion with the statement you have made "that 'abuse of landlords' is popular"?—My answer to the question was, I think they are popular with their tenants.

22,962. "You have referred to the Welsh M.P.'s "as shareholders in a newspaper company"?— I beg pardon. I referred to them as having signed the articles of association.

22,963. "Are you yourself a shareholder in any "and what Welsh newspapers"?—I am a shareholder in the "North Wales Chronicle" Company.

22,964. "Do you consider yourself responsible "for all that appears in the newspapers in which "you are financially interested"?—No, I hold the editor responsible.

22,965. "You have read extracts from the "'Herald Cymraeg, the 'Genedl Gymreig,' and "the 'Baner'; do you know that these three "papers exist on their own resources and depend "on their circulation"?—I do not know. I am not behind the scenes as regards those papers.

22,966. "Do you know that the 'Gwalia' is subsidized"?—The "Gwalia" is one of a group of papers which are worked under the title of the "North Wales Chronicle" Company.

22,967. "Do you say that you have never "contributed to subsidize the Tory press in "Wales"?—I have most undoubtedly assisted the Conservative press in Wales.

22,968. "Are the extracts which you have read, "invariably taken from the leading articles, or "are they taken from correspondence for which "the editor disclaims responsibility"?—Some are taken from leading articles, and some are taken presumably from letters written to those papers.

22,969. "Would you prefer that your tenants "should be Churchmen rather than Noncon- "formists"?—It is perfectly immaterial to me whether a man goes to church or chapel.

22,970. Other things being equal, would you "prefer a church and Tory applicant for a farm, "to an applicant who is a Nonconformist and "Liberal"?—I prefer a good honest farmer, and I do not take his creed into consideration at all; it never has been done.

22,971. "Are the politics and religious creed of "an applicant for a farm known to you or your "agent when a farm vacancy is filled"?—I would rather my agent answered that question.

Lord Kenyon.

22,972. First of all, are they known to you?— They are not. Well, I do not know at the time when an applicant makes his application; I am not aware, I mean, of the application having been made.

Chairman.

22,973. "Do you remember your keeper Thom- "son making a statement reflecting on the "conduct of a tenant named Wm. Pritchard, "of Minffordd Farm"?—I do not know what the statement was. I should like to be told what the statement was.

22,974. "At that time had you or your agent "promised to grant a site to Mr. Pritchard to "build a house on"?—I know nothing about it.

Lord Kenyon.

22,975. It all hinges on the statement made by Thompson, whatever that might be?—I do not know what the statement is which is referred to.

Chairman.

22,976. "Do you know that your keeper "Thompson, was in the habit some time ago of "bringing loads of rabbits in cars, and letting "them loose on a farm called Maes Ceirchdir"?—I never heard of anything of the sort, and I do not believe it. I am quite sure it would not be true.

22,977. "Are you now and were you at the "time of the Llyslew case, one of the trustees to "whom that farm belonged"?—I know nothing about it at all. Perhaps Colonel West can tell me the name of the farm. I never heard anything of the farm.

Lord Kenyon.

This is a different case. This has nothing to do with the keeper Thompson. It is about Llyslew, in this county.

Chairman.

22,978. This is about a Charity Commissioner's farm at Llyslew. Are you one of the trustees of the Bottwnog Grammar School?—I believe I was sort of ex-officio trustee for the Bottwnog Grammar School. I am not certain whether I was trustee, but it is possible I was.

22,979. "Have you received several letters in "reference to the tenancy of Llyslew from Mrs. "Parry"?—I have not received any letter, so far as I am aware.

22,980. The next question is, "Did you answer "any one of them?" Of course, you did not if you did not receive them?—No.

22,981. "Were you present at a meeting of the "trustees held at Carnarvon at which Mr. Hugh "Thomas, the then chairman of the Anglesea "County Council, and the late Mr. Elias Jones, "the then vice-chairman of the Anglesea County "Council, appeared on behalf of numerous "influential persons, to guarantee that if the "farm were let to Mrs. Parry, the rent would "be paid regularly and the farm cultivated "properly?"—No.

22,982. You were not present?—No.

22,983. Then I suppose you cannot answer this: "Do you say that the fact that Mrs. Parry is a "Nonconformist was unknown to the trustees?"—I know nothing about it.

22,984. "Has the Penrhyn estate enclosed any "part, and what part of the Bangor Mountain?"

Chairman—continued.

—I am not sure that it has enclosed any part of the Bangor Mountain. It certainly has not enclosed anything that it was not entitled to enclose.

22,985. "Has the Penrhyn estate closed up any "footpaths in the immediate vicinity of Ban-"gor?"—Colonel West can answer that question better than I can. There was some inquiry before the county council some time ago; a formal inquiry was made into the closing of footpaths all over the country, and evidence was taken on this subject, and it was handed in to the county council. I do not think there was any fault found with what had been done, I never heard of any.

22,986. "Do you say that no footpaths have "been enclosed on the Penrhyn estate?"?—If I might, I would refer that question to Colonel West.

22,987. "Are you aware that there has been "some dispute, or correspondence, or misunder-"standing with the inhabitants of Bangor, or "with anyone else, and whom, in respect of "paths closed by the Penrhyn estate near Ban-"gor?"—No, I am not; nothing of this sort has come before my notice.

22,988. Nothing of the sort?—Nothing of the sort about any closing of footpaths or any grievance concerned with it.

22,989. Now I have some questions by Mr. R. H. Williams: "You have said that a Land Court "would probably cause an increase of rents on "the larger estates. You, therefore, think that "the larger landowners would benefit by the "establishment of a Land Court?"—I think that they might possibly have higher rent, but I do not think they would benefit by it, because as I said before, it would break down the good feeling that would exist between landlords and tenants to a great extent. It would be far better to take the rents that they have now than to endanger that feeling.

22,990. Then Mr. R. H. Williams asks, "Will "you kindly name the gentleman who translated "the articles quoted?" I think that was handed to the Commissioners.

Mr. George H. Owen.

That was handed in.

Mr. J. Owen Hughes.

My Lord, if I may say so, I verified all those translations. I have not personally translated all of them; I have translated some of them, and all of them I have compared with the originals.

Chairman.

22,991. Will you answer this question, Lord Penrhyn: "Who is the gentleman who translated "the articles quoted?"—I cannot name him of my own knowledge, but for that purpose I refer to Mr. George Owen, if he likes to give the name.

Mr. George H. Owen.

They have been translated by different gentlemen, and I employed Mr. Hughes to verify the whole of them, and he has verified them.

Chairman.

Then he is responsible for the accuracy of them?

Mr. George H. Owen.

Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

Then the answer to the question is "Mr. Hughes"?

Mr. George H. Owen.

Yes.

Chairman.

They have been verified by Mr. Hughes?

Mr. George H. Owen.

Verified by Mr. Hughes.

Chairman.

22,992. This is another question by Mr. Vincent: "You have been asked whether landlords purchased during the distress. Have you, after the expenses of the estate have been paid, received for your own use any part of the agricultural rental of your estate?"—I am afraid that of late years I have not. I have received a small portion.

22,993. This question is by Mr. D. Williams:—"Can you say whether the 'North Wales Chronicle' editorially disclaimed all sympathy with the letter referred to in Mr. Lloyd George's question?"—I do not exactly know what that refers to.

Lord Kenyon.

It was about landlords putting churchmen into farms.

Chairman.

22,994. It is the letter that appeared in the "North Wales Chronicle" urging that Church landlords should let vacant farms to Churchmen in preference to Nonconformists. Did the editor disclaim all sympathy with that letter?—I forget all about it; I am not aware that such a letter had appeared.

22,995. Another question by Mr. Vincent: "Is it not the fact that the 'North Wales Chronicle' pays its own way?"—It is a fact.

22,996. Then Mr. W. H. Jones asks, "Do you say you never attended a meeting of the Llyslew trustees at Carnarvon?"—Oh, I did attend a meeting there; I attended one meeting.

Mr. Griffiths.

22,997. I should like to ask you a question I asked an agricultural labourer yesterday. Do you think the agricultural labourers of the present day receive sufficient wages for them to live comfortably according to their position?—I believe the representative agricultural labourer's wage is very fair now; and it depends so very much upon what a man's ideas of comfort are. You know, some people require a piano in their room.

22,998. They are not all very easily satisfied?—They are not. Many labourers, I believe, do not live at all comfortably, but whether the wage that they get is inadequate to enable them to live comfortably I cannot say. I think the wages are high enough to enable them to live comfortably if they had more comforts provided for them. I think their houses are very wanting in the matter of accommodation.

22,999. In the next place, do you consider that the tenant farmer should also have his comforts and a little interest for his capital?—Of course, I think a farmer ought to look towards making his living comfortably out of his tenancy.

23,000. Do you think that present rents can be maintained after the tenant and the labourer have had these comforts?—I myself, am very anxious about the future, because I cannot see how things are going to improve, as long as we are face to face with foreign competition in the way in which we are now.

23,001. Then you hardly think that present rents can be maintained?—I think that in good seasons present rents can fairly be maintained—where the rents are fair.

23,002. The evidence we have had before us from the labourers and the farmers was, that the present rents could not be maintained. The labourers complained that he had not the comfort he required because the tenant farmer could not afford to lay out money in providing those comforts, such as rooms for the servants to go in the evenings to rest after the day's work was over?—I think rather, that is one of the evils that has not been eradicated from Wales—I mean, the want of attention which was paid to the agricultural labourer. The labouring man was left to shift for himself a great deal too much. He used to sleep anywhere, and it led to a great deal of mischief in many ways, and I think that more attention ought to have been paid long ago to the labourer in that respect.

23,003. Then would it not be fair for the tenants and the labourers as well as the landlord to have some court to settle those questions—some Court of Appeal?—If by your question, you mean a Land Court——

23,004. Some tribunal of appeal—a Land Court or anything else?—I think that if there are such cases of hardship as those which you describe, it would be for the good of the tenant and for the good of the labourer that the landlord should meet them, and discuss the matter with them. I do not think that a Court would do any good. I think that the whole question might be settled by the combined action and opinion of the landlords in concert with their tenants.

23,005. We have had complaints not only that there is such a gulf between the labourer and the tenant, but that there is a much larger gulf between the tenant and the landlord, and that in consequence these matters cannot be settled. They all urge that there should be some tribunal to attend to?—As far as my own knowledge goes, I can only say that I cannot recognise that there is such a gulf as is complained of, between the landlords and the tenants.

Mr. Griffiths.

That is the evidence we have had brought before us.

Lord Kenyon.

23,006. In relation to that, you have, I suppose, seen reports of the evidence that has been laid before the Commission?—I have seen most. I have not read yesterday's proceedings.

23,007. As to your own district, I mean?—I have not read yesterday's, and I have not read the whole of the other evidence that was given in Anglesey.

23,008. But the evidence relating to your own district?—I have read the greater part of the evidence.

23,009. Do you consider that the tenant farmers, who appeared before us as witnesses, represented the larger portion of the farming population?—No.

23,010. You do not think they did?—No, I do not think they did.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,011. Do you consider the Welsh tenant farmers industrious?—Yes. There are good ones and bad ones, but the good ones are the majority.

23,012. Generally speaking, are they more frugal in their habits than English tenant farmers?—I should say they were.

23,013. Do you know of any Welsh tenant farmers who ride to hounds?—Unfortunately there are no hounds in Carnarvonshire; I wish there were. I daresay they do—they used to—in Anglesey. I have one tenant certainly who is rather fond of having a ride across country when he gets a chance, one of my principal tenants; I can name him if you wish it. I am sure that if there were hounds in North Wales it would do a great deal of good; it would bring farmers and labourers together; that is the benefit of keeping up hounds.

23,014. I thought there was no good in bringing them together—that the relations were so very good already?—We meet upon business perhaps, but it would bring us together out-doors; we should have one common source of amusement, which would be good for all of us.

Professor Rhŷs.

A question has been put into my hands, which appears to be of a perfectly different character: "Whether you would be willing to grant leases for 21 years at the same yearly rents as at present paid by small farmers of from 5 to 10 acres in Llanllechid, the present rents being from 5*l.* to 10*l.* nearly."

The Commissioners conferred.

Chairman.

The Commissioners think that that is not a question that ought to be asked a landlord.

Professor Rhŷs.

It was a question put into my hands.

Witness.

I think the question requires notice.

Chairman.

Yes; it would require to be gone into carefully; you cannot answer a question like that offhand. We disallow the question.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HUGH BEAVER ROBERTS called and examined.

Chairman.

See 16,915–7, 17,083–9, 22,798–9.

23,015. You want to rebut part of Mr. Ellis's statement, do you?—I do.

23,016. Will you kindly read it out?—I acted as solicitor to the landowners of the parishes of Caerhyn and Llanbedr y Cenin on the inclosure of the commons in those parishes. The inclosures were carried out by direction of the Inclosure Commissioners under the powers of the General Inclosure Acts. The late Lord Penrhyn—then Colonel Douglas-Pennant—was not at that time a landowner in either parish, and had nothing whatever to do with the applications for the inclosures, or with the subsequent proceedings. Before the formal completion of the proceedings, that is, before the awards were sealed by the Commissioners—he became possessed of land in the parish of Caerhyn through having purchased the Carnarvonshire property of the Marquis of Anglesey. The awards required the allottees to fence their allotments within a given time. The fences were pulled down as fast as they were put up, all the work done in the day time being destroyed at night. The local magistrates did their best to find out the perpetrators of the outrages, but were unable to do so, the local police being too few in number to be of any service. Under these circumstances the subject was brought before the magistrates at Quarter Sessions by the chairman, Lord Newborough, who was himself a landowner in both parishes. The chief constable, having explained that it was impossible for him out of the force under his command, to draught anything like a sufficient number of men into the district to put down the outrages, it was resolved to form the two parishes, and five other adjoining parishes, some of the inhabitants of which were supposed to be implicated, into a separate police district, and notice was given of a motion to be made to that effect at the following sessions. Previously to this, I believe an application had been made either by Sir Richard Bulkeley or by one of the local magistrates at his suggestion to the Home Secretary for advice and assistance. I am not aware that anything resulted from that application, beyond an intimation to the chairman of Quarter Sessions, that the Government grant in aid of the police rate would be withheld, until effective steps had been taken to uphold the law.

Chairman—continued.

At the following sessions the outlying parishes appeared by their solicitors to protest against being included in the proposed separate district, and one of the solicitors stated that Mr. Hugh Davies Griffith (who was on the bench) was the chief obstacle to a peaceable settlement, as he had refused to agree to a voluntary rate to meet the expense of an extra police force (a course which had been suggested by the chairman), and had induced a few other owners to refuse also. Mr. Griffith (who resided in the parish of Caerhyn, and whose property in the two parishes was considerable—next in extent to that of Sir Richard Bulkeley) did not attempt to deny what had been stated, and justified his action upon the ground that the inclosures were illegal, and that the commoners were justified in pulling down the fences. The chairman then said that as they now knew with whom they had to deal, he would suggest that the parishes of Caerhyn and Llanbedr y Cenin alone should be formed into a separate police district, and a resolution to that effect was moved and carried unanimously. The assertion—may I say the infamous assertion——

23,017. Do I understand you to say that you complain of the conduct of Lord Penrhyn being described as "infamous"?—That is so.

Chairman—continued.

23,018. That is the reason why this rebutting evidence has been brought in, and yet the same word is brought into your statement. May I ask you, in the name of the Commissioners, to withdraw the word "infamous." I am very anxious that all this violent language should be omitted?—It was allowed in the case of Mr. Ellis.

23,019. Well, if you choose to make these strong statements, well and good. It is very much to be regretted that all these strong words should be used, but if you choose to use strong language pray do so?—I do not wish to use strong language.

23,020. If you choose to keep your strong language in, do so. Go on please?—Then, my Lord, I will leave this out if you think best.

23,021. Oh, no, I have nothing to do with it. It is entirely for yourself. Go on please?—"That the late Lord Penrhyn, as Lord Lieu-"tenant of the county, drafted a posse of police "into the district to intimidate the people who "resisted the enclosures, &c.," carries its refutation upon the face of it. A Lord Lieutenant has no more power over the county police than any other individual magistrate. As a matter of fact, the chief mover in the affair to whom the credit of having had the separate district formed, and the outrages put an end to, should be given, was Sir Richard Bulkeley, the value of whose property in the two parishes far exceeded that of any other landowner. The extent of Lord Penrhyn's property in the parish of Caerhyn was inconsiderable, and the value of the allotment awarded in respect of it, was probably less than the amount spent in fencing it. The assertion that many Inclosure Acts have been smuggled through both Houses of Parliament without the knowledge of the district is simply an assertion, and not a fact, that a public Act may be passed without the knowledge of persons who may afterwards be affected by it is known to many, but a private or local Act, such as an Inclosure Act, cannot be passed without the knowledge of all concerned. It is absolutely impossible.

Chairman.

Is there anybody here representing Mr. Ellis who in his name would withdraw the word "infamous" used in his evidence? Is there any friend of his in court? [No answer was made.] To the Witness: I do not think that we have any questions to ask you upon that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Lewis Hughes called and examined.

Chairman.

23,022. Will you kindly proceed with your evidence?—Yes.

Mr. H. Beaver Roberts.

May it be understood that I withdraw the word "infamous" if Mr. Ellis withdraws it?

Chairman.

23,023. You are out of the witness box and we cannot have all these irregularities. We are very glad to see anybody in the box, and to take his evidence, but we cannot have these informal conversations; that must be distinctly understood. When a gentleman is out of the box he has completed his evidence. If you want to say anything further we will recall you. (To the Witness.) What is your evidence?—I consider that auctioneering farms and homesteads fetch prohibitory prices and preclude the possibility of purchasers farming or letting their holdings on reasonable terms. The landlord's appraiser alone values. I consider that the auctioneer or the surveyor is not the best authority to value a farm. The tenant also should be represented. Valuers have a marked tendency and bias in favour of their clients. I will give you an instance of what I mean, with regard to the letting of tenements go by auction.

23,024. Are you going to give us the instance of Mr. Jones?—Yes, I am. A neighbour of mine, who was a tradesman by name of William Jones, of Caegyffolles, paid between 900*l.* and 1,000*l.* for his holding of nine acres. That was by auction. He paid down his own 200*l.* savings by way of deposit, and borrowed from 600*l.* to 700*l.* on mortgage. He and his wife died of a broken heart, and of his two children, the boy was reared in the "Clio" for four years.

23,025. That is the training ship?—Yes, that is the training ship. I got him there myself, and his little daughter is reared by her aunt in Warrington. The mortgage after his death was foreclosed, and the place was put up for sale and realised then 500*l.*, so that the mortgagee himself was not fully covered, and he now owns the place. I have done the same thing myself on a small holding of about 4¼ acres; 10 years ago I paid 560*l.* for it, although there was no house or buildings worthy of the name. That is the place I live in now, having built a home there. I consider that tenants should have the optional purchase of their holdings when offered for sale, as Lord Boston gives, and not through the risky chances of a public auction. It is all very well to tell a Welsh farmer that he shall have the first bid for his farm, because the last bid is the one that buys it, invariably. I am sorry also to believe that political feeling and jobbery, to some extent, run very high in Anglesey, and farmers screen their political convictions to the ballot box. Every canvass in every election that I have known during the last 20 years forboded a Tory majority, but every election proves Liberal. The farmers do not like, when asked, not to promise their votes, but they tell me and others that they cannot vote against their convictions, and that accounts for it. I may say that I myself, at the 1886 election I believe it was, was offered 50*l.* by two Conservative leaders for remaining simply silent during the election. A neighbour of mine in the first county council election, who was suspected of not voting correctly with his party and committee, in order to prove to the political agent of the estate, which the agent represented, that he had voted right, swore that he had burnt his eyes that morning, and he bandaged them up and went into the ballot box and voted through the election agent. Timidity alone caused him to do so, and five minutes later he was at the polling gates, a checking clerk, looking as well as any one of us. Another man, by name Mr. William Parry, of Rhosmanerch, and his family, supported my candidature at the first county council election. He also fought the rector for tithe abatement. The following year he was evicted, although the largest tenant on the estate for 40 years, and never once in arrears. The farm was let to a Conservative. The water supply of the western boundary of this farm (although badly supplied) was cut off and fenced out. The present tenant enjoys the full use and benefit of this water. Many of William Parry's cattle fell into the unfenced mining shafts on the farm, but he never received any compensation. Another neighbour of mine, by name William Jones, of Yr Erw, was turned off his holding in 1892, and the place was let to an ex-sailor and coal dealer, who never farmed an acre in his life. It is difficult to prove anything, but it looks suspiciously like it: he was my opponent's election agent and canvasser. The ostensible reason for the old tenant's eviction was his want of keeping the house in proper repair in and out at his own cost. The new tenant had it repaired at great cost, on the estate account, and new ornamental trees were planted. He has also had a 21 years' lease on the place—a special privilege on this estate. At the first county council election the agent's committee passed a word to the tenants, the evening before the poll, to carry voters to the poll the next day every one of them. The next is another instance on the same estate, of a man called Hugh W. Owen, Hafodonen. I think he was written to, by Captain Mitchell, the then agent of the estate.

23,026. Do you put in anything to substantiate all this. Have you got this letter which you say was written by Captain Mitchell to Mr. Hugh W. Owen? Where is the letter?—Unfortunately, my Lord, he is quite unable to put his hand upon it, but he is quite ready to substantiate it—not to-day, probably, because he is not here. He has quite failed to put his hand upon the letter. I have it upon his evidence.

23,027. What date is that? There is no date and there is no letter?—The time would be at a bye-election in the town of Amlwch, when a friend of mine, Mr. John Hughes, the local agent of the estate, was contesting the county council election, and Captain Mitchell, the first agent, wrote to Mr. H. W. Owen, his tenant, asking him to desist. He disregarded this warning, and the following year received his quietus without compensation. Mr. Owen wrote me, and I have his letter here, in which he says, "Mr. Mitchell promised me that he would pay "the whole for building the water-mill" (that is a new water-mill he has built at his place) "and excavating pool, providing I would carry "the materials, which cost me above 200*l.*, but

Chairman—continued.

"I never received a single penny." I hand in his letter (the witness handed in letter).

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,028. There is no date to this?—I stamped it with the date myself the morning I received it, and that is his own handwriting. The date which I stamped upon it, is 26th September 1893.

Chairman.

23,029. You stamped it the day you received it?—In my office. The poor and parochial emoluments of Llaneilian were all clandestinely diverted to Church purposes, 18 years ago. The parish was deprived of them, and the farm rents all advanced. The Gwenithfryn rent was raised from 13*l.* to 16*l.*, and after the award to Church endowments to 24*l.*; the widow tenant paying two guineas on each advance for the new agreement. The rector, Rev. H. Thomas, M.A., evicted Owen Pritchard, Tanterfyn, one of the oldest and neatest of the Church tenants, who had built on the holding, and let it over him to his church organist. This is a fair and not uncommon specimen of a Church "irritator" in Anglesey. I do not know whether I am at liberty to go on reading the next paragraph, because it has come to the ears of the tenant that I have it in my evidence, and he very strongly objects to put it in. He is one among very many of my fellow countrymen, who are afraid to appear in these matters.

23,030. If he does not wish it to go in, then we will not take it?—He strongly objects, although originally he asked me to do so.

23,031. Then most certainly you must not put it in?—Land courts ought certainly to be established for the periodical valuation of land. Fixity of fair rents, fixity of tenure, free sales, and compensation for permanent improvements. Plenty of applications for small holdings, but the Act is a comparative failure in Anglesey—only four contracts enacted. The reasons are, that the prices were in a good many instances found to be a good deal too high; our county council valuer found them to be so, and could not certify for us to buy them. Secondly, the Act itself hampers the buyers with too many restrictions. Thirdly, which is probably the most objectionable form of the lot, the pretended supervision by the county council members of the tenements; people do not care to have a tenement on those conditions. I am of opinion that no contracting out of the Land Act be permitted, and appraised compensation for improvements, land preferential credit should be abolished. Commerce suffers severely from this unequal privilege and uneven justice. I do not think it fair for a man to give 50*l.* towards the cattle, and when the tenant fails, his landlord claims the whole, and the cattle dealer gets nothing. Those instances are frequent. I suggest that the relief or remedies should be, first that tithes should be used for national purposes, and secondly (a matter which lays very much in the hands of the farmers themselves) there should be combination against exorbitant railway rates. It is rather difficult for the farming industry of the country now to succeed against the rates which they are paying. They are paying 2*s.* 6*d.* per quarter on their grain from this country to the Midlands. If they had some means of bringing it to the sea-side, they would take it there for 1*s.* a quarter, and that lies in the hands of the tenants to combine, although they have a lack of such combination. They do not seem to see it. To show how the railway monopoly treats us; I myself got 22 tons of grain from Llanfair P.G. to Amlwch last week at 5*s.* 8*d.* per ton, whereas the usual rate is 3*s.* 6*d.* from Amlwch to Llanfair; but they found I was taking the grain to the sea board, and not to send it off to the Midlands by their system, and therefore they doubled the rates or very nearly. Cattle and horses are brought, I believe, from Ireland and from America even, and sent to the English markets cheaper than from Wales. Rents should certainly be collected once a year. It is a great hardship in having to pay directly after the spring culture is finished, and I consider that rents should not then be called in. Royalties and ground rents ought to be rated. There is another remedy which is favourable to the farmers if they look into it, and that is the new Fertilizers Act which is coming into operation on the 1st of January next. Another thing which we have to complain about rather, is the difficulty of acquiring building sites on the northern side of the country for seaside resorts, to bring wealth and capital and relief into that side of the district. It is impossible to get land there. That is the difficulty of Lord Anglesey's estate; I suppose he cannot sell land, as he has only a life interest in it. They will let land on lease, but the prices are most exorbitant—4*l.* for half an acre. I have asked for land for 10 years there myself, and have not had it yet, except half an acre of land to build a house upon; and in consequence I have had to pay 260*l.* for two acres of land there to build on. I would not build on lease at all—not on any man's land.

23,032. The following questions are from Mr. R. H. Williams: "Was the new tenant of "Yr erw, Pensarn, sued and fined for libellous "statements"?—Yes, he was.

23,033. "What is your opinion as to the rating of shipping"?—I noticed a statement by, I think, Mr. Pritchard about the rating of ships, and therein I do not agree with him, because ships are being rated heavily; they pay town dues, harbour dues, pilotage, hobblerage, anchorage, pier dues, wages and lights, and they pay for discharging and wear and tear, and the money earned on the ships is being spent in the country by the families of the sailors. But as the question of ships is raised, I think I will go further and suggest to you that if you put 2,000*l.* into a ship, you take the dividend or not, according to the times and the success of the undertaking. If you put 2,000*l.* into a farm you will get your 80*l.* whether it is a success or not.

23,034. These questions are by Mr. John Hughes: "Did you buy Mynydd Mwyn near Llanerchmedd, your old home?"—I did, my Lord. It was my old home.

23,035. "Did you sell it again, making a profit of 500*l.* by the transaction?"—I did, my Lord.

23,036. "What do you consider the present value per acre of average quality land?" I suppose he means in Anglesey?—I consider that the big estates as a rule let their land fairly well, at from 15*s.* to 20*s.* an acre, and especially considering the abatements they have made, they have done fairly well, barring the principle of abatements, which is wrong. If there should be abatements at all, they should be in the way of reduction and not abatement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,037. Then do you mean for a period of years?—Certainly, because the fluctuating markets apply to everything else but land, and why should land be an exception?

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

23,038. Then what do you consider the present value per acre of average quality land?—I am admitting it is from 15*s.* to 20*s.*, I think.

23,039. "At how much per acre do you let the land that you own now?"—I let the land I own at 18*s.*

23,040. "In your opinion do landlords patronise "the trades of the country as well as they ought "to?" This question is by Mr. Evan Williams. Can you answer that question, whether the landlords patronise the trades of the country to as great an extent as they ought?—I do not think they do. For instance, I notice now from whom the question comes, as to where they buy carts and carriages.

23,041. These questions are also by Mr. Evan Williams: "In your opinion is it fair to make "the farmers pay their rents twice a year?"—Most unfair; it is most objectionable in the present state of things.

23,042. "How much do you think the rents of land ought to come down?" Do you think the rents ought to come down?—Yes, and I have a very good reason for thinking so; because farmers have to borrow their rents oftener than not, very many of them.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Second Court.

Llangefni, Saturday, 14 October 1893.

LORD KENYON IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARDS, M.R.A.S.E., called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

23,043. You are Mr. William Edwards, M.R.A.S.E., Diplomaist of the R.A.S.E., late Scholar of the Anglesey County Council at Bangor University College, Chairman of the Anglesey Liberal Association, and late Secretary of the Anglesey Farmers' Society; and now Lecturer upon Agriculture, under the Cheshire County Council?—Yes.

23,044. What evidence do you wish to give?—My evidence refers to the parishes of Llanddanielfab, Llanedwen, Llanfair P.G. and Penymynydd. The land is mostly owned in these parishes by four or five landlords, but there are many minor owners. Some freeholders have come into existence during the last few years. Occupation:—Farms are entered in this district on the 13th of November, and are let from year to year. There is no demand for leases by the tenants, and they are not offered by the landlords. Among the tenants there is a feeling that a lease of 21 years, the usual term granted, will not improve their position. The period is too short for the tenant to venture upon any great enterprise in the way of improvement, and almost invariably higher rent is demanded at the end of the period. Agreements and leases:—Tenants are always required to sign agreements upon entering a farm, but they are never supplied with a copy of the agreement. It appears that they are expected to be able to remember all the rules and regulations after one perusal. One tenant in this neighbourhood, Mr. John Owen, Gaerwen Ganol, Gaerwen, had lately to sign an oppressive agreement, in which he agreed to pay the landlord 10*l.* for every ton of swedes, mangolds, hay, straw, and even gorse or whin, which he sold off his farm. The tenant, after protesting, had to pay 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* for the agreement, which was at once taken from him.

23,045. Who was his landlord?—The landlady is the present Lady Reade, and the agent Mr. J. Lloyd Griffiths.

Mr. Grove.

23,046. Who took the agreement from him?—Mr. Lloyd Griffiths.

23,047. Did he go to the house and ask for it?—So far as I know, or someone in his name. I think Mr. John Owen, if required, will come and say. He is a typical sample of the working farmer of Anglesey. The lease was up, and the new agreement was drawn; that was the reason of having the new agreement. He agrees to pay this, and he asserts that he has no proper buildings in order to feed his cattle with the produce of his farm, therefore it is impossible to keep the agreement. If he keeps the animals out, his own words are that the Cruelty to Animals man will come round and call him to book. The house is entirely unfit to live in, and his words are, that it is entirely useless to have dairy classes, which were in the neighbourhood last week, because he has to live in the same room as the dairy, and this is not a part of the house, but was originally intended for the purpose of keeping potatoes in. The landlord will not build himself, and he will not grant a lease. Mr. Owen himself is ready to verify this. Rent:—The average rent is about 1*l.* to 1*l.* 5*s.* per acre. The rents are entirely devoid of uniformity. Some of the small farms are over 3*l.* per acre, while others are letting for about 15*s.* per acre. I have a statement here, if it would be any use, of the acreage of the farms in the parish of Llanddanielfab, and the rents paid, and everything like that, and the name of the owner.

Mr. Grove—continued.

23,048. Have you added it up to see what the average comes to?—No, I have not.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,049. You state it to be from 1*l.* to 1*l.* 5*s.*?—Yes, that is the average rent. Taking the parish of Llanddanielfab as a type, I find that on the whole the small farms are higher rented than the large farms, but on some of the large estates the rent of the small farms is very fair. A list of the farms in the parish of Llanddanielfab, giving the acreage rent, &c., will be handed in. Cultivation:—An enormous amount of waste land has been reclaimed by the tenants within the present century. This has almost entirely been done at the expense of the tenant—in some cases the landlord supplied the pipes for draining purposes. As far as I can see there has been but very little change in the nature of the agriculture pursued in this district within the last 50 years. Improvements:—All the improvements are made in this district by the tenants, such as draining, fences, gates and posts, manures and seeds, &c. Generally the tenants have to keep the buildings in proper repair. There is hardly a farm in this neighbourhood, that the tenants, some time or other, have not put up new buildings on their holdings.

23,050. Do not the landlords supply materials, as we have heard with regard to other estates?—In some instances they do, and in some instances they do not. There are plenty of instances in the neighbourhood in which the buildings were entirely built by the tenants, but that is some years ago. Almost all the farms are suffering from want of buildings. I lay especial stress upon this point, especially looking to the fact that we are going into dairy education. There is not a farm in this district that has a dairy, for instance, which will come within a long way of the proper requirements of a dairy, according to modern dairy teachers, not a single farm. There is one farm in the neighbourhood, where the dairy is looked upon as a model one, but compared with the modern requirements it is far and away behind. Compensation:—No compensation whatever is granted to an outgoing tenant. The district is absolutely without any custom to that effect, and the Acts of 1875 and 1883 are absolutely dead letters as far as this district is concerned. All the landlords in this district contracted themselves out of the Act of 1875. In fact, every landlord in Anglesey, with the exception of Captain Verney, contracted himself out of the Act of 1875. As an instance of a tenant failing to get sufficient compensation for his improvements, I may mention the case of Mr. Griffith Owen, late of Ty Mawr, Llanfair P.G., at present of Gwna Fawr, Trefdraeth. He was a tenant of the Graig-y-Don estate, and was turned out of his farm, because the agent thought he had voted for Mr. R. Davies, the Liberal candidate in 1874.

Lord Kenyon.

23,051. Who thought?—The agent. His letter is that he got notice to quit, and he called upon the agent, a certain Mr. Hargest, living at Menai Bridge, and the words of the agent were that he had voted for Mr. Davies, and had not spoken in favour of Captain Bulkeley, the Tory candidate.

23,052. Is Mr. Hargest in existence? Is he to be found?—They are all dead. That is the reason why Mr. Owen himself did not like to bring the case forward. Mr. Owen asked for 300*l.* compensation and was granted only 24*l.*, although he said all the buildings on the farm, with the exception of one shed, were built entirely by himself and his father. Mr. Owen was a well-known Nonconformist, and leader in School Board agitation, and that sort of thing. I remember well, although being a very small boy, that my father and Mr. Owen walked to Brynsiencyn on the polling day to record their votes, in preference to being carried by either car, either the Liberal or the Tory car. The inference from that was, that he did not vote at all for the Tory candidate. He walked, on this occasion, because the feeling was rather high at the time; and because he walked they concluded he had voted for Mr. Davies, and the result was that he was turned out of his farm. I think Mr. Owen will also bring that forward if necessary. General condition of the farming population:—There are no peasant proprietors or small freeholders, who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors, but there are many who have recently purchased their holdings, and they are likely to increase, as the result of the breaking up of the old estates. The new freeholders appear to enjoy the liberty they possess, and are doing great work in the way of improving their land. Tenant farmers:—Tenant farmers and their wives almost invariably take part in the work of the farm. My own father, during the years of my childhood, used to work from 5 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock at night. This he did for 15 years. He took the farm in 1862, and died in 1877. During those 15 years he doubled the value of the holding. It is fair to add that my mother still occupies the farm, paying the same rent as my father agreed to pay in 1862. My mother is a tenant of the Marquis of Anglesey. In most of the farms in this district the children work at home; some of the largest farms have been worked almost entirely by the children. I have worked upon my mother's farm since I was 15 years old, and I have no hesitation in saying that I never received more than 10*l.* a year for my work. I do not know of a single instance where the children of the farmer are in receipt of regular wages. I should like to call attention more particularly to the entire want of security on the part of the tenants, and the moral influence this has upon the agricultural population. My father, for instance, ventured everything he had upon his holding, and that upon no better security than six months' notice. He did this because he had great faith in the permanency of the estate. Granting that the estate should keep together, and that no rise in the rent or anything else should happen, yet the freedom of the tenant would be gone. He would be entirely at the mercy of landlord and agent for the time being. The great object in life of the poor tenant would be to please the agent and landlord. His freedom of speech and of action, would be entirely gone. That is the pitiful condition of the majority of the farmers of Anglesey to-day. In these days the permanency of the landed estates is going. A large portion of the Baron Hill estate has already been sold, and a large portion of Lord Boston's estate will soon be under the hammer. In such cases as these the poor tenant is absolutely helpless, and entirely at the mercy of events.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,053. Did you hear what Mr. Preston said yesterday, that the Baron Hill estate is not being broken up, but consolidated, a few outlying farms being sold, and others nearer home being bought up?—That is entirely new to me.

23,054. That is what he said; because I asked him the question. That does not prevent the selling of some of the farms, in fact it means that some of the farms are sold?—That is entirely new to me.

23,055. It may be that they sell to clear the expenses incurred in buying?—Cultivation:—The farmers of my district are very well up in all practical points of agriculture and have cultivated their lands very carefully on the whole. They not only like to have good crops, but they enjoy to have their land in good condition. As the result of depression and the insecurity of things pertaining to agriculture, there is a distinct tendency to cultivate on the cheap system. Liming, and carting manure from the villages, is not so much in vogue as formerly. We rely more upon artificial manure to secure crops, and generally buy the cheapest stuff we can get, without any real knowledge of what we obtain. We are sadly negligent of the necessity of having a guarantee when buying artificial manures. There is hardly any knowledge of the particular wants of different crops, and very often manures are applied distinctly contrary to the teachings of modern agricultural science. Under this system the land must ultimately suffer. My experience of the land in Anglesey has convinced me, that to keep it in good heart, it must be well supplied with a general manure. If supplied with manure containing just one element of plant food, the land soon becomes exhausted of the other elements of plant food. The farmers are beginning to feel the insecurity of their position. They have no heart to venture upon any costly improvements in cultivation. To improve the land in Anglesey it requires a long course of careful cultivation, and this is perfectly impossible under the present system. All the absurd, ridiculous, and antiquated clauses in the agreements as to cultivation must be entirely swept away. To make a farm pay in these days a farmer must have a free hand. No lawyer, or land agent, sitting at his desk, can plan a rotation of crops for him to follow. Agricultural education:—Farmers, as a rule, are very indifferent with regard to education. In many cases a great amount of prejudice prevails against agricultural education. Bangor University College is doing some work in this respect, but the authorities there are working at the sad disadvantage of being absolutely unacquainted with the agricultural community of North Wales. What is called the Agricultural Committee of that college has not a shadow of right to be considered as representative of Welsh farmers, as they say they are.

Lord Kenyon.

23,056. Do you say there ought to be more tenant farmers on the committee?—Certainly; although we are Radicals in a way, still there is an enormous amount of Conservatism in our nature too.

23,057. I mean with regard to this particular committee. I am a member of that committee myself, and I am anxious to reform it according to your views if I can?—Certainly, I should say so.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,058. Possibly some reform might be necessary. I quite grant what you say, that there is a great deal of prejudice prevails against agricultural education. I do not know quite what the cause of that is. Perhaps you can tell me?—Undoubtedly one cause is that the thing has been worked entirely by strangers.

23,059. Are you aware in the first place how that was started?—Yes.

23,060. Are you aware that the landowners contributed a certain sum of money towards it? Yes.

23,061. And that a Government grant was made to meet that sum of money contributed by the landowners?—Yes.

23,062. Therefore it was natural that they should have some representation upon a committee that spent that sum of money?—Yes, quite right; I do not say at all that they have not a right to be on the committee, but another thing is to make agricultural education popular in the country.

23,063. But when they started to meet the farmers, the farmers would not have anything to say to them?—Because it was started from outside.

23,064. They did not start it themselves in an outside way?—But considered from a farmer's point of view.

23,065. The farmers would not start it themselves, so that the landlords had to start it?—That is the difficulty.

23,066. Now it is in full swing, I grant you it would be a good thing if some reform was made. Now it is started, I think you should be grateful to the landlords for starting it?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,067. What is the shortcoming now. Have you not a lecturer, Mr. Owen, who lectures for you, who knows North Wales well?—Well, in one part. He does not come to Anglesey. The work done last year was done by an Englishman, and I had to go there to interpret.

23,068. The difficulty then is one of language?—That is one difficulty.

Lord Kenyon.

23,069. I grant you it may be done away with soon, but is there not some difficulty in finding capable lecturers who do understand the Welsh language?—That is a difficulty, no doubt.

23,070. No doubt in your case it will be soon overcome. You are, I understand, an agricultural lecturer. You say, "I do not know of a "single instance where the children of the "farmer are in receipt of regular wages." In your own case would you consider your education to be in some way the outcome of the farm?—I do not.

23,071. It was obtained by money made upon the farm, I suppose?—No, my education has been entirely my own doing. During the time I attended Bangor University College I actually worked on the farm. I came home every night, and worked on Saturday, and every opportunity that I could get.

Mr. Grove.

23,072. You have stated that there are no copies of agreements supplied, so far as you know, to any tenant farmers. That is within the range of your own knowledge?—Yes, I do know they have no copies in their possession now. Of course they are all well aware they have signed them, but they have no copies in their possession.

23,073. Of course it would be desirable always to have a copy?—Yes, of course, when you have all these rules to follow.

23,074. You think a tenant farmer is entitled to a copy, and ought to receive it?—Yes, I do.

23,075. Of course you speak of the development of the farm with respect to those men who have bought their own freeholds?—Yes.

23,076. Do you consider that they are better cultivated, and that the fact of its being a man's own property enables him to get more labour on to it, and put more spirit into it altogether?—Certainly. There are only two cases, I think, in the neighbourhood, and they are undoubtedly in that way.

23,077. The land itself is made to produce more in those circumstances?—Yes, the clearing of the hedges and so on. We have an enormous amount of land in Anglesey under great big banks.

23,078. Then you would consider, I suppose, fixity of tenure, if it were brought about by a Land Court, or at any rate by some arrangement, would have the same effect?—I have certainly not the slightest doubt.

23,079. There would be better development of the land?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,080. Are you employed by the college to lecture here in this county?—I am a lecturer upon agriculture under the Cheshire County Council.

Lord Kenyon.

23,081. These are questions by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "I believe you have a considerable "acquaintance with the condition of agricultural "labourers?"—I have.

23,081*a*. "What efforts have been made in your "neighbourhood to better the general condition "of this class, and to make life more livable in "the villages?"—None whatever. You cannot imagine a more miserable place than the small villages I am acquainted with. Take Llanfair P.G. Not the slightest attempt has been made to have reading rooms or any recreation grounds. Although Llanfair P.G. stands entirely, almost, on common land, there is not a piece of land the size of my hand for the children to play. We have these gentlemen living within half a mile or two miles of the district:—We have Captain Morgan, Mr. Harry Clegg, the Marquis of Anglesey, Major Robert ap Hugh Williams, Colonel Hunter, and Lord Boston, but they are entirely and absolutely out of touch with the neighbourhood in so far as doing anything like that. I am perfectly certain that these gentlemen are not acquainted with the neighbourhood in any way. We had an instance of that in Lord Penrhyn, when he thought Dr. Pan Jones was a leader in Bethesda being his own town. I may mention another matter. Not one of these gentlemen has the slightest chance of being elected on a public body in their immediate neighbourhood. Two of them tried, one, Mr. Harry Clegg, the best man of the whole lot, and he was beaten. Mr. Robert ap Hugh Williams tried again, and he was beaten, and I am perfectly certain that they would be all beaten in turn if they tried.

23,082. How would you remedy that?—I do not know. I cannot remedy that. That is beyond my power.

Mr. Grove.

23,083. Would it be so, if the landlord and tenant came more in contact with each other?—I am speaking more particularly now as to the interest of these gentlemen in the life of the village, in connection with the agricultural labourers.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,084. You suggest that they have neglected doing anything?—Yes, doing their duty, as it were, to the neighbourhood.

23,085. In the way of public libraries and so on?—Yes, and that has been very greatly so. During the last fortnight I have been in Cheshire, I could not help noticing that there was a very vast amount of difference there in the small villages, as compared to ours.

23,086. What do you find there?—In almost every small village you go to, there is a public room, all the papers come there, there are science classes and that sort of thing, and lectures are given on all conceivable subjects.

23,087. Do you think if the landlords in this district had done something like that, they might have been more popular and regarded more as benefactors?—I have not the slightest doubt about it.

Lord Kenyon.

23,088. Another question by Mr. Ellis Jones Griffith: "What do you say as to the terms "upon which landlords and tenants stand to one "another." I think you have answered that question, that they are not acquainted with one another?—I cannot say that there is any unfriendliness between them, but they are not acquainted with one another.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,089. There is a gulf between them ?—There is a gulf between them; they, as it were, live in a separate world.

Lord Kenyon.

23,090. "What is a 'cynffonnwr'" ?—I do not know. Professor Rhŷs can tell you better than I can.

Professor Rhŷs.

It is a man who is supposed to make up to his superior by flattering him, literally it means "one who wags his tail."

Lord Kenyon.

A sycophant.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,091. The Welsh metaphor implies a dog that comes up wagging his tail about you. I do not know the object of the question; but the word is much used in Carnarvonshire and Anglesey ?—The point is this, that the friendship between the landlord and tenant is simply skin deep, there is no reality in it, and as a proof of that, when we see a man who makes any special effort to make himself friendly with the landlord, we at once call him "cynffonnwr."

Lord Kenyon.

23,092. Is that not rather hard upon him ?—I do not know.

23,093. He may be sincere, and if he is you say you look upon him with coldness and call him a "cynffonnwr" ?—Yes, still that is how matters stand.

Professor Rhŷs.

He may be appealing to the landlord to do something towards a public library for ought you know.

Lord Kenyon.

23,094. Or even a Methodist chapel. These are questions by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you think "farmers usually have to pay for their agree- "ments ?—is it not, only when they are prepared "by a solicitor" ?—Yes, he is a solicitor, but still he is the agent as well.

23,095. Do you think it is usual ?—I do not know, I am sure. I have never had anything to do with it. I am not a tenant myself.

23,096. "Is it not a fact within your knowledge "that Lord Boston has sold considerably during "the last five years and that in every case he "has sold by private treaty to the tenants" ?—Not in my district.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,097. Has he sold in your district at all ?—Not as yet. A valuer has been round all his property in the parish of Llanddanielfab, that is all.

23,098. That is Lord Boston's estate ?—Yes, that is Lord Boston's estate.

23,099. "What reason have you for stating that "a large portion of Lord Boston's estate will "soon be under the hammer ?" You mean it will "be sold ?—Yes.

23,100. You do not know the conditions ?—No, I speak about the breaking up of the permanence of the old estates, in which we had great confidence.

23,101. You would not say it was going to be sold by auction ?—No.

23,102. You withdraw that expression "under the hammer" ?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

23,103. You expect it will in each case be offered to the sitting tenant before being offered by auction ?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. R. H. Williams called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

23,104. Will you kindly give us your evidence ?—I am a press representative, and secretary to the Anglesey Liberal Association. I have also acted as secretary to a committee of tenant farmers appointed to organise evidence for this Commission.

I beg to offer evidence as to—

I. The difference of language, politics, and religion between landlord and tenant.

II. Sales of land during the last four years, in the county.

III. The reluctance of tenant farmers to come forward to give evidence.

I.—The majority of landlords and tenants in Anglesey are entirely at variance as regards their language, their politics, and their religion.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

On this account there is a lack of sympathy between them which is not experienced in England; and this places the Welsh tenant at a considerable disadvantage. The three points mentioned cause an estrangement of feeling as they have nothing in common, but the question of language affects the tenant to the greatest extent, inasmuch as he cannot approach his landlord except through a third party, and if he does so by this means he cannot lay his grievance properly before his landlord. I had thought of being able to prepare a table showing the proportion the landlords bear to the tenants on these points throughout the island, but I have been unable to do so, and therefore I have selected, at random, five parishes, viz., Llanfiangelesceifiog, Llanddaniel, Llanedwen, Llansadwrn, and the Gaerwen portion of the parish of Llanidan. In these parishes there are 159 farms of over three acres each, as to which I have definite information: (a.) As to language. Of the 159 farms, three farms are in the occupation of Englishmen, and 156 in the occupation of Welshmen. 19 farms are owned by Welshmen, and 140 by Englishmen. (b.) As to politics. Of the 159 farms, 47 farms are in the occupation of tenants who are Tories, and 112 in the occupation of tenants who are Liberals. 11 farms are owned by landlords who are Liberals, and 148 by landlords who are Tories. (c.) As to religion. Of the 159 farms, 27 farms are in the occupation of tenants who are Churchmen, and 132 in the occupation of tenants who are Nonconformists. 13 farms are owned by landlords who are Nonconformists, and 146 by landlords who are Churchmen.

II. Sales.—The following are particulars of estates, of over 150 acres each, which have come into the market during the last four years:—

Date.	Estate.	Acreage.
27 and 28 June 1889 -	General Owen Williams -	2,400
5 September 1889 - -	Sir George Meyrick - -	440
5 June 1890 - - -	Cae Mawr Farm - -	206
17 July 1890 - - -	Colonel Henry Platt - -	296
25 June 1891 - - -	General Owen Williams -	184
25 June 1891 - - -	Sir Richard Bulkeley - -	1,584
16 and 17 March 1893 -	Sir Richard Bulkeley - -	6,443

With regard to these sales, the tenants on the land offered for sale were subjected to much trouble and anxiety beforehand. Even when the landlord gives a general intimation that the sitting tenant may purchase his holding by private treaty, it is the rule not to mention any figures, but to let the tenant name the sum he is ready to give. When the landlord does mention a sum it is often exorbitant, and in the case of Ty Wian, the tenant was asked to pay nearly 700*l.* in excess of the amount realised by public auction. This is not all. It has been said that the prices are very high, and from this it has been argued that the rents are low. But this is not conclusive. When a sale takes place it is not merely the landlord's land that is sold but also the tenant's improvements are sold. The tenant is thus placed in this dilemma: either he must pay over again for his own improvements, or he must lose them altogether. It is a case of "double or no quits." Besides this the attachment to home is an important consideration. The tenant has also to consider that, if he loses his farm, there is difficulty, owing to the great competition for farms, to get another. And in the case of a Nonconformist, his difficulty in getting a farm is so considerable that it is no wonder that he gives an exorbitant price rather than be turned to idleness. Besides the effect upon the sitting tenant, I wish also to point out that these sales of property have disturbed even that hope of fixity of tenure which was dependent on the idea that the great estates were permanent. A general sense of insecurity has arisen, and the natural effect of this is that proper cultivation of the soil (which only a tenant who is fairly certain in his own mind that he will not be disturbed would undertake) is not as probable.

III. I wish also to put on record that, in my capacity as secretary of a committee of farmers, it has come within my knowledge that there is a considerable reluctance on the part of the tenant farmers to come forward and give evidence before this Commission. This arises from a fear lest, directly or indirectly, the landlords should retaliate. From the very nature of the case, I am not willing to mention names, otherwise the very mischief which they dreaded might occur. In several instances farmers have told me that although they have evidence to give, they do not feel at liberty to appear in public as giving evidence against their landlords. The reasons they gave were that they might require abatement of rent, improvements upon their farms, or even a farm upon the estate for their sons or relatives. They believed that they were more likely to obtain these favours by avoiding the witness box in this inquiry. Several tenant farmers have lent me copies of their agreements, which are still in my possession, to enable me to prepare the blank copies which have already been put in. Some of the farmers delivered these into my care upon the strictest understanding that I was not to expose them in any way, and that the copies handed in should be in blank, with even the dates omitted, lest the landlords might find out from whom I had obtained the original copies. I mention that, to show the fear which the tenants have of their landlords, that they might retaliate in some way or another. I may also mention that the same cause is at work in politics. At the last Parliamentary election I know of many who dared not attend Liberal Committees and public meetings for fear of their landlords. In one instance a tenant farmer who had purchased his farm, spoke to me within the last 18 months, and said that, whilst he was a tenant, he abstained for fear of the consequences, from expressing his political views, although he was a Liberal, but after purchasing his farm, he was, for the first time, willing to identify himself with the Liberal party, and become a member of the Association.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,105. You can give the name, I suppose?—Well, I dare say he would not be willing.

23,106. Then I will not ask for it?—I am sure he would not like others to know, that he felt such a fear towards his landlord.

Lord Kenyon.

23,107. With regard to the lack of sympathy between the landlord and tenant, what remedy do you propose for that—teach the landlords Welsh?—No, my Lord, I suppose that would be out of the question.

23,108. Well, I do not know?—I am afraid that they would not willingly undertake that task. I have no remedy for it, I simply mention that to prove that the tenant is at the mercy of his landlord to a certain extent.

23,109. I mean the general panacea, the Land Court, would not do that, I am afraid?—It would do this, the tenant would have fixity of tenure.

23,110. It would not affect the bond of sympathy between them?—No, it would not, my Lord.

23,111. I do not know what remedy you could propose, except to turn the tenants into Englishmen, Churchmen, and Tories, or the landlords into Liberals, Nonconformists, and Welshmen?—I would not suggest any remedies for this particular thing, but I am simply mentioning it, on account of the effect it has upon other matters.

Mr. Grove.

23,112. In the event of a farm being sold, what would you suggest would be a reasonable thing for the landlord to do, to give the sitting tenant a fair chance to buy it?—Well, suppose a landlord were to submit it to arbitration, something on the lines of compensation for improvements, say, one party appointed by the landlord and one by the tenant, and an umpire appointed by both of those.

Mr. Grove—continued.

23,113. Then you can state of your own knowledge that there is a great reluctance on the part of a good many tenant farmers to come forward to give evidence?—I can. As proving that I have asked several to come forward, and they have given me statements similar to that which I have mentioned.

Lord Kenyon.

23,114. With regard to the sales of property, you mention one case, Ty Wian, where the price demanded was in excess of what was obtained at auction. Was it not the case that the price at auction was higher than what it was offered to the tenant at?—Was higher at the public auction?

23,115. Yes?—I believe in some cases it was, but that was thus, the tenants in those cases as a rule offered what they considered a fair price for the farms, whereas they fetched at the public auction a higher price, and that on account of the improvements, made by those very tenants, upon the farm during the last few years.

Mr. Grove.

23,116. And the tendency of the sitting tenant would be to offer a lower price, because he had put so much money into the farm, in the shape of improvements?—Just so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Grove here took the Chair.

Mr. Robert Thomas called and examined.

The following statement was interpreted to the witness by Professor Rhŷs.

Evidence of Robert Thomas, Ty'nycae, Penmynydd.

I wish to give evidence about Dragonwen in the parish of Penmynydd, a farm formerly occupied by my father William Thomas, and owned by Sir R. Bulkeley, Baron Hill, before the sale in March last. It was a very poor farm, containing about 115 acres at a rental of 70*l.*

My father had been born in the place, and his family had been there for generations. He had worked hard in the place all his life, and spent every penny he could get to improve the soil. He had carted thousands upon thousands of loads of manure from the near villages, and everywhere he could get it, to enrich the land, besides carrying lime every year almost, from a great distance, and sand from Red Wharf Bay, a distance, of five miles. He spent much money and labour in this way, had the place in good order, and lived comfortably. To prove his good husbandry I may say that at the expiration of his tenancy he received 160*l.* for the oat crop which grew upon 20 acres. He sold the hay for close upon 100*l.*, and had a valuable live stock.

In 1870, when he was 71 years old, he had a notice to quit, although he had never been a day behind with his rent, and had three grown-up sons quite capable of managing the farm. The pretext given was that the buildings were old, and that he must either expend 800*l.* in building a farmyard and homestead or leave the old home. Such a condition was quite impossible, the rent being high enough even if he had the 800*l.*, which he had not. This was the only condition he could get after many fruitless attempts. The estate never even offered to build and to add a per-centage to the rent. I may say here that it has been often said that as the landlord does the building on a farm, we in Wales are not to ask for exceptional treatment, but must be content to be a part of England. It is so on some estates. But on the Baron Hill estate it was quite the reverse until quite recently. And here is a case in point. In a great number of cases I could name the farms have been consolidated to avoid the expense of building, and the tenants thrust out. In many other cases the buildings were left in a dilapidated condition, and the tenants had either to go away or build themselves. I know several instances of this in my immediate neighbourhood, and the recent sale made things very serious for the tenants.

After my father had received the notice to quit it soon transpired that the agent, who was a Scotchman, had let the farm to another Scotchman, who occupied the farm of another landlord. To the farm was now added another small farm of about 27 acres, turning the tenant out, I presume, because the house was an old one.

I may say that no new buildings were afterwards made by the incoming tenant, and it was twelve years afterwards, in 1882, that a farm-yard was built for him by the estate.

The new tenant, whose idea of farming seemed to be the taking down of hedges, converted the farm of 115 acres into four fields, and so forced a land, naturally poor, so as to leave it in an exhausted condition, being in some parts covered with gorze and rushes. He thus caused a very great loss to the landlord, leaving a legacy of weeds to future tenants. At last he became a bankrupt, was sold out, and died a pauper, his wife being now at the workhouse.

My father during the first year after losing the tenancy was permitted to live at the old house, and to rent two fields from the new tenant. The following year one of these fields was taken from him, the rent remaining the same. The third year he was permitted to live in the old house, with no land at all. The only entrance to the house was converted into a yard for cattle, making it very unpleasant and dangerous to live there. This was for the evident intention of inducing him to go away. At last in 1874 a ruinous cottage on the same estate was let to him, with 2½ acres of land attached for 6*l.* 10*s.* where he died. To make this cottage habitable not one penny was expended by the Baron Hill estate.

Again, when the farm became vacant in 1887 the agent refused to let the farm to my brother, and preferred another person. Now it is sold to the Marquis of Anglesey, and my brother has been accepted by him as the new tenant, and will once more occupy the old home next November.

Mr. Grove.

23,117. You say that that evidence is correct?—Yes.

23,118. Your father, you say, occupied this farm, and got it up into a very good condition?—Yes, so that there could not be a better.

Mr. Grove—continued.

23,119. And when he was 71 years of age he had notice to quit?—Yes.

23,120. And had never been behind with his rent?—Never, not one day.

23,121. The estate wanted him to spend 800*l.* in building the farm-yard and cow-shed?—Yes, or to go away.

23,122. Did they offer to build it and to charge him an addition?—No.

23,123. Was any request made that they should do that?—Yes, we tried to get them to build a house and promised that we would pay interest on the outlay.

23,124. And they refused to do so?—Yes, they did; they would take no notice of us absolutely.

23,125. You say that the recent sales on the Baron Hill estate have made things very serious for the tenants?—But it has proved very good for all those where the Marquis of Anglesey has bought, for he lets everyone retain his place. But there is a good deal of complaining in the country round.

23,126. By those people who have not been able to secure their holdings?—Yes.

23,127. Do you say that this field was taken away in one case without any abatement in rent being made, the rent remaining the same?—They gave two fields to my father that they might not turn him out, for him to keep his cattle to see if he could get another place at the end of the year. It was a place to keep the cows.

23,128. Then you say that a ruinous cottage was let to him. Who made it habitable; you say that they declined to do so?—Yes, we lived in the old house when we held the two fields.

23,129. That is not an answer. After you left in 1874 a ruinous cottage on the same estate was let to you?—That was another small holding that became vacant with 2½ acres, and they gave that to my father in order that he might go away from the old place.

23,130. That is not an answer? [Question repeated.]—It was left in the same state.

23,131. Do you know of any Nonconformists who have been afraid to come and give evidence before the Commissioners?—No, I do not know of anyone in our neighbourhood who is afraid to come before you. I do not know of anyone who had a good case to present.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,132. You say that your father carted thousands upon thousands of loads of manure and sand from Red Wharf Bay. For what purpose would he carry sand?—To increase the quantity of the manure—the dressing.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,133. Is it the custom in Anglesey to mix sand with manure?—In some places. It is not so customary now as it has been in years past.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

23,134. You have been having lectures upon agriculture. Has that made a difference?—Perhaps in some instances.

Mr. Grove.

23,135. Do you hope to get further benefit from the lectures?—We hope they will benefit agriculture, and that things will get better with regard to agriculture.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,136. What do you mean by this passage:—"We in Wales are not to ask for exceptional "treatment, but must be content to be a part of "England?"—I do not quite understand the question.

23,137. I will put it in another way, is it in respect to repairs that you mean you are obliged to be part of England, and not of Wales?—Yes, with regard to the taking of the farms, and having security of not being turned out.

23,138. Here is the sentence: "I may say here "that it has been often said that as the land-"lord does the building on a farm we in Wales "are not to ask for exceptional treatment, but "must be content to be a part of England." I want to know what you mean by that?—I think with regard to our part of the country they are content if they could have good buildings and security of tenure; then they would not want anything more from their landlords.

23,139. I think it is in respect of repairs you are referring to. Do you disapprove of the system which prevails in Anglesey of the landlords only supplying the materials, and the tenant having to supply all the labour?—I approve of that custom if we have it so.

23,140. Which would you prefer, that system or for the landlord to bear the whole expense, and that you should pay a certain amount of interest on the outlay?—I should prefer not paying the interest on the outlay, but to have the building properly done. I wish to have both; the rent is sufficiently high on the land.

23,141. I suppose you think, of course, that buildings are necessary on a place, and that they should be placed there?—Yes, certainly. It is impossible to do without the buildings.

23,142. You say: "In a great number of cases "I could name, the farms have been consoli-"dated to avoid the expense of building, and "the tenants thrust out." Is it not the case that when farms are consolidated, that that is done by degrees, and that when a farm is consolidated the farmer is not turned out until there is another vacant farm for him to go into on the same estate?—It was only done in the case of two in our neighbourhood—the farm where my father lived, and where the neighbours living contiguous to us lived.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

23,143. Had your father to turn out?—Yes, he had.

23,144. And then this other man had the two farms?—Yes, the Scotchman who was the neighbour living close by.

23,145. Are there many Scotchmen on the estate?—In our neighbourhood there is no instance excepting this man who has been there.

23,146. What kind of a farmer was he?—He proved a very poor farmer in our neighbourhood.

23,147. Did he bring his Scotch system of farming here along with him?—I should imagine so. His method of farming was peculiar to himself in our neighbourhood.

23,148. Do you consider that he was as successful a farmer as the Welsh farmers in the neighbourhood?—Perhaps he himself did, but no one else did. He got on the parish eventually.

Mr. Grove.

23,149. This is a question by Mr. R. H. Williams: "Do you mean that Wales requires "exceptional treatment as Wales has exceptional "grievances?"—I consider that Wales ought to be properly treated as it deserves.

23,150. Then a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you not think mixing sand with manure "is something like mixing sand with sugar; does "not improve it?"—It does improve it. We used to have the best possible crops of potatoes and barley as the result.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,151. You say here: "Again when the farm became vacant in 1887 the agent refused to let "the farm to my brother and preferred another "person." Who was this other person?—He let the farm to an unmarried lady—an old maid.

23,152. What qualifications had she for farming?—She lived at a farm belonging to Baron Hill, and she had been a dairymaid at Baron Hill.

23,153. After the Marquis of Anglesey bought it, when this old maid turned out in order to make room for your brother?—She gave up the farm that my brother might have it.

23,154. Did she voluntarily give it up?—Yes, she gave it up voluntarily. She said she offered him the chance, that she could not live in it, and pay for it.

23,155. Was that the reason, or that she preferred to live under Sir Richard Bulkeley, and not under the Marquis of Anglesey?—No, she would have preferred very much to live under the Marquis of Anglesey, if she had a chance.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Grove.

I do not doubt but that Lord Carrington thanked you very much in the other room for your attendance here, and I can only say it has been a great pleasure to the Commissioners to pay this visit, and we are extremely obliged to you all for coming forward and giving your evidence.

Mr. Grove—continued.

[Adjourned.]

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Swansea, Glamorganshire, Tuesday, 31st October 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN Assistant Secretary.

Mr. MORGAN JONES JENKINS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

23,156. Are you Mr. Morgan Jones Jenkins, of Gellyfeddau, Llangyfelach?—Yes.

23,157. I believe you wish to speak as to some encroachments on Loughor Common?—Yes.

23,158. Will you kindly tell us what you wish to say?—A Board School has been built there and the rights of the commoners have been recognised, but there are rows of houses and a large building intended for an hotel which has been recently built, and the rights of the commoners have not been recognised. Leases are granted for houses to be built on the common. These encroachments deprive the commoners of the hamlet of Ty'r Brenin of the right of common, and the commoners of the hamlet of Ty'r Brenin have no right to any other common.

23,159. Who has granted these leases?—I cannot say, my Lord, who has granted the leases.

23,160. You say a large building intended for an hotel has been recently built?—Yes.

23,161. You do not know to whom the proprietors of that hotel propose to pay rent?—No, my Lord.

23,162. Do you know to whom any of these people pay rent, if any?—Well, I should not like to mention names, and I have only the word of mouth, as it were.

23,163. Your contention is that the rights of the commoners are not now respected; is that it?—Yes.

23,164. Who is the lord of the manor?—Mr. Cameron.

23,165. Has Mr. Cameron anything to say to this, do you know?—I do not know.

23,166. Have you any further evidence to give?—Yes, as regards local rates. The local rates in the parish of Llangyfelach are heavy, but there is a particular rate which we as farmers consider a grievance, and that is the sanitary rate and special expenses rate. We have to pay those rates on farms whereon we have only cattle sheds and graze our cattle, and we consider it a hardship to pay those rates.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I should like to speak of a particular case of grievance that I know of in my neighbourhood. I am a farmer, and we have made our livelihood by farming, and we have farmed in the same place I dare say for about six or seven generations. This farm is in the parish of Llangyfelach and they are neighbours of mine. It is a farm of about 60 acres called Pen-y-fedw Ucha. I remember the owner living there. It was let after he sold it for 30*l.* and it has been sold twice since, and the last owner, who has just bought it within the last two or three years, has raised the rent to 40*l.* In my opinion it has been raised entirely on the farmer's labour, and on his good farming and improvement to the soil.

23,167. Would you say where that is?—It is in the parish of Llangyfelach, in the hamlet of Mawr.

23,168. What is the name of the farm?—Pen-y-fedw Ucha.

23,169. Who is the landlord?—Mr. Llewellyn Davies.

23,170. Have you any other case you wish to bring forward?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,171. As I understand, your point about the common is this, that houses are being built upon what was formerly common land?—Yes.

23,172. Upon parts of the common upon which you had the right to depasture your cattle?—Yes.

23,173. Are there enclosures?—Yes, there are streets in a way built there, and there are other enclosures certainly which are not built upon.

23,174. Do you think that the persons who have built these houses, and have made these enclosures are simply trespassers, encroachers upon the manor?—Yes, they are; they encroach upon the commoner's rights undoubtedly.

23,175. It is not a case of what is called approvement by the lord of the manor, Mr. Cameron?—I do not think he approves it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

23,176. If these people have simply built the houses without his consent, he would have his legal remedy, would he not?—Well, that may be.

23,177. Have you communicated with the lord of the manor pointing out the encroachments?—No, I have not.

23,178. I should like to know that. Probably Mr. Cameron, who is the lord of the manor, as I understand, has really approved under what is called the Statute of Merton; that, in fact, he has permitted this building?—Well, the commoners are not aware of it if it has been the case.

23,179. I do not quite understand this case. Do these people pay rent to anyone?—Yes.

23,180. Is this which you call the common waste of any manor?—Yes, it is the waste of the hamlet of Ty'r Brenin.

23,181. Have you been in the habit of depasturing your cattle, so far as you have been farming, in the neighbourhood there?—I appear for one of the commoners, and they have been in the habit.

23,182. Has there been any litigation about this?—Not that I am aware; but I am aware that everybody is not allowed to build there, only certain persons.

23,183. Has there been any interference with the rights of the commoners?—Only that those houses are built, and the encroachments, and it deprives the commoners of the right of grazing on the common, and the use of it in every way which is most convenient for the commoners there.

23,184. Supposing that this were waste of the manor, and supposing the lord of the manor is enclosing to the prejudice of the rights of the commoners, then the commoners have their remedy?—Thank you.

23,185. There is a new Act of Parliament, I ought to tell you, called the Law of Commons Amendment Act, 1893. Now an enclosure of any part of a common purporting to be made under the old statute by the lord of the manor is not valid unless it is made with the consent of the Board of Agriculture; so as to any future acts on the part of the landlord, if this bit of land is waste of the manor——?—Yes, it is waste of the manor.

23,186. The commoners have got a remedy?—Thank you.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,187. You say that you consider there are great hardships with regard to the sanitary rates of farms?—Yes.

23,188. Do you think that the farmers pay equally on the buildings just the same as they would in towns upon houses?—No, they do not.

23,189. What is the difference?—They only pay a certain amount on land, one-third of the actual rate on land.

23,190. And still you consider it a grievance?—Yes, we consider it a grievance to pay on land entirely.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

23,191. Can you tell us when the rent was raised upon the farm which you spoke of, Pen-y-fedw Ucha?—It was raised from 36*l.* to 40*l.* within the last three years.

23,192. And entirely on the tenant's improvements?—In my opinion.

23,193. Was that tenant compensated when the farm was sold, for what he had done, and the improvements he had made?—No.

23,194. No compensation whatever?—No. The improvement was in the land, the better cultivation of it.

23,195. Are you of opinion that a tenant should be compensated for a general improvement of the land, as well as in buildings erected?—Yes, I am of opinion he should be.

23,196. He cannot take up those improvements in a twelvemonths' notice?—No, he cannot.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,197. Have you any copy of the agreement used on any of the estates in your neighbourhood?—No, I have not a copy of the agreements.

23,198. Could this tenant claim nothing whatever according to the custom of the country?—Well, we have not a particular custom in that neighbourhood, but, I suppose, he could claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act for the improvement of the soil.

23,199. When did this occur, that the rent was advanced 40*l.*, after the sale?—It was advanced directly after the sale.

23,200. When was the sale?—About three or four years ago.

23,201. There was no claim made under the Act?—No, there was no claim made.

23,202. Did not the tenant consider he had any grounds for a claim?—Well, I do not believe he did consider it, but he considered it a hardship that the rent should be raised, because I believe it is more than the actual value of the farm, and he is a most energetic man.

23,203. I suppose you consider this is the ground of complaint against the Agricultural Holdings Act, that a man would have to leave his farm before he could get any claim?—Quite so.

23,204. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act unsatisfactory in any other sense in the district?—Well, I cannot say. I do not believe it has been ever exacted, or any claims made under it.

23,205. It is not utilised?—No, it is not utilised.

23,206. What is the cause?—Well, I cannot say.

23,207. You think the machinery is cumbersome, I suppose?—Well, yes, expensive and cumbersome.

23,208. You think it ought to be amended?—Yes, I think it ought to be more simple.

23,209. Have you any suggestions to make by way of amendment?—No, I have no suggestions to make.

23,210. You think it ought to be extended in the interests of the tenant farmers?—Yes, in the interests of the tenant farmers.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,211. You are a freeholder living on your own freehold, as I think you said for some generations?—Yes, I live on my father's.

23,212. Is this place, Pen-y-fedw Ucha, in your neighbourhood?—That is my neighbourhood.

23,213. You know the country?—Yes.

23,214. Can you tell me the specific improvements that were made?—Yes, in the soil. He farmed the land better altogether, and laid out the land to great advantage, and it has yielded more crops altogether, and grazes better.

23,215. Was there any reclamation of waste land?—No, I do not think so.

23,216. Any laying down of permanent pasture?—Yes.

23,217. Any making of fences?—Yes, he improved the fences to a great extent.

23,218. Who was the tenant, by-the-by?—William Jones.

23,219. Is he still there?—He is there still.

23,220. Is he aware of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—I cannot say that, but very probably he is.

23,221. I daresay you know the Act?—Yes, I have the Act.

23,222. Are you aware that under the first schedule he might have obtained compensation for such improvements as I have named?—No.

23,223. If made with the sanction of the landlord, he could claim compensation since 1883, I think, could he not?—I think so, but I do not believe he was aware of it.

23,224. Do you think that if the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, was published in Welsh, that the people would take more interest in it?—Yes; it would be of advantage to the Welsh farmers.

23,225. Were there any enlargements of buildings, or permanent improvements upon the land, other than laying down pasture?—No, I do not believe so—not other than laying down pasture and improving the fences.

23,226. Not the buildings?—Not the buildings.

23,227. It is not the custom of the country, I believe. Is it to your knowledge that it is the custom of the country in this part anywhere, that the tenant does repairs to the buildings?—No, I am not aware of any.

23,228. One other thing with regard to Pen-y-fedw Ucha. I suppose land not very distant from the works commands a higher value than that far away?—Yes.

23,229. The population has been increasing in the neighbourhood of this district?—Very little within the immediate district.

23,230. How far away is it from there to Morriston should you say?—Five miles—about four or five miles.

23,231. I want to take you for a moment to the encroachments on Loughor Common. Have you any interest in that district?—I appear for a commoner that has an interest.

23,232. You have not an interest yourself in that common?—No, not myself.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

23,233. I think you answered the question that you were not aware of any action that has been taken by commoners in respect of their rights?—No, I am not aware of any.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,234. Did any question with regard to this waste or common come before Mr. Justice Stirling in the Chancery Division?—I cannot say.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,235. Mr. Cameron is a very old gentleman and does not reside in the country, does he?—No.

23,236. I think we have not seen him for many years. As to the amount of the encroachments on Loughor Common can you speak of your own personal knowledge as to the number of houses built upon what you allege to have been common. I daresay about 100 to 150 houses. There are streets of houses built there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,237. Is there any court held in connection with this manor?—Not that I am aware. There may be. There are courts held by the Duke of Beaufort in my manor.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,238. Are there any copyholders?—I should think there are.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,239. You have given the name of the landlord of Pen-y-fedw Ucha. What is the name of the tenant?—William Jones.

Lord Kenyon.

23,240. Mr. Vincent asks you this question: "Are you aware that the question of the right to "this waste has been tried in the Law Courts?"—No, I am not aware of it.

23,241. "Did not the alleged commoners apply "for an injunction against Mr. Cameron." Do you know anything of that?—No, I do not.

23,242. Then you cannot answer the rest of these questions, I suppose—"Was not an interim injunction refused?'—No.

23,243. "Do you know that Mr. Cameron's "claim is that there are no rights of common "at all, and that he is the absolute owner?"—No, I do not.

23,244. You have not heard that?—No, I have never heard that before.

23,245. "Have you any personal connection "with the alleged common, or have you given "any evidence except upon hearsay?"—I give evidence on behalf of one of the commoners.

23,246. You have some personal connection with it?—Yes.

23,247. "Are you aware that the alleged "common is not in the hamlet of Ty'r Brenin "at all?"—No.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,248. Then these are questions put in by Mr. Pitt, the solicitor to Mr. Cameron: "Where do you live?"—Gellyfeddan, Llangyfelach.

23,249. "Do you own any land in the manor "in which you say these encroachments are "made?"—Not personally.

23,250. What is the name of the person you represent?—T. Jones Jenkins.

23,251. Is he a relation of your own?—Yes.

23,252. "Where does he live?"—Morriston.

23,253. "Does he own any land in the manor?" —Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,254. Has he been in the habit of depasturing his cattle on the common?—He is not a farmer, but the commoners do pasture there on the common.

23,255. But I am talking about Mr. Jenkins. Does he claim any rights?—Yes, he claims common rights for the tenants.

Lord Kenyon.

23,256. Does he let his land?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,257. Has his tenant been in the habit of depasturing cattle there?—Yes.

23,258. For how many years?—This tenant has been there only, I daresay, about nine years, and he has been in the habit of doing so during that time and his predecessor as well.

23,259. What is the name of the tenant's holding; what is the name of the farm?—Pencefnarda.

Lord Kenyon.

23,260. This is a further question by Mr. Pitt, "Where is the land situate?"—In the parish of Llandilo-Talybont; it is arable and pasture land.

23,261. Is this within the manor?—Within the manor: the boundary is with the common.

23,262. Is this Mr. Jenkins a relation of yours; is he your brother?—He is my brother.

23,263. You are aware of no action in a court of law?—No, my Lord, I am not aware of any.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Sydney Pitt called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 23,156, 26,701.

23,264. You are a member of the firm of Messrs. Pontifex, Hewitt and Pitt, solicitors to Mr. Cameron?—Yes.

23,265. Your firm practise at 16, St. Andrew's Street, Holborn Circus, London?—Yes.

23,266. You have heard Mr. Jenkins' statement and are prepared to rebut that statement now?—Yes. An action in the High Court of Justice was recently brought—about two years ago—by 15 persons claiming rights of common over the manor of Court-y-Carne for an injunction to restrain Mr. Cameron from enclosing any land. An application was made, or rather a motion for an interim injunction was made by William Lewis, who was originally the sole plaintiff, fully supported by evidence, and the motion was refused. The plaintiffs thereupon abandoned the action and admitted that Mr. Cameron was, as he claimed to be, the absolute owner of all the waste lands of the manor and that there were no rights of common.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,267. When was this?—About two years ago; within the last two years. The action was going on for some time, of course. It is a very small manor and the whole of the land in the manor is believed to have been acquired in the last one or two centuries by the predecessors in title of Mr. Cameron, so that, of course, they became absolutely entitled to any rights of common, if any there were at all previously, existing, and no rights of common subsequently can have been acquired except by prescription and none are claimed that I am aware of.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,268. What was the issue raised upon the affidavits?—They claimed rights of common by prescription.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,269. Who were the claimants?—They were people owning land within the manor.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,270. Freeholders?—Yes, some freeholders.

23,271. And some tenants of Mr. Cameron's?—No, no tenants of the land.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,272. Can you give me their names?—Yes, I can. It is a question of title, and I was summoned down here at a moment's notice to appear, after an intimation from the Commissioners, and, of course, I have no papers going into the matter. It would be inconvenient to go into the question partially.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,273. But all Sir John Llewelyn is asking you for, is the names of the plaintiffs in the action?—Yes, I can give the plaintiffs in the action: William Lewis, John Gibbs, John Williams, Sarah Clement, Annie Morgan, William Williams, David Jones, Thomas Davies, David Rees, John Evans, Margaret Evans, Gabriel Rees, Rees Penry, William Looker, John Looker, Edward Looker, and William Bennett.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

23,274. Was the defendant's case that these people had not exercised rights of common?—That was so.

23,275. It was simply a question of fact?—It was simply a question of fact.

23,276. Is that the writ which you have in your hand?—This is the statement of claim (handed in).

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,277. Are those people all people who are interested in what we have called hitherto common?—I do not know.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,278. All these messuages and lands are within the limits of the manor as I understand?—Yes, except only a small part.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,279. Can you tell us, as a matter of fact, whether the borderers have not used this common land as common land for the last 50 years?—To my belief not.

Lord Kenyon.

23,280. Was this a test action?—It is brought on behalf of all persons claiming rights over the common.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,281. As I understand it, what took place was this. The writ was issued on the 2nd of March 1892. That was followed by a statement of claim and then the plaintiffs moved for an interim injunction?—Yes.

23,282. The interim injunction was refused and then the plaintiffs discontinued?—That is so.

23,283. Therefore it never came to trial?—Well, it was practically treated in that way—it had practically the same effect as the trial of the action.

23,284. They put the claim in divers ways, both "as of right and without interruption as "appendant to their said messuages and lands "lying within the said manor common of pasture "for all the commonable cattle levant and "couchant in and upon their said lands," and alternatively they claim it under the Prescription Act, alleging first 30 years and then alleging alternatively 60 years for the 30. Then the issue, as I understand from you, was an issue of fact whether or not these people had depastured their cattle?—They raised the question as to whether they had any rights at all. It would be a question of course as to whether they had rights appendant.

23,285. Was it admitted that this was a manor?—Yes.

23,286. Then what did Mr. Justice Stirling say? On what grounds did he base his refusal? Did he affect to decide the whole question, or did he simply say, "I shall refuse the interim injunc-"tion and let the matter go to trial"?—I cannot say on what ground he based his refusal, but I suppose he came to the conclusion that there was no evidence brought before him to justify primâ facie the claim made out by the plaintiffs or to necessitate the grant of an interim injunction.

23,287. As a matter of fact?—As a matter of fact.

Mr. Seebohm.

I understand that the refusal of an interim injunction would simply mean that there was no very pressing case, would it not?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,288. It might or might not. As I understand, Mr. Pitt, both the plaintiffs and the defendants were practically content to try the issue on the interim injunction?—Well, it was not arranged beforehand, but the evidence was gone into very fully setting up the question of right and title as to it.

23,289. But the evidence was not oral evidence, I understand; it was affidavit evidence?—Yes.

23,290. Was the action settled?—The plaintiffs admitted——

23,291. They simply discontinued. There was no agreement come to between the plaintiffs and defendants?—They withdrew, or their solicitor did, in form afterwards. They came to the conclusion that they could not support it, and the action was settled afterwards. There was a settlement. Some of these people had encroached before, and then they had land, land was given to them.

Lord Kenyon.

23,292. Do you put this statement of claim in?—No, I do not put it in, my Lord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,293. With regard to these cottages that Mr. Jenkins has referred to, and the hotel and so on, Mr. Cameron did not, as a fact, approve of the encroachments, but simply exercised the ordinary right of demising his land?—That is so.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,294. Do we understand that there is no right of pasture exercised now, that no one puts his cattle on at all?—That is so. Of course cattle stray occasionally.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,295. "The plaintiffs here say that the plain-"tiffs and their predecessors in title have at all "times enjoyed as of right and without inter-"ruption as appendant to their said messuages "and lands" commonable rights. Was the defendants' case this, that the plaintiffs have no title to the land and messuages?—Oh, no. It was admitted, or at least it was not disputed, that they were the owners of the land, but it was denied that there were any rights appendant to such lands.

Lord Kenyon.

23,296. Is there any exercise of common rights now?—Not that I am aware of.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,297. The following is a question handed in by Mr. Burnie: "Do you from your personal "knowledge know, as a fact, that people do not "'turn their cattle out on the common now"?—I know it only from information that I have gathered in the course of obtaining evidence.

23,298. "And if they do, what, if any, action do you take"?—I could not answer that. I am up in London and I do not know exactly what the agent does. There are records going back for about a hundred years where fines have been paid for cattle straying on the lands and for people going and cutting rushes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,299. On the unenclosed part of the manor?—On the unenclosed part of the manor.

23,300. As a matter of fact are you aware whether there are cattle on the common at this moment or not?—I do not know.

23,301. I will call it "common"; I do not want to do so invidiously at all, but it always has been called "common" to my knowledge. As a matter of fact, you do not know whether the cattle are turned out or not?—I quite understand that Mr. Cameron would not take objection to allowing it, so long as his rights were not interfered with, but he is only tenant for life.

23,302. Is he not the lord of the manor?—He is only tenant for life, so that of course it would not prejudice the rights of the reversioners.

Lord Kenyon.

23,303. Mr. Jones Jenkins says, "The Gover- "nors of Queen Ann's Bounty have informed "me that the farm Pencefnarda has right of "pasturage over commons." Do you know whether that is so or not?—I do not. I should dispute it.

23,304. Mr. Vincent asks, "You have been "asked whether certain allegations were denied. "I suppose, as a fact, that no defence was ever "delivered, and that the interim proceedings "settled the whole question? Is that so"?—That is so.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,305. Could you say when the last court was held?—There are no courts held at all.

23,306. How did they collect the fines which were ordered to be paid?—They were paid to the lord. People applied for leave to cut rushes, and he granted them leave to do so upon payment of a certain fine. It was in the nature of a demise or license to do certain acts on his private land.

Lord Kenyon.

23,307. The Commissioners wish to have this statement of claim in the case of Lewis and others v. Cameron and others, put in. I suppose you have no objection?—I think not, my Lord. (The statement of claim handed in. Vide Appendix.)

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,308. What is the acreage of this land?—Speaking from memory I should say it is about 200 acres roughly. I may state that it is not in the hamlet of Ty'r Brenin as stated by the last witness. It is a manor of Court-y-Carne; it is a small manor.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,309. But in which hamlet is it? Is it in Loughor or in Ty'r Brenin?—I cannot say.

23,310. It is usually known by the name of Loughor Common?—That is what it is usually known as.

23,311. The manor of Court-y-Carne extends over a larger area than that?—That is so. Might I ask if any further evidence is to be given in respect of the manor?

Lord Kenyon.

23,312. That lies with you?—There will be no further evidence so far as Mr. Cameron is concerned.

23,313. So far as we know, there will be no further evidence from you, I understand?—No further evidence.

On the other hand, I cannot say as to what evidence there may be. We have had no notice of any further evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. H. A. CHAPMAN called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

23,314. You are the Mayor of Swansea?—I am.

See 5100–5.

23,315. You wish to give evidence respecting some common land at Plasmarl?—Yes, my Lord.

23,316. Would you proceed with your evidence?—It is a very large piece of ground that has just lately been brought into the borough by the Swansea Corporation Act, 1889. As I understand there are about seven or eight copyholders who have the rights over this common. The land is known as being in the fee of

Trewyddfa, situate in the parish of Llangyfelach, and it forms part of the manor of Pennard. One of our principal roads, the road to Morriston, goes through this common. At different times, as I understand, there have been people who have squatted there, and the agents of the Duke of Beaufort have claimed a very small sum—some very trifling sum—for a certain number of years, and this constituted, as it were, a freehold. Others again, as I understand, have squatted there and just made a sort of garden, and one or two outhouses, and a wall round it, and have paid no fees either to the Duke or anyone else, after having occupied it for, say, 12 years, or something of that kind, they have now constituted a freehold, and they are the owners of it. I understand it has been nobody's business to interfere with this matter, except, perhaps, the agents of the Duke, who made very small claims for fees, and, therefore, they have constituted the right of the Duke afterwards to grant leases. I say it has been exceedingly difficult to obtain any information with regard to this matter. As you can understand, it is not to the interest of those who have taken this part to give us any information. Then again, those who have a right to interfere, have told me personally that they have not cared to do so, to set themselves in opposition to the interests of the Duke. In fact they have preferred to let the matter go on rather than take any action in it. It seems to me that the right thing to do in the matter would be to have some court or some office whose right it would be to interfere, and to step in so as to prevent anything of this kind. Of course, I do not know the law upon the matter, or what is now the procedure for the purpose of taking up the matter. This is a very large piece of ground. I understand it is something about 70 acres at the present time. I have been told, that the land both at Trewyddfa and Treboeth is over 200 acres. I do not know how much of that has been taken, but I understand a portion of Morriston is built upon this land, so that the greater part of it, if my information is correct, has been taken away from the common. The corporation of Swansea having only just entered into it, they have thought it right to send me here to enter a protest against any further portion of the land being taken, and to prevent any further encroachment. It would be very beneficial to have sanitary arrangements for a plot of ground like that to be built upon, and which was in the immediate neighbourhood of, and is now enclosed in the borough.

23,317. Are you aware of that Act of Parliament which Mr. Brynmor Jones mentioned just now?—No, my Lord.

23,318. It has not actually come into effect, I think; it comes into effect on the 1st of January?—I am not aware of it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,319. It is in operation now. By the second section it is provided that "an enclosure, or ap- "provement of any part of a common purporting "to be made under the Statute of Merton and "the Statute of Westminster the second, or "either of such statutes, shall not be valid "unless it is made with the consent of the "Board of Agriculture." The third section is: "In giving or withholding their consent under "this Act, the Board shall have regard to the "same considerations"?—And who would set "that in motion, may I ask?

23,320. Well, it would be set in motion, I take it, in this way, that if any further encroachment or enclosure takes place upon this Plasmarl Common, and you, Mr. Mayor, were to become aware of that fact, it would be for you to bring it to the notice of the Board of Agriculture, I suppose?—I take it that would meet what we need in this matter, then. In the past the brinkers, or the old copyholders, have been afraid, to put it in plain words, to move in the matter, but I take it that as a corporation we would not have so much to fear, nor have so much interest at stake in setting in motion an Act of that kind which you have just suggested.

23,321. But, as I understand it, your point is that you wish to preserve this as an open space?—Oh, no; to preserve the rights which at the present time the corporation have; they have now certain rights over the land.

23,322. But take this waste of a manor. As I understand your point, the only rights ordinarily that would exist would be the rights of the persons, tenants of the manor, to exercise their rights and depasture their cattle upon it?—I do not know how much pasture there is there now. It might revert to pasture again in case the works were taken away, which Heaven forbid. But, still, I take it that we have certain rights over the surface of it as copyholders.

23,323. Who are copyholders of this manor?—I believe there are about six or seven, or eight, of which the corporation is one.

23,324. That I did not understand. The corporation has property within this manor, has it?—Yes. We are one of those that have rights. We have lately acquired it—not through the Act I spoke of. The Act I spoke of brought it within the borough, which also constitutes the claim that the corporation may have upon it, but through the kindness of the father of Sir John Llewelyn, the park of Cnapllwyd was given to the corporation, and our trustee, Mr. William Thomas, of Lan, is the one who should conserve our rights over this common land—rights that devolve with the park. It was a portion of those that contained rights of incorporation. I think that is right, Sir John?

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,325. I did not quite follow what you said?—I am speaking about the kindness of your late father; he presented us with a park, and that constituted our right then as one of the copyholders over this portion of ground.

Lord Kenyon.

23,326. I think, Mr. Mayor, this Act of Parliament very nearly fits in with your suggestions, does it not?—Yes, it does.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,327. I am not aware that the encroachments on the Treboeth and Plasmarl Commons have been large, have they?—It is very difficult to find those who have complaints.

23,328. Of course I am only speaking of recent years—within your memory?—Oh, yes, a good deal of land has been enclosed there, houses and gardens, and I believe some works have been erected upon it, and for a certainty the Great Western Railway Company has made a purchase, presumably from the Duke of Beaufort.

23,329. In respect of their works?—No, in respect of their railway.

23,330. In respect of their railway, I suppose you would hardly contend against the claims of the Duke?—The Great Western Railway from Swansea to Morriston has gone over that portion between the road and the canal.

23,331. You would hardly contend against that being done by someone. Railways must be made, even across wastes of manors?—Oh, yes, but what I contend is that it is not the Duke alone who has a right to receive payment for it.

23,332. With regard to encroachments for buildings, who in the first instance made those encroachments—squatters, or the Duke himself?—Well, it is difficult to obtain information, but I should think it first of all began with squatters. I understand that certainly within recent years the Duke has not granted leases. What it is beyond that I am not able to say, except that the land has been taken, and that the Duke, as I understand, is receiving the rents.

23,333. May I come back to the question I first put to you, perhaps not sufficiently clear. Are you aware of any squatters having made encroachments of recent years?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,334. One word about this Act of Parliament. I do not want you to think, from what I put to you, that the powers of the Board of Agriculture are greater than they really are. The effect of the Act is this, that before the lord can enclose the common land he must get the consent of the Board of Agriculture. If, then, there is any enclosure without the consent of the Board of Agriculture, any person interested may take his legal remedy, and then the lord would not be justified under the Statute of Merton?—But what would be the effect of the evil that has been in the past being continued in the future? That is to say, a person will just put up a wall (as has been done) and enclose a small piece of ground, and put a shed upon it, and by-and-by will enclose a bit more, and so on.

23,335. You say the corporation are copyholders of the manor?—One of them.

23,336. Then as one of the copyholders of the manor, you would have your legal remedy, and if it is attempted to justify on the ground that the Duke of Beaufort as lord of the manor has given his consent and approved under the Statute of Merton, the answer is that the Board of Agriculture has not given its consent, which would be a perfect answer. However, I do not think it is convenient to give legal advice on a purely hypothetical case?—I can quite see that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

23,337. I am only construing this Act in a general way?—I understand the Duke has also erected stones there, with his initials upon them, marking the boundary. I do not know whether that will entitle him to have possession of it after it has been there a certain number of years.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,338. Is it simply on the question of compensation that you have been wronged in this case, or is it that you wish to prevent the enclosures?—We desire to prevent any further encroachment upon the land by one single party. I do not know whether I am right, but I take it that the ownership of the land is just between the copyholders and the lord of the manor. Up to the present the lord of the manor, it seems to me, has received the whole of the benefit of the land that has been encroached upon, except in instances where those who have encroached have refused to pay the Duke, and have obtained possession of the property, as I understand some have.

23,339. I understand that, but there is a further question, is there not, as to how the advantage or the compensation should be divided between the Duke and the copyholders. Now do you understand that hitherto the copyholders have not received any compensation?—They have not received any.

23,340. Do you think the compensation that they should receive would be at all large? Would it be worth very much?—I take it that this estate being in the neighbourhood of Swansea, at the present time could not be worth much short of from 35,000*l.* to 50,000*l.* as building ground.

23,341. So that it is a point of considerable importance to the corporation—I mean as to pecuniary value—to what extent they have a right to participate in the advantage of any of these enclosures that have been made?—Yes, I think that is one thing that we should consider too.

Lord Kenyon.

23,342. One question is handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Are you aware that interference with squatters is sometimes regarded as a hardship"?—By the squatters I have no doubt.

The witness withdrew.

Lord Kenyon.

Do the Duke's representatives wish to make any rebutting statement?

Mr. Glynn Price

Yes, my Lord, I should wish to make a statement

Mr. F. H. Glynn Price called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

6042– 23,343. You are agent to the Duke of Beaufort?—Yes. I wish to rebut certain statements made by Mr. Hartland in his evidence given in London on the seventh day of the inquiry.

23,344. Have you anything to rebut in this statement of Mr. Chapman's?—It has come upon me rather suddenly, but I should like to state generally, that I have arranged for the Duke all the leases that have been granted in that district for the last 13 years, and that no land which has been enclosed during that time, or indeed within my recollection, has been leased.

23,345. Now you wish to rebut some evidence given in London?—Yes, it begins at question 6050 on the 7th day. There Mr. Hartland said with regard to the Swansea Vale Railway crossing certain streams and the River Tawe, that no further steps were taken by the Duke in the matter. I should like to state that the Railway Company took a conveyance of the beds of these streams, which was dated the 28th of December 1874.

23,346. Was that subsequent to this statement of Mr. Hartland's?—No, it was just about the time, I take it, when the railway was made.

23,347. Then you wish to rebut some other statement?—At question No. 6053 Mr. Hartland stated that the Duke was not a riparian proprietor, and that he granted a lease for the erection of a bridge, by the Guéret's Graigola Colliery Company, with a stipulation that they were not to take goods across, belonging to any one other than the Company. Now there was no lease granted. The bridge was erected under the agreement comprised in this letter dated 23rd January 1892, in which there is no restriction as to what should be carried over the bridge or who should carry it.

23,348. Then that statement is incorrect?—That is incorrect. I hand in the letter:—

Bridge at Clydach.

"Cardiff,

"Dear Sir, 23rd January 1892.

"I hereby undertake to pay the sum of 5*l.* (five pounds) annually from Michaelmas, 1890, during the time the above bridge is maintained. Hoping this undertaking will be sufficient,

"I am, dear Sir,

"Yours faithfully,

"L. Guéret.

"F. H. Glynn Price, Esq.,
Longlands Place, Swansea.

"P.S.—If you require this undertaking worded differently kindly let me know, and I am prepared to meet your views."

23,349. Then you wish to contradict a statement made in answer to Question 6058?—Yes. I wish to state that Mr. Hartland was utterly incorrect in his statement that 500*l.* was paid to the Duke of Beaufort in respect of the license to grant certain leases referred to there. The actual amount paid by Messrs. Calland to the Duke of Beaufort, as appears by the books, of which I have custody, was 1*l.* 1*s.*, and I would wish to point out here that the 1*l.* 1*s.* was not in respect of a license to grant a particular lease or two or three leases, but in respect of 76 leases which had been granted prior to the license being applied for.

23,350. Then they did not pay the Duke 500*l.* at all?—No, they paid 1*l.* 1*s.*

23,351. Then you have something to say as to Mr. Hartland's reply to question 6063?—I wish to put in a copy of the correspondence which passed relating to this matter, and I think that this correspondence will throw a different light upon what took place to that shadowed forth by Mr. Hartland in his remarks.

23,352. Which part of Mr. Hartland's statement do you refer to?—To the whole of his answer to question 6063. Would your Lordship like me to read the letters that passed?

23,353. I think, perhaps, the statement had better be read first. (Mr. Hartland's evidence as given in Q. 6063 was then read.) That is what you refer to?—That is what I refer to.

23,354. Do you put in the correspondence?—Yes. Would your Lordship like me to read it?

23,355. If you please?—The matter begins with a letter of the 6th of December 1878, as follows:—

"13, Castle Street, Swansea,

"Dear Sirs, 6th December 1878.

"I enclose herewith original lease from His Grace the Duke of Beaufort to Messrs. Richards and Williams of land, &c., at Graig, Trewyddfa, and shall be obliged if you will endorse thereupon a license for Messrs. Richards and Williams to underlease to Mr. David Owen, of Martin Street, Morriston, accountant, a portion of the land comprised in plot No. 2 on the plan endorsed on the lease, and also a second license for Mr. David Owen to demise the same premises to the Landore Permanent Benefit Building Society by way of mortgage.

"Pending the granting of the license may I trouble you to own the receipt of the lease.

"Yours truly,

"E. Austin Williams.

"Messrs.
"Watkins, Baker, Baylis & Baker,
"Solicitors,
"11 Sackville Street, Piccadilly."

The next letter is under date 7th December, 1888:—

"Richards and Williams' Lease.

"11, Sackville Street, London,

"Dear Sir, 7th December 1878.

"This lease with your letter is to hand, but we are unable to advise the Duke of Beaufort to grant the licenses for which you apply.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Experience has shown that when leasehold property is split up and underleased as you propose, that the original lessee disappears, and there is no one to pay the rent and to be responsible for the permanence of the covenants. The consequence is that the parties take the benefit but avoid the obligations of the lease and in consequence of some cases which have happened it has become necessary to decline giving authority so to deal with the property.

"What was done under the license granted in 1873? If it would be any accommodation to the parties that the old lease should be surrendered and two new ones granted that could probably be arranged. We should be glad to meet your client as far as possible, but underleasing is out of the question.

"Yours truly,

"Watkins, Baker, Baylis & Baker.

"E. A. Williams, Esq."

That is followed by another letter, dated the 1st of January 1879:—

"13, Castle Street, Swansea,

"Dear Sir, 1st January 1879.

"My clients, Messrs. Richards and Williams, do not feel disposed to go to the expense of surrendering their lease and having fresh ones granted as proposed at our interview and they desired for the present to have their lease returned. Will you have the kindness to return it at your earliest convenience?

"I have strongly advised these parties to carry out what you and I suggested should be done, but they either do not feel disposed to do so or do not care to go to the expense.

"Wishing you the compliments of the season,

"I am, dear Sir,

"Yours faithfully,

"E. Austin Williams.

"C. Baker, Esq."

The next letter is one dated the 3rd of January, 1879:—

23,356. Do you think you could give us the substance of these letters, as we have several other witnesses?—I should like to read this next one if you will permit me, because it was upon this, I think, that Mr. Hartland made his statement in answer to question 6168. He construed this letter I take it into a threat according to that answer, and, therefore, I should like to read the letter, as it appears rather differently with the letters preceding and following it than it does when taken by itself:—

"Richards and Williams.

"11, Sackville Street, London,

"Dear Sir, 3rd January 1879.

"I return you this lease as requested. It must be understood that no breach of covenant as to assigning or underleasing will be allowed.

"Yours truly,

"C. Baker.

"E. A. Williams, Esq.,

"Swansea."

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The remaining letters are as follows:—

Richards and Williams.

"13, Castle Street, Swansea,

"Dear Sir, 4th January 1879.

"I have received this lease, for which I am obliged. I am sorry that you have been so bothered in the matter.

"Yours faithfully,

"E. Austin Williams.

"C. Baker, Esq."

(25/1867.)

"Swansea,

"Dear Sir, 8th January 1879.

"I forward Messrs. Richards and Williams' lease for license to demise by way of mortgage to the Morriston Provident Building Society. This lease has been before you on a previous occasion; it was left at my office today by Mr. Hartland.

"Yours truly,

"Chas. Baker, Esq. Fras. Price."

Richards and Williams' Lease.

"11, Sackville Street, London,

"Dear Sir, 11th January 1879.

"Mr. Price has sent us this lease with instructions for a license to demise by way of mortgage. We have already been in correspondence with Mr. E. A. Williams on this subject, and have explained to him that we can only prepare a license to assign and not to demise. If parties take the benefit of the property they must also undertake its responsibilities. Awaiting your further instructions,

"We are, Dear Sirs,

"Yours truly,

"Watkins, Baker, Baylis & Baker.

"Messrs. Hartland, Swansea."

Richards and Williams' Lease.

"11, Sackville Street, London,

"Dear Sirs, 18th January 1879.

"We are waiting your instructions in this matter.

"Yours truly,

"Watkins, Baker, Baylis & Baker

"Messrs. Hartland."

"Morriston Collieries,

"Near Swansea,

"Dear Sir, 24th January 1879.

"If I understand the application of Messrs. John Richards and William Williams, the piece of land divided into three parts (not equally), they want three leases, one for William Williams at a rent of 3*l.* 3*s.*, one to David Owens, rent 1*l.* 1*s.*, and one to William John Lewis, rent 1*l.* 1*s.*, one lease to John Richards and William Williams on the piece of land coloured red, jointly at a rent of 1*l.* 1*s.* They having underlet this under a previous lease to the parties named in the underleases they will be required to grant new underleases to those parties, and they presume you will grant licenses for their doing so, the exact measurements they must get to put on the new leases. I will let my surveyor see to this to assist Mr. Price. By this arrangement there will be no difficulty as to the payment of the ground rent as they get more than they pay for coloured red.

"Swansea,

"Dear Sir, 25th February 1879.

"I am in receipt of yours of yesterday's date, stating that they propose surrendering their lease dated 23rd July 1867 (25/1867) and taking four new leases for 60 years at 6*l.* 6*s.* a year instead of 5*l.* 5*s.*

"The drafts, together with the plans, have come safe to hand. I will have the plans put upon the skins as soon as possible and send them to you.

"Yours truly,

"Chas. Baker, Esq. Fras. Price."

23,357. Have you anything further to rebut?—Then in answer to question 6106, Mr. Hartland stated that only building leases for 60 years were granted by the Duke. I should like to make it clear that from 1888 down to the present time the leases have been for a term of 99 years.

23,358. Are the covenants all of them of a very onerous description?—I consider not, I think they are usual.

23,359. Then you wish to say something more with regard to question 6391?—I understand that the corporation have handed in a copy of the deed; therefore, perhaps, it will not be necessary to go into the matter, but I have a plan here on the Ordnance scale of 25 inches to the mile, showing where the line CD mentioned in the deed crosses the dock. It may be of some use to the Commissioners, and I will put it in (handing in plan).

23,360. Is there anything further you wish to say?—No, I have nothing further.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,361. There is very little difference of fact between you and Mr. Hartland with regard to these Ynispenllwch tinplate works?—It was the Guéret's Graigola Colliery that I referred to. I have not raised any point on the previous question.

23,362. The only difference between you and Mr. Hartland is, as to the alleged stipulation that the lessees were not to take across goods belonging to anyone else?—That is so, and as to the question of a lease having been granted; as no lease was granted.

23,363. Then with regard to the answer to question 6058, do you say that Messrs. Calland had not to pay any fine at all?—I say they had to pay 1*l.* 1*s.* fine, but not 500*l.*

23,364. That 1*l.* 1*s.* was for the cost of granting the license?—As I read it here, it says that they were compelled to pay a fine of 500*l.* and the costs of granting the license.

23,365. Do you know whether or not any demand was made for a fine of a considerable amount?—Not more than 1*l.* 1*s.* and the cost of granting the license.

23,366. With regard to the case of the lease of part of Trewyddfa, as I understood the correspondence, Mr. Baker did refuse to grant a license to underlet?—Yes, that is so.

23,367. He did refuse, and that was Mr. Hartland's point?—The correspondence shows exactly what took place.

23,368. The ground of it I understand was that it was against the interest of the Duke?—Yes, I understand that probably was the case.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,369. You say that there have been no leases granted?—No.

23,370. Have any houses been built without leases?—There may have been some, very few. As a rule people like to have a lease when they build.

23,371. It is rather a strange thing that anyone should build a house on land without any security?—Such things do happen sometimes. It rather shows, I think, the confidence that a person who builds a house without a lease, has in the landlord when he does so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,372. Who made the railway over the Trewyddfa?—The Great Western Railway Company.

23,373. Did they pay for the land?—Yes.

23,374. Did they pay it into court?—No, I think they paid the Duke. It was a very small piece of waste that they took.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

23,375. Was any claim made by the owners at that time?—Not to my knowledge.

23,376. With regard to the buildings on Trewyddfa, do the tenants pay rent to the Duke?—In most cases. Most buildings are now being put up under leases.

23,377. Now?—Yes.

23,378. But the old ones?—Oh, yes, they pay small rents to the Duke for many of them.

23,379. Were they made in the nature of encroachments off the common without the sanction of the Duke, or with the sanction of the Duke?—The greater part of them were made by lessees of the Duke who held land in the neighbourhood, and were working the Duke's collieries, and they were made to supply house accommodation for the people who were then engaged in those works and in the collieries.

23,380. At that time when a house was built, they begin at once to pay rent to the Duke, or not?—The lessees of the collieries and the works paid some small amount; I think, speaking from memory, it was about 2*s.* a house per annum which was paid to the Duke.

23,381. Do you sanction any enclosures now on the commons?—Occasionally small ones, but not to any great extent. I should say I do not encourage any one to enclose. If a man encloses, I hardly like to pull down his enclosure, because it might cause a hardship after he has laid out money in putting up fences and that kind of thing.

23,382. How soon do you obtain a rent?—Generally as soon as I notice the enclosure has been made.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,383. Are you aware of the Act that has been recently passed?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

23,384. Do you think that that will interfere with the previous course of action on the estate?—No, I think not.

23,385. You think that you will have under that Act now to get the consent of the Board of Agriculture to each one of these leases, to every encroachment, in fact?—Yes; well, they are very few, as I have stated, and I think the Board of Agriculture would very probably be satisfied that they were for the benefit of the public generally, and so would grant their consent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The Act is not retrospective.

Mr. Seebohm.

No, I mean as to the future.

23,386. So far as the management of this particular estate is concerned, you do not disapprove of the interference of the third party, the Board of Agriculture, in such cases?—Of course, it will rather complicate matters, but I think it will not have any serious effect upon the procedure.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,387. In respect of these enclosures or encroachments which you speak of, have you any agreement with the tenants as to them?—Generally a verbal agreement.

23,388. Generally a verbal agreement?—Yes.

23,389. Not in the nature of a lease or a written agreement?—Not as a rule. In some cases we do. There is no invariable rule.

Lord Kenyon.

23,390. Have you anything further to add?—I put it in the form of lease which is usually granted by the Duke with regard to building properties. (Document produced.)

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Osborne Sheppard called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

23,391. You have been 27 years agent for Mr. Vaughan Lee and others?—Agent for the Vaughan and Vaughan Lee estates and others.

23,392. For what district do you speak?—For Glamorganshire, part of Breconshire bordering on Glamorgan, and part of Carmarthenshire. I include in my evidence the property of Mrs. Gwyn, of Dyffryn.

23,393. Will you specify the acreage of the estates to which your evidence refers?—About 15,000 acres in Glamorganshire, about 4,600 in Breconshire, and 1,130 acres in Carmarthenshire, altogether about 20,000 acres.

23,394. As to sheep runs, have you anything to say?—The rights of pasture over sheep runs are usually appurtenant to the farms bordering on the mountain runs, and the right of pasturage is vested in the tenants of the farms, who are expected to turn out only the cattle and sheep which can be wintered on their farms.

23,395. What is the effect on the rents of adjacent farms?—Naturally being appurtenant to the farm, and the right vested in the tenant by reason of his tenancy, it would tend to increase the rent of the farm.

23,396. Then as to its effect on the farmers?—It enables a tenant of a farm to keep a larger flock of sheep than he otherwise could do, and of course more cattle.

23,397. Have you anything to say about management where land is held by small or large landowners?—I think that so much depends on circumstances. As a rule large estates are better managed than small. With regard to non-resident landlords, if the management of their property is entrusted to able agents, I do not think their not being resident has the smallest effect.

23,398. And as to differences of creed or politics or language?—So far as my experience goes it does not make the smallest difference. On the properties of which I have the management, almost all the tenants (I think there are very few exceptions) are Nonconformists. With regard to their politics I cannot speak. Almost without exception they are Welsh, I do not think there are any English tenants.

23,399. With regard to the capacity of agents, what have you to say?—With regard to that, of course it depends very much upon the owners of the land. They are not likely to employ agents who are not capable of managing their property.

23,400. Then what is the usual date of entry?—There are three terms, February 2nd, March 25th, and September 29th.

23,401. What are the terms of tenancy?—As a rule the tenancy is from year to year, either by agreement or parole, now chiefly parole. On the Dyffryn estate there is a very considerable area as to which some years ago leases were granted by Mr. Gwyn, which amounts almost to a quarter of the whole estate. The leases are in some cases for very long terms. There is one of 99 years, one of 80 years, nine of 70 years, five are for lives, eight are for 60 years, and four are for 21 years; altogether 28 leases. The area in lease is 2,028 acres. That estate is in Glamorganshire, Breconshire, and Carmarthenshire.

23,402. How does the rent compare with that of the year-to-year tenants?—It is very similar. I do not think it makes the smallest difference.

23,403. Would they receive abatements when the year-to-year tenants receive abatements?—They have received abatements, and not only have they received abatements, but in many cases they have been assisted in repairs for which they were responsible.

23,404. They are repairing leases?—They are repairing leases. Of course in these long terms they naturally would be.

23,405. Do you think they are better off under those leases?—No, I cannot say that they are. I do not think they are. Some of them have offered to give up their leases and revert to the year-to-year tenancy.

23,406. Is there any general demand for leases?—None that I am aware of.

23,407. Is the yearly tenancy considered secure?—Certainly, perfectly secure. I do not know whether you would like me to hand in this statement of particulars of the Dyffryn leases. (Witness handed in a tabular list of 28 leases, of which 1 was for a term of 99 years, 1 for 80, 9 for 70, 8 for 60, 4 for 21, and 5 for lives.)

23,408. How do the leaseholders take care of their buildings?—Well, that I think is the difficulty. The buildings are not as well cared for under leases as they are, of course, where the landlord is responsible for repairs.

23,409. Are changes of tenancy frequent?—On the properties of which I have the management they are not at all frequent.

23,410. Do the members of the family succeed?—As a rule. If there is a son, or a married daughter, who wishes to take the farm, it is invariably offered to them.

23,411. Do you know any cases of hardship on these estates?—None whatever.

23,412. Have you anything to say about the resumption of occupation, or about timber cutting?—Where there is any resumption of occupation, the tenants are compensated, and the compensation usually given to them is very much in excess of the ordinary rental of the farm.

23,413. Is notice given?—Yes, a reasonable notice. Sometimes, of course, small pieces of land are taken up for building, just a few yards. Then, perhaps, the notice will not be very long.

23,414. Have you had any difficulty with regard to that?—None whatever.

23,415. As to agreements?—There are some agreements, but as a rule I think they are now parole agreements. Father succeeds son, and there is no agreement given to the son. I hand in a copy of each of the agreements of the estates which I represent. (Four agreements were handed in.)

23,416. Do they contain any oppressive clauses?—None whatever.

23,417. Any penalising clauses?—None.

23,418. And you invariably give a copy of the agreement?—Certainly.

23,419. How is the rent fixed?—By valuation.

23,420. At a gross sum?—At a gross sum.

23,421. Is the rent uniform?—I think so. I have never had any complaint that it is not so.

23,422. Is the rent of the smaller holdings higher?—Slightly higher. Of course the cost of maintenance of buildings accounts for that.

23,423. Are there any other services required of the tenants?—None, with the exception of the haulage of materials when the landlord repairs.

23,424. Is that the usual custom?—I think it is the invariable custom—almost invariable. In some cases the landlord does haulage. In some cases where a tenant has not any horses, the landlord would do the haulage. No tenant would have to pay for haulage. If he could not do it himself he would not be expected to find it.

23,425. Have you had any complaints about haulage?—None at all. The tenants are always perfectly ready to do the haulage.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,426. Have you any instance of compensation for haulage in the case of a tenant leaving soon after repairing?—I have compensated a tenant where he has left, but it has always been where he has left of his own accord. Oh, yes, I have done that.

23,427. Then the farms, you say, are not let to the highest bidder?—Certainly not. I never let a farm to the highest bidder.

23,428. Have you had any cases of arbitration as to rent?—No, none at all.

23,429. Has it ever been demanded?—No, never.

23,430. How are the rents varied?—The rent is varied by agreement, if it varies at all. I have compared the present rental of a portion of the Vaughan Lee estate, amounting to about 3,400 acres, with the rental of 50 years ago, and I find that on that large area the difference in favour of present rental is 50*l.* 10*s.* In six cases the rents are the same, in four they are slightly higher, in five they are lower, and in one the area has been slightly increased by purchase, and the rent has been slightly increased. I hand in a statement giving these particulars.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,431. Will you give us the total rent now of the 3,500 acres?—The present rent is 999*l.* 10*s.* The rent 50 years ago was 949*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

23,432. Have you had any reductions or abatements made on these estates?—Oh, yes. With regard to the other properties, the Rheola estate, Mr. Vaughan's estate, I cannot make the same comparison, for this reason, that when the estate was purchased in 1815, the whole of the property was let at nominal rents, amounting to 10*d.* an acre. These rents were for lives, and as they fell in, of course the rents were re-adjusted to their present rental. But before the property was purchased, the purchaser engaged a valuer to value the estate. That was in 1814, the year before the purchase, and the value then put upon this area was 1,226*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* The present rental is 988*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*, so that we have not got up to the rental at which it was valued in 1814 by over 200*l.* There are some portions of this that have been planted and some that have been built over. In that case I have adopted the valuation of 1814, and have so entered it here, of course I did not include the building rents. The same remarks apply to the Dyffryn estate; I find the same state of things existing there. 2,030 acres in 1818 were let at 138*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, that amounts to 1*s.* 4*d.* an acre. I saw that Mr. Ellis in his evidence at Bala stated that the rent roll of Glamorganshire had increased 36 per cent. If this state of things existed on many properties, I am only surprised that the increase is not very much larger. I do not know whether it would interest the Commissioners to look at some of these old leases, they are relics of the past. (The witness handed in several leases.) Then with regard to abatements, I, perhaps, may mention other properties. Here is a property belonging to the Vaughan Lee estate, which was purchased in 1864, something, over 1,000 acres. The rental when it was purchased was 453*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*—the farm rental—it is now 394*l.* 17*s.* The gross rental per acre is 8*s.* 4*d.* In 1872 the same owner purchased an estate in the neighbourhood of Llantrissant from Lord Shrewsbury. The rent roll of that was 285*l.* It is now 233*l.*, so there has been a considerable falling off there.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,433. With regard to notice for abatements, do you give notice?—No; there has been no notice given, but there has only been one abatement. I prefer permanent reductions to abatements because a tenant gets the benefit, which he does not get from abatements.

23,434. In the rates, you mean?—He gets abatements in the rates; but tenants know perfectly well that if it is inconvenient to pay the rent on the rent day, they will get time given them. I have constantly told tenants not to sell their stock, if the markets are low, in order to meet their rents. I have always given them reasonable time.

23,435. You say there have been slight fluctuations in rent as matter of arrangement between the agent and the tenant?—That is so.

23,436. But there has been no revaluation of the estate within the past 50 years?—There has been no revaluation of any sort or kind.

23,437. What do you say have been the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent?—The fall in the value of wool is, I think, the chief produce of this district which has affected rents. There have, of course, been times of depression and greater prosperity, but up to 1873 the rise in price of meat was very pronounced. From then till 1885 prices fell off slightly, still remaining high. From that time until now prices have fallen and are now probably about the same as they were 40 years ago, but higher than 50 years ago. Poultry, eggs, and butter have advanced very considerably in price; so also have live stock and horses.

23,438. Then, your rent days?—The rents that fall due on the 25th March are generally received in July, and the September rents in December.

23,439. Now as to the preferential claim for rent; what is your opinion as to that?—I think it has a very beneficial effect upon the tenant, because if it did not exist owners of land would naturally collect their rents quarterly, and would not give the tenants the long credit which they give now.

23,440. They might even exact a beforehand rent?—Yes.

23,441. As they do in Scotland, I understand?—Yes, in some cases.

23,442. As to other charges on land what do you say?—Tithes, land tax, and local rates are usually paid by the tenant; chief rents and income tax, of course, by the landlord.

23,443. Then as to local rates?—That varies very considerably. In some districts I have no doubt the rates have been higher, but I have carefully examined the rates of the Neath Union, which is the union in which I live, and in which a large portion of this property is situated, and

I have carefully analysed it. I have gone back from 1870 up to last year, and taken periods of seven years. I find that out of 22 parishes, in 11 the rates are lower, 2 are about the same, and 9 are slightly higher. Of course, there is no doubt the amount of money spent is very considerably larger, but then the increase in the rateable value has been so enormous that it accounts for the fall in the rates. The rateable value in the Neath Union has varied from 124,651*l.* in 1870 to its present rateable value of 228,906*l.*

23,444. What do you say about consolidation?—I do not think there has been any consolidation of late years. There has been consolidation many years ago in the case of some upland farms; small farms have been put together to avoid the expense of buildings.

23,445. What tendency has that on the rent?—It would tend rather to lower the rent, because the landlord would, of course, be relieved of the responsibility of buildings, and he would naturally let the land slightly lower than he otherwise would.

23,446. It would decrease the population, would it not?—Yes, by the vacated farms.

23,447. And as to subdivision?—There has been some subdivision for accommodation purposes but for nothing else.

23,448. Is there any sub-letting?—It occurs occasionally, and when it does occur, the rent paid by the sub-tenant to the tenant is very different to what he pays the landlord.

23,449. As to labour, what do you say?—In this district it is certainly dear, and at some times it is scarce.

23,450. Is it good?—I should say not so good now as it was 30 years ago.

23,451. Are the men young as a rule?—Young men and very old men chiefly.

23,452. How are the fences and ditches kept?—Fairly; perhaps not quite so well as they used to be.

23,453. Is land going out of cultivation?—No land has gone out of cultivation, but a considerable area of land has been laid down to grass which was formerly ploughed.

23,454. Is that because it pays better?—Certainly. Corn growing in this country is certainly not a success.

23,455. Is there any reclamation?—Very little reclamation, and where there has been reclamation it has been invariably done by the landlord.

23,456. And you say rootcrops are about the same now as formerly?—Yes, possibly a slight decrease.

23,457. Is there any fallowing; I suppose not?—Not much.

23,458. You say the effect of such changes as there have been is good on the whole?—Certainly.

23,459. What do you say about improvements?—All improvements of a permanent nature are done by the landlord.

23,460. If the tenant did them would he be compensated?—Certainly, if he left his farm.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,461. You say the tenant usually does the haulage?—Yes.

23,462. Then as to drainage?—There is very little drainage done.

23,463. You say buildings for stock are provided by the landlord, and that the landlord supplies gates and posts, and that in the case of co-operation in improvements, the tenant gets the full benefit of the outlay?—Certainly.

23,464. How, out of his outlay?—Out of his outlay, certainly.

23,465. Is there any custom in this country?—There is a very good custom in East Glamorgan. The custom in this part, West Glamorgan, is not so well defined.

23,466. Does that apply to your estates?—The property I speak for lies in both. A portion of it is in East Glamorgan, but the greater portion is in West Glamorgan.

23,467. You think that custom is an exceedingly good custom?—The East Glamorgan custom is remarkably good.

23,468. We had a great deal of evidence about it when we were here before. Are there any contracts out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—None.

23,469. Or out of the custom of the country?—Nor out of the custom of the country.

23,470. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act thought much of?—It is a perfect dead letter in this country.

23,471. Would consent to improvements be given?—Certainly, if applied for.

23,472. Would you describe the custom of the country with relation to incoming tenants and outgoing tenants? I think we have heard all about it before?—All crops are taken over by the incoming tenant and all tillages are paid for.

23,473. And hay and straw are not sold off without consent?—No.

23,474. Do you know of any case of inadequate compensation?—I have not met with any.

23,475. Is there any tenant right—any tenant's interest?—No, certainly not.

23,476. What is the rule as to the sheep on the runs?—In the case of unfenced mountain sheep farms it is essential that an incoming tenant should purchase a portion of the flock of the outgoer which are settled on the farm, but there is no agreement with regard to that. It is left entirely to be arranged between the incomer and the outgoer. The incomer will always pay more by several shillings a head for sheep, that have been settled upon the mountain, than any outsider would give.

23,477. Suppose the incoming tenant refused to take over the sheep, who would have to take them?—The incoming tenant never would do that. It takes some time to settle sheep upon an unfenced mountain.

23,478. As to game, have you any observations to make upon that?—Game is preserved but not to excess.

23,479. What do you think is the effect of game preserving on the relations between landlord and tenant?—I think it rather brings the landlord and tenant together; I think it has a beneficial effect.

23,480. Can you give us the proportion borne by offences against the game laws to other offences in your petty sessional district?—Yes. I have a statement here which shows it:—

"STATEMENT of number of cases heard against all offences, against the game laws, against property, and against the person, at the Neath county Police Court, in the county of Glamorgan, and at the Ystradgunlais Police Court in the County of Brecon, from the 25th day of September 1890 to the 25th day of September 1893.

Neath.

Deduct:
Number against game laws	-	50
Do. property	-	130
Do. person	-	266
			446
			1,959

Proportion, game to property about one-third; to person, about one-fifth.

Ystradgunlais.

Number of cases, all offences	-	-	513
Deduct:
Number against game laws	-	23
Do. property	-	40
Do. person -	-	115
			178
			335

Proportion, game to property about one-half; to person, one-fifth.

23,481. As to the law of trespass, do you think that requires any alteration?—I think that might be strengthened. Considerable mischief is done at times by trespass for blackberries, mushrooms, and nuts.

23,482. There have been a great many mushrooms this year?—Oh, yes; mushrooms have been a perfect curse to the country this year.

23,483. As to poultry farming, what have you to say?—All farmers keep poultry, but I think they might devote more attention to it. It is a branch of farming which pays remarkably well in this district, and I think more might be made of it. In those old leases I think you will find that a couple of geese, and a couple of pullets and a couple of chickens were valued at 3*s.* 6*d.* 1*l.* or rather more than 1*l.* would represent their value in the present day.

23,484. What do you say about railway rates?—I think the preferential rates given by the railway companies to sea-borne goods have a very detrimental effect upon the produce of this country.

23,485. You mean for foreign goods?—For foreign goods. Things are taken cheaper from Liverpool to London than probably they would be from here to Cardiff—the same goods.

23,486. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers?—I think the only co-operation I know of is at sheep-shearing time; they all help one another then.

23,487. Who pays insurance?—Upon the properties of which I have the management the insurance on buildings is all paid by the landlord. In some instances I believe tenants insure their crops, but very slightly.

23,488. Do you know of any combination among landlords to resist a particular class of tenant?—Certainly not; I never heard of it.

23,489. Are the benefit societies of any use?—Yes, I think the farmers to a great extent belong to benefit societies, but I do not think many of them insure their lives.

23,490. Are the societies in your district sound?—I think so.

23,491. There have been no cases of their breaking?—With building societies there have been, but not benefit societies.

23,492. As to peasant proprietors, have you anything to say?—There are a few of them in the district, but very few. I think, if anything, they have rather increased than otherwise.

23,493. Is there a strong desire among farmers to become tenant proprietors?—No, not in this district.

23,494. What is the condition of such freeholders compared with the yearly tenants?—Very much the same. I am afraid in many cases their condition is hardly as good, from their having had to borrow money to pay for the farm.

23,495. Most of the outdoor work is done, you say, by the tenant farmers—the men themselves?—Yes, and the women chiefly do the indoor work.

23,496. And the children help?—The children help where there are children.

23,497. They do not receive wages, I suppose?—No, I presume not.

23,498. But are paid in some other way?—They are paid in another way, and when they marry the parents on both sides usually join together and help them to stock their farm.

23,499. Do you think the rents could be paid if the children received wages?—Well, there are many cases in which there are no children, and labour is employed, and I cannot see that there is any difference; I think they are very much on the same footing.

23,500. What have you to say with regard to the relations between landlord and tenant?—With regard to the relations between landlord and tenant as they exist now in this part of the country, I think they are exceptionally good. Of course there may be some few cases of hardship, but that does not exist upon large estates, and I think the most certain way of destroying the good feeling which now exists, would be to interfere with the freedom of contract which now exists between landlord and tenant.

23,501. Is there any general desire for change amongst the farmers?—As far as I know, certainly not.

23,502. Can you say from your experience whether the relations between landlord and tenant in Wales, are more friendly in Wales than in England and Scotland?—I should say decidedly so. I have had considerable experience both in Scotland and England; I have the management of large estates in England as well, and I certainly think that the relationship between landlord and tenant is very much closer in Wales, than it is in either of those countries.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,503. Which part of England?—In Somersetshire and Wiltshire.

Lord Kenyon.

23,504. How would you account for that?—I think an English tenant and certainly a Scotch tenant looks upon it more as a matter of business; and I think there is a sort of clannish feeling between landlord and tenant in Wales which does not exist in other countries.

23,505. Do you think the Welsh farmer is more rooted to the soil than the English tenant?—Yes, I think he is decidedly so.

23,506. Have you anything to say as to expenditure?—I have gone very carefully into the question of repairs during the last 25 years, and I find that the amount of repairs and reconstructing (because there has been a good deal of reconstruction) comes to 17 per cent. of the rental.

23,507. You have considered the question of a land court, I suppose?—Not seriously; I hope we shall never have that; but if it was to come I feel perfectly certain it would be in many cases as much a dead letter as the Agricultural Holdings Act.

23,508. Have you seen Mr. Ellis's last Bill?—No, I have not read it.

23,509. Have you anything further to add?—I do not know whether it would interest you, but I have prepared a table showing the various prices of produce during the past 50 years in some cases.

23,510. I think we should very much like to have that in?—This is the table.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,511. In the statistics you have given us of the offences in the petty sessional district, what offences have you included under the head of offences against the game laws?—All offences against the game laws.

23,512. But what?—Trespass in pursuit of game—all offences that have been brought before the petty sessional courts. I have not prepared that table myself; the clerk to the magistrates prepared it for me. I asked him to go carefully into the matter. Of course I cannot vouch for it, but I believe it to be perfectly accurate; I have no reason to think it would be otherwise.

23,513. I see you put in two agreements, one on Mr. Vaughan Lee's estate and the other on

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Mrs. Gwyn's estate. In what part of the county is the Vaughan Lee estate. I did not quite gather that?—It lies all over Glamorganshire, east and west. Some of it is in the neighbourhood of Cardiff, and some of it is in the neighbourhood of Swansea.

23,514. Take the agreement you put in, the one of 1868, between yourself and Mr. John Glasbrook: does the custom of Glamorgan apply to that?—The custom of West Glamorgan would apply to that. I wish the East Glamorgan custom existed in West Glamorgan. It is a remarkably good one.

23,515. In the old leases that you put in, I notice that one of them is certainly before 1814, which was the date you gave?—Oh, yes.

23,516. I see there that although the rents are low, there was a considerable fine paid as a consideration for the lease?—Only on death.

23,517. No; as a consideration on taking the lease?—Oh, yes, a consideration certainly. It amounted to buying the farm for a short time. It is 100*l.*, I think, in one case.

23,518. In the one I have here it is 30*l.*?—That is a small one.

23,519. The other one I see was 84*l.* Now, in the statistics you gave about rent, did you include anything in respect of the 84*l.*?—Oh, no, certainly not.

23,520. Not any interest on the 84*l.*?—No, certainly not, simply the bare rent. I think if you put that at five per cent. you will not make much out of it.

23,521. No. Have you got the records of the estate?—Yes, I can go back for some time.

23,522. How far back do you find leases in this form. I see here first there is the fine to be payable upon the death of a tenant; then there is duty; there is a heriot; suit of mill and suit of court. The court at which the tenant is to do suit is the Court of Resolven?—Yes, of which Lord Vernon was the lord of the manor.

23,523. Lord Vernon was, I take it, lord of the manor?—He was lord of the manor. All those leases were granted by Lord Vernon, and not by Mr. Vaughan or his predecessors.

23,524. How far back do you find leases in this form for three lives?—I can hardly tell you. None have been granted during the time from 1814 to the present time.

23,525. None after 1814?—None after the purchase of the estate.

23,526. I see this is dated 1796?—They are all before the purchase of the estate.

23,527. I am asking as a matter of historical interest, what is the earliest lease for three lives which you find?—I am afraid I cannot tell you Those are the only two copies I have of them. They all exist somewhere. I cannot tell you where. They are the only ones I could find, and I thought they might interest the Commission.

23,528. Certainly, they are very interesting, Have you any other documents relating to the manor?—Yes. The manor was kept up as a manor till 1841 or 1842, I think.

23,529. Have you got the court rolls?—I have.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

23,530. How far do the court rolls go back?—I have not got the court rolls; I have got the rents paid to the Crown for the manor. There was a small rent, and I think I have some other records, but it is so long since I have seen them, that I cannot speak with regard to it. The manor has been allowed to lapse since 1841. The whole of the property belongs almost without exception to Mr. Vaughan; I think there are three farms in the manor which do not belong to Mr. Vaughan. With the exception of that the whole of the manor belongs to him, so that the court has not been kept up, I suppose, practically because there was no business at the court. It was a pure matter of form.

23,531. Was there no common or waste land?—None whatever. There were unenclosed mountains, but no common.

23,532. Were these tenants for three lives in the habit of depasturing their cattle upon these mountains?—Certainly, upon a portion of the mountain appurtenant to the farm, but then although it was unenclosed there were certain boundaries which they observed. There was no fence really, but they went up to a certain boundary which was defined, and they observed that boundary.

23,533. Then, as I understand it, the custom of the Rhysfa existed there?—Yes, that is so.

23,534. Can you find any documents to suggest to you the origin of that so-called custom?—I am afraid not. It exists in many parts of this country.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,535. You say there is a tendency to increase the sheep runs?—Not increase the sheep run. You misunderstood me altogether. It tends to increase the rent of the farm to which the sheep run is appurtenant.

23,536. Quite so. I understand that?—Of course a farm without a run would not be so valuable as a farm with a run, so that it does tend to increase rent.

23,537. Quite so, and you say that it would naturally be good?—Certainly, naturally.

23,538. I am pleased to find that you granted abatements to some tenants who held leases?—Yes, that has been so.

23,539. Do you see any reason why tenants who hold leases, should not have abatements as well as the other tenants?—I say it seems to me to be very generous of the grantor.

23,540. Quite so, but do you see any reason why a tenant who has a lease should not have an abatement as well as the others?—Well, it is very kind of the landlord to give it I think.

23,541. Yes?—It is very acceptable, no doubt; but then, you see, the rent under any circumstances, whatever happened, could not be raised. If the landlord wanted to raise the rent, of course, he could do nothing.

23,542. It is a security to the tenant, I quite admit?—Certainly.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

23,543. But do you consider that the rent is lower with tenants when they have leases, as a rule?—No, I do not say that. I do not say it is lower, but it is about the same.

23,544. Then there is no reason why they should not have an abatement. You have admitted it in many cases?—Yes, it has been so. I do not at all admit their right to ask for it.

23,545. Certainly not?—It is purely an act of generosity.

23,546. We have heard of a few cases, not very many, of that having happened?—There have been a good many.

23,547. When hauling is done by the tenants have you any period of exhaustion?—No, certainly not, but if a tenant does haulage and leaves his farm shortly afterwards I think he is entitled to compensation, and he would naturally get it. I have paid it.

23,548. Have you any reason to give why the tenants should have such a strong desire to acquire their holdings?—I do not think it exists in this part of the country. It does in many parts of Wales, I know, especially in Cardiganshire.

23,549. I think you say it does in your statement?—No, I say it does not exist. I think there is a misprint there; there is a "not" left out. I noticed that myself.

23,550. I understand. May I ask you, do landlords as a rule do much in the way of draining?—Not in this part of the country.

23,551. Do you not think it should be taken up more than it is?—It might be beneficial.

23,552. Is the tenant obliged to pay a larger rent? Some landlords make a charge for it?—Oh, no, in no case have I ever received a farthing for any improvement—no increase of rent or any per-centage for money.

23,553. But I think it would be of benefit to the landlord and to the tenant and also of benefit to the land?—Judicious drainage might be.

23,554. Have you done anything to induce the West Glamorgan people to adopt the East Glamorgan custom?—No, I cannot say that I have.

23,555. It must be a very good custom?—It is a remarkably good custom, and I think if it was adopted throughout the whole of South Wales it would be a very good thing.

23,556. Yes?—But the changes of tenancy are so rare on the estates of which I have the management that really outgoing and incoming very seldom occurs, and as a rule, it is probably a member of the same family that succeeds as tenant.

23,557. You have given in a statement as to the prices of produce. May I ask you, are you a practical farmer yourself?—I cannot say I farm myself. I have too much to do to look after a farm.

23,558. Quite so, but you have had to do with it?—Oh, yes; I was for some years in the Lothians; I was with Mr. Hope of Fenton Barns, whose name is very well known; 30 years ago he was the leading farmer in the Lothians.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

23,559. May I ask you again what have you prepared these statements from ?—Do you mean as to produce ?

23,560. Yes, as to produce ?—From various sources. They do not apply to this district entirely. I can give the prices to you shortly if you wish it.

23,561. Do the landlords, as a rule, provide poultry houses sufficiently for the tenants ?—I think generally they have sufficient accommodation.

23,562. It appears, that the foreigner is not able to take the ground from under us quite, with regard to poultry farming and dairy farming ?—No.

23,563. They seem to be the most profitable sources, and I think we should encourage them in every way ?—Most decidedly, I quite agree with you.

23,564. Is there anything done in the way of butter making in this part of the district ?—No, unfortunately there is not.

23,565. How is it that the County Council do not adopt some scheme ?—Perhaps they will in time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,566. Does Noah Davies farm under this agreement ?—Not now. That was a farm which he farmed previously to a farm which he entered about 3 or 4 years ago.

23,567. Have the agreements been renewed on this estate in consequence of the passing of the Ground Game Act ?—Oh, dear no. There have been none granted since ; I do not think there were any granted since. There is no contracting out of the Ground Game Act.

23,568. But there is a clause at the end ?—If you look at the date of that, I think you will find it is long before the Ground Game Act.

Yes, it is 1879.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,569. In the form you gave me, the Ground Game Act is expressly mentioned ?—The Ground Game Act was not existing.

23,570. Yes ; it was mentioned ?—I think not. It was long before. That is the Duffryn estate.

23,571. The reservation is subject to the game ?—Yes, but Mr. Richard Jones is speaking of the Rheola estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,572. Do the farmers generally comply with the conditions of this agreement ?—No, certainly not. There are a great many provisions put in that are perfect dead letters. With regard to repairs, they do no repairs, the landlord repairs the whole.

23,573. And as to the rotation of crops ?—The rotation of crops applies purely to a pasture farm. At the time that was granted there were, I think, 5 acres of arable land for which I supplied the seed for laying it down to grass.

23,574. Then generally on the Rheola estate that would be applicable to other farms. Is that so ?—That agreement would be applicable. It is altered to suit circumstances.

23,575. Here is for instance this clause "And "the said Noah Davies"—or any other tenant "further agrees to cultivate and manure the "said farm and lands in proper husband like "manner, according to the rules of modern "husbandry, and shall not take two white straw "crops of corn in succession, without an "intervening green crop ?"—Yes ; but that would not be applicable to that farm. As I tell you there were only five acres of arable land, and shortly after his tenancy, I supplied him with the grass seeds to lay it down to permanent pasture and it has been laid down ever since, so that there is not an acre of arable land there now.

23,576. But, generally speaking, would you bind the tenant not to take two straw crops in succession ?—Not to take more than two.

23,577. It says "shall not take two" ?—Yes, that is so, but as a rule that is altered to "more than two." Those are old arguments. I think there is another agreement there which you will find is altered.

23,578. The other agreement is more in accordance with modern husbandry I see ?—Certainly.

23,579. You say, in your written statement that "As a result of consolidation, production is rather "improved." I take it that according to your view, the larger the farm the better and the larger the production ?—I did not say that. What I said was that in the case of upland farms it would not affect production. The production would be as large as it was before ; it would not have any effect upon the production.

23,580. But you say "production is rather improved" ?—No, I did not say so. I said it would not affect production.

Lord Kenyon.

It is printed rather differently here to what you said. The shorthand writer can give us what you said. I think there are some "notes" left out.

Mr. Richard Jones.

That was my difficulty ; I could not reconcile one statement given, with another.

Lord Kenyon.

It says here, "It has no effect upon the production or labour." It is wrongly printed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,581. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act utilised on the estate ?—No.

23,582. Not in any instance ?—No, it is a perfect dead letter in this country. I think the custom of East Glamorgan is preferable to the Agricultural Holdings Act. It is clearer.

23,583. But in West Glamorgan ?—In West Glamorgan certainly not. It is a perfect dead letter. After the passing of the Act of 1883 I was appointed one of the umpires by the Land Commissioners to settle differences under the Act, and in that capacity I have heard nothing of the Act.

23,584–5. You say that the tenants generally avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—If they please, certainly.

23,586. Do you think they are aware that they are at liberty?—Oh, certainly, I do not think that they are so benighted as that. Throughout the whole country I think they are perfectly aware that they have the right to kill ground game.

23,587. Is there any apparent reason why they do not avail themselves of the Act?—I have not said that they do not; they do if they please; and they do do it.

23,588. You say that game preserving has little or no effect upon cultivation?—I do not say that game preserving has, but game preserving in this country has generally very little effect, because there is so little game.

23,589. Are you speaking with respect to other estates as well as the ones with which you are connected?—I am speaking of the estates with which I am connected.

23,590. There is no complaint as to game preserving?—I have never had a complaint, none whatever.

23,591. I understood you to say that farms had been consolidated, because of the expense of building?—Yes.

23,592. In a case where a farm has been added to another, what becomes of the old house and the old buildings?—As a rule the farms were added to one another when the house and buildings had got into an untenantable state, and rather than rebuild, for it would amount to that, the landlord would probably put two farms together; but this has not happened of recent date. I do not know of any instance; but many years ago it did happen, because in many parts of the country I see ruins of buildings, which were farms originally. I think it is very much to the benefit of the tenants that it should be done, and certainly of benefit to the landlords, because upon these small farms it would be utterly impossible now for a family to exist.

23,593. But in the case where a farm has been added to another, do you not find it necessary to erect additional buildings on that farm?—To increase the buildings upon one of the farms certainly; but that is very different to building a new set of buildings.

23,594. To building a new house?—And a new house.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,595. I gather from your evidence, and a great deal of the evidence that we have had, that the East Glamorganshire custom is generally considered to be very superior to all the customs around it?—Certainly.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

23,596. What is the practical reason why it cannot be extended?—I do not see any reason why it should not be extended. It is always difficult, though, to alter a custom of a country.

23,597. Do you think it would be impossible for that part of your estate, for instance, which is not in East Glamorganshire to have it extended to it by an agreement between the landlord and the tenants?—I do not think that a landlord can very well alter the custom of the country in which his estate is situated. There would be difficulties.

23,598. Supposing in your agreements you were to put a clause, "As regards this holding the "East Glamorganshire custom shall be substi-"tuted for the Agricultural Holdings Act"?—Practically we have no agreements now; they are almost all verbal lettings.

23,599. You think that nothing but an Act of Parliament could extend it?—No, I do not say that at all. I think it would be very desirable if the western division and all South Wales would adopt the East Glamorganshire custom, for it is a very good one.

23,600. Is not one of the points in the East Glamorganshire custom the entry in February?—No, that does not exist—not entirely; there are March entries as well as February.

23,601. Would one of the difficulties in altering the custom be that such an estate could be put upon different lines to another and therefore that an outgoing tenant on one estate would not be able to enter another at the same time, as he gave up his farm?—Well, the grievance probably would be that the outgoer might object to the custom being altered on his going out, from what it was when he was coming in.

23,602. You mentioned that on some of the estates with which you are connected there were very long leases, some of them for 99 years, recently granted?—Yes, on the Duffryn estate there are a large number.

23,603. If a tenant takes a lease for 99 years what happens if he is not able to continue? Can he under-let, or can he assign?—With consent.

23,604. Then if he assigns with consent, does it not come practically to something like free sale? Does not he get a lump sum from the tenant coming in?—He would naturally, and there have been cases on that property where leases have been assigned by consent, and a very large sum paid for them.

23,605. By giving those long leases would you induce practically free sale with consent?—Well, I do not like to call it free sale. It is sale by consent, but not free sale.

23,606. You create a tenant right, do you not?—To some extent perhaps, you might put it in that way.

23,607. Is that one of the reasons why landlords object to give long leases?—I do not think there is any objection on the part of landlords to grant leases for short terms of years. This is the only case in which I know of such periods being granted.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

23,608. Do you know the reason why such long periods were granted?—No, I cannot tell you the reason.

23,609. It is a very exceptional case, is it not?—Yes, it is a very exceptional case. I do not know of any other instance of it; but in some cases the leases were granted to people who had been on the farms for generations, I believe.

23,610. Then recurring for one moment to the leases for lives that we have had mentioned, I notice one of these is stated to be a chattel lease and the other a freehold lease. Do you know what the reason of the difference is?—I cannot see any. I do not think there is any difference at all.

23,611. I see the chattel lease is for 99 years "if "A., B., and C. so long live"?—Yes, that is so.

23,612. And the freehold agreement is direct to them for their lives?—That is so.

23,613. The whole of the estate was let on lease for life with regard to your estate?—Entirely.

23,614. Are there a large number of tenants?—There is a list of them I have handed in.

23,615. There is a pretty considerable number of tenants?—There are 55 here.

23,616. Would they be nearly all the tenants on a particular manor?—They were all on the same manor—originally on the same manor.

23,617. Would they embrace nearly all the tenants of that manor?—No, I beg your pardon; it would not be the same manor, but it would be the same lordship.

23,618. Exactly; and would some of them be copyholders and some of them freeholders?—No, I do not think any of them were copyholders; I have no evidence that they were.

23,619. Do you think that hundreds of years ago they were probably not copyholders?—No, I do not think any of them were copyholders. I have no evidence that they were.

23,620. You think that hundreds of years ago they were probably not copyholders?—I have no evidence of it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,621. Just to clear up what Mr. Seebohm asked you, with regard to the free sale between the incoming and outgoing tenant for the right of incoming, would that be in any case other than leasehold?—No, certainly not. I think I have already said that there is no right of free sale.

Lord Kenyon.

23,622. Mr. Vincent puts the following questions: "In early times premiums were paid for "leases, were they not"?—Certainly, in all cases.

23,623. "If it were possible to obtain the rental "of Glamorganshire, say from the beginning of "the century till now, would not the fact that "premiums were taken invalidate inferences "drawn from a comparison of the rentals"?—Decidedly. May I refer to some evidence given on the third day, my Lord?

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,624. Certainly.—There are three points that I wanted to refer to with regard to the evidence given by Mr. Noah Davies. 2417 is the number of the question on the third day with regard to the area of his farm.

23,625. I will read the question, "What is the "size of your occupation?—About 50 acres?"—I now put in a plan showing this farm, the area of which is 96 acres and 31 perches. (Handed in.) In reply to question 2427 as to the rent of his farm he stated that it was 56*l.* The rent of his farm is 50*l.*; he admitted that afterwards; and of that rent of 50*l.* he only pays rates and taxes on 45*l.*, the landlord paying the rates on the 5*l.* Then with regard to question 2463, he was asked whether he knew of any grievance with regard to land, having been taken up from the tenant farmer, who had not been compensated. He said that his father many years ago had 30 acres of land taken by the Neath and Brecon Railway and for other purposes, and that he was not compensated. That farm was sold some few years ago and I happened to be at the sale and I have the particulars; I referred to it on going home, and I find that the area taken from his father was 5 acres 1 rood and 17 perches for all purposes.

23,626. Not 30 acres?—Not 30 acres. I referred to the rent roll and found that his father was compensated for the area taken. However, the compensation did not do him very much good, because three or four years after the whole estate was revalued and his farm was raised slightly higher than it was before.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,627. He did not say that the Neath and Brecon Railway took 30 acres?—Neither did I.

23,628. He said there were 30 acres of some of the best land he had taken away from the farm, after the Neath and Brecon Railway and some collieries came there?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

23,629. You say for all purposes?—Yes, for all purposes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

He is asked, "How many acres do you say "were taken away and no compensation made "to your father?" and he says, "Between 20 "and 30 acres."

Lord Kenyon.

23,630. From the particulars which you have handed in I see:—"Part of 3,121 shown on plan "has been sold to the Neath and Brecon Rail-"way—4 acres 0 roods 27 perches. Another "portion has been conveyed for the purpose of "a school—about 0 acres 2 roods 0 perches. "Other portions have been let on building lease "and are comprised in lots 7 to 10; the total of "these is 2 roods 30 perches." That is it, is it not?—Yes, making in all 5 acres 1 rood 17 perches.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,631. Did any collieries come there?—Did any collieries get rights over it?—I think not.

23,632. Because, it may be, that he was using the expression rather vaguely?—I think that shows all the land.

23,633. This document you have handed in, is very clear. There is a little bit that happens to have been actually taken from the farm?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,634. There cannot be any confusion between mountain and arable land, can there?—Oh, no. I think you must take it as perfectly accurate that the 5 acres odd represent all that was taken from him.

Lord Kenyon.

23,635. He further went on to say: "He never "had a penny for it, although there were 40 or "50 acres of the land taken here by the rail-way without having any compensation for it"?—That is so, my Lord.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,636. He was rather vague in his statement?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,637. These particulars only appear to include the farm proper; they do not include any of the rhysfa?—It includes the whole of the farm.

23,638. That is what I meant, with their numbers upon the plan; but supposing there was some mountain pasture over which the tenant had a right of depasturing, that would not have been sold with the farm?—Yes, certainly, if any belonged to it, but I do not think there was any belonging to it.

23,639. It just occurred to me that he might have included some more of the waste?—There is a considerable amount; it is almost all mountain land.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. William Glasbrook called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

23,640. Where do you live?—Lletty Domas Farm, Velindre, Llangyfelach, near Swansea.

23,641. Do you believe that differences of language, creed, or politics, make any difference to the relations between landlords and tenants?—No.

23,642. Do you prefer tenancies from year to year or a lease?—From year to year.

23,643. Why?—Because I can give the usual notice.

23,644. You feel safer?—Yes.

23,645. Judging by your own experiences do you think tenancies are reasonably secure in Wales?—Yes.

23,646. Are you familiar with the terms upon which you occupy your holding?—Yes.

23,647. Have you a copy of your agreement?—No.

23,648 You have not?—No, I have not.

23,649. Have you an agreement at all?—Not that I am aware.

23,650. What is your opinion of a land court?—I think it would injure the good feeling between the landlord and the tenant.

23,651. In your opinion would the landlord spend as much money upon his estate?—No, I think not.

23,652. Have you thought much about it?—Yes, I have.

23,653. What is the class of work done by the landlord in the way of building, draining, &c.—the terms on which it is usually done I want?—There is no draining done but building.

23,654. What do you and the landlords do with regard to the building?—They do the building, we do the haulage.

23,655. Do they increase the rent?—No nothing of the kind.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,656. Have you anything to say about the custom of the country in your part?—No.

23,657. Is there any custom of the country?—No, not that I know of.

32,658. Is there any ground for saying, as some witnesses have said, that farmers are afraid to come forward?—Not that I am aware.

23,659. Have you anything further you wish to say?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,660. Do you know anything of the custom of the country down about Cowbridge?—No.

23,661. Surely there is some custom in your own neighbourhood, that if a man goes out of a farm, he gets compensation for the unexhausted improvements in the land?—Yes, I expect so.

23,662. I mean an outgoing tenant would claim something for manuring the land?—Yes, I expect so.

23,663. He would probably get it from the incoming tenant?—Yes.

23,664. That is a custom in the neighbourhood?—That is a custom in the neighbourhood.

23,665. Those are the ordinary customs which have come down from father to son?—Yes.

23,666. Do you think that when a change of tenancy takes place, that a farmer gets substantial justice?—Well, I expect he does.

23,667. Have you had any building repairs done for you?—Yes.

23,668. Did you do the haulage?—Yes.

23,669. How much would you estimate the amount of that haulage at?—I did not keep any booking account of it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

23,670. Well, about?—Indeed, I have not made any calculation of it.

23,671. How many times did you have your cart with horses out?—I had it out very often, because we got a large building.

23,672. Can you give a rough estimate. Would it be 10 per cent. of the value or 5 per cent.?—Well, it would be going on that, I should think.

23,673. You have no agreement?—No.

23,674. Only verbal?—That is all.

23,675. And the custom of the estate?—Yes.

23,676. And the neighbourhood?—Yes, and the neighbourhood.

Lord Kenyon.

23,677. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Vaughan Lee.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,678. Is it a fact that the haulage would have to be done as much as possible when your horses would not be employed in doing the farm work?—Any time that would suit us.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,679. Are you satisfied that you are making something like a decent living from your farm?—Yes.

23,680. Is that the case generally with the tenant farmers in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

23,681. You do not complain of depression?—They never complain to me whatever.

23,682. You have not heard of any complaint as to depression in agriculture?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,683. May I ask you what is the acreage of your farm?—180 acres.

23,684. Chiefly arable or grazing land?—Both.

23,685. Do you keep cows?—Yes.

23,686. Do you sell some stock as well?—Yes.

23,687. Do you not find the present prices very low?—They are low now.

23,688. Are you able to pay your rent now as well as you used to in good times?—The times used to be better; they are bad times now, to be sure.

23,689. Do you employ any labour?—Yes.

23,690. How is that labour? Is not that higher than it used to be?—The labour is rather high according to the price of cattle.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

23,691. You do not seem to feel the depression at all?—Well, it is more now than it used to be.

23,692. It is rather a strange position. You say that you do not approve of a Land Court. In which way do you think it would alter the good feeling hitherto existing between you and your landlord?—Well, I think we arrange better without anyone else between us.

23,693. Is it supposed that your case must go before a Land Court, as you are in such a happy state? I thought the Land Court was only for those who could not settle good terms?—I have no objection to a Land Court myself, but I do not want it between me and my landlord.

23,694. But suppose, on the other hand, you have done all this hauling upon your farm, and for some reason or other you have offended your landlord, and you are obliged to leave your farm, or the rent would be advanced; would you not like someone to put your case before a Land Court to see if it was a good case?—I have been there 26 years, and I have not had an advance on the rent so far, and I do not expect to get it from this time out.

23,695. Do you not think it possible there may be a change?—I cannot say.

23,696. Have you not known other tenants who have suffered in that way?—Not that I can remember. I heard Mr. Jenkins mention one here to-day.

23,697. Did you ever hear of that before?—No, not before.

23,698. You think there are not many such cases about?—I am not aware of any.

Lord Kenyon.

23,699. I have two questions to ask you, put by Mr. Vincent, "Your father had a copy of "his agreement, had he not"?—I am not aware that he had.

23,700. "Has not Mr. Sheppard put in your "father's agreement? He put in one agreement "with Mr. Glasbrook?"—Yes, that was my father's.

23,701. He had an agreement?—I had not one myself.

23,702. The question is, had your father one?—My father may have had one, but I have not any.

23,703. Then Mr. Vincent asks: "Are you not "farming under the agreement which your "father farmed under?"—Yes, I am farming the farm.

23,704. On the same terms?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

23,705. Do you live at 65, Brecon Road, Hirwain, and are you a colliery check-weigher, and member of the Aberdare School Board and secretary of the Hirwain Chamber of Trade?—Yes.

23,706. You wish to give evidence before us as to Hirwain Common, I believe?—Yes.

23,707. You have prepared a statement; will you let us hear what it is?—About the years 1860–1865 the Hirwain Common Inclosure Commissioners divided or allotted something like 3,000 acres of common land between landowners in the neighbourhood; viz.: Lord Bute; Lord Windsor; Kemys Tynte, Esq., Cefnmably, Glamorganshire; Gwynne Holford, Esq., Buckland, Breconshire; Bruce Pryce, Esq., Duffryn; Mr. Williams, Cefnpennar, and others. Prior to this allotment there were hundreds of ponies belonging to the workmen, small landholders and others, grazing free on this common, and the celebrated Hirwain Brock ponies were well known through many counties in England and Wales. There were also Scotch cattle grazing free on the common, which have since totally disappeared. Workmen's wives and poor widows used to rear flocks of geese on the common, but now they have none. Small farmers in the neighbourhood used to send cattle and sheep to graze there during the summer months free of charge.

There were many houses and cottages built in the town of Hirwain on the common land. All those who did not prove quiet possession for 21 years at the time the common was allotted, lost their claim to what they considered as their freehold, and have to pay ground rent for same now, and will have to pay the same annually in future. Those who claimed quiet possession for 21 years were granted a poll deed by the Commissioners on (I believe) the payment of a certain sum of money. Prior to the allotment of Hirwain Common in the years 1860–1865 there were many huts built by colliers, miners, puddlers, and other workmen on the land, and there was a small garden attached to nearly all of them. These were all pulled down, and those who had built them had to seek for dwelling-places where they could.

The Commissioners allotted three pieces or parcels of land, parts of Hirwain Common to the inhabitants of Hirwain and the neighbourhood, viz.:—

(1.) No. 408, being 30 acres for recreation ground.
(2.) No. 432, being 20 acres for burial ground.
(3.) No. 409, being 10 acres for the use of the poor.

I regret that I cannot produce a copy of the whole of the allotments of the common with plans of same; but I produce copies of the allotments of the above three parcels of land.

(1.) Copy of Allotment No. 408, for Recreation Ground.

"And I declare that with the approbation "of the Inclosure Commissioners for England "and Wales I have set out and do hereby "set out and allot and award unto John "Boyle of Chancery Lane in the county of "Middlesex Esquire and Charles Stuart of "Hubborne Lodge in the county of Southampton Esquire as devisees in trust under the will "of the Most Honourable John Crichton Stuart "Marquess of Bute and Earl of Dumfries "deceased lords of the manors of Miskin and "Glynrhondda who have consented to receive "the same as part of their manorial allotment "all that piece or parcel of land numbered 408 "on the map annexed containing 30 acres subject to the obligation of preserving the surface "thereof in good condition and of permitting "the same to be at all times used for exercise "and recreation by the inhabitants of the said "parish of Ystradyfodwg and neighbourhood "and I direct that the fences on all sides of such "allotment shall from time to time be repaired "and maintained by and at the expense of the "lords of the said manors of Miskin and Glynrhondda for the time being."

The Hirwain people have not yet had possession of their allotment, neither is it used for recreation beyond rifle shooting and gun practice.

(2.) Hirwain Cemetery.—Copy of Award of Allotment, No. 432.

"And I have also set out and do hereby set "out allot and award unto the Burial Board of "the said parish of Aberdare all that piece or "parcel of land numbered 402 on the map "annexed containing 20 acres to be held by "them and their successors in trust as an "allotment for a burial place for the town or "village of Hirwain and direct that the fences "on all sides of such allotment except where "the said allotment joins the old enclosures "belonging to the trustees of the Marquess of "Bute shall be made and maintained by and at "the expense of the Burial Board of the said "parish of Aberdare for the time being."

The Aberdare Burial Board decline to use this as a burial ground for the people of Hirwain. They have leased it out to a private party for 14 years at the annual rent of 12*l.*; and though Aberdare Cemetery is situate about three miles from Hirwain, the above Board decline to make any allowance in the fees for burying at Aberdare Cemetery; and it is very expensive to bury at Penderyn Churchyard, which is about two miles from Hirwain. The population of Hirwain is about 4,500. I produce letters received from the Burial Board respecting this allotment:—

"Burial Board Office, Aberdare,
"DEAR SIR, January 17, 1893.

"REFERRING to your letter of the 7th December, I am instructed by the Burial Board to inform you that the deputation have altogether misunderstood what took place between them and the Board. The latter never offered the Chamber of Trade the land on condition that they would drain, fence, build chapel and caretaker's lodge; in fact, the Board would have no power to hand over the piece of ground referred to, to the Chamber of Trade, nor would they be justified in handing over money received by them with interest as suggested.

"Yours truly,
"pp. H. P. LINTON,
Clerk.

"Mr. John Davies,
"Secretary,
"Hirwain Chamber of Trade,
"Hirwain near Aberdare."

"Burial Board Office, Aberdare,
1st March 1893.

"DEAR SIR,

,803. "YOUR letter of the 15th instant was laid before the Burial Board at their last meeting, and I was desired to inform you that the Board could not undertake to supply you with the information asked for, as it would necessitate going through all the burials for the last five years and making a list of those cases where the persons buried had resided at Hirwain. This, I need hardly state, would mean a very considerable amount of trouble. I was also instructed by the Board to state that they can in future only deal with a properly constituted authority under the Burial Acts. When such an authority has been formed, the Board will be prepared to go into the matter.

"Yours truly,
"pp. H. B. LINTON,
"Clerk.

"Mr. John Davies,
"Secretary,
"Hirwain Chamber of Trade,
"Hirwain."

23,708. To whom were those letters addressed?—To myself.

(3.) Land for the labouring poor.—Copy of Allotment No. 409.

"And I also set out and do hereby set out "allot and award unto the churchwardens and "overseers of the poor of the said parish of "Ystradyfodwg, all that piece or parcel of land "numbered 409 on the map annexed containing "10 acres to be held by them and their "successors in trust as an allotment for the "labouring poor of the parish of Ystradyfodwg. "Subject nevertheless to and chargeable with "a clear rent-charge of 2*l.* 10*s.* which said sum "does not exceed the net annual value of the "said allotment in its present condition. And "I declare the same to be of value of such "number of Imperial bushels and decimal parts "of an Imperial bushel of wheat barley and "oats as herein-after set forth that is to say:—

	Price per Bushel.	Bushels and decimal parts.
	s. d.
Wheat -	7 0¼ -	- 2·37389
Barley -	3 11½ -	- 4·21053
Oats -	2 9 -	- 6·06061

"And I direct that the fence on the north-"east and south sides of such allotment shall "from time to time be repaired and maintained "by and at the expense of the churchwardens."

Lord Kenyon—continued.

This land is not used by the labouring poor. I have sent to your Secretary a type-written letter received from the Board of Agriculture by Alfred Thomas, Esq., M.P., respecting the three allotments referred to, and I wish that to be produced and placed before the Commissioners. My object in appearing before the Commissioners is to show how the great landowners of the country took possession of common land on the Great Hirwain Common and by some means had it divided amongst themselves and thus depriving the poor of rights which they had enjoyed from time immemorial. I also particularly wish to point out that all private people to whom the land was allotted had possession of it, and still hold it, or have sold it at a good price to others, whereas the three allotments to the public are not yet in the possession of the public, though a quarter of a century has passed since it was allotted to them.

23,709. With regard to the recreation ground, you say it is used for rifle shooting and gun practice. Is there a rifle range there?—Yes.

23,710. You say it is used for rifle shooting and gun practice?—There are some people practising shooting there.

23,711. Are there any targets put up?—Some years ago when there was a corps there, there was a rifle range at Hirwain, some 12 or 13 years ago. It was put up then.

23,712. It is not now generally used?—It is not generally used.

23,713. Why is it not used as a recreation ground?—Well, it is not in a proper state to be used; it is a damp place.

23,714. Is it used for nothing at all?—They graze it.

23,715. Who?—Well, I do not know who.

23,716. The commoners?—No, not the commoners.

23,717. Is this place used for no purpose at all?—For no other purpose than grazing, and sometimes for shooting.

23,718. Who is the person who grazes it?—It is a question who is the owner. I know the people grazing there now.

23,719. Are they farmers?—No, they are shopkeepers sending their horses there.

23,720. They do not keep it as a sort of common?—No, they have to pay someone for it.

23,721. To whom do they apply for the use of it?—That is a question.

23,722. If there is any rent paid, I suppose it goes to someone?—Yes, it goes to some person.

23,723. I want to find out to whom it goes?—It is under Lord Bute's care.

23,724. I do not suppose he takes the rents if it is to be used as a recreation ground. Who are the trustees?—John Boyle, of Chancery Lane, and Charles Stuart, of Hubborne Lodge

23,725. With regard to the burial board, you say it is let at an annual rent of 12*l.* to a private party. To whom does that rent go?—To the burial board.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,726. Can you assign any reason beyond those letters why they do not use it?—They have not given us any reason at all. We have sent a deputation to them, and they have given no reason at all for it.

23,727. There is no chapel there, or anything?—No, nothing at all. It is as it was on the common, only some hedges have been built round it.

23,728. With regard to the land for the labouring poor, is that suitable for allotment?—It is very close to the houses.

23,729. Is there any reason why they should not have it? Have they ever applied for it?—I do not know. I do not think it has been put out. It has been rented out to a private person there now for grazing.

23,730. I suppose the rent that that private person pays goes towards the poor's rate, or does it go to the relief of the poor as a charity? Do you know at all?—So far as I am able to understand, it is nearly all going to pay the expenses, to keep the fences up; and all the rest goes to the rates.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,731. What was the area of this Hirwain Common?—The part that has been allotted is somewhere about 3,000 acres.

23,732. What I understand you to say is this, that you regard this enclosure of these 3,000 acres as detrimental to the community, and as being harmful to the community?—Yes.

23,733. Is that the point you are making?—Yes, there were poor people breeding their ponies there, and some sending their cattle, and a poor widow would try to buy a little cow and send it to the common and graze it there, and keep herself and a little family on the milk, perhaps, and flocks of geese were sent by poor people. It was a great advantage to the people to have a place like that so that they might send them and take them afterwards to sell again.

23,734. You say, whether or not, they had a right of common in the strict legal sense, still the poor persons round about this common were in the habit of sending their beasts, and so on, on to the common?—Yes.

23,735. Do you suggest that the poor people you are mentioning had a right of common on the common—that they were copyholders or freeholders of the manor?—No, I do not suggest that they are freeholders of a manor at all.

23,736. Or copyholders?—Only that they have used it for so many years; for years beyond the memory of anyone now living at Hirwain.

See 5713. 23,737. What was the date of the Private Inclosure Act for Hirwain Common? You say in 1860 to 1865 the Commissioners made the division, and so on; but what was the date of the Act?—I do not know that.

23,738. At any rate what you wish to tell us is this, that before that time, whether they were exercising legal rights or not, a large number of people round about Hirwain were in the habit of using this common?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

23,739. Then this Act of Parliament was passed, and the Commissioners divided and allotted the common in the way you have mentioned?—Yes.

23,740. And since that time they have only had these small bits of ground available for any public or general purposes?—Yes, only the three small allotments.

23,741. What kind of ground is this recreation ground, is it hilly or on the flat?—It is on the flat, only it is very damp there. It could be easily bettered by draining it.

23,742. Do they not play football or cricket upon it?—No; no football has been played on it at all.

23,743. Is that because the people in and about Hirwain are not interested in any games?—No, they are playing football there.

23,744. Why do not they play on this recreation ground?—The ground is too damp, and it is too soft there.

23,745. Has anyone asked the trustees to drain the land or to improve it in any way, and to make it suitable for recreation?—Not so far as I know.

23,746. You do not know whether anyone has done that?—No.

23,747. As I understand it the burial board does get the rent of this piece of ground allotted for burial purposes?—Yes, it does.

23,748. Why was it that this ground was not used for the purposes of a cemetery?—Well, I do not know. We have asked that question of the Aberdare Burial Board ourselves, and have not had any answer at all to please us. We have sent a deputation there.

23,749. In what parish is Hirwain?—Hirwain is a part of Aberdare parish. Hirwain is situated in three parishes. The largest part of Hirwain is in Aberdare parish. There is another part of Hirwain in Rhigos parish.

23,750. The burial board is a burial board for the whole of Aberdare parish?—Yes.

23,751. Is the piece of ground allotted to the labouring poor suitable for garden cultivation?—Yes, I believe so, so far as I understand the ground.

23,752. That is to be held in trust for the labouring poor of the parish of Ystradyfodwg?—Yes, and part of Hirwain is situated in Ystradyfodwg.

23,753. And part in Aberdare?—Yes.

23,754. Is there any burial board for Ystradyfodwg?—No, not in our valley.

23,755. If part is in Ystradyfodwg parish and part in Aberdare parish why do you not try to use this burial ground if you wish to use it for the purpose of burial in regard to the Ystradyfodwg parish? The trust is "for a burial place "for the town or village of Hirwain." As I understand, you are in three parishes?—Yes.

23,756. Then the area of the burial board of the Aberdare parish does not extend to those portions of the town or village of Hirwain that are in the other parishes. Do you see what I mean?—No, not quite.

23,757. According to your evidence, the village or town of Hirwain, as I should call it now, is in three parishes?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

23,758. Then so far as the burial board of Aberdare is concerned, it does not touch that portion of Hirwain town which is outside the Aberdare parish?—For this reason, the ground has been allotted to them. They are trustees for Hirwain and neighbourhood.

23,759. Their trust was an allotment for a burial place for the town or village of Hirwain?—Yes.

23,760. Who are the trustees now?—The Aberdare Burial Board.

23,761. When were they made trustees?—When the Commissioners made them.

23,762. Was that as far back as 1865?—Yes.

23,763. The position is rather one of difficulty in that case because you have a burial board which is a trustee, but the burial board, although, in its capacity of trustee, it has land outside the territorial area of the board, that is outside the burial board of Aberdare, still it is only a burial board for the parish of Aberdare. That is the difficulty. It is described, I see, in the award as a burial board for the parish of Aberdare, but it is not a burial board for the parish of Ystradyfodwg, or the other parish, and yet Hirwain stretches into the three parishes?—Yes.

23,764. Is it a fact that Hirwain has stretched into Ystradyfodwg since 1865?—No.

23,765. Was all Hirwain in Aberdare parish in 1864?—No, Hirwain was situated in the three parishes before that.

23,766. Probably you might get a new trustee appointed if you took the proper proceedings. What is the practical grievance in regard to the burial ground? Are there persons in Hirwain town who would like to bury their relatives in this allotment for burial purposes nearer Hirwain?—I do not know about that, but there is a grievance there, that the other places are so dear to bury them, and Aberdare is so far for us. When a funeral takes place the workmen have to drop off work so soon, and if we could have that piece of land for a burial ground, we could do better, and lose less time from our work. Penderyn is so dear: they have to pay 32*s.* for a grave there.

23,767. The people outside the Aberdare parish do not pay any rates to the parish at all?—Not to the Aberdare Burial Board.

23,768. Is there any burial board for Ystradyfodwg?—No.

23,769. The real grievance is this, as I understand it, that the people in Hirwain who live outside the district of the Aberdare Burial Board really like to have their own cemetery?—Yes, and those who live in the part of Aberdare parish too, because it would be much better for us than going down to Aberdare.

23,770. Are the charges there high in the cemetery of the Aberdare Burial Board?—I do not know. I am not certain about digging a new grave, but to reopen a grave it is 14*s.*

23,771. The net result of your evidence to my mind is this, that this is rather a grievance affecting the burial board of the parish of Aberdare than anything to do with the allotment, or with the enclosure. You are not complaining of the allotment?—Not of that allotment, but that we have not possession of it. We do not complain that these three parcels have been allotted to us, but that we have not had possession of them yet.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

23,772. The piece of ground is vested in a trustee for you, namely, the Aberdare Burial Board?—That is so.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,773. What is the nature of the soil in this place? Is it clay, or turf, or what is it?—In what part? One of these parcels?

23,774. These three plots of ground?—There is no clay there, so far as I understand it.

23,775. What is the nature of the soil?—Pure earth—very good soil earth.

23,776. A kind of black soil?—Yes.

23,777. You have told us that the burial board receive some 12*l.* rent for this ground?—Yes.

23,778. Do they pay any rent?—Do you mean the Burial Board?

23,779. Yes?—They receive rent from this.

23,780. I ask you, do they pay rent to anyone?—Not the burial board. They keep it. They bank it.

23,781. Then the Aberdare people get all the benefit of that 12*l.*, and the Ystradyfodwg get nothing?—Yes, so far, whatever.

23,782. This ground was granted these people free of any charge. When the ground was allotted they were not called upon to pay a farthing for this burial ground?—That would be according to how the cemetery would be put out.

23,783. I do not mean that. I mean to say when they first had this?—Yes. I do not know of any money being paid for it.

23,784. Are the three plots fenced in?—Yes.

23,785. Who built the fences?—Mr. Powell, of Hirwain, built the fences.

23,786. By whose authority?—I do not know.

23,787. Is he keeping them still in repair?—I believe he is keeping the burial ground and the recreation ground.

23,788. Who is Mr. Powell? Is he the agent for the Marquis of Bute?—No, he is not agent to the Marquis of Bute. He is a railway contractor.

23,789. You do not know who employs him?—Well, I believe he is employed under Lord Bute, or under the trustees of Lord Bute.

23,790. Is it not because the people believe that they have a right to the whole of this ground, that they no not accept part of it? Is there not some feeling of that kind? Do not the people claim and think that the whole of this ground ought to belong to them?—Yes, everyone, every workman believes it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,791. Mr. Griffiths puts it very clearly. The Aberdare Burial Board are trustees, and they apply the 12*l.* rent which they receive for this burial ground for the general purposes of the burial board, and the Hirwain people think they ought to get the whole benefit of the land to themselves?—So far as I have understood the action of the burial board from the deputation we sent, they are banking this 12*l.*, and we do not receive any benefit from it at all.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,792. Who gets the interest?—Well, they keep the interest to themselves.

23,793. Have you ever made any appeal to the burial board to have this plot of ground to bury the dead in?—Yes. I have handed you in the letters.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,794. The answers are very guarded letters. Mr. H. P. Linton is the clerk, I suppose?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,795. Is there any part of this common which has been allotted, under cultivation now?—Yes, some parts of it. There is one garden there, and a very good garden too.

23,796. What quantity was allotted to different holders? Was there sufficient quantity allotted to maintain and support a family?—Yes, two or three of them.

23,797. Is it the landlord who cultivates it?—No, not the landlords, but it is their ground, and small farmers have to cultivate it, and pay rents to them.

23,798. Have the farmers erected buildings on these pieces that have been allotted?—No, no buildings at all have been erected there, only one, so far as I know, down in the lower part.

23,799. Do they raise corn on these pieces?—No corn at all; on some parts they raise hay.

23,800. You think in the interests of the community in that district, it would be better for the land of the common to be used as it was formerly; that is to say, that the commoners should exercise their rights of turning out cattle and stock generally on the common?—Not altogether that, but what I believe is that the poor ought to have a benefit from it, as well as the landlord, as it was common.

23,801. You think when it was allotted that the poor should have been compensated in some way or other?—Yes.

23,802. But you think in the interests of the community in general that the enclosure was a good thing?—Yes, I believe the allotment, allotting and dividing the commons into fields, was a good thing; that is my opinion of the question; but I do not think it was a good thing for the community to run it to the landlords.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,803. Have you copies of the letters that were written to the board?—I have one here:—

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

"Hirwain Chamber of Trade,
"DEAR SIR, February 15, 1893.

"I AM again instructed by the Hirwain Chamber of Trade to apply to you for a return of all the persons buried in Aberdare Cemetery during the five years ended December 31, 1892, together with the fees paid. Kindly give date, name, number, and fees paid in each case. Also a statement of all the money received for the 20 acres of land at Hirwain. And that your board will be good enough to appoint one member from Hirwain to sit at your board. Kindly let this letter be read at your board and let me have their reply.

"Yours truly,
"JOHN DAVIES,
"Secretary.

"Charles Kenshole, Esq.,
"Deputy Clerk,
"Aberdare Burial Board."

Mr. Seebohm.

23,804. What you mean, in a nutshell, is simply, I think, this, is it not: that although Parliament attempted to do justice for you in giving you these three things, the recreation ground, and the burial ground, and the portion for the poor, that somehow or other you have not got the benefit?—That is part of our grievance, but we grieve that we have lost the use of the whole common.

23,805. But you said just now, as I understood you, that you really thought it was the best thing for the community that it should be divided into fields, and become owned by individuals?—Yes, I have said that, but I do not approve of it being given to the landlords. Although I approve of the common being allotted, I do not approve of it being given to the landowners when it has been common property. If it is to be allotted, the benefit from it, I think, ought to be in some way or other for the benefit of the poor.

23,806. You think that the allotment for recreation ground and for burial was not adequate or sufficient, or if it had been properly carried out it still would not have been sufficient?—I think not sufficient compensation to the poor of Hirwain.

23,807. Even if it had been carried out in its fulness?—Yes.

23,808. Do you consider that some local authority is required to look into these interests? Do you think, for instance, when you get your district councils that the district council would be able to look after your interests in these matters, and see that justice was done to the poor?—Well, they might do something, I suppose, but I do not know whether they would have power to do what is right on the question.

23,809. The burial board is an elective body, and yet they do not seem to carry out their trust for your benefit. Do you see any remedy for it? Do you think there is any remedy for it, in an elective body like a district council?—I cannot say that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,810. What is the population of Hirwain now?—Something about 4,500.

23,811. Has it been increasing during the last 25 years?—It has been increasing the last five years

23,812. Are there any houses there now dilapidated and out of order? Are not some of the cottages in ruins?—Some of the old cottages now are, but there are many more cottages raised than old ones going into ruins.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

23,813. Is there a want of burial accommodation at Hirwain?—Yes, we have not any place to bury our dead, except at Penderyn or Aberdare.

23,814. What was the last time you applied to the burial board to give you a cemetery?—February the 15th of this year.

23,815. You have kept up your claim?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS REES called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

23,816. You are a farmer, of Blaenyrolchfa Fawr, Llangyfelach?—Yes.

23,817. You wish to give evidence about high rents and local taxation?—Yes.

23,818. Have you any written statement?—No, I have no written statement.

23,819. Are the rents in your district too high, do you think?—Yes, generally.

23,820. What are they per acre, as a rule?—From 7*s.* to 1*l.*, perhaps, per acre, in our neighbourhood.

23,821. What do you think they should be?—Some of them are not worth half-a-crown an acre.

23,822. Is it mountain land?—Yes.

23,823. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Morgans of Cefn and Mr. Morgans of Neath.

23,824. What have you to say with regard to local taxation?—The local taxes are too high.

23,825. Have they increased of late years?—Yes.

23,826. In spite of the grants from the Imperial Exchequer?—Yes.

23,827. Then you have something to say with regard to harsh treatment, in connexion with your last tenancy at Tynywaun?—Yes.

23,828. Will you make your statement?—I lived at Tynywaun under my father; my father had a lease on it; I paid my father 26*l.* a year for it.

23,829. You lived under your father?—Yes. My father died and the lease expired.

23,830. What happened then?—That was on the 2nd July, 1873.

23,831. This year?—No, 20 years ago. They raised the rent to 40*l.*

23,832. How much was it?—From 26*l.* to 40*l.* I paid 15 months' rent in accordance with that; then I gave notice in order that my rent might be reduced. Then my landlord came by afterwards, and we wanted to have a stable built there. They were not willing to build the stable without a per-centage being paid, and I was willing to pay 30*l.* for it.

23,833. Who was your landlord?—Mr. Tyler. Then I said I would get the wall ready if they would only put the roof on it. I was going to pay for the stones, the lime, and the masonry, but was not willing to pay a per-centage. Then I my landlord said if I would do that, I would get it without any per-centage, and I did so. I remained there afterwards, and when I subsequently went to pay the rent the agent told me that they had settled that the rent should be 32*l.*, and we had to pay 32*l.* for twelve months or eighteen months. Then we had to pay 35*s.* interest for the roof on the buildings, and, seeing that it was too high, I gave notice again, and I lost the farm. The only dispute was this, my landlord said I would get it for 30*l.* provided I built, and they raised it to 32*l.* and the interest.

23,834. How big was the farm?—100 acres; it was large enough.

23,835. Was it good land?—No, it was not.

23,836. Was it let again afterwards?—Yes.

23,837. At what rent, do you know?—I cannot say; I think it was about the same rent, but the landlord has reduced the rent now. My father and grandfather and their ancestors had been there for 400 years.

23,838. 400 years?—Yes.

23,839. How far back can you say that the rent was at 26*l.*?—My father had a lease on it.

23,840. But how far back had it been 26*l.*?—When I was there about 25 years.

23,841. You cannot go any further back?—I was the first to go and pay rent for it.

23,842. Have you any remedy to suggest for this state of things?—I should like to have some reduction in the rent and the taxes.

23,843. Have you anything more to say?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

23,844. Where is Tynywaun?—Cwm Clydach.

23,845. Your father had it for a lease of lives, I suppose?—Yes, three lives.

23,846. And your father's life was the last, was it?—Yes.

23,847. I understand you that in consideration of some permanent buildings, you arranged with your landlord for 30*l.*, am I right?—The lease had expired.

23,848. And the rent was to be how much between you and your landlord?—26*l.* when I was there.

23,849. But you said that in consideration of some permanent buildings, you arranged with your landlord for 30*l.*?—Yes; that was with me; provided I put permanent buildings I was to pay 30*l.* rent.

23,850. What were those permanent buildings?—A stable.

23,851. What else?—A roof on the barn. I put up the stable—the masonry. My landlord put the roof on both.

23,852. And charged interest for it, is that right?—Yes, within 18 months' afterwards.

23,853. After that was the rent raised to 32*l.*?—Yes.

23,854. Then you gave notice to go?—Yes.

23,855. When you did go did you get any compensation for the outlay on the stables?—Not a halfpenny, but we had 4*l.* for manure.

23,856. Nothing for the permanent improvements?—Nothing.

23,857. How long ago was this—20 years, do you say?—15 years ago.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,858. You state, I think, that your family had been on the land for 400 years?—I had a receipt in the house from the old people dating from 1500 and something over.

23,859. Did they hold on leases for three lives like your father did?—I do not know. There were leases all along. This was a receipt for having paid so much on a lease.

23,860. But your father's was not the first lease for three lives?—Oh, no.

23,861. The tradition in the family is that they had gone a long way back?—That was the oldest thing I had.

Professor Rhŷs.

23,862. Do you really mean to say that you have a receipt going back to the year 1500?—I have not got it now, because the agent took it away from me and asked me for it.

23,863. Then there were ancestors of yours on the farm before that I think you said?—I do not know.

23,864. 1500 seems to me a long way back?—400 years.

I would suggest that the receipt should go to the British Museum.

Mr. Richard Jones.

23,865. When the rent was advanced to 32*l.* did you complain to the landlord that he was breaking an agreement which was made between you and the landlord?—I made a complaint to the agent.

23,866. What did he say in answer?—He said that we had not agreed.

23,867. With whom did you say you made the agreement, was it with the landlord or with the agent?—With the agent and landlord in the farmyard.

23,868. Did you go to the landlord to complain also?—No, I did not, because he was in England.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

23,869. Does he generally reside in England?—Yes, somewhere in England.

23,870. Did you write to him?—No.

23,871. Why did you not?—Oh, I spoke to the agent about it.

23,872. But if the landlord also was with the agent when you made the agreement, do you not think that the proper thing for you to do was to write to the landlord as well?—No, I trusted the agent.

23,873. What amount did you spend on these buildings?—I paid the mason about 4*l.*, I paid about 2*l.* for the lime and haulage.

23,874. That is about 6*l.*?—And some stones as well.

23,875. What did you think would be the amount that the landlord would pay towards erecting these buildings?—Indeed, I cannot say.

Mr. Griffiths.

23,876. You certainly could give some idea what it cost; did it cost 100*l.*?—Perhaps it would cost about 70*l.*

23,877. Then he had very good interest for his money, had he not?—I do not know.

23,878. By what means do you consider your rent can be reduced as you have applied to your landlord, although your family had been for 400 years on the same land, and he has refused to give you anything?—I cannot have a reduction now, because I do not ask for it. I do not understand the question.

23,879. I thought you said there was a remedy just now—that you wanted to have your rent reduced?—I am not under the same landlord now. I lost the farm.

23,880. When the lease expired, was there any condition in that lease that the place was to be left in good repair?—I cannot say anything about that.

23,881. The landlord never told you so?—I do not remember. I was a yearly tenant to my father.

23,882. You said you had a receipt 400 years ago. Can you give us the rent paid for that farm then?—4*l.* 5*s.*, and some conditions in the lease, and it had been raised to 6*l.*?

23,883. I will bring you back again to the time you left this place. Would you not have liked to stop in this place and have the rent reduced?—Yes, I should, if I could have had it for 30*l.*, as I had settled to have it.

23,884. Then would you like to appeal to someone else to come in and see that justice was done between you and your landlord?—Yes; I should like to see a law for something of that kind.

23,885. That means something in the shape of a land court to appeal to?—Yes, the Land Court.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,886. Did the agent give you any reason for taking this receipt from you?—Yes; he said that he was going to send it to the landlord in order that he might see how long the relations with the farm had been in order that I might remain there.

23,887. You say that the year 1500 and something was put on the receipt?—About 400 years and something over.

23,888. Was this document on skin or on paper?—I think it was paper.

23,889. Paper?—I think so.

23,890. Was there a stamp on it or a seal on it?—I do not remember.

23,891. What kind of letters were they printed in; were they letters such as you see your newspaper printed in?—They were similar to these (referring to the printed syllabus of questions).

Lord Kenyon.

23,892. That could hardly be 400 years old?—Oh, yes (doubtfully).

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

23,893. But, seriously, about how old do you really think this printed and stamped paper was?—About 400 years ago the receipt was.

23,894. Could you tell us how it began, for instance?—No, I cannot remember.

23,895. You do not understand the question? How did the receipt begin—what were the words?—"Received."

23,896. Was the receipt in Latin, in Welsh, or in English?—In English.

Lord Kenyon.

23,897. Do you know, that it is only a little over 400 years, since the printing press came to England?—No, I do not.

Mr. Brymnor Jones.

23,898. Where did you find this document when your father died; where was it?—In the house where I was born and bred, and where he had been born and bred, and his grandfather and their fathers.

23,899. At any rate, however many hundred years old it was, it was a pretty old document?—Yes.

23,900. Then do I understand you to say that as far back as you could gather, from talking with the old people, your ancestors had had this farm on lease for life?—Yes.

23,901. Did you hear any talk about going to any court or about any lord of the manor or anything of that kind?—For what?

23,902. Do you recognise the phrase?—No.

23,903. Do you know in what lordship this farm was situate?—It is in Llangyfelach parish.

Lord Kenyon.

23,904. These are questions put in by Mr. Vincent, "When your father's lease expired did "you apply for a renewal of the lease"?—No.

23,905. "Do you know whether a premium had been paid for the lease under which your father held"?—No, I do not know anything about that.

23,906. "Could you read the receipt"?—Yes. I read the receipt, but do not recollect beyond that it was very old, and that it was a receipt for money; and several others read the receipt with me.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Herbert Lloyd called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

23,907. You live at Plas Kilybebyll?—Yes.

23,908. And you wish to give evidence as to your estate?—I do.

23,909. Where is your estate situate?—On the side of the Swansea Valley.

23,910. And you give evidence for the surrounding districts as well?—Well, I can speak generally of the surrounding district. In the whole of the Swansea Valley the customs are the same as on my property.

23,911. What is the acreage of your estate?—About 2,800 acres.

23,912. As to management, do you consider large estates or small estates are better managed?—Oh, large estates as a rule, undoubtedly; I have arrived at that conclusion, not only in this country, but likewise in Ireland too.

23,913. You have had some experience of Ireland, too? Yes. The larger the estates, as a rule, the more money there is, the more opportunity of laying out money, and the more money is laid out on large estates.

23,914. What do you consider about absentee landlords?—Absentees are the curse of the country, and a great misfortune. Resident landlords are of enormous use in the country.

23,915. Are there many absentee landlords in this district?—No, not a landlord owning any large amount of land; there are none in this neighbourhood.

23,916. You draw the inference as to their being a curse to the country from Ireland, I suppose. Yes, and if you have lived all your lifetime in the country I think you would naturally arrive at the conclusion that a landlord living amongst his tenantry and taking a special interest in his tenantry, is of the greatest assistance to them and comfort to them; they can always come to him; they can fall back upon him, and they do fall back on him in all times of trouble, or sorrow, or joy, or anything else; they always go to their landlords, and it creates a civilizing influence amongst the tenantry and all the working classes where a man of education, a man who is attached to the neighbourhood and to his people resides among them.

23,917. As to politics and language, does that make any difference in the selection of the tenant?—None whatever.

23,918. What have you to say about the agents?—Well, you have had one agent from the neighbourhood already before you, and all I can say is that all the agents I know, and I know them all in this district, are men of great practical experience, and fair men too.

23,919. You think they do their best to see that justice is done to their tenants?—Yes, I do most decidedly.

23,920. Then as to terms of tenancy; when is the entry?—On my property and generally in the Swansea Valley, on the 25th March and 29th September.

23,921. Is it usually a six months' notice?—No, 12 months.

23,922. Are farms let yearly?—Yearly. As to agreements, I have no agreements. Agreements are very few and far between, in the district.

23,923. Are you under the Glamorganshire custom?—No, not the one you are referring to, the East Glamorgan custom.

23,924. Then it is the West Glamorgan custom?—We have a local custom in our neighbourhood.

23,925. Is it a good custom?—Well, it is better than nothing.

23,926. It is not as good as the East Glamorgan?—No; it is not to be compared with the East Glamorgan.

23,927. Is there any demand for leases?—No, none.

23,928. Are they refused?—No, none have been refused that I know of.

23,929. Do you think they readily accept leases?—No, because I have offered them. At the present moment, there are no less than three tenants of mine, who have been offered leases at different periods during the last 21 years, and they would never take them.

23,930. Why do you suppose that was?—Well, they do not value the leases. They feel a perfect security as regards their tenancy, and they do not care therefore for them.

23,931. Then the condition of the leaseholders you say certainly is not superior?—You know, as regards myself, I have only two cases—only one case now—of a leaseholder, but judging from others all round the district, and I know almost all the farmers in the Swansea Valley. I may say that those that are under lease are not a bit better off than those who are under yearly tenancies; in fact, you could not see that there was any difference at all.

23,932. Are changes in tenancy more frequent now than formerly?—No, I can hardly say so; I should think not.

23,933. Do you know of any cases of hardship?—No, none that I can call to mind.

23,934. None on your own estate?—No, certainly not.

23,935. In resuming occupation, what is the usual course; to give notice?—Oh, yes, to give notice certainly.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,936. Any compensation?—Yes, compensation certainly.

23,937. For planting and so on?—Yes. Notice would be given. It is either given in writing or given verbally. It is matter of arrangement between landlord and tenant.

23,938. You know of no cases of hardship with regard to that?—No, none, certainly.

23,939. Then damage from timber cutting; is the tenant compensated?—The tenants are always compensated in some form or other. As a rule the tenant whose land is damaged actually does the haulage, that is in the contract. That is one form of compensating him. If not, money may be paid, either by the contractor who purchases the trees, or by the landlord himself. One of those courses is always adopted. Directly or indirectly, the tenant is compensated for the damage done.

23,940. As to agreements and leases, you say there are yearly tenancies by custom in the district, and the rent is fixed at a gross sum?—Yes, fixed at a gross sum.

23,941. Is there uniformity in the rents?—Yes, I should say so, but of course it does vary very much according to the position of the farms, particularly on these hill-sides. The further they are away from the centres, the less value they may be.

23,942. The smaller farms are higher in rent in proportion, I suppose, than the large?—Yes, they are, rather.

23,943. What is the usual rent in your district?—It varies very much. My lowest average rent, that is including, of course, mountain land, is 2*s.* 6½*d.* My lowest rental is on a farm of 213 acres, and that is 2*s.* 6½*d.*, and the highest I have is a farm of 245½ acres, and that is 5*s.* 1¾*d.* These are mountain farms. They have a certain amount of poor mountain land, which of course reduces the average. That mountain land, I take it, is not worth 2*s.* an acre, and what comes inside the enclosures is some of it naturally sound, light land, but it is poor land still; then you get an intermediate land, you may say, within the enclosures, which is what they call "short hay meadow"; you get a certain proportion of that, and then beyond that you get the mountain.

23,944. Are there any services required?—No, my Lord, there are no services required now but in the olden days there were—that is in my father's time; and in point of fact the tenants at the present moment really hold under the old verbal agreements. By the old custom, as I think you have already had stated before the Commission, the tenants had to find a day's mowing, a day's reaping, and a day's hauling, lime, and sundry poultry, but that has become obsolete. I have never enforced it, and I have been in the property 28 years.

23,945. The rents are fixed by private agreement, you say?—Yes, always by private agreement.

23,946. And are farmers alive to their own interests, do you think?—Oh, dear, yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,947. Is arbitration ever resorted to?—No, never. I never heard of a case.

23,948. Is there much increase in the rents?—Well, mine have remained, with two exceptions, I think, so far as I can make out, for 50 years the same.

23,949. Have there been any reductions?—There have only been reductions in two cases.

23,950. Any abatements?—No. I should not make any abatements. I should make a reduction or leave it alone.

23,951. When is your rent usually paid?—The 1st of July and the 1st of January.

23,952. What do you say with regard to the preferential claim for rent?—I think, as Mr. Sheppard, who has been here before me, does, that it is a decided advantage to the tenant, because there is no doubt about it, although it is true that our rent days are three months after the rents have become due at the present time; we should look very sharp after our rents if it was not for our preferential claim. In fact we constantly allow a tenant to run perhaps six months after the rent is due. If there is something special in the condition of the markets, and if a man cannot realise all he should for his stock or sheep, we give him breathing time. I do not think I should be disposed to give him breathing time if that claim was abolished.

23,953. Then tithe, land-tax, and local rates are paid by the tenant, and chief rent and income-tax are paid by the landlord?—Yes.

23,954. Have the local rates increased?—Yes, they have increased. They have increased in my union from 2*s.* 1*d.* in the £ in 1864 to 4*s.* 4*d.* in 1892–3—practically 30 years.

23,955. That is over double?—That is over double.

Mr. Seebohm.

23,956. On agricultural land?—Those are the rates. You might deduct something off that; that is the actual rate on the rateable value of the parish, but part of this is special sanitary rate. I cannot tell you exactly what the proportion is, but there, of course, the farmer would only pay upon one-fourth.

Lord Kenyon.

23,957. Farms vary very considerably in size, you say?—Yes, they vary very considerably.

23,958. What consolidation is there? Do you know of any cases?—There are very few, and I know of none of recent years.

23,959. What is the effect of consolidation?—I think it is a decided improvement. In the few cases that have actually come under my notice, I say consolidation is a decided improvement, but I do not say that I should approve of consolidation generally; it depends entirely upon the case.

23,960. You would not depopulate the country in order to consolidate?—On no account whatever. I should be much more disposed, on the hill sides, if it was not for the outlay in building, to reduce many of my farms.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,961. To sub-divide them?—To sub-divide them.

23,962. Do you know of any sub-letting?—No, nothing to speak of.

23,964. Do you think their stock is larger in proportion than on the larger farms. Is there more manure?—I could not say that. I should think it would be so.

23,965. How about labour. Has that been difficult to get?—Yes, it has been difficult to get.

23,966. What is the result? Are fences well looked after?—The fences are not perhaps quite as good as they used to be.

23,967. Do they understand hedging in this country?—The old people did. The old people kept their fences really well.

23,968. They took a pride in them?—Yes. They were bound to keep their fences. There was a certain portion they were bound to keep, because they were troubled with what was worse even than rabbits—mountain sheep, and whenever they grew a corn crop, they were obliged to pay special attention to the fences round their corn crops. But you do not find the same workmen nowadays, that I remember when I was a youngster.

23,969. Not such good hedge makers?—No, nothing like it, and there are not the same number employed on the farms.

23,970. Is there as much land ploughed as formerly?—No. I do not say that the difference is very large, because ours is not an arable district at all, but still there is less than there was in my recollection.

23,971. Grass is more profitable, I think?—Grass is more profitable.

23,972. Is there any waste land reclaimed or capable of being reclaimed?—There is precious little reclaimed, but there is a great deal that is capable of being reclaimed.

23,973. What district would that be in?—The whole of this district, all round you.

23,974. Do you mean by draining?—Principally by draining.

23,975. Draining on a large scale, I suppose?—Draining on a large scale.

23,976. Do you mean something similar to the fen draining, by windmill pumps, or something of that sort?—What I mean is this. There is this difficulty about draining: if a landlord does it, in order to drain as economically as possible, you want to drain on a large scale. You can understand that in the purchase of pipes, and the organising of your staff, and so on, is important, that you should do it on a large scale, and carry it straight through. If you were to be asked to do that by your tenants in this country, there is not a single tenant that would be able to take advantage of your draining. I mean to say this, that if you drain more than on the average three acres a year, or I may say less than three acres, but at any rate if you drained three acres a year, for any of these mountain tenants, they could not take advantage of the draining. It is in this way. Draining clears the soil, of course, of water; the soil is fairly fertile, where you get an immediate return from your draining; but draining the land that we have got on the hill sides—which will pay, I believe, for draining, too—is simply throwing money into the ditch, unless you follow it up, and when you follow it up, the very first thing you have to do is to apply lime; you have to apply at least four or five tons of lime to the acre. A tenant has to do that, and he has to follow that up with a good top-dressing of dung, or dung and earth, and he may have to break it, or at all events, follow whatever course he adopts; it involves him in a very considerable outlay, and not one of the farmers all round these districts is able to take advantage of it, that is, if you do it beyond a very small amount.

23,977. The change, you say, in reference to the decrease of arable land, is caused by the falling off in the price of corn, and the increase in the price of hay?—Yes.

23,978. Are they allowed to sell hay?—Yes, there is no restriction whatever put upon what they do, they are allowed to do what they think is to their own interests.

23,979. What improvements are done by the landlords?—Buildings principally, the rebuilding. I have laid out in 27 years, 2,408*l.* in new farm buildings, and that is equal to three and a half years' rental. My repairs, in addition to that, amount to about 15 per cent. In addition to that, I have laid out 175*l.* in road making, which of course may be partly a benefit to myself, but equally a benefit to my tenants. It was made as much for them as for myself. In addition to that I have fenced jointly with neighbouring landlords; last spring twelvemonth, I fenced 2,740 yards of mountain, and the following spring I fenced, on my own account, 1,200 yards, and I am under a pledge to fence 700 yards again. For that I may say, either for the roads or for the fencing, I have not asked, nor do I intend to ask, any interest whatever.

23,980. Do tenants do the haulage?—The tenants do the haulage.

23,981. Do the tenants do any improvements?—Very little. They do some; they have not the capital to do much.

23,982. Haulage is allowed for, you say?—On the tenants leaving, do you mean?

23,983. Yes?—I certainly should allow according to the number of years it was done.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

23,984. No case has come under your notice perhaps?—No, I have not had a case of the sort myself. I have not had a case of a tenant leaving where he had done any haulage.

23,985. And you say that compensation for improvement is paid by the custom under which you let?—The compensation for improvement would be paid for by the landlord.

23,986. You say the compensation for improvement is paid to the tenant for improvements done by him?—Yes, that would be valued on the tenant's going out by the valuer who was employed for the manure.

23,987. According to the custom of the country?—According to the custom of the country.

23,988. They do not ask for written consent?—No.

23,989. The seed, tillage, and cultivation are paid for, of course, by the incoming tenant?—Yes.

23,990. Dung and haulage are paid for in full, are they not?—They are paid in full the first year with regard to dung and haulage, and half the second year. Lime is exactly the same.

23,991. Then the produce remaining is sold?—Yes, they always have a sale.

23,992. And the permanent improvements are allowed for by the landlord?—Yes. There are no restrictions.

23,993. Do you know of any outgoing tenant failing to receive sufficient compensation?—No, I do not.

23,994. No compensation is given for general improvements. Is that so?—Not that I know of.

23,995. Is there any tenant right or tenant interest recognised?—No.

23,996. I understand you think the Agricultural Holdings Act satisfactory?—I think it ought to be, but I never had any opportunity of applying it myself.

23,997. Have you anything to say with regard to the game?—Game is preserved in spots all through the districts. It is only in places generally near residences and the covers, but if you were to calculate out of the acreage of the valley the number of acres that are actually preserved for game it would be, of course, very small, compared to the acreage in which there would be none.

23,998. According to that, there would not be much damage done, you think?—There is damage done in the immediate vicinity of a cover sometimes.

23,999. Would compensation be paid?—Compensation is paid, and tenants in some cases have taken the law into their own hands. I have never interfered with them. I know for a certainty, that some of my tenants have done it where I have not kept down the rabbits, though probably, you would laugh at my stock of rabbits; but still there are pet bits of land few and far between, and a rabbit knows the best as well as any beast, so that they rather persecute these spots. As many as 10 rabbits will make a terrible show on a hillside farm in Wales; my tenants have exercised their powers under the Act, and with my full concurrence where I have not trapped rabbits myself.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,000. I suppose they are not expected to beat, but they do beat?—Yes, they do beat; they are not expected to, but they always do. I gave great offence on one occasion, because I left out a tenant, who I thought was not in a position to come.

24,001. Do you think game preserving has any effect upon the relations between landlord and tenant?—No, I do not think so.

24,002. There is no harmful effect, you would say, I suppose?—All I can say is that I have been preserving (such as my preserving is) for 28 years, and my father before me, and I have never had any falling out with my tenants.

24,003. What have you to say about the law of trespass?—You see if you do away with the game laws, you are bound to substitute, then, a very stringent trespass law; as it is, the only protection the farmers have from trespass is the game keeper. There is an amount of damage done, in a small way, perhaps you may say, but still an amount of annoyance and damage is done to the tenant by trespass, as you have already mentioned, my Lord, I think by hunting for mushrooms and blackberries, and that sort of thing. That more particularly applies to the neighbourhood of the works; when you get away from the works, I do not know anything about it, and there may not be cause for complaint, but there is, no doubt, amongst the farmers great cause for complaint anywhere within two miles of the populous centres.

24,004. You say any one can exercise sporting rights over the Crown lands?—I only know of one case of Crown land near the district, and all I know is that there you find it is a very dangerous thing to go and shoot, as they tell me, because there are always 20 or 30 sportsmen blazing away. I think everybody in the room would know the place; it is a place some distance from here, called Waun Tinker. That is the only Crown land I know of, and there certainly many people go to shoot.

24,005. Is there much grouse there, should you think?—No, I should think not—there could not be.

24,006. What do you say about fruit culture? I think they might do something more than they do with regard to fruit even on the hillsides. They have no knowledge about fruit culture at all. Some few farms may have an apple tree or two, or they may have more than that, half a dozen or a dozen apple trees, but I think if they did study the question and paid more attention to it, a good deal might be done with regard to fruit.

24,007. And poultry?—Yes. Unquestionably there have been falls in the price of other articles in my recollection, and yet poultry commands a far better price, and there is nothing that has risen more in value in my recollection in this country, than poultry.

24,008. Is it in this country reckoned as a perquisite of the farmer's wife?—I could hardly tell you that.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,009. I know it is in some places?—I should think it is very likely here too.

24,010. Is there any instruction given in butter and cheese making?—There has been in the district.

24,011. Was it taken up at all?—No.

24,012. Is there any demand for agricultural education?—No.

24,013. How about the railway rates?—You see we do not feel the railway rates directly. Indirectly we may, but the principal thing that the farmers depend upon here is selling of store stock which are taken away by the drovers to England, and of course the farmers do not know anything about the rates that are paid by the drovers. If the rates are high it naturally falls in the end on them; and hits the farmers indirectly, but the farmers do not feel it personally; they do not know exactly how the railway rates are, and they do not know what takes place.

24,014. Is there any co-operation?—No.

24,015. Do the farmers insure at all?—No, I do not think it is very likely they do so.

24,016. Are there many proprietor farmers?—Here and there. They are scattered about, not many.

24,017. What is their condition?—Very much the same as their neighbours.

24,018. I suppose the family all work upon the farm, the children at home?—Yes, all.

24,019. Do they pay their children any wages?—No.

24,020. They start them in life?—They start them in life with a certain amount of stock and furniture.

24,021. With regard to labourers, you say the proportion depends upon the size of the farm. Do the majority of labourers lodge on the farms or in cottages?—Yes, on the farms, but there are so very few agricultural labourers, and there have been always few within my recollection in this district.

24,022. Are they lads mostly?—No, they are grown men, but you will find that if a farmer has a couple of sons on his farm, he never dreams of employing outside labour. If he has no son he employs a man, rarely more than one, though that of course depends upon the size of the farm.

24,023. What are the wages?—The wages are now 10*s.* a week, and their board.

24,024. They have increased?—They have doubled in 30 years.

24,025. Do they have good accommodation?—They live like the rest of the members of the family.

24,026. As to their bedroom accommodation, is that pretty good?—Oh, yes, very often they sleep with one of the sons of the farmer, if there is a son, or they have a room in the house themselves.

24,027. They do not sleep, as we have heard it stated in Anglesey, in a cattle shed, with no partition between them and the cattle?—No, I do not think I have heard of a single instance of a man sleeping out of the farm-house. There may be such a case, but as a rule they sleep in the farm-house.

24,028. Do you hear any complaints of their going out at night?—No.

24,029. Is there any migration of farmers in this neighbourhood?—No.

24,030. Do they keep accounts?—None, or very few.

24,031. Have you any suggestions to make as to breeding, or anything of that sort?—I think there is one thing that the farmers might do; they might pay more attention to the quality of their stock—I am talking of hill farmers—and more especially to their horses. I have taken an interest in farming certainly for 30 years and I have introduced some good bulls; I have bred good bulls and I have done a good deal to set an example to my tenants, and yet I cannot say at the present time that I have really produced one halfpenny-worth of good. They are as well satisfied, the general run of them, with a half-starved-looking brute as they are with a good-looking beast, and yet they know perfectly well at the present time, when it is difficult to pass cattle, that a good beast will go when an indifferent looking beast stays behind, and yet in spite of that, there is that lack of, what shall I call it—there is that lack of energy, or pluck, or common sense, that they will not rise out of an old rule. It is exactly the same with the horses; there is no district where you can raise cheaper and better horses, I think, of a certain class, than you can on these hillsides, and that is the pony, a hardy beast and a certain small horse which is handy for the collieries and which always commands a good price. Yet you cannot induce the farmers on the hillsides to take any interest in that; they will take any brute that they see.

24,032. At a small fee, I suppose?—At a small fee. I do not know of a single case of a man taking as much pride as I have known in Ireland, where an old man would take his mare 30 miles and walk her all the way and himself too, for the sake of getting thorough good blood. I do not know of a hillside farmer here that would walk his mare five miles to get a good horse, if he could get a brute alongside of him. I have no hesitation in saying that that remark will be endorsed by everybody who has taken an interest in breeding good horses in this country.

24,033. What is the class of cattle on these hillsides, Welsh?—All sorts; they are crosses between the Hereford and the blacks.

24,034. Are there shorthorns at all?—I have tried shorthorns, and shorthorns will not do very well.

24,035. It is too soft a class, I suppose for the hillsides?—I have not found it so, but if you go right to the mountains it is. Still, the cross of shorthorns does remarkably well. I have got some tenants who have done very well with the cross where I have induced them to stick to it.

24,036. Are the relations between you and your tenants friendly?—Yes, and between the other tenants and the landlords in the neighbourhood, I can speak to that particularly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,037. Do you think that the farmers in this neighbourhood can pay their rents without difficulty?—I think it has been a tight time these last two years, but they do pay, and they can pay. The tenantry on the hillsides as a rule, you may say, live pretty well from hand to mouth; I do not think they are ever men who have got much capital at their back, much to fall back upon; they are very dependent upon the state of the market.

24,038. Having regard to the wages they have to pay to their labourers, and the rent they have to pay to their landlords, you can hardly describe the business of the farmers as a paying one at the present time?—No, it is not.

24,039. When do you think the depression commenced?—About two years ago.

24,040. As late as that?—Yes. The cattle before that had been selling remarkably well, and it is about two years ago that prices began to go down.

24,041. Do you think that the depression is temporary, or due to temporary causes?—I hope it is temporary, and I believe it is. I have lived long enough to see the ups and downs before, and I hope I shall live long enough do see the ups and downs again.

24,042. When was the period of great depression in Glamorganshire?—You see Glamorganshire is a very different county, the vale of Glamorganshire is utterly different to the district I am speaking of particularly.

24,043. You are speaking of the district, I take it, west of Neath particularly?—Yes; up these Neath districts, where the land is poor and the hills are steep, and where the farmers depend very largely upon the sale of their stock; some depend on the sheep, but they depend generally on the sale of their horses and stock.

24,044. This is a thickly populated part of the county, is it not?—Yes, the valleys are, the hillsides are not.

24,045. Do you think that by adopting a more thorough system of cultivation by market gardening, for instance, farmers would make their holdings pay better?—I think that farmers might very well try other things. I think they have got into a certain groove, and they fancy they must grow this, that, and the other, because their fathers did before them. I think there is very little enterprise on the part of farmers generally. I do not think that applies to hillside farmers only, but you may go farther afield.

24,046. I am rather anxious to confine your attention to this part west of Neath, because it enables us to draw conclusions from the facts with regard to the neighbourhood. As I understood, you go back two years, and the times you say were fairly prosperous?—They were.

24,047. I mean to say, as I understand, the hill farmers had no difficulty in paying their rents?—Yes.

24,048. That is what I understood you to say?—Yes.

24,049. Then going back again two years, when was the previous period of depression?—I could not say really, but I have seen fluctuations in the course of years. Cattle might fall in the spring and might rise in the autumn. We have seen those sort of fluctuations, but this depression has been rather peculiar in its character; in the first place it has been longer than any I can remember, or any that I can hear of in the last 40 years, but in addition to that it is not only that the cattle have fallen in price, but that there has been a difficulty in selling them at any price at all; in fact they would not go—they would not pass. That has been the peculiar feature of this depression, but it is on the mend now. I have had it from many experienced farmers and hillside men, that they consider there has been more fuss made about the depression than there had any business to be. That has been told me by actual bonâ fide farmers, and I quite agree with them; I do not think they have any right to make all the fuss they do make.

24,050. Do you mean that many farmers have told you that there has been too much fuss made about this depression for the last two years?—Yes. Men in this room who have been before you to-day have said the same thing, and it has been confirmed by others to whom I have talked; that there has been more fuss over the depression sustained by farmers, than they were justified in making. There is no doubt there has been a depression, but they have made the most of it.

24,051. Then as I understand the general effect of your evidence with regard to that, the cause of the depression, is the fall in the price of the stock?—Yes, that is the chief thing that hits us, more than corn or anything else. There is wool of course, but that I did not include. Sheep have not fallen, wool has; sheep are selling now as well as they have ever done in the district I refer to.

24,052. Then you think, assuming that things go on as they are, and there is no general law suggested to remedy it, that matters would come right as between you and your own tenants?—Yes. I have not the slightest doubt about it.

24,053. I think in the first part of your evidence (I suppose it was involved in the question as to residence of landlords) you said that the landlord, being an educated man, has a civilizing influence?—Something to that effect.

24,054. I suppose a clergyman also, although he may not be a landlord, has an educating influence, has he not?—Yes, anyone. I mentioned landlords because the question was asked me, but I say that any educated civilised person is an example to his neighbourhood, and that example has a beneficial effect upon the neighbourhood.

24,055. Then a landlord has a civilising influence, not because he is the owner of land, but presumably because he is educated?—Yes, that is true enough. That is what I was alluding to—the influence that he had upon his surroundings.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,056. Why do you not apply the eastern custom to your district?—Well, Mr. Griffiths, to tell you the truth, it has never arisen, for I do not think for years a tenant has left me.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

24,057. It must be rather awkward when a tenant leaves one district and goes into another, to have a different system. It is a pity that the whole district could not adopt the same principle?—There is no doubt about it, it would be an excellent system to introduce, but you must remember that a tenant who left me, would not dream of going down to the Vale of Glamorgan; and a man coming down from the Vale of Glamorgan would not go to the Vale of Neath.

24,058. I should think not?—You know it is not an easy thing to go and introduce a system, however good the system may be; to introduce it on another property is not at all an easy thing to do. I think myself that if ever it did arise that a tenant left me, I should try and do it with the incoming tenant.

24,059. Quite so. I think it would be a very good thing?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,060. There is very little arable land I think you said?—Very little, but so far as the Glamorganshire custom touches arable land, it would be of very little use to us. The principal question is as to the lime, and manure, and haulage and tillage.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,061. I gather from your evidence that there is hardly any increase in rent on account of improvements, so as to obtain interest for capital expended. What interest do you usually charge upon capital expended?—One case was a farm where 27 years ago the tenant came to me and asked me to build him a house. He said, "I will pay you 5 per cent. extra, if you will build me the house," and I did; I built him the house, and I assisted him in some other ways. However, I built the house, and I charged him 6*l.* a year more rent. The house cost me 142*l.*

24,062. Does that advance continue, or will it expire in a number of years?—No, that will probably continue, unless I saw some good reason to remove it.

24,063. Can you give any reason why the rates should be increased to the amount you mentioned?—My first figures were taken from a larger Union. The Union in which I live now was a portion of a much larger Union, (that was the only Union in those days,) at the time those figures were taken. Then it was divided, and a smaller Union, our Union, was formed. There is another thing you must remember, that during that time the School Boards have come into existence, and you know the unmitigated blessing they are. Likewise there is what has been mentioned to-day—the sanitary rate; that was not in existence at that time, and I may tell you that I think we have laid down something like 12 miles of water pipes, and that is, of course, to accommodate the population.

24,064. Then you speak of the effect of consolidation being that the production has improved and there is little difference in the employment of labour. Do you not think there is more labour employed upon a small farm than there is upon a large one as a rule?—I do not think that was quite my answer. What I said was this, that in the few cases that have actually come under my observation, where two farms have not been sufficient for families to live upon, they have been consolidated and made into one that was a fit living for a family. In one or two cases, as I say, that have come under my observation, I think that they have benefited thereby. The land improvement has been decidedly better done, but there is very little of it going on in our district.

24,065. Quite so. Why do you consider the fences should not be attended to as formerly?—I do not think there is anything like the work in the farmer that there used to be. Our hillside farmers have degenerated from what they were. In my younger days they were far harder working men, and stayed much more at home. Now there is too much travelling about, and too many days spent off the farm. Railways are not an unmitigated blessing either, Mr. Griffiths. They "lug" the young fellows away to fairs, instead of their sticking to their farms.

24,066. That is true, but then they can get to know the prices, and be able to get home much sooner, if they are going to make use of a fair properly?—If they are bent on getting home, that is.

24,067. You said just now that you considered that sheep sold as well now as ever they did. You rather surprised me?—What I should have said probably was the fat wethers we have on the mountains. They are selling at as high a price now, as I believe, they have sold within the last 27 years. I have that from sheep farmers.

24,068. You quite surprise me?—That is a fact.

24,069. They were sold in our neighbourhood at half the price, that they were sold a few years ago?—But wool again has tumbled down most frightfully; it is 6½*d.* to 6*d.* a pound, while it used to be a good deal over a shilling.

24,070. Then with regard to seeding land, is there anything allowed to the tenant for allowing clover seed to be put in the land. Is there so much an acre allowed to the outgoing tenant?—Yes, in my estate, and I think in the neighbouring estates too, the tenant is allowed for the seed, and I know what is generally allowed on my estates is 15*s.* an acre for the seed. He is likewise also allowed for the ploughing, hoeing, and rolling.

24,071. You are an experienced farmer, are you not?—No, I am not an experienced farmer. I cannot lay claim to that, I am sorry to say; I do know a little about it.

24,072. Quite so. But if a tenant lays down a field and puts clover into it, and allows clover to grow in the ground, he cannot expect to have such a good crop as if he had that field without clover. It would not be so good for any other corn. I ask you is there anything ever allowed for that reason?—No, I do not think so.

24,073. There is not?—No.

24,074. It is customary in our part of the country. Then do you consider that there should be compensation for general improvements of the farm, when a man manures his land well and cultivates his farm properly. Do you not think there should be something allowed for general improvements. A man may nearly double the value of the land by improving the land?—Supposing he is leaving you, do you mean?

24,075. Yes?—I should take precious good care not to let him go, if he was so good a man as that; I should hold on to him like wax. All I can say is I have had no experience of a case of that sort. I could not answer that.

24,076. Then I must ask you the same question as was asked just now; is there very good accommodation for the breeding of poultry generally in the farms?—No, not generally.

24,077. There should be more accommodation?—Yes, there should be.

24,078. I quite agree with you?—I have done it in one or two cases myself, but as a rule in my farms, and elsewhere, the farmers have set so little value on it, that the landlords have not been encouraged to lay out money in that direction.

24,079. I think, as a rule, the farmers understand very little about poultry?—Very little. They do not pay half enough attention to it.

24,080. Then you mentioned just now, that the tenants are very loth to take advantage of the good sires, that are introduced into the neighbourhood?—Yes, I am sorry to say that is so.

24,081. Do you not think it would be a good thing if every sire, both in cattle and horses, were registered in a herd book or stud book, in order that no sire should be allowed to be used except those that were entered in some such book, and that in every herd or stud book they should take care not to have any but proper sires?—No doubt there would be some good done in that way. But there is no question about it, that half the animals that travel about ought to be shot, and not allowed to go about.

24,082. If a landowner has a good sire for the use of the tenants, the farmers will not adopt it, and there is a lot of money lost by breeding inferior animals?—No doubt about it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,083. I am rather tempted to pursue this matter of the price of wether mutton. You say that wether mutton is as high now, or, at least, it was stated to you that wether mutton is as high now, as it was during the last 27 years?—As at any time within the last 27 years. To my knowledge the highest price offered on my estate—I think this is about nine years ago, but I will not be certain about the date—for two mountain wethers supposed to be fat—as fat as you ever get them, that is, in the month of September—was 12*s.*, and the farmer came to me and said it was a ridiculously low price, and that he could not get a higher price anywhere. He asked me to buy, and he killed, and he brought a sheep up to me, and I think I consumed some 25 of them, not personally; but at the end I asked him how it paid him, and he said he made 1*l.* a sheep. I asked him the other day what he was realising for his sheep now, and he said he could sell them to the butcher now for from 18*s.* to 1*l.* Before, he got the butcher's profits, you may say, because he killed himself, and sold them to me. I could quote another, too, but that is a bonâ fide mountain farmer, a man with whom I have often had dealings.

24,084. But could you not simplify the matter by saying how much a pound those sheep would be?—6*d.*

24,085. Do you mean to say that is the present price?—That is the price that he could get, 6*d.* a lb. from the butchers. That is what he told me, and he was not interested in telling me what was not the fact. I was not going to buy from him at the time, so that there is no reason why he should attempt to deceive me. I asked him quietly how the sheep were doing, and whether they were lower now than he had been receiving. "Oh, dear me, no," he said, "they are not "lower; I am getting from 18*s.* to 1*l.* from the "butcher for my wethers, and you may take "that from me as a fact."

24,086. It seems to me strange, because about 25 years ago my father was able to make about 1*s.* a pound for wether mutton, and now wether mutton in our neighbourhood would not be more than 7½*d.* per pound?—It depends upon how you are situated. We are very peculiarly situated, and we have a very large mining population. No farmer in my district has to send more than at the outside three miles to a market, and he can sell everything. If he finds the butchers unwilling to give him a reasonable price, he will simply slaughter for himself, and go and sell all round at the cottages, and that is done very largely by the farmers, and then they get the butcher's price, do you see. We have got excellent markets in our district. I do not suppose you have; you have not got anything like the market we have, close at our doors.

24,087. With regard to this question about preferential claim for rent, you say that you think it is a great advantage to the tenant?—I think it is in that way. I do not know what the action of landlords would be with regard to collecting their rent, if there was no preferential claim.

24,088. Well, say that they collected it in advance. Do you think that the landlords would exercise more care in the selection of their tenant?—If they collected it in advance, I do not know that they would exercise more care. If I allowed a man three months, after the rent was due, to pay me, I should exercise a great deal more care in my selection if there was no preferential claim for rent.

24,089. If you were satisfied that you could collect it in advance, would you say that the preferential claim should be abolished?—Who is to give that security to me that I shall get it?

Lord Kenyon.

24,090. They collect it in Scotland?—Do they?

24,091. Yes, we have been told about it?—I have not tried it. It is something new to me. I should like to think it over, before I give an answer.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,092. Do you think that generally landlords would exercise more care to secure capital amongst tenants?—We must take what we can get and be thankful; we cannot command farmers with capital on the hillsides in Wales; all we look for is a steady, respectable, and industrious man, and if he can put a reasonable amount of stock on his farm we are glad to get him. I assure you no man with capital (there being farms all over England vacant), would come to the hillsides of Wales.

24,093. When a farm becomes vacant on your estate?—It never has; you are supposing an impossibility. However, I will assume it has; I can answer your question, I dare say.

24,094. I suppose some of your tenants die?—Yes, they have died, but the families take after them.

24,095. They succeed?—Yes, I have had a case where a family has died clean out.

24,096. Supposing that a tenant dies, do you get no outside applications for the farm? Are there any applicants who are not in any way connected with or related to him?—Yes.

24,097. A few?—Yes. I should have as many as I wanted, and with no difficulty to let. I can put my hand now on three or four tenants, who are ready to take any farm of mine if it becomes vacant.

24,098. Are you able to speak with regard to other estates in the neighbourhood? Is there a good deal of competition for a farm when it becomes vacant?—I do not know about a great deal of competition, but I do not think there is any difficulty in finding a tenant.

24,099. Are there any applicants?—Plenty of applicants.

24,100. 20 or 30?—No, I do not think so many as that.

24,101. We will say 20?—It may be three or four applicants.

24,102. Not more?—No, I do not think there would be. I know the district all round, and I know pretty well when the farms become vacant, it often comes before me as Chairman of the Assessment Committee or in some other public way, and I hear very often when farms have changed hands, but I know that as a rule they look for some member of the family, and if they have got a member of the family they put him in, if he is anything like a respectable man. We are very clannish; there is no doubt about it, as Mr. Sheppard said—the hillside farmers are very clannish.

24,103. You have said that you think the small hillside farmers farm better and do better than the large ones?—Yes, I think I am right there as a rule. I was trying to think of the few small farms I know of, and some that I hold, and I think, that very often they are better. I think very often our farms are too big for the men that have them; they have not capital enough; and I think myself, as I stated before, the best thing would be to divide, if it was not for the heavy outlay that there would be in farm buildings

24,104. I think you give this as a reason, that a small farmer generally went out to labour or to get some auxiliary aid?—Yes, he does so very often.

24,105. Where such auxiliary aid is not at hand, a small tenant would be in the same condition as a big tenant, I suppose?—Yes.

24,106. Much the same?—He would be worse off, I think, if he was removed from any chance of helping himself by some other means.

24,107. Do you think that the temptation then would be great, for the grabbing landlord to take advantage of the situation of the small farmer?—I do not know of a single case of a grabbing landlord; I really do not.

24,108. There are none in Glamorganshire?—I am not speaking, mind you, for the whole of Glamorganshire, I am speaking really of a district that I do know, and of the landlords that I do know, and I do not know of a grabbing landlord. Almost all the land in my district is held by comparatively large landlords, and they are fair and liberal. I do not know of any grabbing landlords.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,109. You spoke about the advantage of your market being close at hand, owing to the populousness of the country, I suppose?—Yes.

24,110. That applies more to sheep than to bullocks and cattle, I suppose?—Yes, I should think it does, except that it is a market for fat stock.

24,111. As a rule you are rather breeders than fatteners of stock?—Yes, we are. At the present time, or during these last two years, the farmers have been driven to fatten what they formerly used to sell as store stock. It is a very indifferent fattening, but still they call them fattened beasts, and they sell them to the local butchers, and they sell them to the workmen about. If it was not for that market I do not know what they would do with fat stock—such as they call fat.

24,112. When the great fall in the price of wool took place, I suppose the reason why that did not produce a depression such as we are passing through now, would be, as you say, that it did not lower the price of sheep in anything like a similar proportion?—No, it did not lower it anything like.

24,113. You were very hopeful, I was glad to hear, with regard to this depression being only temporary. You would rather found your view upon the fact that the general depression of trade has a great deal to do with the depression of particular prices, would you not?—There is no doubt about that. The depression of trade has an effect over the whole of England upon farmers.

24,114. And especially in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

24,115. Would you say that trade generally has been depressed almost as greatly as agriculture in your neighbourhood?—No, I do not think I should—certainly not.

24,116. But the depression has extended over the whole of England, and that would indirectly affect even the price of your cattle, which you would have to send away by rail?—Yes. I do not know exactly what affects the price of our store stock. Of course the farmers will tell you it is the foreign competition. There may be something in that, no doubt, but still before they suffered from American competition at any rate to anything like the extent they have been doing lately, there were ups and downs in the farming trade.

24,117. Where would your store bullocks go? To the east of England?—Northamptonshire, from my district mostly.

24,118. So that the ups and downs would be partly the result of whether there was keep or not in those districts?—Yes; and of course this was a dry summer, and shortness of keep has certainly affected the passing of cattle this last summer.

24,119. I was very glad to hear that you took that hopeful view, and I think I see the reason of it?—I do not think anybody need despond.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,120. What is the name of your house?—Kilybebyll.

24,121. I take it you talk Welsh?—No, I do not, I am sorry to say, though I have lived all my life in Wales, and was born and bred there.

24,122. You were acquainted with farming in Ireland. May I ask what part of Ireland chiefly?—County Limerick, and part of County Clare. I have been a resident there, and I have taken a great deal of interest in it. I have never farmed there.

24,123. That would be mostly low land country, would it not?—Yes. There is no comparison between this district and any part of Ireland that I know.

24,124. This would be a very different sort of farm that you speak of?—Oh, dear, yes.

24,125. Then I understand from you what you say, that most of the hillside farmers have not much spare capital?—No.

24,126. Have you much trouble in collecting the rents from them?—No.

24,127. They are pretty punctual in spite of their not having much spare capital?—They are.

24,128. You mentioned just now that the hedges are not kept up to the mark that they used to be, and that one reason for the farmers keeping up good hedges usually, was to protect their farms against the mountain sheep?—Yes.

24,129. You do keep mountain sheep still, but how do you keep them out now?—They have now-a-days put up netting and barbed wire chiefly, and that is a sort of "cover slut" you may call it; it is put up to stop sheep when a farmer does not care to make up his bank as he should do.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

24,130. Then what sort of sheep are they now that keep up their price?—They are a very inferior class of mountain sheep, but we have a hungry population, as I have said, in our neighbourhood, so that that really keeps the price up.

24,131. It is not the best kind of Welsh mutton?—No.

24,132. But still something is to be allowed for an improved taste in England for Welsh mutton in keeping up the price, do you not think?—I hope so devoutly. They should have as many as they liked from me.

24,133. I think you said that the farmers did not insure their buildings?—No.

24,134. Is it done at all. Do you insure your own buildings?—I have insured my own, but unfortunately I have not insured my tenant's buildings, and I have been a sufferer in consequence; I had a range of buildings burnt down last spring.

Lord Kenyon.

24,135. I have one question to ask you which is handed in by Miss K. Jenkins: "How can sheep "be selling as well as ever when at the last "local markets the price was 2¼*d.* and 2½*d.* per "lb. live weight. Three or four years ago they "went at 4*d.* and 4¼*d.*; prices given by butchers "from Swansea and elsewhere in Carmarthen-"shire?" Do you agree with those prices?—I am not prepared to criticise them for the moment. I only gave you the information which I got from more than one tenant, as to the price of mountain sheep at the present time. I told him what my object was, in examining him specially upon the subject, and that was that the question might be asked at the Commission. I said I was going to appear at the Commission, and he gave me that information, so that really I am not prepared to say whether he is correct or not, but I feel not the slightest doubt, that so far as he is concerned, he is perfectly correct, and he is a man who would have no reason to tell me a lie, and would not have done it under any circumstances.

24,136. Some questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent. The first is as follows:—"Do you not "think that a system of giving temporary abate-"ments, has a tendency to induce farmers to "exaggerate their losses at times of depression?" —I cannot answer that, my Lord; I could not say.

2541. 24,137. "Is Mr. Richard Rees, of Hendre "Caradog, who gave evidence at Swansea on "May 25th, your tenant?"—Yes.

2620. 24,138. In answer to a question he said, "My "landlord has contracted himself out of the "Agricultural Holdings Act?" Is that so?—That is the Act of 1875?

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,139. I suppose so?—Yes, I believe I did; I am not sure.

24,140. "Is there any pretence for saying that "you have tried to contract out of the Act of "1883?"—No, none whatever. I have got the man's evidence here, and I was going to ask permission to answer one or two matters in his evidence.

24,141. I see at question 2620 he is asked, "Are you under the East Glamorgan custom, or "the Agricultural Holdings Act, or any other "custom?" and the answer was, "My landlord "has contracted himself out of the Agricultural "Holdings Act. The Act was in operation in "1875." Then we pursued that subject and said, "He cannot contract himself out of the Act "of 1883;" and the answer was, "That is more "than we knew until now?"—I believe I did contract out of the Act of 1875, if I remember right.

24,142. I think you told me you had no agreements, did you not?—No agreements.

24,143. Have you anything further to state?—There were several things that Richard Rees stated that are not correct, but really I do not think I ought to take up the time of the Commission. They are trivial in their character.

24,144. Are they only trivial?—They are only trivial. There is one thing he mentions here at 2566. The question is asked, "What kind of "extra service is required," and the answer is, "I can mention, as an instance, that I have kept "two horses and a cart for a week to work for "my landlord in the winter." Now that is not correct, that the man himself may have given me two or three days haulage, I have not the slightest doubt; every one of my tenants do the same, and it is a regular custom between them, and when they want help, they have to come to their landlord, and my horses haul much more for my tenants than ever they do for me. This tenant might have had the honesty to say this, that we live in a neighbourly way all of us together, and we help each other. He might have said that in the very same year that he gave me three days' haulage, I sent my men up to help him to harvest the hay; and I generally cut, or at least I did up to a few years ago, for every one of my tenants at some time or another, and sent my mowing machine. We live as a neighbourly lot, and I do not know what possessed the man to give such evidence as that. It would make his poor old father's hair stand on end, to hear his son give such evidence. In fact, his father has been as staunch an old tenant as ever I knew on the property. There are several trivial matters which Mr. Richard Rees mentioned, but I will not trouble the Commission with them.

Mr. John Mathias (Gellywren Fawr) called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

24,145. What are you prepared to speak about?—Well, I am going to give my evidence for the public and for myself.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,146. Then will you proceed?—I am being oppressed at the present time because the rent is too high.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,147. Will you state what the rent is?—100*l.* a year, but I derive 8*l.* 5*s.* from a cottage.

24,148. And the size of it?—180 acres, I should say.

24,149. You do not know, perhaps?—Yes, I am almost sure it is 180 acres. I have plenty of land for the money; I have two or three different kinds of land.

24,150. Is it hill land?—Damp land, woody, rushes, about 50 acres of good land and part of the rest very bad and the other portion not worth anything.

24,151. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Jones, Dan Twyn, Pontardulais. He is a nice man; I am very friendly with him, but there ought to be something to teach him, that he ought not to exact too high a rent, and to give better repairs.

24,152. If you are very friendly with him can you not get him to see that the rent is too high?—No, he will not allow that to me. I have often asked him, and he knows that I can pay for every farm.

24,153. Have you anything else you wish to give evidence about?—In connection with my own farm?

24,154. Yes?—Only that we want repairs tremendously.

24,155. Will not your landlord do the repairs for you?—A little, a few repairs. He spends about 5*l.* when he ought to spend 100*l.*

24,156. I suppose you ask him?—Yes.

24,157. Is your landlord a rich man? Can he afford to do it?—Yes, he is very rich.

24,158. Have you anything to say about any instances you know, of harsh treatment with respect to farmers in your district?—Yes. 45 years ago I rented a small piece of land for 28*l.* a year. It had always been 22*l.*

Professor Rhŷs.

24,159. Did you say you rented it or took it at a rent?—I took it for 28*l.* I remained there 26 years at 28*l.* It had been 22*l.* before I took it, and then I took it for 28*l.* I remained there 26 years. I cultivated the place well and made it like a garden. I received notice that the rent would be raised from 28*l.* to 40*l.* We failed to agree, and I made a sale, selling everything, and we were turned into the road—I and my wife and children. We had a little for manure and so on. There came a young man, with good stock and he gave 40*l.* for it. He spent seven years there. He extracted my produce from the land. He became ill and he died and his widow became chargeable for relief on the parish in this town. Then another case. A man took land about 20 years ago in this neighbourhood. He gave 100*l.* for going to the place not because the place was cheap, but because he had children whom he was bringing up.

Lord Kenyon.

24,160. Do you mean 100*l.* rent?—No; he gave 100*l.* for going into the place. He remained there for about 20 years and brought the place into very good condition. The place was for sale. The tenant received no notice, to get anything for his work, from the person who might buy it, and the place was sold for hundreds of pounds more than it would have done, had the man not come there. The consequence was that, this place had been raised from 52*l.* to 60*l.* and pieces which had been sold in connection with the farm, were taken from it, to the value of 13*l.*

24,161. A year?—Yes, the rents of the pieces which were taken from the farms amounted to 13*l.* and he raised the farm 8*l.* besides. He paid 21*l.* on his own labour.

24,162. 21*l.* a year?—Yes, a year. I have plenty of instances, and could go on until 9 o'clock, of the hardship that I know of in this world. There are other places I know of that I may mention. There was one which for 50 years used to be 28*l.* It was considered very dear at that time. It has been sold now, and it is being let for 40*l.* a year.

24,163. What is the size of that?—It is a small place. I do not know how many acres it is.

24,164. About how much?—Indeed I cannot remember how much it is.

24,165. Is it near a town? Is there any reason for its increase?—No, it is not near a town.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,166. Is it near 50 acres?—It is about 45 acres, but some of it is very bad land. I also ask for remedies. We want the rents reduced We live on our holdings, and we have failed to get money for our produce. We sold wheat some time ago for 10*s.* a bushel and it is 5*s.* now.

Lord Kenyon.

24,167. Do you raise any wheat?—Yes.

24,168. Much?—Yes.

24,169. Do you sell your straw?—I do not sell much straw—I use the straw for the thatched roofs, the eaves of which are almost level with the ground.

24,170. You use your straw for thatching; you do not sell it. Is that what you mean?—Yes, I use it for the most part for thatching roofs. I sell a little straw when I fail to get money to pay my rent.

24,171. Do you not get a better price for the straw than you used to?—Yes, because the hay crop was so insufficient last year that the straw is so much dearer on account of that.

24,172. You want some remedies; what are they?—Reduction in the rent, fair rents, and we ask for satisfaction in connexion with the improvement of the land.

24,173. And anything else?—I think it very unfair, that the taxes which have been gradually raised, should not be on the income.

24,174. On the landlord?—Yes.

24,175. The taxes on the landlord?—Yes. Supposing I pay Sir John Talbot Dillwyn Llewelyn 100*l.* a year, and I pay 5*s.* a £ for the money which I give out of my hand, and Sir John Talbot Llewelyn not having to pay any part of this money except a little income tax.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,176. What makes you think that Sir John Llewelyn would not pay the income tax?—I know that he pays the income tax; he ought to pay the taxes as well.

Lord Kenyon.

24,177. You say you want free sale?—Oh, yes.

24,178. Are you in favour of that?—Yes.

24,179. What do you mean by free sale of produce?—That we farmers should be free to do as we like.

24,180. Free sale of produce you mean?—Yes, with regard to the produce and everything.

24,181. Do you want to establish a tenant right?—Yes, and we shall all be going to the wall, unless we get something.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,182. Are you in favour of tenants paying good will when they enter?—Yes, it is very unfair that one man should go, without the other man paying.

Lord Kenyon.

24,183. Did you ever pay any good will yourself?—Yes.

24,184. You did?—Yes.

24,185. Is that commonly the case?—It is something between us, there is no obligation as far as I know.

24,186. Did you pay anything over and above what is the common custom of the country?—No, not so much. I have many things I could say, but I think I had better stop. I want to try and influence the Commissioners to keep their eyes open for some remedy for us farmers.

24,187. I suppose that is what we were appointed for, to find some remedy if possible?—Thank you.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,188. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not so much.

24,189. Probably you have seen it and read some of it?—No.

24,190. You have told us of some grievances that happened 20 years and 50 years before the passing of this Act?—Yes, and more recent than that.

24,191. Do you not think it worth your while to study what the law has already done for the agricultural tenants?—Yes, indeed, it would be well, but the farmers work so many hours, and after getting home in the evening they cannot find time to read.

24,192. You wish to rectify those abuses which you have stated in the instances you have advanced?—Yes.

24,193. You wish remedies for those grievances?—Yes.

24,194. Would not that remedy be found in this Act of Parliament, the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—I have not understood that thoroughly.

24,195. Then I understand you want something more than that. When you speak of a fair rent as one of the remedies that you require, how do you think that that would be best obtained?—By some land court.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

24,196. Should the land court have a right to raise the rents as well as to lower them?—Oh, yes, to regulate them.

24,197. You first said what you wanted was a lowering of the rent; now you say an adjustment?—Some want to be raised and others want to be regulated. Some are dearer than others.

24,198. Then you want satisfaction for improvements?—Oh, yes.

24,199. Are you of opinion that the law gives you that now or not?—A little compensation is given by custom.

24,200. I mean something more than custom. Does not the law now give you certain compensation for improvements?—It has failed oftentimes.

24,201. It has failed oftentimes, you say?—Yes.

24,202. Is that because a landowner refuses to consent to the first schedule?—I cannot say about that.

24,203. Do you know any instances, when the consent of the landlord has been asked for and refused?—In the farm I spoke about, the man had nothing for his improvements except that his rent was raised.

24,204. The question is this. Do you know any instances in which the consent of the landlord has been asked for and refused under the Act?—I cannot answer that question; I cannot answer for that Act.

24,205. Are the rates and taxes now paid by the tenant?—Yes.

24,206. Do you think that they ought to be all paid by the landlord?—No.

24,207. Partly by one and partly by the other?—I think the taxes ought to be on the income and not on the labour. I am quite clear about that.

24,208. I want to understand precisely what you mean by free sale. Can you give me a little more explanation about that?—Free sale in connection with what?

24,209. With the farm. I will put it in the shape of a question. If you, Mr. Mathias, were going out from Gellywren, do you think you ought to have some money for goodwill from the incoming tenant?—If it was due to me. Several people leave a farm in far worse condition.

24,210. Would not that be compensation for unexhausted improvements?—Yes.

24,211. If you got full compensation for all unexhausted improvements, do you think you ought to have anything more than that?—Yes, certainly.

24,212. You think you ought to have something more than that?—No, I do not.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,213. If there were a good Land Act would you take the trouble to study it?—Oh, yes, I would.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

24,214. Where is your farm?—In the parish of Llangyfelach.

24,215. What are the names of the other farms that you mentioned?—Pen-y-fedw Isaf. I think some one gave evidence about Pen-y-fedw Ucha this morning. This is Pen-y-fedw Isaf and Pen-y-fedw Ucha also.

24,216. What was the name of another?—Gellywren-ganol. I have not said anything about that.

24,217. I want those you did speak about?—I did not mention that before.

24,218. You mention it now?—Yes. Gellioer-ganol was 52*l.* rent, which has been raised now to 60*l.*, and they have taken two large meadows from it.

24,219. What other farm did you allude to just now?—Tyllwyd, Llandeilo-Talybont.

24,220. Any other?—Gelly-cwm-Isaf, where I have been living.

24,221. In what parish is that?—In the same parish. I lived afterwards at Gelly-cwm-Ucha.

24,222. When was it that wheat fetched 10*s.* a bushel?—I cannot mention the date. 16 years ago I paid 28*s.* for a sack, equivalent to three bushels. I have paid 11*s.* per bushel about 20 years ago.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,223. You say that you have been very much oppressed these late years?—Yes, I have always been oppressed; but now is the worst time.

24,224. Do you mean that the prices are very low now?—Yes, prices are very low and labour is very high, and the taxes are very high.

24,225. Do you keep any sheep?—Yes.

24,226. Do you consider that the sheep are selling now as well as they used to sell?—No.

24,227. Do you not agree with the last witness, then?—Oh, dear no, I do not agree with him.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

24,228. Will you kindly tell us how much a pound you can sell your sheep for now?—About 5*d.*

24,229. What is the highest price you have ever been selling your sheep at?—10*d.*, a pound in January, February and March.

Lord Kenyon.

24,230. There are one or two questions asked by Mr. Vincent: "Is Mr. Jones, of Pontardulais, your landlord, a large owner"?—Yes, about five or six farms.

24,231. Is he not a small freeholder?—No.

24,232. Is Mr. Jones farming his own land?—Yes.

24,233. Then he is a freeholder?—Yes, he has two or three farms in Breconshire.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,234. Has the Gelly cwm farm been taken by the Birchrock Colliery Co.?—No.

24,235. Is the Birchrock Colliery Co. close by?—Yes.

24,236. Was the increase of rent you spoke of, due to the colliery in any way?—No, not as far as I know; it had no connexion with Gelly-cwm-Isaf.

Lord Kenyon.

24,237. This is a further question by Mr. Vincent: "Do you know your predecessor made "enough money on your present farm to be "able to buy his present farm for 4,500*l.*"?—Yes, I understand the question and I know where he got the money.

24,238. Did he get it out of the farm?—He made some from the farm, but he got the money after an old uncle from Morriston.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN JEFFREYS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

24,239. Will you give your evidence in English or in Welsh?—I will do my best, for the convenience of the court, in English.

24,240. Thank you very much as we have several witnesses to get through. You are Mr. John Jeffreys, of Penwaunfawr, Llangyfelach, and you are a farmer?—Yes.

24,241. You wish to speak about high rents?—I do.

24,242. In your own case?—Personally in my own case.

24,243. Will you give us the details?—I am a tenant farmer. My farm comprises about 126 acres of land. Out of the 126 acres there are about 42 or 43 acres which I can plough or cultivate. The other part is rough, rushy meadow, very damp land.

24,244. What is the rent?—The rent at the present time is 56*l.* a year.

24,245. Who is your landlord?—Sir John Llewelyn.

24,246. Has your rent been raised?—It has been reduced since I took it first.

24,247. You have something to say also about local taxation?—I have.

24,248. What is your opinion of that?—About 1883—about the first half year of rates that I paid—the taxes were about 2*l.* 10*s.* or 2*l.* 12*s.*, I forget which, and my last half year of rates the amount of taxes was 5*l.* 12*s.* 1½*d.*, without poor rate or sanitary rate.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,249. That is the actual rates on the farm?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

24,250. You also wish to speak about trespass of game?—I do.

24,251. What have you to complain of about the game?—Well, I have felt large and very considerable damage done to my crops on many occasions. The ground game is the most ruinous thing to farmers in several ways.

24,252. Do you make use of the Ground Game Act?—No. My agreement when I took the farm was that the game was preserved.

24,253. You do not make use of the Ground Game Act, which allows you to kill the rabbits?—No, we have had that very little.

24,254. You are aware that there is such an Act?—Well, I have heard about it, but still there was some fear in our hearts that we had better please the keepers than anybody, and we leave them alone.

24,255. So the rabbits annoy you, do they?—Yes, in several ways.

24,256. Is your farm adjacent to the covers?—Close by to some of them, and close on the other side to Lord Swansea's covers up the road.

24,257. It is Lord Swansea's game that troubles you?—Both of them.

24,258. Have you applied for compensation?—I have received some.

24,259. Then you wish to speak upon compensation for improvements, I think?—I wish to state a little more about the ground game. In the year 1891 I sowed 11 bushels of wheat; I had some wire netting from my agent to protect it. There was considerable damage done on that field. There is a gentleman in this Court at the present time, who was by my side on the machine, when I was cutting what was left. I venture to say honestly that nearly about two-thirds of that field was gone, and as to the result of that, I will show you what I had to pay from September 17th, 1892, to October 3rd, 1893, for flour for my family. It was as stated in that account (handing in an account).

24,260. This which you have handed up is a bill for 9*l.* 13*s.* for flour. Had you been in the habit before of grinding your own wheat?—I have never ground my own wheat myself.

24,261. Did you get any compensation for that damaged crop of wheat?—No, I did not apply, because wire netting was given me to protect it.

24,262. Did they get over the wires or under the wires?—Mostly generally under it.

24,263. Have you any more, you wish to say about the ground game?—Well, I have seen a lot of damage this way and the other way. According to the year 1891 there was considerable damage done by the pheasants; in that wet year there were crops on the ground. This year again, there has been a lot of damage done, by the game coming from the covers of Lord Swansea, close by Penwain Fach, we call it, just by the road there, and Bryngwilech. A very large amount of damage from the coming of the pheasants there. I believe there has been a great loss to me of several hundreds of potatoes this year.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,264. Do you wish to say anything with regard to compensation for improvements?—I believe in it.

24,265. But is it not adequate now under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, I have never read the Agricultural Holdings Act.

24,266. Do you think it would be a good thing if the East Glamorgan custom were utilised in this part of the country?—I believe so; it would be a great improvement in farming.

24,267. Do you think the farmers would regularly take it up?—I would.

24,268. You would yourself?—Yes, I would.

24,269. And would that to your mind settle any grievance with regard to that?—I believe so.

24,270. Then have you anything more to suggest in the way of remedy?—Well, I believe that nothing would be better than that we should have a few persons, say eight or ten farmers and eight or ten landlords, to meet as a sort of court to make things up.

24,271. A sort of arbitration court?—Yes.

24,272. And you think that they should be farmers and landlords?—Farmers and landlords.

24,273. And not persons independent of either?—No; persons from the neighbourhood.

24,274. And they should have the power of fixing rent, do you think?—Well, I believe so, because persons who know the neighbourhood, know the value of the land.

24,275. And they should have the power of fixity of tenure, you think?—I do.

24,276. In the case of a bad tenant would they have the power of refusal?—Well, I would wish it be so, that the landlords should have power.

24,277. You put down here "Free sale"; what do you mean by that? Is it compensation for improvements again?—That is what I mean.

24,278. You do not mean anything further in the way of a tenant right?—That is what I mean, so far as I understand it.

24,279. You do not mean what is commonly called in Ireland, the tenant right, the Ulster right?—No, I do not understand that.

24,280. Have you anything more you wish to say?—Nothing else occurs to my memory at the present time.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,281. Do you think farmers would farm any better if they had this court and this right?—My belief is so.

24,282. You believe so?—I do.

24,283. And do you think they would be able to produce more from the land?—Certainly they would.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WATKIN WILLIAMS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

24,284. You are a farmer at Blaen-y-rolch fa-fach, Llangyfelach?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,285. And you wish to give evidence as to high rent?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,286. Have you any statement written out for us?—No nothing.

24,287. Is it your own case you want to refer to?—Yes.

24,288. Will you state particulars?—I asked for a reduction in rent and a reduction in taxes, too.

24,289. What is your rent?—32*l*.

24,290. Do you know the size of your farm?—90 acres and 2 perches.

24,291. Is it hill land?—Yes.

24,292. Who is your landlord?—Mrs. Gwyn, Dyffryn.

24,293. Have you a lease?—No.

24,294. You asked for a reduction and you did not get it?—No, I did not ask for a reduction in the rent, but I asked——

24,295. But why did you not go and ask Mr. Sheppard?—Mr. Sheppard is not my landlord.

24,296. Is not he your agent?—No.

24,297. We are not a land court and we cannot reduce your rent?—I do not understand that you can do that.

24,298. The person to reduce your rent at present is your landlord, or rather your landlady?—Just so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,299. May I suggest that what you mean is by some means or other the rent should be reduced; is not that what you mean?—Yes, that some means should be established whereby the rent should be reduced.

Lord Kenyon.

24,300. I would recommend you if you wish your rent reduced to ask for a reduction. Then you wish to speak of "cost of fencing round mountain, &c." What have you to say about that?—Some fence nearly a mile and a half.

24,301. Walling or wire?—Hedging—turf.

24,302. And that you have to keep in order?—Yes, I am obliged to keep it well, or else the creatures will come in from the mountain, of course.

24,303. Have you anything more you wish to say on that?—No.

24,304. You wish for a land court?—Oh, yes, I believe in that. I believe it would be beneficial to the landlord as well as to me.

24,305. Why? Do you think it would raise the landlord's rents?—No, I do not believe that.

24,306. Then how would it be beneficial to the landlord?—Because people give more than their value for farms, and then leave them in a fearful state and go away.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,307. Do they?—Oh, yes.

24,308. Do you know any instances of that?—Mr. Mathias has mentioned one now.

24,309. Do you know any instances yourself?—The farm where I live on now. Before I went there there were only two hurdles or jumpers; there was not a single field, where you could turn a creature into, safely.

24,310. Then he was a very bad farmer, I take it?—The husband and his children worked in the works.

24,311. They did not do much upon the farm?—No.

24,312. Did they pay a higher rent than you pay?—No, the same rent.

24,313. Then I do not think that is a case quite in point. Have you anything more you wish to say?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,314. You know this district pretty well, do you?—Yes.

24,315. Do you know whether, speaking broadly, the farmers in this district complain that the rents are so high that they cannot farm profitably?—Oh no, they cannot. All the farmers who are here present, are ready to say just the same as I am saying now, that they cannot pay. They are spending the money that they had before, and are getting into debt now. They cannot pay the rent.

24,316. Do many of them have to borrow money in order to pay the rent?—Well, several of them have been obliged to borrow. I do not know how it will be this year. I think they will be obliged to borrow or else not be able to pay the rent.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,317. Do you consider the times worse now than ever you remember?—Yes, very much worse than it ever has been.

24,318. Do you agree with the last witness with regard to the price of sheep at present?—No, I do not.

24,319. Do you consider that the price is very low at present?—Prices are lower now than they ever have been.

24,320. What are the prices at present per pound?—You have to be very sharp to sell them for 5*d*., and perhaps you cannot sell them at all.

24,321. What is the highest price you have ever heard of?—I have had 10*d*. for the sheep and 1*s*. for the lambs.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. LLEWELLYN GRIFFITHS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

See 24,382.

24,322. You are Mr. Llewellyn Griffiths, of Brynteg?—Yes.

24,323. Are you a tenant farmer?—No, I am a collier.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,324. And a freeholder?—No, I am not.

24,325. You wish to give evidence as regards some harsh treatment with regard to your property?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,326. Where is Brynteg?—I live on Garngoch Mountain.

24,327. Then it is not Brynteg?—No, that is a mistake. I live on Garngoch Mountain.

Lord Kenyon.

24,328. Now will you give particulars?—My father had a little spot of land. It was from father to son. My father had an account that they had had it for 350 years, sometimes putting wheat in, and at other times potatoes. After my father married, he built a little cottage on it. He had no evidence that his ancestors had paid a halfpenny before him. After they had built, the agent of Penllergaer came forward to claim the land.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,329. Is it my property?—Yes, of course.

24,330. May I inquire where it is?—Bryn Llanelly.

24,331. That is not Garngoch?—No, I live at Garngoch.

24,332. And this is where?—At Bryn Llanelly, where I was born and bred.

Lord Kenyon.

24,333. Now will you continue?—The agent asked what rent they paid for the land. There was only my mother there. My father was at Merthyr, at the time, working. She said that they did not pay anything to anybody, and that no one had ever asked them a halfpenny for it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,334. When was this?—It was before I was born. It is my mother's evidence that I have now. The agent told my mother that they were very foolish to build a house on the land without having a lease from anybody. She said that she did not know that a lease was necessary or anything else, that that land was the property of my father and his ancestors for 350 years before. Then the agent told her that it was a part of the Penllergaer estate. "I have nothing "to say," she said, "but I must inquire again "or get to know again from my husband." She went to Merthyr to him, and he came down. The agent came there to meet him afterwards, and said that it was a portion of the Penllergaer estate, and said that they must pay some amount of rent or else they would lose the house and land and everything. He frightened them so much in that way. I do not know that I can say quite right, but I think they paid 5*s.* the first time, and the agent told them that the place would be for them and for their descendants for ever. After that the rent was raised continually, and when my mother died a notice came to the house, she did not live at the house then, when the corpse was in the house, before the burial, notice came to leave the whole place. Parc Richard was the name of the place. After that I spoke to the present agent, and what he said to me was that he did not wish to speak with me. I told him that I wished to keep the place on any condition, and he said, "Go away from the office." I have receipts to show how the rents were being continually raised. (Handing in same.)

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,335. As you are producing documents, may I ask if you have any other documents of title coming from the possession of your father or mother?—Nothing; but the agent told me that there was an agreement at Penllergaer, but I never saw it.

24,336. That would be an agreement very likely made after the house had been built, under the circumstances of which you have told us?—Yes.

24,337. But have you any evidence to show that your family had possession of this plot of land for so long?—I have only my mother's evidence. I believe my mother. I can hardly remember my father. He was buried when I was a child.

24,338. Why did not your mother resist the claim of the agent?—That is what I cannot answer. She did not understand anything about it.

24,339. But from what you have told us she was fully alive to her rights, because you told us that she told the agent that it was her husband's property, and had been his father's before him?—Yes, she did tell him that.

24,340. But nobody could turn them out by force. At least nobody could walk in and turn them out by force?—I cannot say anything as to who could turn them out, or who could not, but that was how things were, and we lost the place altogether.

24,341. Was this waste or common land?—No, it was neither, as far as I can recollect.

24,342. What kind of land was next to the land on which your father built the house?—It was farm land, the whole of it.

24,343. What was the size of this bit of land?—An acre and a quarter perhaps about, I cannot say precisely.

24,344. Was it copyhold land?—I do not understand that.

24,345. And there is no document which throws any light on it at all?—Nothing of the kind.

Lord Kenyon.

24,346. Have you anything more you wish to say?—What I wish to say is that why I came here to-day was to see if a thing of that kind cannot possibly be altered.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,347. Your mother claimed the land for your father, but she did not resist. If you had had the land for 20 years, in all probability you would have won your action?—She had not the money to litigate or resist an action.

24,348. Your father would have been the defendant, or your mother after him would have been the defendant. Whoever claimed the land would be the plaintiff. If it was the squire of Penllergaer, it would be he who would have to commence the action?—I have nothing to say to that, except that they paid in accordance to the demands of the agent.

24,349. But neither your father nor your mother had other land held under the Penllergaer estate?—No.

24,350. Therefore she was quite independent of them, was she not?—Yes.

24,351. What could the agent do to your matter?—I do not know anything, but it is possible that things were darker then, than they are now. Who would say a word against an agent in those days?

24,352. Then as I understand your point is this, that your mother was afraid of the agent, is that it?—Yes, or else she would never have allowed or given him a claim.

24,353. But why was your mother afraid of the agent, that is what I cannot understand?—Ignorance or want of knowledge.

24,354. My experience of the Welsh people is, that if somebody comes and claims their land they do not usually give it up?—I cannot say anything as to what you know, but that is what my mother did.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,355. What view did the neighbours take of it?—What I heard them say, and I often heard my mother and them speaking together, was that it was very unjust.

24,356. Did the neighbours think that it had been in the family 315 years?—Of course, there is an account that it had been in the possession of my ancestors in that way.

24,357. And had the neighbours also had their farms as their own in that way for a long time?—I cannot be sure about that, but I have often heard some say, that there were other spots of a similar character, in the neighbourhood, under the same circumstances.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is described as Parc Richard in all the receipts, as though it were well-known land.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,358. What is your age?—I was born in May 1840.

24,359. Then you are 53 years of age, and this happened before you were born, is that so?—I was born there.

24,360. Did this happen before you were born?—They paid a rent to Penllergaer before I was born.

24,361. Then it was over 53 years ago?—Yes, very likely.

24,362. Who was the agent there?—I do not know. I cannot say who was the agent before I was born, but I know who was the agent afterwards.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

24,363. When you first remember who was the agent?—Mr. Griffiths.

24,364. Was he any relation to your father and mother?—I never heard that it was so.

24,365. Did your mother go to see my father?—Yes, sometimes.

24,366. Was there any man in Wales more likely to do justice to your mother than my father was?—I do not know that there was any one more likely to, but that is how he did with my mother, and he promised that it should be for her descendants as long as they existed.

24,367. But why do you throw it all upon the agent?—I have nothing to say, but that it was the agent who frightened my mother.

24,368. But I understood you to say your mother went and appealed from the agent to my father?—Yes, she said that she had been speaking to him face to face, that is to your father.

24,369. Still she had to pay the rent in acknowledgment?—Yes.

24,370. Then I do not quite understand why you throw all the blame upon the agent?—That is why I throw the blame upon him, because it was he who first came to my mother to claim the place.

24,371. I should like to know what was the amount of the rent raised. It was first of all 5*s.* when you first remember?—My mother said that. I do not know.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

One of the latest receipts is dated the 7th of June 1882, and it is for one year's rent, 3*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

Is that for the house?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It does not say. It describes the close as Parc Richards.

24,372. You must not think that any of us are unfriendly to you, but what I should like to know is, whether there is any bit of evidence beyond your mother's statement in support of this claim?—There is no evidence beyond that the house was built, and I do not think my father and mother would be so foolish as to build the house on the place and pay rent, if they paid rent for the land before. I do not think they would be so foolish as to build a house on land for which they paid rent.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,373. Are you sure that your parents did not have a lease for lives?—My mother said there was a 21 years' agreement on it all along, but I never saw any agreement, and when I went to speak to the agent, the agent told me that there was an agreement at Penllergaer.

Lord Kenyon.

24,374. I have some questions to ask you which have been handed up by Mr. Rees: "Who lived

Lord Kenyon—continued.

" in the house at the time of your mother's " death ?"—There were two small houses. David Low lived in one.

24,375. And who lived in the other ?—Thomas Morris lived in the other.

24,376. " How long before your mother's death had you left home ?"—About 20 years, close upon 20 years.

24,377. Then it was not in the occupation of your mother or yourself at that time ?—No, beyond that those who lived in the cottages paid a rent to my mother, and my mother paid the ground rent to the Penllergaer estate.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,378. Did she sub-let ?—Yes.

24,379. I suppose she got an improved rent, did she—she got more ?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

24,380. This is another question by Mr. Rees; " Did the agent say when you called upon him " that your mother had a lease or agreement on " the premises ?"—He said that there was an agreement in connection with the place, and that the agreement was at Penllergaer.

24,381. Mr. Rees also wishes me to ask: " Were " those people living in the houses any relations " of your mother ?"—No. Re-examined 24,385.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. J. REES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

24,382. You wish to say something upon the evidence we have just heard ?—I desire to give simply an explanation as to how this occurs. I became agent to the Penllergaer estate 25 years ago. At that time I found upon the rentals, Parc Richard, in the name of Mary Griffiths, at the rent of 3*l.* per annum. That continued being paid until her death, and in looking over the schedules of the leases of the estate to make myself acquainted with it, I observed that there was a lease in existence. When the people living in the houses, at Mrs. Griffith's death, applied to me for the tenancy of the premises (that was, to continue after her death) I told them, certainly — that we always gave preference to those who were living in the houses, and that I would look up what the terms of the lease were. Some time after that this gentleman here (Mr. Llewellyn Griffiths) applied, and stated that the property belonged to him. I told him that there was a lease in existence, and I told him that his mother had been holding the houses as lessee for a large number of years, I could not tell him how long, but certainly during the whole time of my agency, and that she paid a ground rent—that is, it appeared under the head of ground rent in the rental. He persisted in saying that the property belonged to him, and I said that I really had nothing further to say to him, these were the facts, and I could produce the lease if it were necessary, and very likely I did tell him. that it was at Penllergaer where the documents are kept. I never saw him before or after. That is the only interview I ever had with him. The property is certainly shown upon the estate map as being part of the Penllergaer estates. It adjoins other properties of Sir John Llewelyn, and there are two houses there, not one. He said one house at first.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,383. I suppose we had dealt with it as private property for a number of years. It is leased property, I suppose. Is it under lease now ?—No, the lease expired.

24,384. When did the lease expire ?—I think about 10 years ago. Of course I did not know that this evidence was coming on or I might have prepared myself and brought the documents and books down. Those are the facts. I never heard of any claim being set up by any one except this man, and he had nothing in the world to substantiate his claim. I asked him if he could refer me to anything that would throw any light on the subject, and he said he had nothing.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. LLEWELLYN GRIFFITHS recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

The evidence of Mr. W. J. Rees was translated to the witness.

Lord Kenyon.

24,385. Do you wish to say anything further ?—Was it fair that strangers should have the first claim before us—we who had been labouring on the land ?

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,386. You say it was 20 years since you yourself had been there ?—I say that I had left home 20 years prior to my mother's death.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,387. You did not ask for a lease of the property; only to become tenant of the property ?—I asked for any condition so as to be able to keep the place, because we had been born and bred there.

24,388. But what you told me was that you saw Mr. Rees, and said that the land was your mother's, and that you referred to your mother's testimony?—I asked him for a lease, and he said to me that he was not going to speak to me, and told me to go out of the office. I asked him afterwards if he would sell it off then, and he said "Botheration, go out of the office." It is quite true what I say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN GLASBROOK called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

24,389. You wish to give evidence with regard to non-compensation for improvements; is that so?—Yes, I am here to represent my brother, more than anything else.

24,390. Would you give us the particulars?—Too high rents is what I have to speak about most.

24,391. What is his rent?—100*l.* a year.

24,392. What is the size of his farm?—It is about 70 acres, that farm; he has more of the same land under the same landlord.

24,393. But for that rent?—No, it is different; it is two little farms. The rent of the other is 30*l.* This one he complains of is 100*l.*

24,394. For 70 acres?—Yes, or a little under.

24,395. Whom is that under?—Sir John Morris.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,396. Sir Robert Morris, I think it is now?—Sir Robert Morris.

Lord Kenyon.

24,396*a*. Has your brother applied for any reduction?—Yes.

24,397. And he has been refused it?—He has not had it yet.

24,398. Is it under consideration?—Yes.

24,399. Did he consider it was too high in good times or too high this year only?—Well, it has been risen since my father's time. I went there first before him; I was there when I was 15 years of age.

24,400. It has been risen lately?—Yes, it was 60*l.* then, and it has risen from 60*l.* to 100*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,401. When was it raised?—It was advanced nearly 20 years ago.

Lord Kenyon.

24,402. Then do you wish to speak with regard to anything else?—I think the neighbourhood generally is just the same, with regard to the height of the rents.

24,403. Do you think they appear high because of the depressed times, or have they always been too high?—That farm is too much, and I know it is too high. There have been others, and I reckon that where so much has been made out of that, it has gone down to nothing.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,404. But 100*l.* for 75 acres is considerably more than 1*l.* an acre. You do not mean to represent that as the average of rents in the neighbourhood, do you?—No.

24,405. That is what you were saying. That is what I understood, but surely you did not mean that?—There is another farm which belongs to him, Pentrefelin Vach, next to Pen-y-Pant, that is 35*l.* That is not too dear.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,406. How many acres is that?—The acreage of Pentrefelin Vach is 45.

Lord Kenyon.

24,407. Do you wish to speak about improvements and non-compensation?—I think if he was sent from there—he has made great improvements since my father and myself went there first.

24,408. You think fair compensation should be paid?—Yes, it is double; it is three times the value it was then.

24,409. Do you know anything of the East Glamorgan custom?—No, I have been through there.

24,410. You have heard of it?—Yes, I have been through there. They farm very well, from what I saw there.

24,411. Would it be a good thing if that custom was introduced into this part of the world, do you think?—Yes, I think it would.

24,412. Would farmers make use of it?—Yes, I believe so. I know my brother has carried more manure to that farm than anyone. There are two carts generally two or three days a week carrying some there.

24,413. Perhaps his landlord may reduce the rent. You say it is under consideration?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,414. It is very good land and very near Swansea, is it not?—There is as bad land by it.

24,415. There is some good land and some bad?—You must make it good.

24,416. It is near Swansea?—Three miles from Swansea.

24,417. I know it. I only want to get from you that it is a long way above the average of the land in the neighbourhood, is it not?—Yes.

24,418. Because you said just now it was the same as the rest of the neighbourhood. I do not think you meant that, did you?—No.

24,419. What would be the average rents of that neighbourhood, do you say—12*s.* an acre, more or less?—Well, that would be plenty.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

24,420. What was the field let for, where Llangefylach fair was held?—The farm always let, whatever.

24,421. At the time of the fair?—I cannot tell you exactly.

24,422. That was at a pretty high rent, was it not?—You mean the fair day?

24,423. Yes?—Yes, there was a good bit.

24,424. A pretty good profit was made over that field?—Well, I do not know. There was a lot of expenses, but taking the loss and all, I do not think there was so much, but there is nothing without labour.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

24,425. What I wanted to get from you was that upwards of 1*l.* an acre is not the average rent of the land of that neighbourhood?—No. It is out of reason—no one can pay it. There is a lot of it which is not worth 5*s.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Arthur Powell called and examined (through an interpreter).

Lord Kenyon.

24,426. You wish to give evidence with regard to high rents and local taxation. Is it your own case?—It is general evidence.

24,427. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

24,428. How many acres is your farm?—52.

24,429. Are you satisfied in your own case?—Yes, with the rent.

24,430. What is your rent?—35*l.*

24,431. Whom do you farm under?—Lord Swansea.

24,432. Do you wish to give evidence on behalf of Lord Swansea's tenants or his neighbours?—No, not particularly. All the evidence I have with regard to that, is that I am pretty well satisfied with the rent of my own place, if I only had the buildings to correspond with it.

24,433. You want some more buildings. What do you give evidence for?—There is a section in our district, Llangyfelach, where it is very bad land, making five different kinds of land, and two-fifths of that is very poor land, generally speaking. In view of the present rents, as the land is so poor, and there being so much foreign competition, we consider that the rents are too high on that land for one thing.

24,434. Would you give any instances?—In what way?

24,435. Well, names of farms?—Some of those farms undoubtedly are pretty fair for their value.

24,436. I want to know an instance of a too highly rented farm?—As I have stated, the rents are, generally speaking, too high to meet with that kind of land and foreign competition.

24,437. I want an instance?—I have said that the farms are generally too high to meet with the land being poor and foreign competition.

24,438. Then have you anything else you wish to say?—Yes, in connection with local taxation here. Taxes have been raised greatly in the course of the last few years.

24,439. They have gone up?—Yes, taxes as much as 100 per cent. For one instance, the latest law that has come in our way, the County Council, to keep our roads in Glamorganshire, the expenses of the year have been raised from 11,000*l.* to 18,000*l.*

24,440. Your complaint is against the County Council, is it not?—As regards the rates; they do regulate the rates so far.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,441. Is not the County Council an elective body?—They are so.

24,442. Why do you not return a candidate pledged to economy?—In its management I think it ought to be better.

24,443. The remedy lies in the electors' hands?—The reform on the improvement, has come to us in the shape of 3*d.* in the £ taxation.

24,444. You have a remedy to suggest, I think?—The other rates have risen correspondingly. I do not condemn the Acts, but I attribute that to the management in carrying the laws out.

24,445. I cannot refrain from asking you one question: Do you think the management was better under the old Court of Quarter Sessions, then?—It does not matter about an old law or a new law, unless you have management.

24,446. I ask you whether the management was better in the old days?—Yes, I think so.

24,447. Yet the rates were lower?—The laws are better, but the management is worse.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,448. How about the roads? Are the roads better?—No, just the same. This is the question: I might mention the Education Act.

Lord Kenyon.

24,449. It is getting late, and I want to pin you down to fact as much as possible. You have a remedy to suggest?—In connexion with this business?

24,450. For the whole thing; high rents, and so on?—The evidence which has been given here has not touched what we feel and what we appeal for in our district. We appeal for a land court, first of all, to rule our matters, anything which may concern us as farmers. Secondly, we ask for fixity of tenure, and, thirdly, we task for free sale.

24,451. What do you mean by that?—In two ways, that the farmer should have liberty to sell his produce in the best marketable way, or in the best way with regard to the market and with regard to his land. The reason why I mention that, is because some of our agreements condemn the sale of hay and straw, swedes, and so on.

24,452. If you had that, what is there to prevent a bad tenant selling off everything and exhausting the land?—I consider that the tenant should have the liberty to sell these things in market, but that he should bring back into the land manure, lime, and so on, correspondingly.

24,453. That does not answer my question: what is there to prevent a bad tenant selling off everything, and exhausting the land?—The law of the land, of course.

24,454. Where is the law of the land?—We want it, then.

24,455. If you ask for free sale of produce, I ask what is to prevent the tenant exhausting the land if he chooses?—First, we should get a law, so that it would be possible for a tenant to sell the produce, I have mentioned, of his land, and secondly, the law of the land should also compel him to bring back correspondingly, lime, manure, and so on, to the land.

24,456. Have you any other remedy?—That is free sale with regard to the produce, but again there is free sale for improvements, and so on. Suppose a tenant happens to leave his farm, the business of that tenant is, that there should be a law compelling him to get compensation for improvements.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,457. Compelling the incoming tenant to take them over?—Yes, which would make it compulsory that he should have compensation for improvements from the incoming tenant or from the landlord.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,458. Do you think it would be just that the landlord should have the right of claiming for deterioration or exhaustion of land?—I think there should be no compensation; that the agents, or someone of that kind, should look after the place, to see that there should be no deterioration.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,459. Then you say liberty to sell?—Yes, of course, but the land is not to be in any way destroyed, but is to remain in the same condition and to be improved if possible.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. R. H. James called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

24,460. Where do you live?—Cefngolin Park, Gowerton.

24,461. You wish to speak, I believe, as to the abuse of common land?—Yes.

24,462. What is your case of hardship?—Well, in Gower there are nine commons, and they are abused. They are the commons of Clyne, Fairwood, Pengwern, Little Moor, Welsh Moor, Cefn Bryn, Rhosilly Down, Harsin Down, and Llanmadoc Hill. They do not produce what they ought to do.

24,463. You mean too much stock is allowed to go on them?—No, there is a good half of them growing furze and under water. That I consider one abuse. Such land ought to produce something for the benefit of the nation. And another abuse is that the surface is carried away; hundred of tons in the course of the year is carried away to towns and mansions for certain purposes.

24,464. Turf?—Yes. Another abuse, I consider, is that people who have a right to the land do not get it, only the people adjoining the common get the benefit of it; people who live a few miles distant do not get the benefit of the common. I live about mile and a half away from the common. If I put anything on the common it is adjoining someone's land, and that man will drive them away by some means, with his dogs perhaps, and drive them to the roads, and our policemen then get hold of them. I believe I am one in 12 or 15 summoned to this Court House this year for our cattle, and so on, straying to the highway from the common. That occurs through people driving them away maliciously, to a certain extent.

24,465. What remedy would you suggest?—My remedy would be to enclose the commons.

I have seven sons. At present I want five or six farms. I have applied for farms to Sir John Llewelyn and his agent here, and many other gentlemen, but there is not a farm to be got. We have no land in the country to spare. My remedy about common land, is to sell it in lots say from 5 to 100 acres, and to sell to people that do not own land at present; not sell it to the big landowners—give a chance to others. But many would say, "Why don't you send your "children away to America or the Colonies, "where there is plenty of room for them?" Well, I do not wish to do so. We have thousands of acres of common land in Gower at the present day, that we could start ploughing.

24,466. You think there is something to be made out of farming at the present time?—Yes, and I do not hesitate to say that there is plenty of common land in Gower that would pay if cleared in three or four years. There is not a man who has cleared more waste land than I have during the last 20 years, in Gower.

24,467. If this common land were enclosed would not the commoners acquire it?—There would be a chance for everybody to have a farm.

24,468. It would be only a little bit to each?—No. I believe there is more common land in Gower than we have enclosed.

24,469. Then you wish to speak about the present law of quiet possession?—Yes. I have been squeezed in that direction, and I wish to speak before your Lordship about it. The little place where I live now, I bought, and to my surprise when I went into possession there was another man claiming possession of part of it. We litigated over the matter and had it tried in this court room before Judge Gwilym Williams, and, I am sorry to tell you, he believed the false evidence.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,470. He did not believe yours?—No, he did not listen to it, my Lord; I did not have a chance to call the evidence. He believed people swearing that they had 12 years' quiet possession, when they did not have one twelvemonth quiet possession, to part of it.

24,471. That case has been tried I am afraid?—Yes, and it has been finished in that respect, only it is a very bad law, one man claiming a property which another man has paid for.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,472. You had your remedy against the vendor, had you not?—No, I have not tried a remedy.

24,473. You had a conveyance containing the usual covenants?—Yes.

24,474. Had you a lawyer?—Yes.

24,475. As I understand, after you had bought you found you could not get possession of the land you had bought?—Yes, I could not get possession of the whole, which I had bought.

24,476. Why have you not raised the question with the vendor, the man who sold the land to you?—I wrote to him. This man that was in quiet possession said he had the land with the landlord, and he had wood to build the sheds with. My lawyer had a letter from the vendor denying these facts. I wrote to him again after the trial and he denied it afterwards, in which I believe he was right—I had as much faith as that in him—that he did not know anything about it.

24,477. Do you mean to say he was not brought into that litigation? Did not your lawyer serve him with a third party notice?—No.

24,478. There may have been some reason for it?—I wanted my lawyer to call him as a witness, but my lawyer refused to do so.

24,479. Were you the plaintiff?—I was the plaintiff.

Lord Kenyon.

24,480. Then you think tenant farmers suffer when their improvements are sold with their farms; in fact, they do not get sufficient compensation?—Yes, and I have facts to prove that. I was a tenant farmer of the Rhycnfawr for 14 years. The estate was sold. The man that bought it, asked me if I was thinking of buying it myself. I told him I was, but I would sooner be a tenant than be a landlord, if I could have as good a landlord as I had before. He asked me the value of it. I told him what I thought the value of it. He told me he would give very nearly double what I said, before he would lose it, and he told me that I should live in it as long as I should live. In a short time I had a notice to leave. He bought it in 1883, and I had a notice in 1888 to leave in 1889. I made a claim according to the Agricultural Holdings Act. I gave them two months' notice of my claim, which was 409*l.*, and I did not have more than 310*l.*

24,481. It went to arbitration?—It did not go to arbitration. I did not receive anything for the improvements I had made on the farm, not a penny.

24,482. How was that?—They told me they had bought the farm in the position it was then, and I could not claim, and instead of going to litigation, I thought it was best to take 310*l.* I have several items here, if you would like to see them.

24,483. You made your claim and they paid a certain proportion of it without going to arbitration. Is that so?—I claimed 409*l.* and they paid me 310*l.* They would not allow me for any improvements which I had done. I had drained a lot, and fenced waste pieces about the sides of the roads, and made walls and cattle mangers, and several things which they did not allow me.

24,484. What did they allow you?—They allowed me for 20 acres of swedes, 7*l.* 10*s.* the valuation was made for, that would be 150*l.*, and they allowed me 140*l.* For 25 acres of clover at 2*l.* 10*s.* per acre, 62*l.* 10*s.*, they allowed me 57*l.* For 20 acres of hay land at 3*l.* per acre—there was not a field to grow hay on the farm when I went there, and I made three hay fields there, for which I claimed 3*l.* an acre, 60*l.*, and 60*l.* was allowed for it. 273 yards of dung at 4*s.* which came to 55*l.* and they allowed me 50*l.* 20 loads of lime and earth at 10*s.*, they allowed me 3*l.*, and that makes up the 310*l.* out of a total claim of 409*l.* Then there are improvements which I gave a bill for; "Clean- "ing and uprooting furze on field of 4 "acres, which was never ploughed before" and I had the use of it, after clearing it, for 4 years, and I claimed 10*l.* for that, which they did not allow me. Draining and clearing part of 3 fields — 4*l.* 10 oak gates and 12 jumpers, 3*l.* 12*s.* Wall about garden and rick yard 7*l.* Extending and cleaning garden 1*l.* 10*s.* Cleaning piece by side of road on field No. 683, 1*l.* Cleaning piece of land by fields 731 and 732, and pulling old hedges down and making new ones, 14*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.* Again 6 apple trees 15*s.*, other trees planted 3*s.*; stairs for stable 1*l.*, and other claims, making a total of 56*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*

24,485. I do not think we need go into that any further. Have you anything more to say in your general evidence?—Respecting these improvements, I consider it very unfair that a man's improvements are sold with the farm. I think there ought to be some law to compel landlords to pay tenants for the improvements before they dispose of the farm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,486. With regard to the large tracts of waste land which you have been referring to, do you think that giving the County Council or some other public authority, any power to acquire the land and to let it out, would meet the case?—Certainly, any authority that would have power to deal with it.

24,487. If these commons are enclosed under the usual Inclosure Acts, they will be divided amongst those legally interested, namely, the lords of the manor, the tenants of the manor, and certain parts of course allotted to the poor for recreation ground, and other purposes of that kind. But you do not wish that?—I should not like to put any machinery before you, but I should like to have power to get land for the purpose of farming in the district.

24,488. You say it would be a matter of pure utility for this land to be brought under cultivation?—Yes, it is only 5 or 6 miles away from Swansea, and it would be a great benefit to the district, and if there were 100 farms in Gower to be let next week, there is no doubt they would be all taken.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,489. I understand one of your chief complaints is, that much land is let undrained and uncultivated, which is quite capable of being cultivated?—Yes.

24,490. You have six or seven sons, ready to go into such land, at any moment?—Yes.

24,491. I think our Secretary endorses your opinion. I will just read what he says: "A few "notorious instances of good land being utterly "neglected were, however, observed by me, "such as that of a plot of land of about 40 acres "belonging to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, "and lying on the left of the road from Cow-"bridge to Bonvilestone." Do you know that land?—No, I cannot say I do.

24,492. "Now it is covered with gorse, but is "undoubtedly capable of the same high cultiva-"tion as the adjoining land. The same may "be said, though perhaps in a less degree, of "Stalling Down and Ruthin Commons, both "large commons lying near Cowbridge"?—I do not know of that. What I speak of, is Gower land. There is no doubt there are thousands of acres now in Gower, that you could start ploughing to-morrow, you would only have to cut the furze off; there is not a stone in it.

24,493. What is the expense per acre of cleaning out the furze and stalking it up?—Well, 5*l.* 5*s.* would be ample.

24,494. 5*l.* 5*s.* an acre?—Yes.

24,495. How would you do it; burn it out?—It is not only cutting the furze——

24,496. You must dig them out?—I am a good authority on grubbing ground. I do not think there is a man in Gower to-day, that has cleaned as much ground as I have, during the last 20 years.

Lord Kenyon.

24,497. What do you reckon the cost of draining it per acre?—I have not drained as much. I happen to be middling fortunate in that, to get dry land. I have uprooted about 40 acres of trees this last 10 years. It was most all underwood when I bought it, but I am glad to say it is very fertile land now. I do not think you ever saw better wheat, than I have grown there.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,498. Have you reclaimed any land after the passing of the agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

24,499. You farm your own land?—At present. I did not then, I was a tenant farmer then.

24,500. The Act had not passed then?—Yes, that Act was passed then. I was in the farm in 1883, when the Act was passed.

24,501. Did you write to your landlord to obtain his consent?—I did not, because of this. We never thought that the estate would be sold. My two grandfathers were born on the estate, and my father and mother were born on the estate, and I was born on the estate. I thought it was safe for life. We did not ask the landlord anything. We wanted no law between us and the landlord. We lived happily there, and did the best with our farms.

24,502. You seem to be an intelligent man, Mr. James; do you not think as a matter of business that you should have acted in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and first of all obtained his consent?—I acknowledge it was my fault at the time. If I happen to be a tenant farmer again I should be more watchful, but as it was then, I thought I should live under my landlord as long as I lived, and as he told me personally "whatever improvements you do, they will be your own," I thought I was working for myself. He never advanced my rent, nor my father's, nor my grandfather's rent; it was the same rent, and all improvements we were doing for ourselves but as it happened it came to a sale at once.

24,503. Do you think there were many in the position you were, relying entirely on the honour of the landlord?—There were several of Mr. Berrington's tenants. No doubt they never thought the estate would be sold; they were bred and born on the estate, and they were like freeholders, we were all like freeholders you might say.

24,504. Do you think the tenant farmers have generally made themselves acquainted with the provisions of the Act?—Yes, several have been forced to, because they had notice from their landlords; most all of the Gower landlords have contracted themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

24,505. They cannot contract themselves out of this one of 1883?—They did; they received notice, every one, that they were not bound.

24,506. Only with respect to six months' notice?—Yes, certainly, that is it.

Lord Kenyon.

24,507. Not with regard to anything else; they could not do it; it is illegal?—Well, with respect to notice they did.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow, at Bridgend, at 11 o'clock.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Bridgend, Glamorganshire, Wednesday, 1st November 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
MR. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
PROFESSOR RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
MR. RICHARD JONES.
MR. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.
MR. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. McGaul.

My Lord, as chairman of the Local Board, I beg to offer a cordial welcome to this Commission to the county town of Glamorgan, and we hope that the inquiry which has been instituted, may have the desired results.

Lord Kenyon.

I am sure on behalf of my brother Commissioners, I may thank you very sincerely for the welcome you have given us. I may say, wherever we have been in North or South Wales, we have been greeted with the utmost courtesy and civility, and I am sure the Commissioners would wish me to take this opportunity of thanking you and all the other people who have so kindly greeted us. I can only regret that Lord Carrington is detained in London at present, and cannot respond to you in person.

MR. THOMAS JOHN HUGHES, called and examined.

24,508. Are you a solicitor at Bridgend?—Yes. I am also a member of the Glamorgan County Council and clerk to the Bridgend Local Board.

24,509. You wish to give evidence generally, I believe?—Yes.

24,510. Will you please proceed with your evidence?—I should like first of all to deal with the prices which are paid for beef and mutton by the Asylums Farm Committee, of which I am a member. The Asylums Farm is managed by a sub-committee of the County Council, and so far as possible we make that farm self-supporting. We have a farm of 150 acres, of which 30 acres are arable and 120 acres pasture. I have had a return prepared, if you would care to hear it, of the prices which have been paid during each of the last twelve months in the district, for beef and mutton purchased for consumption by the inmates.

24,511. We shall be very glad to hear it?—The prices are as follows:—

	Beef.	Mutton.
1892.	d. d. d.	d. d.
October -	5⅜, 5⅝, 5¾	- 5½, 5¼
November -	4¼, 5¼, 5⅜	- 5¾
December -	5¼, 5⅜, 5¾	- 5
1893.
January -	5½	- 5½, 5⅞
February -	5⅝	- 6
March - -	5½	- 6½
April - -	5⅜	- 5⅞
May - -	5½	- 6⅝
June - -	5¾	- 6
July - -	5¾	- 5¼
August - -	6	- 5¾
September -	5¾	- 5¼

The cost of beef and mutton to the asylum is arrived at, by deducting from the actual amount paid for live stock (including incidental expenses), the cost of keep, wages paid for slaughtering, the value of heads, liver, offal and fat, and also the sums received by sale of hides and skins. Heads, liver, offal and fat are valued at 5*d.* per lb. The cost of keep is, in summer; fat cattle, 7*d.* per head per day, and sheep 1*d.* per head per day; in winter fat cattle are 9*d.* per head per day, and sheep 2*d.* per head per day. My object in giving these figures is to remove a possible misapprehension which exists as to the prices obtained by farmers in this district for their stock. The whole of the stock bought for the Asylum's Farm and for consumption is obtained in this district. I believe that only on one occasion in the last 18 months has the bailiff gone into the county of Monmouth to purchase. I should say the Farm Committee paid 6*l.* a ton for hay during the last winter, and in April of this year the price was raised 6*l.* 10*s.* per ton, and we have been paying that price since. The figures do not show a corresponding increase in the price of stock or any increase. I should add with reference to the asylum that we have just recently accepted a tender for the supply during the next three months of flour at 1*l.* a sack of 280 lbs.

names in to the Commissioners, three of them at any rate, and they have begged of me not to do so. I have explained to them as fully as I can the repeated statements made by Lord Carrington, protecting witnesses at this inquiry; but they seem very much afraid. One in particular I can mention who was a tenant on the Margam estate. I begged him to give evidence and entreated him to do so, but he told me he was afraid, and in support of that he handed me a cutting which I have sent to the Commissioners which was from the "Central Glamorgan Gazette," a local weekly paper published at Bridgend, on the 3rd February last, which reads as follows: "Replying on Thursday "week last to the toast of his health as "chairman of the Margam Ploughing Match "dinner, Mr. E. Knox referred to the good "feeling existing between Miss Talbot and her "tenantry. He informed them of the appointment of a Royal Commission on Land, and "condemned strongly the action of the South "Wales Liberal Federation, which had met at "Swansea a few days previously, urging upon "the farmers the necessity of appointing committees to give evidence before the Commission. He hoped the farmers of Margam would "not appoint such a committee for a political "purpose." I had previously seen that paragraph in the paper, and in a speech I delivered at a place called Kenfig Hill, which is close to Margam, I referred to that speech, and the following is a correct report of my public reference to that speech. It is reported in the "Bridgend and Neath Chronicle," published at Bridgend on the 24th February 1893:—"The "speaker then strongly protested against the "remarks reported to have been made by Mr. "Knox, agent to the Margam estate, on a recent "occasion, in which that gentleman had (so he "understood it) advised the Margam tenantry "not to combine for the purpose of having their "case laid before the Land Commission that "was being appointed. The landlords were "already busy compiling statistics, and getting "up evidence as they had a perfect right to do, "and the tenant farmers had an equal right in "this respect. He trusted Mr. Knox had been "incorrectly reported, and that he would either "disclaim or withdraw the most unfortunate "and ill-advised utterances which had been "attributed to him." That speech was reported, but Mr. Knox, so far as I am aware, did not publicly withdraw or disclaim the sentiments which I had publicly attributed to him. There is a reference at the end of Mr. Knox's reported speech to the expression of Mr. Knox's hope that farmers would not combine to come and give evidence for a political purpose. If that stood alone it would not be invidious, but Mr. Knox had previously on the 1st December last made the following remarks with reference to the Land Commission at the annual dinner of the Bridgend Fat Stock Show, and which was also reported in one of the local papers. The reference to the Labour Commission and the Land Commission are obvious:—"Mr. E. Knox proposed

"'Success to Agriculture and to the Bridgend "'Market Society.' The absence of representa- "tives of the landed interest, he remarked, "which had been commented on at their last "gathering, was not at any rate to be noticed "on the present occasion. Referring to a sub- "ject which was being ventilated in the Press, "he strongly deprecated the attempt which was "being made to stir up class against class. "Some few years ago an attempt was made to "stir up the labourers against the farmers. "That agitation had been followed by evil "results, and its mischievous tendency would "be felt for some years to come. He did not "believe there were better class of landlords "anywhere than in Glamorganshire, and if they "were only left alone, they would continue to "work harmoniously together as in the past." In view of that reference in December followed by the reference in February, I clearly, reading between the lines, came to the conclusion, that Mr. Knox was advising the tenantry, not to combine for the purpose of laying their case before the Commission. In view of that generally, I quite understand the great hesitancy on the part of the Margam tenants, to accede to my request to give evidence. I refer especially to small farmers. I venture to say in view of what is undoubtedly a widespread fear in this county in this direction, that the large estate owners would have been well advised, if they had circularised their tenants to the effect that they were not to be afraid to come forward and give evidence. I think that if they had done so it would have been a very good thing, but as far as I am aware no such communication has been made, at any rate in this district. I wish to give evidence also with reference to the present mode of valuing as between tenant and tenant. I venture to think that some cheaper and more expeditious mode could be established than at present exists, and I propose to give a case which came under my notice only last year.

24,513. You refer to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, under the custom of the country, because the Act is practically a dead letter in Glamorgan.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,514. It would be chiefly between the outgoing and incoming tenant?—Yes, that is what it is practically, of course strictly speaking it is between the outgoing tenant and the landlord, but practically it is the other. This case came under my notice last year. A client of mine gave up a small farm in this district last year. He made every effort to induce his landlord and the new tenant to agree upon a valuer, but could not get them to do so, although he submitted the names of several of the best known valuers of the county. He therefore employed a valuer himself who valued his claim for unexhausted improvements, &c. at 77*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, and the landlord was notified of the claim. Some while afterwards the landlord sent him a counter-claim for 88*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* for dilapidations, although the tenancy was a yearly one only, and there was no special written agreement. After a delay of many months from the determination of the tenancy the parties and their valuers agreed upon an umpire, and a formal agreement of reference was drawn up and signed. The umpire awarded the tenant 55*l.* 2*s.* on his claim of 77*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, and awarded the landlord 24*l.* 4*s.* on his counter-claim of 58*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

24,515. Would that claim be according to the custom of Glamorgan?—I gathered so, although it did not appear from the award.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,516. It must have been under the Act surely?—It did not appear from the claim whether it was under the Act or the custom. The umpire had a free hand, either to base his figures upon the Act or upon the custom. There was no restriction given him at all.

Lord Kenyon.

24,517. There is a counter-claim allowed, then, under the custom of the country?—I am not aware. I cannot speak as an expert upon that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,518. We have had no evidence so far that, according to the custom of Glamorgan, a landlord is entitled to claim. Under the Act of 1883 he is clearly?—Yes, under special circumstances. I am referring to the fees of the valuers and the solicitors on both sides, because solicitors were then appointed by the parties, and of the two valuers and the umpire, and the umpire's solicitor to whom he went to prepare the award for him, came altogether to 29*l.* 3*s.* The umpire awarded the payment of these costs equally between the tenant and the landlord. The result of that was that the tenant received a net sum of 16*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* He first placed the matter in my hands, and there was an endeavour to get the matter amicably adjusted in April, but the award was not published until December.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,519. Would that be a fair specimen of the cost, or is that an extreme case?—That is no doubt an extreme case. No similar case has come under my notice.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,520. One case came under my notice in the County Court in which the costs were over 200*l.* a side?—Yes, but I mean so small a case.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,521. This is a thing quite possible any day?—Yes, quite possible.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,522. What would be the smallest cost?—Assuming one valuer was appointed by arrangement between the parties, the costs would run to anything between 3 guineas and a 5*l.* note, but very often there is a valuer on each side, and an umpire. A small case came under my notice recently, in which the costs were 16*l.* 1*s.*, that is to say, three 5*l.* each and a guinea for the preparation of the award. That was small taking also.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,523. Even then the 15*l.* would bear a large proportion to the total?—Yes, a very appreciable proportion. In that case the total valuation was about 150*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,524. The figures that you have given, include the solicitors' fees for attending before the arbitrators?—No, the solicitors did not attend before the arbitrator, it was arranged he should take it himself. Then I find in the syllabus there is a desire to obtain the proportion of game cases at the Petty Sessional Court for the division. I have searched the register of cases by the courtesy of Mr. Stockwood, the magistrate's clerk, and this is the result. I have eliminated all cases, which did not really come before the court; all cases which were withdrawn or settled, or anything of that kind; but all cases which came before the court, whether dismissed or not, I have taken. I have taken them for the last 12 months, and for the last 52 Saturdays I find the total number of game cases has been 34. The total number of cases of offences against property, including larceny, wilful damage, cruelty to animals, and so forth, is 96. The total number of cases of offences against the person, assaults, peace sureties and indictable offences against the person is 111, so that the proportion would be something like 1 in 8 of game cases to the total.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,525. Did you make any reckoning of the others which were withdrawn?—No, I did not.

24,526. Would there be a large number?—A great number of assault cases would be withdrawn.

24,527. Assaults on keepers?—No.

24,528. That is what I want to know, with regard to the game?—There was, I think, only one game case withdrawn during the last 12 months.

Lord Kenyon.

24,529. Is that the total number of cases which came before the Court?—Yes.

24,530. Of all sorts?—Of the classes I have named. Of course there were a number of other cases, wages, and school board cases, and so on. Then with reference to the tenure of land. There are two manors in this district, the manor of Newcastle and Kevan-Cribbwr is one, and the other is the manor of Coity-Anglia, in both of which an alienation fine of 2½ per cent. upon the purchase money is payable to the lord of the manor.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,531. Are there courts held?—I cannot say. I mention that fact because I think Mr. Randall was reported to have said,—I have no doubt it was a misprint,—that the fee was 2*s.* 6*d.*, but it is really 2½ per cent. Mr. Randall made a statement that copyhold land fetched as good a price as freehold. I think that is true, but it must be taken with this reservation, that as a rule copyhold land is sold by auction, and the auctioneer (that is my experience) usually says: "Gentlemen, this is copyhold land, there is no annual rent, nor ground rent, and the land is as good as freehold any day." It is only afterwards that the purchaser ascertains that in addition to the purchase money and the costs, he has to pay 2½ per cent. to the lord of the manor. I find that this alienation fine, works very hardly in the case of small purchasers. In the manor of Newcastle and Kevan-Cribbwr that extends to a portion of the colliery district at Tondû and Aberkenfig above this town, there are some small ownerships of land where the purchase money is 25*l.* to 50*l.* It is often a great hardship to find the steward's fees amounting to 2*l.* or 3*l.* or 4*l.* in addition to the solicitor's costs and alienation fine. One curious fact in connection with Newcastle and Kevan-Cribbwr is, that there is a special custom admitting of an estate tail in copyhold, which shows that a manor must have existed ever since the Statute of Uses.

See 54

24,532. With regard to your view that there should be a cheaper and more expeditious mode of valuing, and with regard to the custom of the country, is it usual under the custom of the country to have two valuers and an arbitrator?—No, that is an exception, I think, but I do not profess to have any special knowledge.

24,533. I want to know the usual way of valuing under the custom?—The usual way is to employ two valuers; so far as my experience has gone, it is only when they disagree that an umpire has to be appointed.

24,534. And pay the expenses of the valuers?—Yes.

24,535. How would you propose that there should be a cheaper mode?—My proposition is perhaps rather a startling one, but I always consider it is the duty of the State, so far as possible, to assist both in the case of arbitrations and in the case of litigations. I consider there should be a highly-paid State official in each county, or each arbitrary division, if you please, whose duty it should be to undertake these valuations.

24,536. And be paid out of the public funds?—Yes.

24,537. How would his salary be paid? Would it come out of the Imperial funds, or out of the local funds?—Out of the Imperial funds. With a graduated scale of income tax, and taxation of ground rents and royalties, such a fund would be available as would make the matter a very easy one.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,538. According to the income of the county?—No, I mean the personal income tax payable. If a graduated scale could be established, that incomes of 1,000*l.* and under should pay so much in the 1*l.* Incomes of above 1,000*l.* and under 10,000*l.* so much more, and so on.

Lord Kenyon.

24,539. That refers to the income tax?—Yes, that is a way in which the money could be found without seriously hurting the farmer's pocket.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,540. You say that the tenants on the Margam estate have not come forward. Is there much to complain of, do you think, on that estate?—Well, so far as I have able to ascertain, the great complaint is the amount of game upon the estate.

24,541. And these men would not come forward?—That was the chief complaint. One man said his place was swarming with game, and he dare not kill a rabbit, although he knew very well be had a right to do so by law.

24,542. You say the condition of the sons of the farmers is worse than the labourers. Do you know instances of farm labourers taking small farms, and becoming small farmers themselves?—I know of no such instances.

24,543. The labourers remain labourers?—They become colliers wherever they can, and especially at this season, because from now on, except those who are farm servants as distinguished from farm labourers, there is very little for them to do in the winter months, and they gravitate towards the mining districts.

24,544. Then, practically, the farmers' sons do most of the work?—Yes, the farmers' sons do most of the work, and I think if they had no sons many farmers in this district could never keep on at all.

24,545. We have heard that farmers without sons manage to get on and pay their way?—Well, I can only give you my opinion.

24,546. These prices which you have given, show that there has been very little change within the last few months?—No appreciable change.

24,547. In fact they have not gone down so much in the last few months as one would expect?—I think not.

24,548. Beef was higher in August, than it was at any time during the last 12 months?—Yes.

24,549. You have not given any figures for further years?—I could obtain them with pleasure.

24,550. I think it would be more interesting for comparison?—Why I have specially done this is for this reason. It is only rather more than a year, ago that the farm committee appointed a farm bailiff and did their own purchases; before then an agent purchased for them on commission, and often bought in England. I thought the figures would be valuable from the time when we bought for ourselves in the immediate district; because I believe, under the former circumstances, our agent purchased in other counties and in England.

24,551. And possibly there are fewer profits to be made out of it, now you get it more direct?—Yes, perhaps so. We thought so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,552. To what cause do you attribute the depression among farmers?—Do you mean the difficulty of the farmer to pay his rent?

24,553. I am adopting simply, what I thought would be a convenient term, to sum up the evidence you have given upon that head. As I understand you say the small farmers in the Vale of Glamorgan are in rather a bad way?—And in the hill districts also.

24,554. And that is very much what Mr. Herbert Lloyd said yesterday?—I would draw a line of demarcation between the farmer who farms more than 300 acres and the farmer who farms less than 300 acres, and another line of demarcation for 100 acres and under.

24,555. Taking the small farmers, have they been doing pretty well until recently, from your experience as a solicitor?—I think the last 12 years have not been prosperous. My experience extends to that period back.

24,556. Do you think the taking a farm on a small scale, pays?—No, I do not think it does. I think farmers remain farmers mainly because of—what shall I say?—their weakness to allow matters to slide. I think their environments prevent an effort being made to get into anything else.

24,557. Supposing an economist were to draw up a profit and loss account, and a proper balance sheet, in reference to the business of a small farmer, it would be all against him?—I believe so, especially if allowance were made for the labour of his sons and daughters.

24,558. Of course in a proper balance sheet that would be done?—I think there would be no doubt about it showing on the wrong side.

24,559. Is that because the rent is too high, or because the rates are too high, or is it due to any temporary cause, such as the fall in the value of stock?—I am not prepared to answer that question.

24,560. Mr. Lloyd said, so far as he knew, in the western part of the county up to 1890, the small farmers had not been doing badly on the hill. He said they worked hard, and for about two years from 1890 onwards their business had been in a very bad way. I said, "What is the cause?" And he said, "Well, I believe it is simply the fall in the price of stock"?—My evidence refers especially to the last five or six years. I am not capable of speaking with complete accuracy before, but I can only give my general opinion. During the last two or three years especially, applications to me for loans have been very numerous.

24,561. That exactly tallies with what Mr. Lloyd said. Referring to your point about a State arbitrator, you have not been making any point about the mere name; whether a man is called an arbitrator or a county court judge, or a judge of the High Court?—Not the slightest.

24,562. You say a man particularly versed in agricultural valuations should be appointed?—Yes. My opinion is that, not only in this matter, but in other matters that should be. I would go a step further, and emphasize what has been already enunciated, that highly-paid

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

State officials should be at our county courts, to assist the poor litigant in presenting his case.

24,563. To advise?—Yes, to advise.

24,564. What you are really demanding, if you analyse it to first principles, is just what the merchants are demanding when they demand a chamber of commerce?—It comes to that.

24,565. You, on behalf of the agricultural interests, say you ought to have your agricultural judge provided by the State?—Yes.

24,566. Would you say that he was to act without fee or reward from the particular litigant?—That is my proposition, but I do not think there would be any hardship felt, if there was a small fee payable, based upon the acreage of the farm which was under consideration.

24,567. It would be a loss to the State on your hypothesis; it would not be what the county court is at the present time, a self-supporting institution, but the State would have to pay?—Quite so. The county court is self-supporting, but as a system, so far as the collection of debts is concerned, in this county, it is a most absolute failure.

24,568. Are the fees high?—The fees are too high, and the machinery for enforcing the judgments is cumbersome and expensive. For instance; if a man owes me 25*l.* and I issue a writ, I pay 10*s.* for my writ and 10*s.* for my judgment, and that is all; but if I put them in the county court I pay one guinea to enter the case and 2*l.* for the hearing fee.

24,569. If the case is over 20*l.*?—Yes, I assume a 25*l.* case.

24,570. In regard to the existing custom which you referred to, on the manor of Newcastle and Kevan-Cribbwr, do you remember the words that appear in the document?—You mean the document creating the estate tail?

24,571. When one tenant dies and the successor comes on?—No, the matter came under my notice in the office in which I was articled; but the gentleman interested in that matter will let you have the extracts showing the creation of that entail. He is a personal friend of mine.

24,572. I suppose in the documents of title, the estate is expressed to be held at the will of the lord?—That I cannot answer. The matter did not come into my own office but into the office of my principal, soon after I was articled to him; and I just noticed it at the time because I was then reading that portion of the law.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,573. Will you kindly tell us how long this asylum's farm has been held?—The farm has been increased. There was a holding of land as a farm from the establishment of the institution—a generation ago—but about five years ago, new and additional asylum buildings were erected and new land acquired, and we are farming the new land as well as the old land. The new land is principally poor land. We have a herd of 36 milking cows on the farm.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

24,574. I suppose they are not all giving milk at the same time?—No: we occasionally fatten one for slaughter from the herd of milking cows.

24,575. You cannot tell us what is made from each of the cows?—I could give you the exact yield; I could obtain it quite easily; but it averages 500 gallons per week. I have the figures, which I could let you have with pleasure, showing the average yield per cow per week. The average consumption of stock by the inmates of the asylums is, about five beasts a fortnight, and about 20 sheep.

24,576. You say the farmers borrow money to a large extent?—No, they do not. They have not got anything they can borrow it on. They come and try to borrow money, but they have no property on which it could be raised.

24,577. Are there many of them who have purchased land?—Occasionally purchases have been made by clients of mine, farmers, but mortgages have been raised for the purchase money, as a rule, to a large proportion of the purchase money. Land has not been purchased, so far as I am aware, by farmers. They generally purchase a house in the mineral district for 130*l.* or 140*l.* and borrow 100*l.* upon it.

24,578. You consider that farmers' sons are equally as bad off as any labourer?—I consider them to be worse off, because the labourer has his weekly wage and is certain of it. I am now referring to small farmers' sons particularly.

24,579. You are not allowed to give us any of the names of these farmers on the Margam estate?—No.

24,580. I see Mr. Knox has been rather bolder than some of the agents. Do you think that the same thing prevails among other agents as well, although they have not been so bold to speak out? I mean might it prevent farmers attending this Commission?—In fairness to the other estates in the district, I am bound to say I think not. Agents do not view the Commission with favour at all; far from it, but I do not consider that they have taken so strong a view as Mr. Knox has.

24,581. Do you think the highly-paid official could value land in all parts of the country?—I do not see why not. Either appoint him for a county or make an arbitrarily defined district; but I think there would be no difficulty if the right man were obtained, in his being able to tackle any valuation in Glamorganshire.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,582. Which do you think is better off, the farmer of 100 acres, or the farmer of 30 acres?—The holder of 30 acres, I should venture to say, would scarcely be called a farmer.

24,583. Have you farms of 30 acres in your district, or I will say of 40 acres?—There are, I believe, takings as low as 40 acres in this district.

24,584. And farms of 100 acres?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

24,585. Which do you consider the best off?—I consider that the man is better off who has 100 acres; he is better off than the man who has 40.

24,586. I daresay a farm of 30 or 40 acres perhaps is not sufficiently large to give employment and support to his family, but then he has time and leisure on his hands to go and work at something else; he gets auxiliary aid in some shape or other, to assist him to pay for the farm, which may be more profitable than farming itself?—It was for that reason that I hesitated when you asked me if I considered a 30-acre farm or a 100-acre farm the better, because it now appears clearly from your own definition that the 30-acre farmer is not a farmer, but he is a farmer and something else.

24,587. Do you think that the farmer and something else is better off?—I am dealing with him as a farmer; I am not prepared to say what he can do besides; but as a farmer I say that the 30-acre man cannot do any good, unless he is a farmer and something else.

Lord Kenyon.

24,588. It is not sufficient?—It is not sufficient. I know a farmer in Glamorganshire, on the borders of Breconshire, who walks over to the Rhondda Valley at the close of his harvest and works underground in the winter. He is a farmer in Mr. Jones' definition, but he is not a farmer in my opinion.

24,589. What do you put the limit at?—I do not put the limit at all, the limit is put to me.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,590. The limit that would support a man on a farm?—I am not prepared to offer an opinion upon that, so much depends upon the nature and position of the land, and whether or no the man has a family.

Professor Rhŷs.

A farm that occupies all his time: that is the question, whether he is a farmer; but what the limit is I am not prepared to say.

Lord Kenyon.

I think the French definition is about 7 acres in a certain canton.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,591. Generally speaking, would you consider that a man who went to work at something else, in order to assist to keep up the farm, would be better off, than a man who lived on a farm, which occupied his whole time and attention?—Well, it is impossible to answer that question directly, because so much depends upon considerations. I understand your point is this, is a man better off by devoting the whole of his time and attention to farming, or is a man who devotes part of his attention to a farm and part to something else in a better position. Is that your point, because, if so, it depends upon what the something else is? I might farm 30 acres and continue my practice as a solicitor, and I should do rather better at that, than I should as a farmer solely.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

24,592. But is there any auxiliary aid which a farmer could have in order to pay for his farm, such as haulage in a working district like this?—I know of nothing to an appreciable extent, except coal mining or artisan work.

Lord Kenyon.

24,593. A butcher?—There are farmers and butchers in this district, but, as a rule, the farmer who is also a butcher is, I think, a butcher first and a farmer afterwards, so that the farming is the auxiliary and not the butchering business.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,594. You said in your evidence that you did not know of any sons of small farmers who were started upon farms, but that they generally went as colliers?—I did not quite catch that.

24,595. I think you said in one of your statements that the sons of small farmers generally went into the coal mines, but you did not give us any instances?—I do not think so. I do not think I said that, if I did, I did not mean to say it. I gave one instance, in which I said, that the son of a small farmer had become a policeman. I do not consider that is any degradation, but I stated the fact.

24,596. You said they went towards the coal mines?—No, I referred particularly to the fact, that the farm labourers gravitated towards the coal mines; I did not mean the farmers' sons, although this is a significant fact that when we advertised for a farm bailiff for the Glamorgan County Asylum a few months ago at a salary of 3*l.* a week, I being one of the sub-committee of three who went through the applications, more than a score of applications for the post were from persons, who at that time, were working colliers.

Lord Kenyon.

24,597. Were any applications from farmers who had failed in their own business?—Yes.

24,598. A large proportion?—Well, a proportion; but we regarded the fact I have just named as very significant, at the time when we went through the applications.

24,599. The fact of the colliers applying?—The fact of so many working colliers applying for the position of farm bailiff.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,600. Do you know whether many farms in the neighbourhood are advertised in the local papers to be let?—Not often. There is, I am bound to say, very little difficulty in obtaining fresh tenants for a farm when a farm becomes vacant.

24,601. The competition is keen?—Yes, in my opinion it is. There is no difficulty in this district in obtaining fresh tenants. I think that cuts both ways; it cuts in one way as showing that there is always a tenant to be had, but it is also open to this construction, as indicating a reason for the hesitancy of farmers in this district, at any rate some of them, in giving their evidence, because they feel that there would be no difficulty at all for the landlord to give them notice and replace them; the landlord has the whip hand, and can whip one tenant out and whip another tenant in.

24,602. What is the construction which you would put upon the fact that there is such a keen competition for the land; is it because the farmers are doing well, or is it because it is otherwise?—I think this has something to do with it: The farmer's son, as a rule, is nothing but a farmer, and the farm in which the father is, cannot produce above a certain point, and there is nothing open to the son except to try and get another farm, especially when he marries, and an attempt is made by the farmer and by his friends to find the money. I know of cases in which the ingoing money had been found by borrowing by a farmer the money necessary to put his son into a farm. I referred to that especially in what I said just now, as to the environment of the farmer making it difficult for him to branch into anything else.

Mr. Seebohm

24,603. You have spoken of there being copyholds in this neighbourhood. Is there any considerable portion of land held by copyhold?—Yes, a very considerable portion. There are a number of manors in the district. I referred just now to two manors of Newcastle and Kevan-Cribbwr and Coity Anglia. There is another manor, the manor of Ogmore, which is Crown land, and the Queen is the lady of the manor: it is Duchy of Lancaster land; and there is the manor of Coity Wallia and the manor of Penlline, and the Herbert manor of Newton Nottage.

24,604. Have there been many enfranchisements?—No, very few.

24,605. So that there have been a good many copyhold tenants?—Yes. It is quite usual in my office to have copy of court roll surrenders and admissions, as well as assignments and conveyances. It is nothing unusual for a copy of court roll to come into my office.

24,606. Is it that one copyholder is the tenant and that he sublets to other tenants in the ordinary way, or is it that the occupying tenant is a copyholder holding under the manor?—The "tenant" in a technical sense is the owner in a colloquial sense. Instead of owning the freehold he owns land which is subject to a heriot and a chief rent and an alienation fine.

24,607. Is he occupying it himself?—In some cases, but not as a rule. Sometimes a man buys a quantity of copyhold land with a house on the land when it is put up for auction, and goes to live there himself—a retired tradesman, for instance. I sold some copyholds in this district three or four years ago to a retired tradesman. There was land and a house, and he lives there now.

24,608. It is a form of ownership rather than a form of occupation?—Yes, clearly so.

24,609. Then would there be any great disadvantage in pressing enfranchisement?—No, I think not.

24,610. Would it be any good for the neighbourhood to make it all freehold ownership?—I consider it would, because the present incidence of tenure presses so hardly upon the small owners—the copyhold system—the steward's fines and the alienation fines.

24,611. I suppose a great many of the copyhold occupiers and owners would be quite little people—cottagers and that kind of thing?—Some of them would, but I think not as a general rule.

24,612. There is no advantage in their being copyholders, is there? They would be just as well off if they had freehold tenure?—They would be better off in my opinion, because when one dies they have to pay fines. I had to pay a heriot the other day of 6*l.* odd, upon the death of a tenant of a small copyhold property.

24,613. It is a mere survival of an old tenure, which is practically worn out and quite unsuited to the times?—Quite so, and the only differences between it and freehold are that there is the heriot, the chief rent, the alienation and the steward's fees. In other respects it is freehold.

24,614. Have you the custom of East Glamorganshire here? Does that cover most of this district?—I am not aware of any special custom in East Glamorganshire. I do not speak as an expert at all, but I am aware only of the custom of Glamorganshire.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

This is the custom of Glamorganshire that applies here.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,615. That is what I want. What you call the Glamorganshire custom, so far as the rights between the landlord and the outgoing and incoming tenant, and so on, is pretty satisfactory?—In my opinion it is. The tenant farmer is absolutely ignorant of the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act in my opinion.

24,616. If you had to make an Agricultural Holdings Act for this special district you could not much improve upon the custom?—I should build it up upon the custom. May I point out two cases recently; two tenant farmers of mine were totally unaware of any necessity to give notice before determination of their tenancy in order to claim for unexhausted improvements.

24,617. Then the real difficulty you have with this excellent custom is in the procedure?—The procedure of arriving at the amount.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

24,618. You want to cheapen that?—I should like to see it done.

24,619. You would hold, I think, that the laws of England having been framed for larger estates than are prevalent here—larger holdings than are prevalent here—require alterations so as to bring the advantage of the law home to the little people as well as to the large?—Yes. In my opinion the machinery provided by the Act, is absolutely hopeless on a farm of 70 or 100 acres.

24,620. Yes; so that they do not get the protection that the law intends they should get?—In my opinion they do not.

24,621. With regard to your suggestion about a skilled person in agriculture (I do not know what you call him), who should probably have his district and be present at the county courts, and be subject to be called in by the tenants at very small cost—was that your idea?—That is my idea. I do not say that he should be attached to the county court or that he should not; I do not make that a condition.

24,622. He might have even a wider district than the county court district?—Yes, by far; because county court districts are arbitrary districts. For instance, we have three county court judges in Glamorganshire at the present time.

24,623. Would you suggest that he should actually settle a thing or that he should advise?—That he should settle.

24,624. That he should have judicial power to settle?—Yes.

24,625. Subject to an appeal?—No, I would not give any appeal.

24,626. You think with regard to a single person coming in, in that way—an expert—who has the position of covering a large area, and therefore would not be expected to be partial to any particular district, that his single decision would practically settle the question?—Yes, I do. I should give either party the option to procure his services. Of course, if they can agree without going to him all the better; but if either party so desire it, the matter shall be brought before him.

24,627. So that he, in point of fact, will be an umpire on all agricultural questions in the district?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

Thank you. I think that is a very valuable suggestion.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,628. He would, in fact, be more than an umpire; he would be judge?—Well, he would be umpire in its technical sense. The umpire's award in an arbitration case is absolutely final.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,629. I think Mr. Brynmor Jones mentioned the question of stamps. Is it not a fact that our stamp system is heavy upon small transactions?—I do not think it is a serious matter, 5*s.* is the stamp duty on an award.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

24,630. In the case that you gave, for instance—in all those various litigations, whatever they were, which cost so much, and in the case where a man had only 29*l.* out of 77*l.* that he expected, or whatever the figures were—we will not say anything about the figures?—Yes.

24,631. Was any large portion of that stamp duty?—Not more than 10*s.*

24,632. Not more than 10*s.* on the whole lot?—Yes, there was an agreement of reference and the award.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,633. With regard to the umpire, would you give him anything else to do. Supposing, for instance, the Agricultural Holdings Act were imposed on the basis of the custom of Glamorgan, or any other, and that you required the tenant to give notice of the improvements to the landlord in order to get the landlord's consent, you would consider that a reasonable thing, would you not, that, if the landlord was to pay compensation when the tenant left, he ought to be asked to consent before the improvement is made?—It depends upon what the improvement is.

24,634. But there are some improvements that would be such improvements that ——?—Yes, permanent buildings and so forth.

24,635. You would require the landlord's consent?—Yes; but there are many things to be considered. I mean, I should like to see the farmer dealt with, more as if he were a rational being than as if he were a mere bailiff. I should like the landlord to recognise, that the farmer knows his business and uses his money to the best advantage on the farm.

24,636. Then that would become part of the duty of the arbitrator in the end, to consider as to whether he had wisely improved or not?—I will not go as far as that. I am not prepared now to set down limitations to the functions of this suggested umpire. I am only making the broad suggestion.

24,637. That was not what I was driving at either, but you would say there were certain permanent improvements which would be necessary to get the landlord's permission for, before he had done them?—Yes.

24,638. Suppose the landlord were to say, "I "do not admit it is necessary," and the tenant said, "Yes, it is," would you bring that before the arbitrator?—Yes, certainly, I should consider that to be one of his functions without appeal. I was referring to an umpire in the technical sense.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,639. Would he have anything to do with the question of too high a rent?—No. I should like to see a Land Court established for that purpose.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

24,640. Could you have a Land Court and litigation as between the landlord and tenant without incurring solicitors' expenses, and all that kind of thing?—I am sure I do not quite follow you.

24,641. You say that you would not give the adjudication of any rent or as regards any excessive rent to the umpire?—But you would have a Land Court for that purpose, and I would suggest, that the umpire be a sort of assessor to that Land Court, in the same way that assessors are at present appointed in the Admiralty Division; that he would have his own special functions independently of the Land Court, and that he would also have a position as an assessor to the Land Court so that the same point may come before him later on, in the capacity of assessor, with which he had dealt previously in his capacity of umpire.

24,642. Do you think you could devise a system of procedure in a Land Court which would not be expensive, which would not employ solicitors, for instance?—I do not admit that to employ solicitors is expensive.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,643. Reverting to what you said just now, I think you suggested, that the tenant should be allowed to make a certain class of improvements, without consulting or having the consent of the landlord?—Yes.

24,644. When he leaves, or supposing the land is sold, how about assessing those improvements. Suppose the Land Court insists that they were unnecessary or unwise?—I would suggest that certain limitations be drawn up with classes of different kinds of improvements, for instance, one class of absolutely permanent buildings, in which the consent would have to be obtained; the second class to be one in which notice would have to be given, with a right to the landlord to bring the matter before the umpire.

24,645. Therefore, the second class would be subject to the umpire or arbitrator for his opinion?—Yes, in case of disputes.

24,646. You do not in any case, I suppose, think that the farmer and the landlord would always go into court?—No, I do not by any means.

24,647. They would be the exceptional cases?—Yes, I believe they would. At the present time under the Act there is a similar limitation, and notice has to be given before certain improvements can be allowed for afterwards. All I suggest is that in such cases either party should give a right to bring the matter before the assessor, and that there should be no question at the determination of the tenancy as to whether or not any single matter was necessary at the time; the assessor will have decided it.

24,648. I do not know whether you have been living in the country all your life or in a town. Do you know how the small farmers live in the Vale of Glamorgan, what food they have, and so on?—I have lived at Bridgend all my life, but my ancestors and relatives were all tenant farmers, and I have stayed with them a good deal when young. I have also often been in other farmhouses in the district. In my opinion they get fresh meat on Sundays, and they get bacon, as a rule, in the week, and they have potatoes and plain food.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

24,649. What class of farmers are you referring to?—Small farmers.

24,650. You are speaking of the present day?—I am speaking of 10 years ago.

24,651. That will do; I suppose there is not much change since?—The small farmers as a rule have not meat on a week day; fresh meat I mean is an exception; they usually have bacon and broth.

24,652. And on Sunday or once a week or so they have what?—They have a joint or poultry.

24,653. Fresh meat or poultry?—Yes.

24,654. Is there much difference in the food of the labourers or servants?—I do not think there is. The indoor servants, do you mean?

24,655. Yes?—I do not think there is. There is very little distinction between what the small farmer gets and what his servant man gets.

24,656. Could you say how the labourers live?—I am not prepared to give a good opinion upon that. I have my opinion, but it is not founded upon sufficient information.

24,657. You would rather not give it?—I would rather not give it, but I should like to say that the accommodation for farm labourers so far as houses are concerned is very bad.

24,658. Is that for farm labourers or for farm servants?—Farm labourers.

24,659. In their own cottages, you mean?—In their own cottages.

24,660. What have you to say about that?—I consider that the accommodation is in many cases insufficient especially for men who have large families; there are often only one or two bedrooms.

24,661. What do they pay for those cottages, do you think, on an average?—I do not know. In some cases the cottages are upon the farm, but not many. If a man has a grown-up family of sons and daughters and himself and wife, two bedrooms are utterly insufficient—small rooms too.

24,662. How about the sanitary arrangements?—I would rather leave that to Dr. Randall, the medical officer of the rural authority, who I think will be giving evidence before you to-day or during your sittings.

24,663. What about the sleeping accommodation for farm servant men who are hired from year to year or by the half year?—The only personal experience I have of that is at a farm called Boverton, which is one of the largest farms in Glamorganshire, and which my late uncles farmed for many years. I often stayed with them when I was a lad, and the farm servants then slept three or four in a small bedroom.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

24,664. In the house itself?—In the house itself. I do not know what the custom is now in that respect.

24,665. That was a large farm?—That was a large farm of 800 acres or thereabouts.

24,666. We have heard a good deal about the sleeping accommodation in North Wales; generally the farm servant men sleep out in hay lofts, or lofts over stables?—I do not think that obtains in this district.

24,667. You are not very familiar with this subject?—No. There is another uncle of mine who is a tenant farmer in this immediate neighbourhood, and I know his custom. They all live under the same roof there. That is a smaller farm, under 200 acres.

24,668. They do not find that objectionable?—Not that I am aware of.

24,669. So far as you know?—So far as I know there is no complaint.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,670. I think from what you have said, the farms in the Vale of Glamorgan are rather larger than those in the country districts round about?—Yes, I think they are, except, of course, there are large tracts of sheep farms, which are practically not farms, they are mere pasturage.

24,671. Are there very many farms under 50 acres?—There are some, I would undertake to say, but I cannot say whether there are many.

24,672. Would the majority be under 100 acres?—I should not like to say one way or the other, but I will take the broad issue, that hill farms are as a rule smaller than vale farms.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,673. Are there many changes of tenancy in the farms in this district?—There are not many.

24,674. Is it usual for a relative to continue the tenancy of the farm?—That is usual.

24,675. Are you aware of any capricious evictions?—I am not aware of any capricious evictions.

24,676. Because I think you said just now that a landlord had the power to whip a tenant out and another in?—Yes.

24,677. That is not done as a matter of fact, I hope?—I did not say that that power was exercised, but I was referring to that more as a power, and as to that being in the minds of the tenants in view of their relating their grievances at this Court.

24,678. Does much land come into the market? Is there much sold?—No, not much land as farming land.

24,679. Arising out of what you said just now, I think you have had instances of tenant farmers purchasing holdings?—Very few. I was referring more particularly to the instance I gave, of a retired tradesman who had purchased his little estate.

24,680. You said that purchases were made partly with money which was borrowed for the purpose?—Yes, but as a rule the purchases made by farmers are of house property, almost invariably in my experience.

24,681. Do you think, as a broad question, that it would be an advantage to the community if there was an increase in the number of freeholders?—I consider that it would, provided they were also occupiers.

24,682. If the advantages of the Irish Act, which advances money to the sitting tenant to purchase, were extended to Wales, do you think it would be generally taken advantage of?—I cannot say whether it would or would not be largely taken advantage of throughout Wales; it would certainly be taken advantage of in this district, in many cases to my knowledge, although the Small Holdings Act has not been of the slightest use in Glamorganshire.

24,683. No, I am putting it in the case of land coming into the market; if there was an opportunity for the sitting tenant to purchase at a low rate of interest, he would take advantage of that opportunity?—I believe he would.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,684. Arising out of your answers to Mr. Seebohm, I just want to ask you one or two more questions with regard to the State arbitrator, or umpire, that you are suggesting. I want to follow out the suggestion really more than has been done. Supposing a tenant is going out, and he and his landlord, say, he and the incoming tenant cannot agree on the amount of compensation, your suggestion is that there should be available this State arbitrator for the purpose of adjudicating upon them?—Yes.

24,685. But supposing that when he has made his award, it is not complied with, what happens then?—His award should have exactly the same effect as the award of an arbitrator under the Act, it should be capable of being made a rule of court.

24,687. No doubt in nine cases out of ten there would be no resort to any process of court?—I think there would be none in 99 cases out of 100.

24,688. But still you must provide for the case of a person who, when he finds the award is rather higher than he expected, refuses to pay?—Yes.

24,689. Then I understand you suggested that the award of a State arbitrator is to have the effect of a judgment, as between the parties, to begin with?—Yes.

24,690. Then I suppose you would suggest that either party might enter up the award in the County Court?—That is my idea.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

24,691. And thereupon the County Court, or the High Court, for the matter of that, might issue execution?—I was going to suggest that it should not be made a rule of the High Court, but of the County Court, so that it could be taken into the registrar's office of the County Court, and that, say, seven days should be given for payment, and that, in the alternative, execution should issue.

24,692. Quite so. Then you not only suggest, as I understand it, this State arbitrator, whose jurisdiction or whose sphere of work is to be the settlement of compensations as between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant, and the landlord, and so forth, but you suggest a land court, for instance, for settling disputes with regard to rent and to give security of tenure?—Yes, I take the Land Court for granted.

24,693. You also suggested, as I understand, a State legal adviser, did you not?—That was not particularly with reference to land, but generally at the County Court. I suggested this, that the State umpire should be an assessor at the Land Court.

24,694. I quite follow that. Supposing it were determined to create such a Land Court as you are suggesting, would not the judge of the Land Court be able to discharge the functions of the State arbitrator as well?—I do not see at all why he should not do so. The only question is one of status.

24,695. It is all a question of expense, and of whether it is advisable to multiply offices?—Quite so, and there might be a question of status arising, which I need not particularise.

24,696. You suggest a highly-paid State arbitrator. Supposing you were to advise the Treasury in the matter, for instance, or to advise Parliament in the matter, what salary do you think you would get your perfectly irreproachable agricultural valuer for?—This is independently of any function at the Land Court?

24,697. Quite so?—I should give him 500*l.* a year.

24,698. If he is placed upon the basis of a civil servant, with a pension and so forth, you mean?—Yes.

24,699. Do I understand you to suggest that there is any advantage in the mere multiplication of these officials?—None whatever. I think it is a disadvantage.

24,700. Or in the multiplication of courts?—There is a disadvantage.

24,701. If for instance there were one court—one County Court for the whole of Glamorgan, or one Land Court for the matter of that—call it what you like—with these different offices, it would quite meet your views, as I understand?—I think so.

Lord Kenyon.

24,702. Would one court for the whole of Glamorgan fix rents for the whole of Glamorgan?—It depends upon the constitution of the court, in my opinion.

24,703. That is what I mean, would you want men of some local knowledge?—I think they should be representative of districts which have peculiar environments, but nothing more. I think local knowledge might be a drawback.

24,704. Local influence might come in?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,705. With your official at 500*l.* a year, who would have to arbitrate on questions of value and so on, may I ask you what sort of men you would expect to apply. Would you get good candidates from amongst the best agents on the large estates to apply for such a position as that, do you think?—That requires consideration; I should not like to answer that at once.

24,706. Some of the agents on the very large estates have a great deal of experience as to the value of land?—I doubt that, in this district at any rate.

24,707. And some of them, or most of them have also a reputation for being just?—Yes.

24,708. Do you think this sort of office would attract any of them to apply?—My idea is that with the status first of all, allowing 500*l.* a year to the State arbitrator.

24,709. The status of civil servant?—Yes, and the status that would attach to the judge or assessor of the Land Court, with an additional salary in that capacity, would secure very good talent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,710. Of course the establishment of the office would create the men, that is to say, men who now go to the Cirencester Agricultural College?—Yes, that is so.

24,711. That class of man, instead of being an agent on a big estate, would look forward to getting one of these appointments?—Yes, because there would be the other status of being attached to the Land Court.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,712. You say there would be a good field for choice, if the suggestion were found to be practicable?—Yes, I believe so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,713. You know Mr. Ellis's Bill no doubt, which was introduced into Parliament last year?—Yes, I have a copy.

24,714. He proposed that three Commissioners should be appointed. Do you propose that that should be the salary of each of the three?—I am not prepared to answer that question. I was referring particularly to his duties as valuer and as arbitrator. The 500*l.* a year would be independent of anything he would get for acting officially in the Land Court.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,715. I believe that under the Crofters' Act, instead of a Land Court they have what they call a Commission, and now we will suppose that these umpires of particular districts are to have, as you suggest, the powers of the judge and assessor of the Land Court as well. Do you think that we could get out of the difficulty of plurality of offices by making a combination, say of three of the umpires, which combination of three of the umpires should be a court?—No, I would not agree with that at all. My only object in getting the State valuer into the Land Court was in view of the fact that he would have come across each particular case in his capacity as arbitrator, and would therefore be able to advise the court as to what had really taken place, and as to the past history of the particular farm under dispute.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,716. You make him like an assessor under the Admiralty Court?—That is just what I mean.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,717. I was suggesting, in order to get rid of the complication of offices, that the assessors, for the purpose of forming a court for higher purposes, should be perhaps clubbed together in threes. With all their local knowledge the combination would not answer, you think?—No, I do not think that would be of advantage.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,718. You have given us the prices of beef, mutton and flour at the Asylum for the last year?—No, not for the last year, the price of flour is for the contracts for the ensuing three months.

24,719. Yes, the flour, but with regard to the beef and the mutton?—They are during the last 12 months.

24,720. What I was going to ask you is, do you think you could furnish the Commission with a similar statement with regard to the prices within the last 40 years, say at different periods of seven years and so on?—I do not know.

24,721. It would be valuable if you would get it?—I will endeavour to obtain it, with pleasure, but I am not answerable for the management of the farm or of the asylum generally, before the advent of the County Council. I do not know what the régimé was.

24,722. Quite so, but if it is possible to get it, it would be interesting?—I will make every effort to obtain it and send it to the secretary.

Lord Kenyon.

24,723. I have some questions which are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "You have given us, I "understand, the very low prices of meat when "bought in large quantities on contract"?—No, not on contract at all. This has been bought in the open market at fairs in the district by our bailiff. He buys as a rule from 10 to 20 beasts at a time, and no more.

24,724. Then, as I understand, you have given us the prices of meat when bought in large quantities, but not on contract?—I cannot think it would be very large quantities, but 10 or 15 head of cattle.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,725. I mean it is more than you buy from the butcher?—Oh, yes.

24,726. This is Mr. Vincent's question: "Can "you tell us whether the prices of butchers "have come down in proportion"?—I do not say that the prices we have paid have come down. They are down already.

24,727. To put it in another way, are the prices of the butchers in proportion to those?—I am not prepared to say what the butchers' profit ought to be, and therefore I cannot say whether it is in proportion or not.

24,728. "Have you ever heard that what Mr. "Knox said was in effect 'Form yourselves into "'committees as much as you like, but avoid "'bringing politics into the question'"?—I have only taken Mr. Knox's public utterances, and I stand by them. I have not heard any private opinion he has expressed.

24,729. You took it from a report in the newspaper?—Yes, and I put it upon Mr. Knox at the time to contradict the statement.

24,730. As against the report?—Yes, that it was against the tenantry forming themselves into committees.

24,731. "Do you know Mr. Thomas David of Hafod Heulog"?—No, I do not know the gentleman. See 25,332.

24,732. "Do you know that he wrote to Miss "Talbot saying that if he could get certain things, "he would not give evidence"?—No, I do not know him. I have never seen him to my knowledge.

24,733. "Do you know that she replied that "she hoped all her tenants understood they "were free to give any evidence they liked"?—That is obviously a speech and not a question. I will not answer it.

24,734. "Do you know that the following "circular was sent out by Mr. Lewis Nicholl as "agent for his father in May last." Perhaps I had better read that circular:—

"4, Trinity Place,
Swansea.
Merthyr Mawr Estate.

"Dear Sir,

"In view of the approaching Land Commission to enquire into the relations of landlord and tenant in Wales, I shall be very much obliged if you will let me know whether you consider the system on which this estate is managed is a fair one, or whether you are able to suggest any system which is likely to be more satisfactory to the tenant without unfairness to the landlord. On this estate the landlord does all the building and repairs. The tenant does the haulage. The tenant pays a rent for the whole, agreed upon by fair bargain the time he enters on his farm, and the custom has hitherto been not to raise such rent during his tenancy The tenant holds on a yearly agreement, subject to six months' notice to quit on either side, and is entitled to be paid the value of his unexhausted improvements under the Glamorganshire custom, or (if he prefers it) under the Agricultural Holdings Act (1883). Any suggestions you may make as to this tenure shall have my careful consideration. I think it is generally admitted that the relations between Mr. Nicholl and his tenants are, and have been, friendly, and that no attempts have been made to put pressure on them, or to bring undue influence to bear in matters social, political, or religious, and Mr. Nicholl now wishes his tenants to understand clearly that they have absolute freedom to appeal before the Commission, and to give whatever evidence they may think fit. Neither now, nor hereafter, shall any tenants suffer at his hands for any evidence he may give, whether adverse to him or not. I hope you will let me have an early reply to this letter, which you are welcome to show to anyone you please. If you wish your answer to be treated as confidential, please to say so. A similar letter has been sent to every other agricultural tenant on the estate.

"I remain, yours truly,

"L. D. Nicholl."

I was not aware of that letter. I am very glad to hear it, and I only wish that Mr. Nicholl's good example had been followed in other estates.

24,735. That is what you referred to in your evidence?—Yes; and it is only fair to say that no single tenant of Mr. Nicholl has made any complaint to me, or has mentioned anything that he wished to be put forward.

Mr. Griffiths.

Can I have the date of that letter? It is undated.

Mr. Lewis Nicholl.

It was written about the beginning of May; I cannot exactly locate it now.

Lord Kenyon.

About the beginning of May this year?

Mr. Lewis Nicholl.

Yes, before the Commission had sat.

Lord Kenyon.

24,736. The following question is handed in by Mr. Edward John: "In your experience as an "advocate, can you give an opinion as to the "working of the game laws? Have you any "experience of the over-preserving of game?" —I have, happily, no practical experience of the over-preserving of game, as I am not a tenant farmer. I think the fact that there has been only one withdrawal of a game prosecution in the 12 months, shows that the Act is not a dead letter by any means. I can say that the Act is very fully administered in our local court.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,737. I think Mr. Edward John's question points rather to the way the laws are administered. Is there any complaint as to the constitution of the Bench, for instance?—Well, sir. I have not been employed in a single game case within the last twelve months. It may be that it is considered quite hopeless to employ an advocate in a game case, but that is the fact. But the constitution of the Bench is certainly of such a nature that it would be——

24,738. I mean the question is pointed evidently to the Petty Sessions, and it is asked of you as an advocate who is in the habit of appearing before the Petty Sessions?—Yes.

24,739. The question really is this: Do you think that the existing laws as to the constitution of Petty Sessions are fair?—I consider that the game offences are severely treated at our police court, but I have no ground for saying that the cases are unfairly dealt with.

24,740. Is there a general feeling among people concerned in the matter, that the county justices who deal with the game cases, may operate somewhat unduly against them?—I have heard that expressed, I am bound to say.

24,741. That is the question which is put?—But I have nothing to say as to the unfairness. The severity of the punishment is commented upon.

24,742. I thought you did not quite catch the drift of the question. Do you, as an advocate who knows pretty well the range of sentences in other cases, find any inequality with regard to the severity in these game cases?—I consider they are dealt with severely in comparison with the other cases that come before the court.

Lord Kenyon.

24,743. Another question is handed up by Mr. Vincent: "A letter was read from me"—that is, Mr. Vincent—"at the opening meeting of the "Commission. Will you accept my statement "that the letter was written at the express "desire of Mr. Knox?" Do you remember the letter?—I remember a letter appearing in the daily papers as having been written, but I consider that the point was this, that the Margam tenantry do not read the daily papers as a rule. They read the weekly local papers, and the cuttings I have given you are out of the weekly papers, which are read by the tenants, and not out of the daily papers, which are not read by the tenants.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 26,124.

Mr. Edward Knox called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 24,512, 25,371.

24,744. You are agent to the Margam estate —Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,745. And you wish to rebut certain statements of Mr. Hughes?—I do.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,746. I think you are coming to give your evidence-in-chief to-morrow?—Yes, I am coming here to-morrow, but I only wish to detain the Commissioners two or three minutes now by saying that the speech at the ploughing match at Kenfig Hill was quite incorrectly reported, I believe that the reporter had left the room at the time I was speaking. He was present during the first part of the evening, but the proceedings were rather late, and I think he had left the place when I spoke, and so probably the report would be from hearsay entirely.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,747. Was there a dinner?—There was a dinner. I can see round here several Margam tenants who were there, and who I am sure will bear out what I say, which is, that I had not the least intention whatever of advising the tenants not to combine in any way they liked. I simply said I thought it was a pity that it should be made a political question; that no doubt there were things that could be improved, but that I thought if it were gone about as a political question, and in a political manner, no good would come of it whatever. With regard to Mr. Hughes' speech at Kenfig Hill shortly after, I saw in a paper what he said about me, I wrote to Miss Talbot and asked whether I should contradict it. Miss Talbot thought it was so absurd on the face of it, knowing my opinions, and the Margam tenants knowing my opinions also, that it would be better to say nothing about it, and therefore I did not contradict it. With regard to my second speech at Bridgend, I can only say that the member for this division, Mr. Arthur Williams, was sitting opposite me, and when I sat down he said, "It was a very good speech, Knox." So that I think if it suited him, there was nothing very much against it politically. With regard to the letter that Mr. Vincent spoke about, I have a copy here of a letter from Mr. Vincent to me. I thought it would be a very good thing, if it were distinctly understood that the landowners of South Wales were not against this Commission in any way, and that they wished to support it, and it was at my instigation principally that the letter was written which was read by Lord Carrington at the opening of the Commission at Cowbridge. Mr. Vincent wrote to me on the 20th of May saying, "I am taking your advice, and offering"——

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,748. If you are going to read confidential communications between Mr. Vincent and yourself, the Commission might have to ask for all the correspondence?—I will not read it if you do not wish.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is not a question of what I wish.

Lord Kenyon.

24,749. You will be quite prepared, I suppose, to submit any correspondence?—I think so. I simply wrote to Mr. Vincent, and said I thought it would be a good thing if the letter was published, and Mr. Vincent wrote back to say, "I am taking your advice and offering such a "statement as you suggest to the Commission "through the secretary, and if the Commissioners refuse to accept it, I will hand it "immediately to the Press. Hoping to see you "on Tuesday." It was that letter which was read by Lord Carrington, saying that the landlords had no wish whatever to burke the Commission in any way. I think that speaks for itself, that I am not against the tenants giving evidence in any way, and with regard to Miss Talbot's wishes, I have told every tenant that I have met within the last six months—and I live right in the centre of them all—that Miss Talbot wished them to give evidence. I have seen tenants all round, and spoken to them, and said "I hope you are going to give evidence when the Commission come down again."

24,750. In your opinion is it on account of the fear of their landlords that they have not given evidence?—Not the slightest.

24,751. Can you give any reason why they have not come forward to give evidence?—Several of them have told me that they do not want a Land Court, and they are afraid that that would be the only thing that would come of it. They prefer to deal with the landlord or agent direct. That is the only thing they have ever said to me, and I suppose that will be the reason, but as to any fear of any effects from Miss Talbot or myself, I am sure it is quite groundless.

24,752. You have heard what Mr. Hughes told us. You have not spoken to all the tenants and there is no inconsistency between what you are saying and what Mr. Hughes said. I suppose you heard what he said, did you not—that many of the tenants said they were rather afraid to come forward?—He said one tenant, I think.

24,753. There is no inconsistency. One man may have said one thing to you, and speaking to Mr. Hughes may have said a different thing on a different occasion?—Quite so. I think it would be a great pity if the tenants do not come forward, and I believe two or three of the Margam tenants are going to give evidence, and I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,754. Did you see the report of your speech before you saw the speech of Mr. Hughes in the paper?—No, I did not. If I remember right, it was not printed under the heading of the ploughing match. It was a little paragraph by itself. I referred back to the paper afterwards, and found it was a paragraph by itself.

24,755. So that you did not get the opportunity of contradicting the report before you had seen the speech of Mr. Hughes?—Quite so.

Lord Kenyon.

24,756. Is it a paper you take in?—It is a paper I take in, but I am often away, and I do not see it perhaps for a week or 10 days afterwards.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,757 May I ask one question with reference to this. Did you make any reference at all to the South Wales Liberal Federation?—Yes, I did. I said that I saw it reported in the "Times" that the South Wales Liberal Federation advised their agents in different parts of South Wales to get the tenants to combine together to give evidence. I said that certainly, and it was on that, that I grounded what I said, that I thought it was a pity to mix up politics with agriculture, because I did not see where the connexion came in.

Lord Kenyon.

24,758 A question is handed up by Mr. T. J. Hughes: "Will Mr. Knox explain the exact "meaning of his references to the Commission in "the speech of the 1st December at Bridgend?" Your speech, I take it, was not reported. You say the reporters had left the room?—It was the speech at the ploughing match that was not reported.

24,760. Then I have a question sent up by Mr. John Williams: "Is it true that you sent one of "your tenants to buy his seeds from Mr. "Edward John of Cowbridge, but when you "found that Mr. John had taken such a pro-"minent part in the Farmers' Association, that "you sent the same tenant to countermand the "order?"—I never sent any tenant in my life to buy seeds from Mr. Edward John. I told a tenant near Cowbridge that Miss Talbot would pay for the seeds if he liked to lay down a field, which I thought would be very much better laid out in grass than ploughed up, and I got the seeds from Webb's, where we deal. We have a home farm, and we deal with Webb, and I gave Webb the order as a matter of course. See 25,745

24,761. Another question by Mr. Edward John: "Did you not prevent a Mr. Watts, a tenant of "Miss Talbot's, from buying grass seed of "myself, when I called your attention to it, the "reason you gave being my action with regard "to the Land Commission?" Is that so?—No. Mr. John asked me why I did not give him the order, and I said I thought I was quite at liberty to give an order for seeds to anyone I liked, and I naturally went to Messrs. Webb, whom we always dealt with.

24,762. You did not give any such reason to Mr. John?—No, certainly not.

The witness withdrew. Re-examined 25,748–25,946

Dr. Wyndham Randall called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

24,763 You are medical officer of health to the Rural Sanitary Authority?—Yes.

24,764 You have a statement, I think?—Yes. I had not time to send it in.

24,765 Will you kindly read it?—I may say that the headings which I have used in my statement, are the headings sent me in answer to a letter I wrote to Mr. Lleufer Thomas, asking him if he would kindly give me some heads, in order that I might have some idea what the Commission wished. The first heading Mr. Lleufer Thomas gave me is, "General adminis-"tration of the Public Health Acts in rural "districts. Amount of interest (if any) taken by "members of Rural Sanitary Authority. What "are the main obstacles to effecting sanitary "reforms, or in getting insanitary dwellings "condemned, &c.? Privy accommodation gene-"rally" No doubt considerable apathy has been manifested in the administration of the Public Health Acts, but I am of opinion that a great change has taken place in this respect, and I think this change has been much accelerated since the formation of the County Council, there is now an "appeal unto Cæsar." Also the inhabitants of many localities through the increased interest taken in sanitary matters, by the people generally, have bestirred themselves and agitated either to obtain the grant of local self-government,—unwisely I cannot but think in some places—of small area and low assessable value, or have brought pressure to bear upon the Rural Sanitary Authority, to gain an improved supply of such a necessary as pure water, or the removal or remedying of some important sanitary defects. The medical officer of the County Council has been of great assistance in upholding and strengthening the views expressed to their authorities by local medical officers of health, and the threatened pressure of the County Council has tended to hasten the movement of the authorities, in some cases of delayed adoption of useful Acts of Parliament. I have noticed of late years a bolder outspokenness in insistance on the necessity of carrying out drainage improvement or water supply, or the urgency of the removal of nuisances in the reports of medical officers to their authorities.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

25,141. The main obstacles to effecting sanitary reforms are in the first place due to the ignorance on sanitary questions of members of sanitary authorities and to a similar ignorance, where you might less expect to find it, on the bench of magistrates. In the second place, a most important obstacle is the question of expense, which energetic action on the part of the authorities may throw upon owners who may themselves be members of the authority, or may even, perhaps, have stood for election with the conscientious hope of gently impeding the adoption of unduly strong measures. Then again, perhaps, after a medical officer has induced his authority to prosecute, in a case of long-continued deafness on the part of the offending owner, to the prolonged threats and notices of the authority, perhaps extending over years, the magistrates may then give the sanitary defaulter six months to carry out the much-needed and cruelly delayed work, or perhaps order a part only of the sanitary requirements to be fulfilled, or, worse still, find against the authority. My belief is that in such a case the rebuff and the pecuniary cost would be felt so keenly, that sanitary defects would go unremedied for untold years, so long as the memory of the defeat lasted. I have just seen a case noted in the British Medical Journal of last week. It is headed "County magistrates and dilapidated dwellings." That, of course, is not in this neighbourhood. "A case which was "recently brought before the Witham justices "illustrates the difficulty, which rural sanitary "authorities experience, in carrying out the "provisions of the Housing of the Working "Classes Act."

24,766. Is that Witham in Essex?—It goes on to speak of the Maldon Rural Sanitary Authority, so I suppose it would be. "The Maldon Rural "Sanitary Authority applied for closing orders "in the case of three cottages. Mr. Stewart, "the surveyor to the authority, and Dr. J. C. "Thresh, county medical officer, gave evidence "to the effect that the cottages were totally "unfit for human habitation and past repair. "One of the magistrates then proceeded to "expound his views, and stated that there were "many cases of overcrowding which might be "dealt with, and that in his opinion overcrowding was ten times worse than a draught "through a house. It was eventually ruled "that two of the cottages should be closed, but "in the case of the third the expert evidence "was put on one side, and it was decided to let "the matter stand over for two months to allow "alterations to be carried out. The case appears "to have been a clear one, and Mr. Stewart "stated that if the justices would not make the "order the Housing of the Working Classes Act "would become a dead letter. The justices "were, however, too intent upon discussing "general questions, to condescend to act upon "the evidence in the case before them." Again, insecurity of tenure of the appointment of medical officer of health is, I fear, another obstacle. Is it reasonable to expect unpalatable advice to be given by anyone to a body, at whose arbitrary whim his post may be lost to him? You will remember that many of us are appointed for only one year, and then re-election becomes necessary. In my opinion, in order that true sanitation of the country should be carried out, the appointment should be secure so long as capacity and good conduct continue, and made by a Government Department as our inspectors of mines are now. Sanitation should be an Imperial not a local matter, and reforms should be carried out by a Public Health Government Department, and its financial needs found out of Imperial taxation. The next heading is "Farm-houses and buildings; general "condition and construction. Distance of pig-"sty, cow-houses and manure heaps and privies "from dwelling-house and from dairies." Farm-houses. Many of them are old, some of them have been good houses in their time, some are recently built, but, old and new, they are nearly all subject to serious sanitary defects. Nearly all are without shutes, and surface drainage being absent, the falling rain renders damp the external walls and surrounding ground. I have one or two instances of such conditions in my annual reports. I do not know whether you would like me to read them.

24,767. I think we may take what you have got in your hand?—The farmyard, its surface covered with rotting manure, is often quite near to, or immediately behind the house. Pigstys and cowsheds often drain into the open yard, and from this foul sewage sometimes finds its way into the horse-pond, which is thus converted into an open cess-pool frequently too near the dwelling, or sometimes drains out into the public road. This county is not famed for its dairy produce, but where dairies exist they are generally situated at the back of the house, and in such a case as I have described, would possibly abut on the filthy yard. The privies are of most objectionable type, with foul, open, offensive cess-pit beneath the seat, or immediately behind, difficult of access, and only cleaned out at long intervals, sometimes, of years, the only ventilation being up through the seat. Manure heaps are often against the walls of dwellings. The sleeping accommodation for men servants is often only the barn.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,768. With regard to that, when you say barn, would that be on a loft?—On a hay loft, yes. I think that would apply more particularly during the harvest time, probably to periods when they have extra labour on.

24,769. Not in the cold weather?—I think not. I am also medical officer to the workhouse, and some of our paupers, who are there perhaps a good part of the year—those of them who are able to do a little work, go out and help in the harvest. From them I ascertain that they very frequently have only the barn to sleep in; I would not say that this is the case generally.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

24,770. Not with the permanent farm servants, you think?—I do not think so. I would not be sure of that, but I do not think so. My experience is gained from people in our workhouse, who go out during the summer. The cottages, many of them, are old and somewhat dilapidated. Dampness of external walls, moisture of surrounding ground, and foul, offensive privies, are conditions common to these and the farm-houses just described. I know the farm-houses I have described are not the best of them; I think they are the worst of them. Some of the older are one or two-roomed cottages, with only the space beneath the thatch for sleeping accommodation, though in one of these, I now have in my mind, there lives an old lady of 102 years, of petulant but virile nature. Fresh air must cover a multitude of sanitary sins. Overcrowding is not noticeable, though it does exist, as the younger and more enterprising men go off to find employment in the mining districts, if at all dissatisfied with agricultural wages. Then the next heading is, "Diet of farmer's family and of "labourers, their wives and children; water "supply." I cannot speak with exact knowledge of the diet of small farmers and their indoor men servants, but believe they have sufficient plain food, e.g., breakfast: bread and butter, or cheese; tea. Dinner: bacon and vegetables, or broth with vegetables; on Sunday perhaps poultry or fresh meat. Supper: bread and cheese or butter; tea.

24,771. Any cheese at any time?—Yes, I said so. Do you ask at dinner time?

24,772. No, at any time?—Yes, I think they have butter or cheese for tea and breakfast.

24,773. That cheese has somewhere been described as hard enough to require a hatchet to cut it?—It is hard sometimes.

Lord Kenyon.

24,774. Is that Carmarthenshire cheese?—No, it is made here, I think it is a local cheese.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,775. Skim cheese?—I think so.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,776. It is pretty hard at times?—It is pretty hard at times. The out-door labourer will earn from 15*s.* to 18*s.* a week, upon which, I suppose, with frugality, he and his family, if not too numerous, can manage to live. The diet might be improved if more milk were made use of, particularly by the children.

24,777. They think hot tea better, I suppose?—They do. The water supply varies a great deal. In some villages there are good springs with a fairly constant flow of pure water. In others, the supply is from surface wells or weak springs, and scarcity exists in times of drought, and has been much felt during the present year. Many of the shallow wells are subject to surface pollution from cattle, &c. In some places pipes have been laid by the authority to bring water near to the consumers. The water supply might be much improved by careful protection from pollution of the springs and wells; in other places by the construction of large cisterns for the storage and protection of rain water; and in one or two villages a pure and plentiful supply might be got, by sufficient expenditure of money. I allude particularly to two villages, which might be supplied by the town water supply. The next heading is "diseases most common among "agriculturists. How much is preventible "disease." The most prevalent diseases are, rheumatism, heart disease, phthisis, bronchitis, and pneumonia. These might be preventible to a great extent, by enforcing better houses and prevention of dampness in the surrounding ground. Diphtheria, croup, and typhoid fever, which might be minimised or wholly prevented by improved privy accommodation, surface drainage, and greater purity of water supply. Measles and scarlet fever, which would be greatly lessened by provision for isolation of first cases in hospital, and improved public facilities for disinfection of clothing, bed clothes, &c. Then the last heading is with regard to sick clubs and so on. "Sick benefit clubs exist in most of the "villages and are fairly well supported; but the "fact that some of them, through faulty financial "arrangements, have stopped payment after the "thrifty poor have paid into them for years,—and "are so deprived of their expected support just "when old age and infirmity, make them unable "to earn their own living and become thus, "through no fault of the individual, dependent "upon the rates,—causes one to wish that there "were a Government sick benefit society "founded, possibly worked through the post "office, to obviate any chance of the thrift of "years being thus uselessly wasted, the tendency "to thrift probably thwarted and the tendency "to improvidence, so carefully nurtured by our "Poor Law system, exaggerated in its already "giant proportions. I fear this sentence sounds "rather ambiguous without further explanation. "I am strongly of opinion that those ex-agri-"cultural labourers and other paupers, dependent "on out-door relief, hover on the very brink "of starvation. What I should be inclined to "advocate would be this. First, the institution "of the State Sick Benefit Society. After this "had been in existence for some years, I would "make membership of it for a certain period, "the test of thrift. That is to say, anyone "applying for relief from the ratepayers who "was not a member of it should be offered the "workhouse; but to one who was a member "i.e., one who had shown evidence of self-pro-"vidence, I would give generous out-door assis-"tance. Under present circumstances I would "advise the giving of not less than 7*s.* a head to "adults per week out-door relief, and after "some years, I should be inclined to administer "outdoor relief in a ratio to the amount the "applicant was insured for. In other words, I "am a believer in the advantage of the system "of the endowment of proved thrift, rather than "the endowment of improvidence."

Lord Kenyon.

24,778. Could you give us the proportion of diphtheric and typhoid cases?—Per population, do you mean?

24,779. The ratio they bear to the other cases?—I have not brought all that with me. I could give you last year's.

24,780. Last year's would be sufficient. You state that there is a great deal of insanitary condition, and I wanted to know the result as shown by that comparison?—The result, of course, is not shown in one year, but there is such result.

24,781. Have there been any epidemics—any outbreaks of fever, or anything of that sort?—You wish, of course, for the purely agricultural district.

24,782. I wish it with reference to these farmhouses and places, that you have described as being insanitary?—They are insanitary.

24,783. But I want to know what the result is?—Well, I do not think it shows very definitely perhaps in infectious disease. I have one house in my mind, where the conditions described by me, apply really to a very great extent. There has been a run of diseases. There has been diphtheria and puerperal fever and typhoid. That is a house, such as I have described.

24,784. And I suppose you have complained of that house?—I have complained of that house, and I passed it yesterday, and it is in exactly the same condition as it was, when I reported it.

24,785. On what estate is that?—Well, I do not know that I can tell you the estate it is on. It is an estate out in the direction of Wick.

24,786. You do not know who the owner is?—No, I do not.

24,787. Because it should be brought to his notice, one would think?—It has been reported to my authority. In my district last year there were three cases of puerperal fever; of course, that need not necessarily be all due to insanitary conditions. Then there were seven cases of enteric or typhoid fever, which, of course, is due to insanitary conditions.

24,788. Or it might be to the water?—Yes. Then there are seven cases of membranous croup, which is diphtheria in another word. Then there are three cases of diphtheria. Of course I am speaking of the whole district now. I should say these are not cases, but deaths. And there are four deaths from scarlet fever.

24,789. That would not be attributable, possibly to insanitary conditions?—Oh, no; that is attributable to direct infection. Then there are two deaths from measles, 12 deaths from whooping cough, and five deaths from diarrhœa, which, of course, we generally now attribute to insanitary conditions to a great extent, at least, some forms of it. Then there are 40 cases of deaths from consumption, and 75 from pneumonia, bronchitis, and pleurisy, lumped together, and 26 from heart disease. Deaths from all other diseases, except zymotic diseases, are 41 and 110=151.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,790. With regard to privies and closets, do you think that waterclosets are more satisfactory than other methods?—No, not in rural districts. I should advise a small raised cesspit, which should keep the excreta dry, and with which, ashes or earth could be mixed, or a bucket. Some people do not approve of buckets, but the great point is that there should be only a small accumulation, that is to say, that the receptacle should be so small that it is bound to be cleared at frequent intervals, and that the access to it should be easy. Now, last week or the week before, I went to inspect some houses in connexion with a case of typhoid fever. This was not in the purely agricultural district, but on the Kenfig hill. I found that huge cesspits had been built beneath the privy at the time the houses were built, and for 20 years they have never been cleared at all. When you came to within six yards of them, it was enough to——

24,791. You are aware that in schools now they are making them put waterclosets?—Yes.

24,792. Do you think that is a good thing, I mean in schools?—Yes, if you have flushing power, and if you have somewhere to take it to; but it is useless to put up a watercloset and drain it nowhere.

24,793. Do you think it would suit the children?—You mean would their health be improved?

24,794. I do not quite know how to put it; but would a watercloset be a suitable thing for children?—Well, I should think so. I think it should be flushed automatically.

24,795. They would not use it as a plaything?—I do not think so. There is a system of waterclosets in our board schools here which is, I think, very effective. There are the seats arranged in a row, and there is a little stream running under them, and then there is an automatic flush, which fills at intervals, and over it comes and flushes it; and you can set that flush according to the rapidity of the influx of water either every hour or three hours, or 12 or 24. But then, of course, you must have somewhere for the water to go, and that only applies to where there is drainage.

24,796. With regard to the manure heaps, do you think if there were manure tanks to collect the liquid manure, the farmers would take care of them?—Yes, I should think so.

24,797. Do you think that would be a good way of disposing of it?—It is the proximity to the house which is so objectionable here. I noticed it yesterday, in many farms which I passed, and I was looking out for the particular thing, the farmyard is just behind the house, I mean frequently, I do not say always.

24,798. Is the well near?—No, not always. There is generally a village well, not directly in connexion with the farmhouse.

24,799. And in all cases, I suppose, the piggeries are built right against the scullery door?—Well, they could be found so.

25,800. I know several cases where that is so. Now, with regard to cooking; you have spoken of the diet of the labourers; do you consider the cooking satisfactory?—I cannot say much from exact knowledge; it is merely hearsay, in regard to that.

24,801. We had some evidence from a labourer in Anglesey, in which it was the cooking that he seemed to be most troubled about?—In the farmhouses?

24,802. Yes; that the labourers' food was so badly cooked?—Well, I should think, they all know how to cook bacon and bacon broth.

24,803. The benefit clubs you do not give a very satisfactory account of?—Well, I am only speaking, of course, of some instances in which a man has paid for a number of years into a club and he comes to the workhouse. I consider it an extreme hardship on a man. Very often what happens is this. A man pays, we will say, from 20 to 30 up to the age of 50; then the club breaks, or possibly, as has happened, he is turned out for some fault such as drunkenness, then he is above the age and he cannot join another.

24,804. Have there been many cases, in which these clubs have failed?—I will not say many, but, of course, if there is one club that breaks in a village, it means a great deal of mischief. I have known of one or two or three.

24,805. Is there any big county club?—Oh, there are many clubs here.

24,806. Many little ones, I suppose?—Oh, no, biggish ones. The Foresters and Oddfellows are well-known clubs, but these to which I allude are all village clubs; there are one or two clubs in a village very often.

24,807. The clubs affiliated to the Manchester Unity sometimes break?—Yes, exactly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,808. Which of these diseases, that you speak of, do you consider to be disproportionately high in the purely agricultural districts?—Those I have named.

24,809. Typhoid, diphtheria——?—Phthisis and cardiac diseases more particularly.

24,810. Would you attribute cardiac diseases to agricultural work?—No, but to the dampness of the dwellings inducing rheumatism with organic cardiac lesions.

Lord Kenyon.

24,811. Would it not be possibly due in some way to exposure, from the nature of the men's calling?—Well, of course, they are always working in the wet, but then, on the other hand, their sleeping in damp houses must tend to cause disease.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,812. Are you speaking simply for the neighbourhood, or as a general rule for the whole of the agricultural districts of the United Kingdom?—Oh, no, I am only speaking for my own district, I should not like to go beyond that.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

24,813. Then, of your own experience, do you consider that any of these diseases are disproportionately high?—As regards our district as compared with other districts, do you mean?

24,814. Yes?—What I mean to say is this; that the improvement of the conditions would lower them.

24,815. That is your opinion?—Definitely, that is my opinion.

24,816. Would that apply to phthisis and pneumonia as well as to cardiac diseases?—To phthisis and pneumonia as well as cardiac diseases, rheumatism more particularly.

24,817. You attribute those to the dampness of the houses and exposure to the weather?—The dampness of the houses and exposure to the weather more particularly; and then, of course, there are the enteric diseases; those would be due, not so much to the insanitary condition of the house itself, as to contamination from the privy or the farmyard, or sinks or drains.

24,818. To the insanitary conditions of the privies, and the drainage in the yard?—Yes, and the proximity of the farmyard to the house.

24,819. In each of those cases have you reported to your authority where you have seen that there has been a bad condition of things?—Yes, I think so.

24,820. Then with regard to the water supply. What principally is the water supply; is it by wells or by springs?—The water supply varies a great deal.

24,821. It varies largely, no doubt?—It varies largely. In some parts there are excellent springs—of course, you, Sir John, know the country. At Wick there is a very excellent spring of water, but there it is at a distance; they have to go, perhaps, half a mile. Then there is another excellent spring at Coychurch. In other cases there are shallower springs.

24,822. Has your authority spent much money in taking water from these places to the dwellings?—Lately they have put down a very good well at Mawdlam, Margam, near Kenfig Hill; and they have gone to very considerable expense in laying pipes elsewhere, to bring the water nearer to the consumers.

24,823. I was rather amused, when you spoke about want of security of tenure, in your own office. I suppose you feel that. Are you afraid of any capricious eviction by your poor law authority?—Well, no, I am not, but some are, sometimes.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,824. Whom do you find most obstructive in these matters. For instance, you mentioned the case of a house just now, which you had given notice about, and nothing had been done for a long time. Who offers this obstruction or who declines to move in the matter; is it the labourer or the farmer, or whom?—Well, of course the authority have power to make them do it.

24,825. If they liked to do so?—Yes; but as I said before, the authority of course are sometimes, many of them, owners of property themselves, and then, as I said again, the magistrates do not always act in as rigorous a way, as a medical officer of health would wish. There is a general obstruction—obstruction from there to here.

24,826. Partly on account of the expense?—Partly on account of the expense.

24,827. And partly, would you say, on account of the prejudice against sanitation?—Well, I can hardly put it as prejudice, but to a non-belief in the advantages of sanitation.

24,828. That is exactly what I meant. Are you not sometimes met with this sort of talk—"Our fathers and grandfathers did not spend "money on these things, what is the good of our "spending"?—Yes; the same things may have been there for 30 years or for scores of years, and there is a dislike of any interference.

24,829. Would you say that that was false reasoning?—I think so undoubtedly.

24,830. Would you not say that probably in times gone by, diseases like diphtheria and typhoid, and so on, ravaged the villages on a much larger scale than they do now?—Undoubtedly, I should say so.

24,831. That sort of belief, you think, is utterly unfounded—the belief that they did just as well then, as they do now?—Oh, I do not believe it at all. I believe people must have died in much larger numbers; the death rate must have been much higher than it is now.

24,832. You could not, I suppose, produce statistics to show that?—I could not put my hand on them.

24,833. And perhaps you would not have very much faith in the old statistics?—Exactly so. It applies in the case of many diseases, that when you have got beyond a certain number of years, the statistics are not of the same value.

24,834. That is your conviction?—That is my belief.

Lord Kenyon.

24,835. I suppose you consider that such scourges as the black death, and all that sort of thing, were largely owing to want of sanitary precautions?—I think it is very likely. Of course I cannot say very much about the black death, but I have no doubt myself that typhus fever and enteric fever swept off enormous numbers of people.

24,836. Do you think typhus fever might be stamped out entirely?—Almost, I believe, if not quite.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,837. Is not part of your difficulty, the area on which the cost is thrown? For instance, supposing you had a single little village, say of three or four farms, and you wanted a water supply. The Act, as I understand it, throws the whole cost of that upon the parish?—Yes. The Authority can do it I believe.

24,838. Then the Authority feels that it is unjust to throw upon such a very small area perhaps a large expense, and that prevents their carrying out the law?—Of course. What happens very frequently in matters of this sort is this. Suppose a claim for a water supply to be produced to the Authority; the Authority very often refers the matter back to the parochial committee—there is a parochial committee in existence, which represents the parish—and then it becomes a question of throwing the cost upon the parish or upon the small locality, and the cost to a small locality is very considerable indeed.

24,839. And is it not the fact that in those cases which you are referring to, it is often a very expensive thing to get water?—Yes, it is a very expensive thing; it costs a great deal.

24,840. How would you suggest that that should be met—by throwing the cost over a larger area, or how?—Yes. I cannot tell you that; I do not know.

24,841. It seems to me to be an almost insuperable difficulty?—Yes, it is a great difficulty, there is no doubt about it. There are two villages in which there is going to be an inquiry on the 10th November. Those two villages suffer from very extreme scarcity, and they could obtain the town water supply, which is a very pure one, but I think the cost has been estimated at 2,000*l*. Well, that is enormous.

24,842. Would that cost fall upon the tenants or the landlords in greater part—suppose they borrowed the money?—On the ratepayers, I suppose.

24,843. And they would be the tenants and not the landlords?—I suppose so.

24,844. In that way you work round to a division of the rates between the landlord and the tenant, of which we have heard?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,845. Are the labourers' cottages rented direct from the landlord or from the tenant farmers?—I do not think I can tell you anything about that, I do not think I know that. I should think somebody else could tell you that better than I could—some of the farmers. I do not know.

24,846. We have been told repeatedly, that cottages are generally better kept when they are rented directly from the landlord, than when they are rented from the tenant farmer?—Well, I should be inclined to go with you, that the cottages of the big landlords would be in a better condition—would be more recently built, and would be in a better condition, than those of the smaller owners. I should be inclined to say so, but I will not be sure.

24,847. Are the cottages generally provided with sufficient light?—The older cottages are not, but the newer cottages are built with through ventilation generally, and with windows in front and behind. Many of the older cottages have not sufficient light.

24,848. Built up against rising ground, I suppose?—Well, I do not know of many instances that I can recall of that, but they are built without a window in the back wall, and without a door in the back wall.

24,849. What kind of windows are they; are they fixed?—Yes, most of them are fixed.

24,850. There is no ventilation, then?—No through ventilation.

24,851. Only what comes up through the floor?—Yes, but they generally say the door lets in plenty of air. Of course most of them live with their doors open generally, except at night.

24,852. Are there many cottages, which are not supplied with closets?—No, I do not think there are, but, as I said before, the closets are of a most inadequate and unsatisfactory type. What happened was, when the Act was passed, the authority, I think, issued notices that every cottage should be provided with a privy, and they put up wooden erections, somewhat like a sentry box, and dabbed it down in the corner of a garden, and cut a hole, and there was your privy. Many of those are still in existence.

24,853. I suppose you find that the knowledge of sanitation on the part of the labourers is very elementary?—Very elementary; so it is on the part of the farmers.

24,854. Do you know whether the County Council have had any lectures here on public health?—You mean, here, in this locality?

24,855. Well, in the county?—No. I do not know for certain whether they have had any in Cardiff.

24,856. I mean the Glamorganshire County Council?—I think not; I have not heard of them.

24,857. Do you think it would be a good thing if there were such lectures?—I think it would be, very likely, a good thing, if it could be done.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I may say that hygiene is one of the subjects of technical instruction.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,858. I think you said something just now respecting dairies. They are generally built at the back of the house, I suppose?—They are generally built at the back of the house.

24,859. And in close proximity to some of these manure heaps?—Often.

24,860. Do you think that would tend to contaminate the milk?—Undoubtedly.

24,861. And might be the cause of much disaster?—Yes; it might be the cause of spreading disease.

24,862 Is that generally the case with the dairies in this neighbourhood?—Well, a very great many of them, not all, certainly.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,863. Have they not to be licensed?—No, not in the rural district, I think.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,864. Are they as a rule detached from the living rooms?—Well, there is a sort of little entry, the door of the kitchen being one side, and the door out being the other end of the short entry or passage.

24,865. Do you not think they should be detached?—I do.

24,866. I should like just to bring one thing to your notice with regard to the diet. I find in to-day's "South Wales Daily News," a letter written attacking the secretary of this Commission, at least, his report to the Royal Commission on Labour last year. It is written to the Secretary of the Cowbridge Farmers' Club, and it reads thus:—"Dear Mr. Huntley,—I very "much regret to be unable to be present at your "meeting to-day, on account of being unwell. "I therefore ask you to bring before the Com- "mittee the matter of Mr. Lleufer Thomas's re- "port as Labour Commissioner, noting especially "that part of it, referring to the diet given to "indoor servants in our farmhouses. This part "of the report is really nothing short of a gross "libel on the Vale of Glamorgan farmers. I "hope the committee will see fit to bring this "before the after meeting, and propose a reso- "lution of flat denial. I cannot help remark- "ing that doubtless there is more beef and butter "consumed on an average farm in the vale, than "in an average parish of the county of Car- "marthen (Mr. Thomas being a farmer's son of "that county), and I am sure our servants have "never known such stuff as the proverbial Car- "marthen cheese." This is what Mr. Thomas's Report says about it:—"It was stated on all "sides that the food provided had much im- "proved within recent years; that there was "little or no difference between the servants' "table and that of the family on the smaller "farms, though some of the larger farmers still "continue to give their men very inferior food. "In one instance a labourer, using perhaps a "pardonable hyperbole, told me of cheese set "before him, which was so hard as to require a "hatchet to cut it." Now, Mr. Thomas has given a very faithful report; it is not his fault; if it is anybody's fault it is the fault of the labourer who gave him that information. Whether it is true or not I cannot tell?—Yes. I believe the cheeses are very hard if they are kept too long.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Reverend Thomas Howell called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

24,867. Where do you live?—Longland, Pyle.

24,868. Are you a Calvinistic Methodist minister?—Yes.

24,869. You wish to give evidence as to your personal experience?—Yes.

24,870. Have you any statement prepared?—I have only my notes.

24,512, 44. 24,871. Then will you proceed with your evidence, or would you rather I asked you questions?—You can ask me any questions you please, but I wish to state, to commence with, that I have been bred and born in the place. I must confirm what Mr. Hughes said this morning. At the ploughing match dinner, Mr. Knox, the agent, stated he hoped that none of the Margam tenants would give evidence, and as I stated to some persons present at the time, that was a damper at once, to whatever might be done afterwards.

24,872. Were you present at the dinner?—I was. After the report was published, someone wrote a letter the following week to the newspaper. I suppose that person saw the absurdity of the matter, that Mr. Knox should speak of the Commissioners at all, at a ploughing match dinner. I saw that paper and watched to see whether Mr. Knox would reply to it, but it never came under my eyes that Mr. Knox did reply.

24,873. I think Mr. Knox has stated why he did not. He said that Miss Talbot wished him not to do so?—This is the letter in the paper, (handing paper).

24,874. This is another letter?—That was a letter that was published. It mentions in that letter that Mr. Knox was afraid of an investigation. I was at the Liberal Federation meeting at Swansea myself, and heard all the proceedings there. That was on the Thursday previous to the 26th. On the following Thursday, this ploughing match dinner came on, and inasmuch as I was at the Federation meeting, and hearing what was stated there, I felt it very strange that Mr. Knox should speak in such a way, especially amongst the farmers.

24,875. Can you tell us what Mr. Knox said, because Mr. Knox says the report of his speech was very inaccurate?—Well, Mr. Knox said at that meeting that he had read a few days previously of the Liberal Federation in Swansea, and that they had been calling upon the members to form into committees to give evidence before the Commission—which I knew was not the case. What the Federation passed in my presence was, that they called upon the different Local Associations to form committees, and to appoint deputies to give evidence before the Commission, so as to assist the Commission.

24,876. I want to know what Mr. Knox said in his speech?—That he hoped that the Margam tenants would not give evidence.

24,877. Did he state that in so many words?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,878. That he hoped that the Margam tenants would not give evidence?—Yes.

24,879. Mr. Knox has just been called, and he says he said nothing of the sort, and he put in a letter of Miss Talbot's to some particular tenants, hoping that all the tenants would give evidence?—Yes, but this was after that, and I have been speaking to several since that dinner, and cannot bring any influence to bear upon them.

24,880. Do you not think it was something of this sort, that Mr. Knox hoped that they would not mix up politics with the Commission?—No, he said he simply hoped that the Margam tenants would not give evidence.

24,881. Shall we now proceed with the rest of your evidence?—If you please.

24,882. You are a farmer's son, and have been in this neighbourhood for the last 30 years?—Yes.

24,883. Have you been a farmer yourself?—In so far as I farmed the holding during the time of the blindness of my father, in connection with him.

24,884. You have never been farming on your own account?—No.

24,885. What is the name of the farm?—Longland.

24,886. Is your father alive now?—No.

24,887. What do you say about the rent?—I consider that the rent is too high to pay for the place.

24,888. May I ask what the rent is?—I believe it is about 80*l.* now; I am not positive whether it is 100*l.* or 80*l.*

24,889. But there is a large difference in those figures. How do you consider it too high if you do not know what it is?—I consider it too high in this way. There were some lands taken from it, but I consider on the acreage alone it is too high.

24,890. You consider it is too high because some portion has been taken away. Is that so?—Well, I considered it too high when my father used to pay 100*l.* for it.

24,891. He did pay 100*l.* for it?—Yes.

24,892. What was the size of it then?—About 150 acres.

24,893. Some of it was poor land, I suppose?—Yes, half of it.

24,894. What is the rest? Is it good land?—I cannot say that, but there are some fields good land.

24,895. Does it require draining?—Yes, half of it requires draining now.

24,896. Is the tenant prepared to drain?—No, he has drained some, but at his own expense

24,897. You say here in your statement that he would not be compensated for the draining?—No, I do not think he would be compensated for the damage or the draining either.

24,898. Does not drainage come under the custom of the country?—Yes, I believe so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,899. The drainage exhausts itself in 14 years under the custom, does it not?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

See 26,114. 24,900. Then you say something in your statement, about damage caused by water coming on the land?—Yes. During my father's lifetime we had certain lands on the moors, and they were overflowed by water. My father had to pay the rent for all that, notwithstanding the water, for years.

24,901. How long did the water lie on the land?—It is there to this day; once it came it remained there. But my father paid for six acres of it for six years. At that time he presented a bill at the Margam office, and they told him that he had better take it to Taibach to Mr. Vivian, that it was in consequence of the colliery adjoining the land that the water came on the land. I myself presented the bill then, as he sent me with it to that office. The agent told me that it was quite absurd for me to come to him, and that I was to go back and make Mr. Talbot pay for it. No more happened about it, as my father got into a predicament, and he said we had better leave it alone or else we should lose the place.

24,902. What time was that?—It was about 28 to 30 years ago when the water came there.

24,903. What is the state of the out-buildings on your farm?—They are out of condition entirely, we cannot turn the cattle into them.

24,904. Was there any suggestion at that time that the tenants did their own repairs?—Yes.

24,905. You say the farmers are obliged to feed their cattle out of doors, which causes great waste in the food. Is that so?—Yes.

24,906. That the animals tread a great amount under their feet?—Yes.

24,907. And if the farmer built he would have to do the same at his own expense? Is that the case?—Yes, my own father had to do it.

24,908. He did do it?—Yes.

24,909. Then you say that there are no proper places to keep the implements. What do you say with regard to buying manure?—Well, buying manure in the neighbourhood at present costs 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton at the different collieries in a circumference of 8 or 10 miles, and when it reaches Pyle it is 6*s.* 3*d.*, and that would not pay. It is just the same in taking the produce away.

24,910. Then that complaint is against the railway rates?—Yes, the cost.

24,911. Have you anything to say about the game?—The game is all over the country there, especially in the Margam parish.

24,912. Is there much damage done to your place by the game?—Yes.

24,913. What particularly—rabbits?—Well, hares and pheasants and rabbits.

24,914. Hares and rabbits?—More pheasants and hares than rabbits at present.

24,915. Did you take advantage of the Ground Game Act?—No, it was no use to do it.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,916. Why?—Because in all probability we should have to leave the place.

24,917. Did any tenants on the estate make use of this Act?—No.

24,918. Have you anything to say as to common lands?—There is common land in the neighbourhood, with which I have had to do during the last few years. There are tenants of Miss Talbot bordering that common, both farmers and cottagers. During the whole time of my memory, the cottagers bordering on the common had a right to turn on to the common. I remember them myself, each cottager having, say, 9 or 10 sheep with a little cow and pig and a few geese running out, and others kept a pony just to bring coal from a distance, as they could not get coal nearer than the collieries about two miles away. But of late I understand that the agent curtails the cottagers, and says that they shall only keep one cow.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,919. No sheep?—No sheep, nothing at all, neither a goose nor a pig. It puts them entirely at a disadvantage. There are many not able to buy a cow while they can keep a pig or a few fowls, but they are prohibited from doing it.

Lord Kenyon.

24,920. Were they turning more than they had a right to do before, to the detriment of their neighbours?—No, I do not think they were.

24,921. Was the adjoining common suffering at all?—No, it does not suffer at all.

24,922. There is plenty of feed for them?—Yes.

24,923. Have you anything to say about the granting of leases?—In our neighbourhood the granting of leases is this; they put stipulations in the leases; some of the leases have stipulations that anyone cutting timber or meddling with the game, shall forfeit the lease. But in connexion with the leases at present, especially in connexion with business houses they are obliged to pay a license for selling their own goods, and that varying from 5*l.* to 20*l.*, and a man might as well pay rent as to build a house of his own.

24,924. That is granting a building lease?—Yes.

24,925. Have you anything to say about education and Nonconformity?—Well, in connexion with this neighbourhood there is a school board in the district. There are collieries near the district. There was a school belonging to the collieries, and when Miss Talbot gave the collieries over under lease, the workmen paid for the schoolroom in poundage, but when the collieries were turned over, Miss Talbot held the school contrary to the wishes of the majority of the people. They as workmen sent a deputation to the board, asking that the school should come under the school board, but they refused, and they held the school in their hands.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,926. Who pays the school rate?—Well, that school belongs to Miss Talbot, and at the same time, the majority of the workmen are in favour of getting the school under the board. Seven-eighths of the population there are Nonconformists.

24,927. Do they wish to have a school board rate?—Yes, right through.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,928. They have a school board rate already, have they not?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

24,929. For this school?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,930. Is this school inspected?—Yes, it is inspected.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,931. Is it free?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,932. No fees?—No fees.

24,933. It is in receipt of Government grant?—Yes.

24,934. And Miss Talbot makes up the money required?—Yes, and she has a board of management herself. She wrote to the Board and said she had named her board, and put a stipulation in, that there was no minister of the gospel to be on it, and actually nothing but churchmen to be on the board of management.

24,935. But the clergyman is not on?—No.

24,936. He would be a minister of the gospel?—Quite so.

Lord Kenyon.

24,937. No minister of the gospel is on?—No, but the chief people in connexion with her schools are the clergymen.

24,938. I thought you said they had nothing to do with it?—They are not on this present school board I mentioned.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,939. You mean the school committee which manages that school?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,940. There is no minister of religion on it?—No.

24,941. There are ministers, perhaps, on the school board?—There are ministers on the school board, and undoubtedly that stipulation was put in, on account of that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,942. How many members are there on the committee?—Five, I believe.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

24,943. What proportion does Miss Talbot nominate? Is it three out of five?—She nominates them all.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,944. It is a private school, in fact?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,945. I understand, Mr. Howell, that this school is a public elementary school under the Act of 1870?—Yes.

24,946. What action have the school board taken in the matter?—When the deputation from the workmen waited upon the school board, they corresponded with Miss Talbot in connexion with it, asking her to transfer the school to the board, and she refused; yet the children going into that school are the workmen's children, and they are in the majority Nonconformists, in fact, all of them.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,947. But it is a voluntary school which comes up to the requirements of the Act of 1870?—Yes, we know that.

24,948. And, I suppose, has a conscience clause?—Yes.

24,949. So that you have no hold over it whatever?—No, not at all.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,950. What is your grievance about it? Is it that public funds are going to a voluntary school of that kind?—The grievance is, that the Nonconformist children are compelled to go there by a committee of churchmen for their education, and they want to get themselves free.

24,951. I do not quite see how any children are compelled to go to that school. The school board has a school within the area, has it not?—Yes, but the other school would be too far to send the children, and we have no power according to the Act to build in that place.

24,952. How do you mean?—Inasmuch as there is accommodation in that school, and even if it was a Roman Catholic school, we have no power to build there.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,953. Not as long as they have a conscience clause?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,954. How many miles is the school off?—It is over two or three miles.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,955. Then so far as the existing law is concerned, there is no kind of violation of the law in connexion with this school?—Nothing at all.

24,956. So that your complaint, I take it, is this: you complain that a voluntary school should be able to compete with the school of the school board, and receive a Government grant?—Yes. What we complain of is this, that the school board has to look after them, and get the children to their school, and that they have no control at all, and that in those affairs they ought to be under a public board.

24,957. What alteration in the law do you suggest?—That all schools receiving the Government grants should be under the board, and all schools that will not be under the board, shall not receive Government grants—that the public money should be under public control.

Mr. Griffiths.

24,958. Can you give us any idea of the quantity of land that you spoke of as being under water?—The land which belonged to my father under water was about six acres, but it has spread now over a great number of acres.

24,959. Is there much of that sort of land in the neighbourhood?—That is bordering on the colliery, and it is believed that the land has given way on account of the workings under it, and the land is below the level of the sea.

24,960. Then it is not likely that it can be drained?—No.

24,961. The reason I ask is this, we heard yesterday there was much land that could be cultivated but wanted draining, and also land with some furze and gorse growing, and a farmer had six or seven sons wanting a farm, and would be very glad to take this sort of land if it was only let for the purpose?—Quite so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,962. Have you a copy of the Education Act there?—No, I have not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,963. I suppose this statement of yours should be corrected, should it not; it states that the Nonconformist minister should have nothing to do with it?—Yes, could not be on the board of management.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,964. You said no ministers of any denomination were to be appointed?—That is it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,965. According to this statement, Nonconformists could have nothing to do with Miss Talbot's voluntary school?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

24,966. Or of any religion?—Quite so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,967. I understand you to say that no clergyman of the National Church should be on the committee?—Miss Talbot said that as well, but I suppose she said that, on account of there being another minister and myself on this board.

Professor Rhŷs.

I do not know, but I think we have had evidence in Gower that other schools of Miss Talbot's are managed in the same way, and we asked the witness if he complained of the religious education given, and he said, no, there was nothing of that kind of thing. I think ministers of all religion were excluded.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

That was not quite the same case. If I remember rightly there was a school board there which had no school at all, and the only school was a voluntary school, which was certified to be efficient under the Act of 1870, and the school board only met once in two years.

Professor Rhŷs.

And the difficulty was to get them to meet. There was no business to transact when they did meet.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,968. I think you said practically the clergyman has a big hand in the management of the school?—Yes, in the schools on the estate, but not there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,969. Have you tried to get the consent of the Department to the school board building a school in that particular part of the school board area?—Yes.

24,970. Did the Department refuse their consent?—They cannot give it at all.

24,971. How is that?—The accommodation is sufficient at that school; that was the result.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,972. That would be their reply. The accommodation means the requirements of the Act of 1870?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

24,973. So that if the school board erected a school they would not get any grant?—Quite so.

Mr. Seebohm.

It has to be both "sufficient and suitable."

Professor Rhŷs.

"Suitable" in this case is covered by the conscience clause.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

You may not get a Government grant, but if the school board were to erect a public elementary school, side by side with this voluntary school, your rate to carry on that school would be a perfectly valid rate, would it not?

Mr. Richard Jones.

I do not think the auditor would pass it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I am not sure of that.

Professor Rhŷs.

I rather think he would, but they would get no Government grant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

24,974. I do not think the Department could prevent you erecting a school there, if you choose to erect it?—But would the board be allowed, in that case, to raise money to maintain that school? That would be another question.

Mr. Seebohm.

24,975. With regard to this school, do we understand that the religious teaching is distinctly of a Church of England character?—No.

24,976. Then in what way is the school unsuitable?—The only thing is this, that the Nonconformists are not willing to be controlled by a board of churchmen.

24,977. That is not a Welsh question; it applies all over England, does it not?—Yes, but that carries its influence as well.

24,978. Supposing, for instance, we took a parish in Liverpool which was inhabited by a vast majority of Roman Catholics; would they have a right to say they had a grievance because the School Board of Liverpool was by far the largest portion of it Protestant?—Yes, and that is the reason they allow their children to go into another school, because they know that the persons there have an influence on the child's mind.

24,979. Having a school board would not necessarily make it more just as a matter of principle; but in another place there might be persons just as much aggrieved by there being only a school board as you are in your case by there being a voluntary school?—The public in that case, if they are right, have a right to select whoever they like; they would go by the majority of that neighbourhood, but they do not go according to the majority in this case.

24,980. It may be a nice question which is the biggest tyranny, the tyranny of one person or the tyranny of a majority?—I would rather trust the people than trust an individual.

24,981. It is a question very difficult to solve in Ireland and in other parts of England, especially in large towns where there are Roman Catholics. What I wanted to ask was, whether generally throughout this district of Wales there are school boards?—Yes, to a great extent.

24,982. In nearly every place?—No, not in every place.

24,983. Nearly every place of any importance?—Well, there are places of importance in this county which have no school board, one of the largest places in the district, and a mining and iron district.

24,984. The real difficulty of the case in those districts is, that there is no choice of school?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

24,985. If there was a voluntary school and a board school, you would not feel the grievance?—If the Act had allowed the board to have schools where they thought proper, independent of the voluntary schools, there would be no grievance.

Professor Rhŷs.

24,986. Where is this school?—Kenfig Hill.

Sir John Llewelyn.

24,987. With regard to the granting of leases, you say, I see, in your statement: "I think "business houses have to pay a license together "with ground rent." Will you explain that? What do you mean by business houses?—Shops and so on.

24,988. A license ranging from 5*l.* to 20*l.* a year?—Yes.

24,989. Is that a usual or common stipulation in the lease?—I do not know whether it is now; it has been.

24,990. It was so in Mr. Talbot's time?—Yes, in this paper you will see a report in connection with a license (handing paper). See 26,102, 26,124.

24,991. This is, I see, a paper called the "Draper's Record"; and refers to a single instance where Mr. Hanford of Taibach, a draper, stated that he became liable to pay the ground landlord 20*l.* a year, the ordinary ground rent being 2*l.* Do you know of your own knowledge that that was customary on the estate?—No.

24,992. You put it, as if it was a usual thing, that business houses have to pay, together with their ground rent, a license. To your own knowledge is that the case in more than this instance which you have quoted?—Yes.

24,993. There are also stipulations in the lease you say. I suppose all leases have some stipulations. I do not know what you refer to there?—There is another thing in connection with the leases at Kenfig Hill, it is burgess ground, and some years ago, in Mr. Talbot's time, it came to a forfeiture, and he gave them some 80*l.* a year for that place, and the place is built now in connection with the estate.

24,994. Did the burgesses claim the land?—Yes.

24,995. Mr. Talbot compromised it by paying a certain sum?—Well, I could not say how the compromise took place. How could a burgess sell his successor's land?

24,996. But the burgess and Mr. Talbot did come to some arrangement?—Yes, some arrangement.

Lord Kenyon.

24,997. Are you satisfied with the religious teaching in the South Wales schools?—No, not altogether.

24,998. There are a great many schools in South Wales in which there is no religious teaching whatever?—Yes, and there are other schools in which they take a certain time every day for the religious teaching.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

24,999. Would you be of opinion that there should be a certain amount of religious teaching?—No.

25,000. None at all?—No.

25,001. Would you not ground the children in any religion?—We, in South Wales, are not indebted to the day schools for our religious education.

25,002. I am quite aware you have an excellent system of Sunday schools; it is not peculiar to Wales. Would you rely entirely on the Sunday schools for that teaching?—Yes.

25,003. Merely once a week?—Yes, once a week, and the parents to teach their children at their homes.

25,004. In some cases, the parents have hardly the time to attend to their children?—Taking us as a nation, every man has a tendency to teach his children in religious affairs. In a great number of families you get in our neighbourhood, and in other neighbourhoods, the parents give the children as a task a certain number of verses to learn, so as to repeat them in their chapel the following Sunday.

25,005. There are cases where the parents have not time to attend to their children's education?—Well, I do not believe that there are many of those. There are cases undoubtedly, but taking it as a general rule, I believe, that the religious education in Wales is indebted entirely to the Sunday school and to the home teaching.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,006. Do they teach the Bible historically in the board schools? Do they make use of the Bible in the board schools?—Yes, they read it simply.

25,007. You do not disapprove of that?—No, we have no occasion to disapprove of that in our place. Take it as a general rule, I have no objection to read the Bible simply, but, as a rule, whatever denomination the schoolmaster belongs to, he, of course, carries that impression, just the same as I would carry the impression myself on an audience or a school of children. Of course I would not impress it on their minds, although I would not speak of any other denomination but my own, but they would understand by my mode of being with them that I belonged to the Calvinistic Methodist denomination, and I would not wish for any moment to impress anything on a child, or to take a child from any place where his parents wished him to be.

Lord Kenyon.

25,008. I was thinking of religion being taught at all. I read a short time ago, in a report that there were children who did not actually know the Lord's Prayer, and I take it that any minister of whatever religion would wish a child to know the Lord's Prayer?—I think you will not get many children in connexion with Nonconformists, who do not know the Lord's Prayer.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,009. Then the inference which I draw from your statement is this, that there may be sectarian influence without sectarian teaching?—Yes.

25,010. What is taught in this school of Miss Talbot's?—Just the same as in the other one, so far as I understand now.

25,011. Do they learn the Apostle's Creed there?—No, I do not think they do at present.

25,012. Or the church catechism?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

25,013. These are questions put in by Mr Vincent: "Do you know who sent the report to "the 'Central Glamorgan Gazette'"?—I do not.

25,014. Then Mr. Vincent says: "I see you "have a note book to which you refer; would "you read out the notes you have as to Mr. "Knox's speech, if you have any"?—This is my note: "On the 26th of January last a "ploughing match was held on a farm held by "my late father, now in the occupation of my "sister. At the dinner at that ploughing match "Mr. E. Knox, the present agent of the Margam "estate, stated in replying to the toast of his "health as chairman of the Margam ploughing "match dinner, that a Royal Commission on "Land had been appointed; condemning the "action of the South Wales Liberal Federation "which had met at Swansea a few days pre-"viously, urging upon the farmers the necessity "of appointing delegates to give evidence before "the Commission; and he hoped that the farmers "of Margam would not appoint such delegates "for a political purpose." After that statement 30,000 horse power would not get any of the farmers to give any information before them whatever.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,015. Those last words are very important, I think; it was not quite what you said in your evidence. You say he advised them not to give any evidence at all. According to your note Mr. Knox says "for any political purpose," which is a somewhat different thing?—I believe the land question is entirely political.

Lord Kenyon.

25,016. Not the Land Commission, I trust?—The land question.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I do not know; in so far as we have power to recommend an alteration in the law, there is a political purpose.

Lord Kenyon.

You may put that interpretation upon it, but I am putting it so far as regards one political party against another party.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,017. The word "party" did not occur in the extract made by Mr. Howell?—That is not the question at all as to one political party.

Mr. Seebohm.

I think the note and Mr. Knox's statement are not inconsistent.

Lord Kenyon.

It is a great pity there is no report of the speech.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,018. Did you understand him to treat the appointment of the Commission entirely as a political matter?—Yes.

25,019. Then to advise the tenants not to come forward before a Commission in the way he did, would mean their not coming at all?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

25,020. This is a question by Mr. T. J. Hughes: "Had the reporter left the room when "Mr. Knox delivered his speech at the Margam "meeting?"—I believe not.

25,021. You believe he was there?—Yes.

25,022. Is there a full report of it in any paper?—There is a report of the meeting in the paper.

25,023. Was there a full report, because the report put in this morning, Mr. Knox said was not a good report?—It was not verbatim.

25,024. Was there a better one?—I believe there was a more extensive one.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,025. In the "Central Gazette," the anonymous letter says, that Mr. Knox hoped the farmers of Margam would not appoint any committee to give evidence before the Commission. Would that represent accurately what you understood him to mean?—Yes.

25,026. Do you think other people understood him to say that?—They spoke about it then and there to me that there was a damper, and they could not go any further.

25,027. He added the word "political"; did you feel that that made any difference? Did you regard it as making any difference?—Not at all.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,028. Did you say Mr. Knox spoke to you personally?—No, I did not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,029. As I understood Mr. Knox's statement, what he said to the tenants was. "Form "what committees you like amongst yourselves, "but I warn you against joining committees of "a political kind." That is the effect it left on my mind?—The effect it carried at that meeting was for them to keep away, and not give any sort of evidence. Whatever was meant, I know the effect.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

25,030. According to what he said to-day he definitely advised them to combine amongst themselves to give evidence?—But that was not at that time.

Lord Kenyon.

25,031. As soon as Mr. Knox found that was the impression, he modified it?—Yes. Whatever word he might speak now, it would have no effect in turning the mind of the public to an inkling to give evidence.

25,032. After Mr. Knox had found out the impression upon the public, do you think he was sorry for it, and then told them to come and give evidence?—I cannot say that.

25,033. Has he not told them recently to come and give evidence?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,034. Do you know whether there was any one present at the dinner, independent of anyone like yourself, who would be able to substantiate what you say with regard to the effect of Mr. Knox's speech?—Yes, I believe there was.

25,035. And would be able to substantiate what you say?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

25,036. I think I had better proceed with Mr. Vincent's questions: "You will admit, I "suppose, that the report was greatly con-"densed"?—Yes.

25,037. "Do you know who the reporter was"?—The reporters of the "Gazette" and the "Chronicle" were there.

25,038. Where was the more extended report?—I believe it was in the "Gazette."

25,039. "Do you find in your notes a single "reference to not giving evidence as such;" not giving evidence before the Commission, I suppose he means?—I do not understand what he means.

25,040. What is meant is this, I suppose, that the tenants should not give evidence. Do you find any reference to that in your notes?—No.

25,041. These are questions by Mr. Vincent: "Do you know that the tenant of Longland "was under a covenant to repair buildings?"—No.

25,042. He was not?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,043. I thought you said it was so. Had not your father to do the repairs?—That farm belonged to my father from the time of my grandfather, and my father went to live with my grandfather, who had only one child, and so it dropped down from family to family.

25,044. Had he not to do some repairs on the farm?—No, only so far as Mr Talbot at that time thought that the farmers were getting their land cheap enough, and that they ought to do it themselves. They asked many times for repairs at the estate office, and they were refused.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,045. There is no lease?—There is no lease, and they could not afford to build it themselves, inasmuch as the tenant farmers' sons, of whom I was one, had worked all our lifetime for nothing.

25,046. Is the present tenant under any covenant to repair?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

25,047. "Did not Mr. Talbot reduce all rents "by 10 per cent. in order that the tenants might "repair"?—When my father died, Mr. Talbot raised the rent 16*l.* a year to my blind mother, she was blind at the time of my father's death, and that was 12 years ago.

25,048. "You have complained that the tenant "cannot obtain compensation for drainage. Do "you know that according to the Act of 1883, "drainage is an improvement, for which it is "only necessary to give notice to the landlord "to obtain compensation"?—Yes. I know it is necessary to give notice to the landlord before you can drain.

25,049. You need not require consent, you need only give notice?—I took it the other way.

25,050 That is wrong; notice alone is necessary. You were not aware of that?—No.

25,051. "Do you assert that on the common "to which you refer the true commoners (i.e., "the people having legal rights), have been "deprived of rights, or that people who would "like to have the rights, do not have them"?—I know it.

25,052. Which—that the commoners who have legal rights have been deprived of them?—The commoners who had rights and used to send their cattle and things were prevented from doing it, and even after, I suppose, they kept them there, they received notice to leave.

25,053. As to the second part of the question, people who would like to have rights do not have them?—No, they do not.

25,054. "Was not the school to which you "refer, built entirely by Mr. Talbot, and at his "expense"?—No, it was built by the workmen of the Bryndu Colliery, and paid for. My brother-in-law was the schoolmaster at the time.

25,055. "Is Miss Talbot under any obligation "to have a committee at all. Is it not simply "her school"?—It is her building.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,056. If she had no committee would she have a government grant?—I suppose she would, if she managed the school herself.

Lord Kenyon.

25,057. This is a question by Mr. Knox: "Did the school board pass a resolution that "they did not wish for a board school in that "district"?—In what district? The school is within the school board district already. See 25,1 25,058. Did they pass a resolution that they did not wish for a board school?—No, they did not.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,059. Did the school board pass a resolution that they did not wish to have a school of their own in that part of their district?—No, they did not. There is not such a resolution in the minutes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,060. By section 19 of the Act of 1870, the school board would have power, if it is elected, without any requisition from the Educational Department to erect a board school adjoining this voluntary school. The only penalty is this, that if it is unnecessary they would not get the grant, and if it is contrary to the wishes of the majority of the ratepayers, and the auditor objected, the members of the school board might find themselves in a somewhat awkward situation?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

25,061. There is another question by Mr. Knox: "Is it not a fact that the schoolmaster "at Miss Talbot's school at Kenfig Hill is a "Nonconformist"?—Yes, and the schoolmaster at the board school is a churchman.

25,062. There is another question by Mr. T. J. Hughes: "Does Miss Talbot own all the land "there at Kenfig Hill"?—Yes.

25,063. Another question by Mr. Knox: "Is "not this a blank copy of Miss Talbot's lease, "the last clause of which is: 'The tenant to "'keep all buildings, fences, gates, and bars in "'good order and repair, and so deliver up the "'same when the tenancy ends"?—I should like to hear the present agreement to the tenants read in this court—I mean the present agreement between the landlord and tenant on the Margam estate.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 25,152.

Colonel J. P. Turbervill called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

25,064. Are you Col. Turbervill, of Ewenny Priory, Bridgend?—Yes.

25,065. Are you an owner of land and a justice of the peace?—Yes.

25,066. What is the acreage of your estate?—A little over 3,000 acres. I should like to mention, to begin with, that I have only been two years on the estate, and that I have made no changes since the time of my late brother, so that any remarks of mine as to the management of the estate will apply to him.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

25,067. Have you anything to say about squatters?—There are only one or two on the estate, and we have never had any trouble with them.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

25,068. What do you say about the management?—All tenants can converse with the landlord. In most cases there is a difference in religion and politics; on my estate this does not prevent thoroughly good feeling. I may as well say, I cannot tell which of my tenants are Nonconformists and which are Churchmen. I absolutely do not know.

25,069. Can you speak Welsh?—No, unfortunately not. I wish I could.

25,070. The date of entry is Lady Day, I suppose?—Yes, the date of entry is Lady Day.

25,071. Are the farms let from year to year?—Yes, the farms are let from year to year. I have only granted one lease for 21 years; they are verbal in many cases.

25,072. Is there any demand for leases?—None whatever. I should mention with reference to that, that my late brother some years ago at the tithe dinner, offered leases all round to anyone who wished to accept them, but not a single tenant accepted the offer, they all preferred a year-to-year tenancy.

25,073. What was the reason of that?—So far as I could judge, they thought it would suit them best, that in a hard time they would get deductions, and they would never be badly treated.

25,074. Are there any changes of tenancy?—All changes on this estate have resulted from death, except two which have taken place from intemperance. The farms generally remain in the same family for generations.

25,075. You know of no cases of hardship?—No, I know of no case of hardship.

25,076. Compensation is given?—Yes. I have never known a case of damage in timber cutting.

25,077. Do you give a copy of the agreement to the tenant?—I happen to have in my pocket a lease that I have just given, and if the Commission would like to see it I can hand it in. I might mention it is the only lease that has been given for years on the estate. It is a small place, which the man wanted to improve.

25,078. The rents are usually fixed, you say, on a field valuation?—Well, not invariably, because in some places we have not given a field valuation. Where it exists they are based on it.

25,079. Are they uniform?—Yes, as uniform as possible.

25,080. As to the rents of the smaller tenants?—They are not higher than the larger ones; they are much the same. The question I see is "small and large farms." I thought I might add to the information by making a short list of the acreage. Of farms of 200 acres or over I have got three; of over 100 acres and less than 200 acres, eight; of 50 acres and over, seven; and six of under 50 acres. This is how the rents run: I have got only three farms of over 200*l.* a year; nine farms of over 100*l.*, six farms over 50*l.*, and 11 farms under 50*l.* I have not counted cases where a man has a mill and a few fields; I have not entered those at all.

25,081. With regard to the rent of lowland farms?—I have put down in my statement that the rent of lowland farms is from 25*s.* to 30*s.* per acre; hill land 10*s.* to 15*s.*, but it varies so very much. The highest rent of the hill farms is at the rate of 1*l.* 10*s.* per acre, and the lowest at the rate of 1*s.* an acre, so that they vary immensely. That at 1*s.* an acre is wild, rough land, with minerals underneath.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

25,082. As to the right of pasturage?—It does not exist very much; where it does it has not been counted.

25,083. There are no services?—No services, and the rents are, as a rule, fixed by a field valuation.

25,084. Not let to the highest bidder, I suppose?—No. As a rule it is let to the relations of the last occupier. There have been no cases in my own time, but in my brother's lifetime, I know it was given to the widows or the sons of the deceased men.

25,085. Are you desirous of getting tenants with capital?—Yes, with sufficient capital. We should stretch a point in the case of a man whose father and grandfather had been before him in the farm, but of course we wish to get capital.

25,086. As to arbitration?—I have never known a case.

25,087. Then with regard to variation in the rent?—I cannot speak positively. I do not think rents have been raised in the last 50 years, except in one single case which I raised myself. My brother had let the farm a short time before his death for 110*l.* to a man who himself had offered 115*l.*, and another tenant on the estate had offered 127*l.* 10*s.*, and I raised it from 110*l.* to 120*l.* That is a solitary case, and I thought it best to mention it.

25,088. Did the tenant object?—He made no objection; he consented. Of course he did not like it, but I do not think he looked upon it as more than he could fairly come up to.

25,089. Have you paid any of the local rates?—I have paid half of the local rates for many years, and since 1885 the whole of the tithe, which since the new Act has passed, has not been added to the rent, so that practically they get the tithe and half the rates. But I have always made them understand, that that is not an absolute right, and that if times improved very much, I should reserve to myself, the right of altering it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,090. Is that with respect to the local rates?—That is with respect to the local rates and tithes. There is a statement a little later where it is more in detail, I think.

Lord Kenyon.

25,091. You would give notice of abatement?—Yes, if I wanted to alter any abatement I should give notice. It has not been done. With regard to the fluctuations in prices, I do not speak with much authority, because I have only so lately come into the place, but lately there have been lower prices for produce, higher prices for labour, set purpose to do less work, and higher local rates. With reference to higher local rates I may say this was one of the last parts of Wales where we had the Turnpike Act, and now rates have been increased to that extent, I think myself very unfairly, but I do not know that my opinion is required upon that.

25,092. The rent is paid five or six months after it is due?—Yes, five or six months after it is due.

25,093. How about the preferential claim?—I do not think I quite understand the question. Do you mean a claim for rent in case of bankruptcy?

25,094. It means that the landlord has got the first claim when a tenant fails.—Well, I have never had a case of a tenant failing, so that practically I cannot speak to it.

25,095. With regard to the rates and taxes?—The occupier pays the land tax, the owner pays tithes since 1885, chief rent, and half the local rates. The size of the farms I have already mentioned.

25,096. What is the average size?—The average size of farms is about 150 acres, but that is roughly. I think it is rather less.

25,097. And about consolidation?—I see that you have got a note of one case of consolidation, but my agent must have told me that. I do not think I know the particulars of it. I think, though, I can remember one case of consolidation; it was only a small farm of some few fields; it was a very small matter. Cultivation is mixed, but it is mostly grass land.

25,098. As to labourers?—The farmers tell me that there is a scarcity of labourers, and that the fences are not so well kept as formerly. I do not know of any land going out of cultivation, or any that is insufficiently cultivated; that is to say, I do not mean it is cultivated in the best possible way, but fairly cultivated. Then improvements; that goes more fully, I think, to specific improvements. The improvements in drainage, &c., buildings, and tanks, are made by the landlords. The fences, gates, and posts are by the landlord, but are kept in repair by the tenant; manures and seeds are by the tenant. In buildings, the tenant usually does haulage, and the landlord renewals and repairs without charge on outlay. The Glamorgan custom prevails generally, and is preferred by tenants. I may mention with reference to that, that when the Agricultural Holdings Act came out, my late brother at his rent dinner asked the whole of the tenants present, whether they would sooner go on upon the old custom of the county, or whether they would avail themselves of the Act, and they preferred the custom of the county. But you see we have only verbal agreements, so that really we might be bound by either. Farmers seldom apply for the landlord's written consent for improvements. I do not know of a case.

25,099. Do you know of any case where they fail to obtain consent?—No, but there are so few cases where a farm becomes vacant, really. I know of no instances of compensation for general improvements.

25,100. Now I will pass on to game preserving?—There is game preserving to a moderate extent; I am speaking simply of my own estate; I am not speaking of the others. Only a few of the tenants avail themselves of the Ground Game Act.

25,101. Why is that, do you suppose?—Some of them have, I think, a kind of feeling for sport; they are not troubled by too much game, and they get a few rabbits when the shooting is going on, and they do not trouble about it. Some of the smaller ones avail themselves of it, I think; the larger ones think it hardly worth their while.

25,102. It is not out of fear of you, I suppose?—I should trust not. There are a good many of my tenants here, and you will have an opportunity of asking them questions, I should imagine. The next question is as to damage. There is no damage by game, and compensation is not asked for. Tenants are not expected to beat, but they come out for the fun of the thing. I have never asked a tenant in my life to beat, and I do not think my brother has; they generally consider it rather a favour to come, and they have a day out, and they seem to enjoy it.

25,103. As to the game preserving, do you consider that it improves the relations between landlord and tenant?—I should say that it improves the relations when it is done strictly in moderation; I do not think in moderation it hurts the relations, but improves them—they shoot over the land, and the landlord sees his tenants, and they go over with him.

25,104. It gives a landlord an opportunity of meeting his tenants; is that it?—Yes, and very often they get a few rabbits, and so on. I have been asked constantly by a farmer to go out to his farm, if I have omitted to do so.

25,105. How about the law of trespass?—I think that is capable of large improvement, but there are many more experienced than myself, who can give you evidence about that.

25,106. Is there any attention given to fruit culture?—Scarcely any.

25,107. The county council have started some dairy classes?—Yes, they had a dairy class here last spring.

25,108. Do you know of any combination or co-operation?—No, I know of nothing of the sort.

25,109. What do you consider the general condition of the farmers? Do they work hard?—Undoubtedly they are feeling the bad times now, but I do not not think nearly so much as the large farmers in many parts of England. The farmers are a very hard working lot, and I think they live hard and are accustomed to it. I do not think really they are suffering very much.

25,110. What are the average wages?—The wages are from 15*s.* to 18*s.*; nothing found, as a rule. In my own case, I provide cottages for my own farm labourers, but I am speaking here of the labourers generally on the estate.

25,111. Do you hold the cottages on the farms direct yourself?—No. It is simply on my own home farm and round the estate that I own the cottages. Allotments are supplied to all labourers who want them. That applies to my own labourers, not to the farm labourers.

25,112. Are the allotments for tillage?—No, these are all spade work. They have small plots, and grow potatoes and vegetables and things of that sort.

25,113. Do they avail themselves of that?—Yes, nearly all of them. Only in my own place the cottages are held from me. I do not know about the cottages on the farms—how they arrange them.

25,114. The general relations are friendly; is that so?—I think they are very friendly indeed. I should like to say a word now with reference to this question of having told tenants that they could give evidence before this Commission, because one of the witnesses—I am not in the least blaming him, but I mean as a matter of fact—Mr. T. J. Hughes said he wished all the landlords had followed the example of Mr. Nicholl, I think it was. I thought the subject over very much, but I came to the conclusion it would be very much better neither to write nor to say anything about it. A chance phrase may be misconstrued, and we have seen here how often a thing is misunderstood, and I thought it much better to leave it entirely to them to come forward or leave it alone as they liked. I said nothing whatever about it, nor wrote anything about it, in the old days I should not have thought it necessary to tell my tenants that they were free to vote as they liked at the ballot, and I did not think it necessary to tell them that they were free to come here. I thought they knew me well enough, to know that they could do as they liked, and I think that is the way in which it was taken. I have spent 10 per cent. of the rental on repairs and improvements in the last 12 years.

25,115. There has been no interest charged?—No interest charged.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,116. I see you say in your statement, that the owners paid half the local rates for many years. I suppose that is taken into consideration, in fixing the rent?—No, not precisely, because the rents have not varied, and that was introduced when the hard times came, instead of making a remission.

25,117. Could you tell me when that was first introduced?—I do not think I can tell you; it was in my brother's time.

25,118. When it first came into operation, it would operate then in the nature of a reduction of the rent?—Yes, precisely.

25,119. It would have that effect?—Precisely.

25,120. The custom of the county is in operation on your estate, I suppose?—Yes.

25,121. Can you tell us whether that is looked upon as satisfactory?—I am really a landlord of such new standing that I cannot say much, but so far as I know and have heard, it is considered most satisfactory. My tenants all prefer it to anything else.

25,122. I think you told us that there has been little arbitration?—There has been none; I have known of no cases.

25,123. Have you heard any complaints as to the expense of arbitration?—I have not, because we have had no arbitration. It has not come before me in any shape. I quite agree with Mr. Hughes that the expenses ought to be reduced as much as possible, if I am asked for an opinion upon the point.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Yes, solicitors take good care to get a good share of it.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,124. Just one word about the tithe. I think you say that you pay the tithes?—Yes, my late brother did. I myself have only been two years in possession.

25,125. That also operated as a reduction of rent?—No doubt.

25,126. So that taking the two together, the tithe and the half rates, the reduction on your estate has been considerable?—Yes.

25,127. Could you say at all what the percentage would be?—I presume it would be something between 15 and 20 per cent., but I am not prepared to state more exactly. Of course, the rates vary from year to year.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,128. You say that there are no cases of hardship on your estate, Col. Turbervill?—Yes.

25,129. Have you had any applications for reduction in the rent?—No. You must remember that I myself have only been two years in the estate, but I have had no applications for reductions. At my last rent dinner, when talking it over with the farmers, they have not suggested that they thought it necessary. They said they had been so liberally dealt with in fairly good times, that they could stand the bad times. No doubt if times become very much worse, I shall be asked for reductions, but up to this present time, I have not been.

25,130. As a matter of principle, are you in favour of the landlord paying half the rates, just the same as they do in Scotland?—I do not know the Scotch custom that you refer to, I think it is a convenient way of making a reduction; it interests the landlord in the rate of the parish. If a landlord has to make a reduction, I think that paying half the rate is a good way of doing it.

25,131. Yes, but independently of any reduction you know when a farmer takes a farm, he takes the rates generally into calculation when he is making his bid?—No doubt.

25,132. And rates have a tendency to increase, and of course the increase, unless there is an arrangement made with the landlord to the contrary, falls on the shoulders of the tenant?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

25,133. Do you not think as a matter of justice, that the landlord should pay half the additional burden?—I should say, that as the farmers return the men to the county council and other places, who fix the rates and are responsible for their rising, it is fairer always that they should bear the burthen. If they think the rates are rising unduly, they ought to turn out their members from the county council. That is my view of it.

25,134. Of course the county council do spend part of the rates, but the board of guardians are not representative in the sense ——?—The board of guardians in this county certainly are three-fourths farmers, and they, I should imagine, would keep a sharp eye on the rates. At all events, 30 of my farmers would have votes, as against my one vote regarding it.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,135. Is it customary to receive offers from outsiders for farms, when the rent is raised and when farms are to let?—As a rule on my estate it would not be generally known that a farm was vacant; generally speaking, it would only become vacant through death, and then it would be understood that the next man would have it. But I may just mention a case, which happened since I came into the property; one farm became vacant, because the tenant of that farm wished to take another farm of mine, which had become vacant through the death of his sister. Then I had two applications from men on the spot, who happened to know of it, and I had none from any one at a distance. That is the only case I can tell you of.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,136. I see that in the lease which you have been good enough to put in, Col. Turbervill, the tenant covenants to pay the tithe rentcharge?—Yes, because I was not going to bind myself by a lease to do it.

25,137. So that your answer only applies to the case of the tenants from year to year?—No, pardon me, I told the man personally at the time, simply trusting to my word that I should make the same reduction in his case, as I did in the case of the men who did not hold leases, but I would not bind myself in the lease to do it. Do you follow me?

25,138. I quite follow you, but there is the covenant?—Oh, there is the covenant, and that is what I meant the covenant to be, that I would not make the abatement a permanent one.

25,139. Do you know anything about the actual circumstances of your tenants, apart from anything that they may say to you in reference to reduction for rent? Of course, when a tenant comes under bad circumstances, he may possibly tell a more gloomy tale than the facts warrant. What is your opinion as to the actual state of the case?—I think that they are suffering from the low prices of stock, and to a certain extent, from bad weather which we have had lately, but I do not think it is so serious as to have ruined any of them. The best proof is, that I do not know of a single case in which the rent has not been paid up to date, with the exception of a few pounds, at the last rent audit in the case of one particular tenant, a widow, who asked for time for a small portion of her rent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

25,140. You heard Mr. Hughes' evidence with regard to this district, did you not?—Yes.

25,141. Do you agree substantially with what he said, in reference to the condition of the farming business?—I think that Mr. Hughes put it perhaps a little too strongly, but I am not at all prepared to deny that the farmers are meeting with bad times. Still I think it is less so than in many places, because they are men who work themselves, and have been in the habit of working; they do not employ labour to the extent that the great farmers in England do, and it is also not a wheat-growing country. They have not suffered as they have in other parts. Before I leave, if you would allow me, I should like to say a few words as to the sanitary question that Dr. Wyndham Randall brought forward. I think it is only fair to Dr. Randall to say, that although I am a member of the sanitary authority, and have been for some years, he is perfectly right in saying that it is not a satisfactory board to deal with sanitary affairs. I should say, that all that he said upon that point I must entirely agree with.

Lord Kenyon.

25,142. Do you think the sanitary condition of the farmhouses is very bad?—Well, I do not know how it would compare with other places, but I think if one spoke perfectly honestly and fairly, the truth is that three-fourths of the members of the sanitary authority and board of guardians really look upon the whole thing as a doctor's fad, and they cannot be expected to carry out very keenly things they do not believe in. I think that is the whole fact of the case, and also I think that if a sanitary inspector were ever so inefficient, if he were popular among the farmers and did not worry them, that they would keep him on to the end of his days as a sanitary inspector. I do not think it is a body, from whom you can fairly expect to get sanitary reform.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD T. DAVID called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

25,143. Are you the clerk to the school board?—Yes, my Lord.

25,144. And you have the minute book of the school board containing the minutes?—I have.

25,145. Would you read the resolution referring to the school at Kenfig Hill?—At a special meeting held on the 28th March 1893 of the Pyle, Kenfig, and Upper Tythegston School Board, the Rev. Thos. Howell proposed: "That "inasmuch as the public meeting held last night, "passed a resolution confirming their previous "resolution, application be made to the Education Department for power to build new "schools at Kenfig Hill. Seconded by Rev. "Dan. Williams. Mr. W. J. David moved an "amendment, that as Miss Talbot was prepared "to make such alterations and additions as may "be necessary to the present schools at Kenfig "Hill, and to carry on the present schools as "voluntary schools in the district, that the "question of building new schools be not at "present entertained by the board. Seconded "by Mr. Rees Thomas. Amendment carried. "Voted for the amendment, Mr. R. McEwen, "Mr. W. J. David, Mr. Rees Thomas. Against "the amendment, Rev. T. Howell and Rev. Dan. "Williams."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,146. What was the public meeting referred to?—The public meeting was held on the 21st February, with reference to a request to Miss Talbot to hand over the management of the Bryndu schools to the Pyle School Board.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

25,147. It was not a meeting held in pursuance of the Education Act, 1870. It was an ordinary public meeting on a matter of public interest?—It was an ordinary public meeting held at the schoolroom.

25,148. This is a very guarded amendment that was carried. Mr. Howell denied, as I understand it, that a resolution had ever been passed saying that the school board would not build an additional school-house?—I understood that to be his answer.

25,149. His answer seems to be substantially right. This is only an amendment saying that if Miss Talbot would do something, the question of building a new school will not be at present entertained at all?—That is so.

25,150. It is very nearly the same thing?—I understood the question to be, whether the board did not pass a resolution that Miss Talbot be not asked to hand the school over to the board.

25,151. That certainly was not it?—You will find a copy of the resolution. It was passed at a public meeting and is in the minutes of the previous meeting of the School Board.

The witness withdrew.

The Reverend THOMAS HOWELL recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

25,152. Do you know that resolution?—Yes.

25,153. And the amendment?—Yes.

25,154. Mr. David moved the amendment, which was as follows:—"That as Miss Talbot "was prepared to make such alterations and "additions as may be necessary to the present "schools at Kenfig Hill, and to carry on the "present schools as voluntary schools in the "district, that the question of building new "schools be not at present entertained by the "Board"?—Yes.

25,155. That does not quite tally with this?—No. There was no resolution at all; only the rejection of the resolution that I proposed before the meeting.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,156. You mean there was no amendment?—No amendment at all.

25,157. At the following meeting when the minutes were read did you not raise an objection to the form?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

25,158. Was that carried?—I do not recollect that.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,159. Do you mean that the minute does not state the fact correctly?—I mean that the minute does not state it rightly whatever.

Lord Kenyon.

25,160. "The minutes of the last meeting "were read and confirmed" I see is the next entry. The motion was that application was to be made to build the schools, which was rejected?—Yes, rejected.

25,161. And instead of that, an amendment was passed that the question be not entertained for the present?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,162. I understand you to deny the passing of the amendment. Is that what you mean?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

25,163. But the amendment is put here as carried—voted for the amendment three gentlemen, and voted against it two?—That was the objection of mine.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

25,164. Then they put the amendment first, I suppose, and carried the amendment, and then the resolution was not put afterwards, was it?—That is so.

Lord Kenyon.

That is, I suppose, the usual course?

Mr. Richard Jones.

Perhaps there was no amendment.

Lord Kenyon.

25,165. It is the amendment which is down there?—The resolution was not put at all, Mr. Jones.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,166. It was simply that there were three negatives against two affirmatives?—It was only negatived, and the resolution was not put as a resolution before the meeting.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,167. You mean that the amendment was put as against the original resolution?—Yes.

25,168. And the amendment as against the original resolution was carried?—Yes, but it was not put as a resolution before the meeting at all.

Lord Kenyon.

25,169. Your point, I take it, is that the resolution was not put before the meeting?—It was not.

25,170. That was a little irregularity on the part of the chairman, I take it, in the conduct of his business. That is all. Of course it would have been merely a matter of form, I suppose? The resolution would have been lost, and the putting of the resolution would have been merely a matter of form, after the passing of that amendment?—I do not know, because we believe that there was pressure brought to bear on that question.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Isaiah Verity called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See generally 25,366–70, 27,251–436.

25,171. You wish to give evidence with regard to some common lands?—Yes, with regard to some common lands. It is common land of the Duchy of Lancaster, situate in the parish of St. Bride's Major. Of course, there are other common lands in other places, but I am speaking of common lands in St. Bride's Major. According to a survey made in the year 1637, and sanctioned by Parliament in the year 1650, the common lands of St. Bride's Major belonging to the Duchy of Lancaster were given to the copyholders and tenants of the Duchy for turbage. The reputed area of the common at the time of the survey, was something like 2,000 acres. It comprised the following downs:—Old Castle Down, Fleming Down, Ogmore's Down, Lady Down, North Down, Butler's Down, Downraven, and Seaton, or, I believe the proper name is Sea Down, and a strip of land called the Kemney or Camway to Wain Slade, and then, including that, there was Rawlings' Wood and King's Wood. This was governed, or, rather, administered by a leet court to be held yearly at the Ogmore Castle, and there was an exchequer room there, where all manor rents and fines were to be presented, and only there. All grievances and encroachments were reported at the leet courts by a tenant of the Duchy. Bailiffs were appointed. The chief rent of the downs or common lands for the tenants was 6*s.* 8*d.*, to be paid yearly by the commoners, for the right of turbage. My recollection of the common goes as far back as 53 years ago, but I will speak now of 45 years ago. 45 years ago, there were on that common, at least, depasturing sheep no less than 30 commoners, who may be designated as cottagers, labourers, and petty draftsmen of the village.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,172. In addition to the tenants?—I am not speaking of the tenants who hold land—only cottagers—and it is supposed that the cottagers or, as they are commonly called, cottrelie there, and nativi, exercised that right before undisturbed so far as I can learn from old people there. Farmers did not make any incursions whatever, upon the downs. If they did, it was very small, and they were quite in sympathy with the poor people or labourers. About 30 years ago the farmers, who were commonly called brinkers, found that the downs were of great value to them, and that they relieved their lands to a very great extent, in fact from the beginning of the year, that is, from April until the autumn. Consequently, by relieving their land, they were able to grow a great deal of roots and cereals of all kinds, to make provision for their flocks, which they turned out in the summer time. The farmers, at the present time, turn out sufficient for the whole capacity of the down, and they are practically monopolising it. When they first began, of course they edged out the little cottagers and the labourers one by one, so that they had to dispose of their flocks. 45 years ago, when there were 32 commoners, some of them kept something like about 30, and some of them 60, and some 80 and 100 up to 150 sheep on the common.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,173. Which common are you speaking of now?—Of the commons which I have mentioned.

25,174. On the whole of the commons?—On the Ogmore's Down. The Ogmore's Down at the present time comprises, as I say, 1,000 acres. That is, there is Oldcastle Down, Fleming Down, Ogmore's Down, part of the Kemney, and all the rest have vanished; that is, the Lady Down, North Down, Butlers Down, Southen Down, Downraven, and a portion of Sea Down or Seaton, as it is called.

Lord Kenyon.

25,175. They have been enclosed, have they not?—I suppose so. After the farmers commenced to take over the Down, the small cottagers, of course had to go away, and now at the present time there only remain two, and they are only of very recent creation, and one has got 15 and the other 22 sheep on the Down. They are now on Old Castle Down; the two little flocks that I have mentioned, and the other parts of the Down are all allotted out to the different farmers around, and it is impossible for the cottagers to keep anything there; they drive them off; they persecute and drive them from one flock to the other. At one time—I am speaking of 45 years ago—Ogmore was a flourishing little place, because the inhabitants of the place had the right of common and they kept so many sheep there, and they did very well. Some of them made as much as 5*l.*, 10*l.*, 15*l.*, and 20*l.* a year by the shear of wool. Besides that, they had the rights of angling and fishing in the Ogmore, and in a part of the estuary—rod and line fishing—that was the upper part of the river and the lower part of the estuary they used their nets in. At that time the River Ogmore was teeming with fish, and now you can hardly find any in it. The monopoly of the Down has had a very bad effect on the population in the place; it has diminished the population of the place to a very great extent, especially as regards Ogmore and St. Bride's Major.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,176. But your figures are St. Bride's Major only?—Ogmore is in St. Bride's Major and so is Southen Down.

25,177. Do your figures cover the whole of Ogmore; for instance, you said 45 years ago there were 30 commoners?—30 commoners would include Ogmore and St. Bride's and Southen Down as well. That is the whole of the common.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,178. What has become of the cottagers who used to turn out their flocks there?—I do not know what has become of them. A great many of the houses have gone.

25,179. I was going to the question of the houses directly. Are the commoners in existence still?—No, they are a great many of them dead.

25,180. What has become of the cottages?—A great many of them have fallen into decay.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

25,181. Are the two that remain living in their own freehold houses?—A few of them; there are not many now. There was a survey made in 1637, and I presume, that will show how many there were then. I do not know whether you have a copy of the survey of the rent-roll here.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,182. It is here?—Yes, you will see it from that. I presume they all owned cottages at that time; they were all tenants and they were owners of their cottages.

25,183. Copyholders?—Yes, copyholders—customary tenants.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,184. Now only two remain?—Only a few. I was speaking of the two, who pasture sheep on the Down at the present time.

25,185. A few remain, and of those few only two turn out their sheep on the common?—Yes.

25,186. They do that, as a matter of ancient right?—Of course it is an ancient right. It is more an experiment now than anything else, to see what will become of them.

Lord Kenyon.

25,187. Have you anything more to say?—I have nothing more, except as to what the copyholders there propose, and those who are entitled to pasture on the common. What they propose is a scheme for developing the Down.

25,188. What is their scheme?—That the portion of the Common, that can be brought into cultivation by the least possible expense—that is what we call the table land of it—should be looked after. There is a great quantity of what we call the hill slopes there, and sand hills, which are of very, very little use. They must remain common land.

25,189. Is this on the sea?—A portion of it is on the seaside. The proposal is, that it should be at the least possible expense, made into small holdings from one to ten acres each, the whole administration to be placed in the hands of a duly constituted authority, elected by the ratepayers, such as a parish council, having power to acquire lands for such purposes, and also to obtain the necessary funds by borrowing, to develop such open lands into small holdings, priority of letting to be given to natives before strangers. The rights of fishing in the Ogmore and hawking were reserved by the Crown, and they are reserved to the present day. The rights of shooting on the Ogmore Down are now let by the Crown. I think there is a term now of three years.

25,190. Is there any grievance as to that?—Well, in former years, that is, we must say, in the last 10 or 15 years, the rabbits have been very destructive there. In fact, they have taken pretty well to one third of the common, and you know what poisonous things rabbits are, when once they get on ground; there is no good in them afterwards, and it is no good to the ground either.

25,191. Did they start on the sea-shore originally. Is there any sand?—So far as I can understand from a man who is now 80 years of age, he tells me that the first time he remembers it there were very few rabbits, but they came over at one time from the other side during a great frost, and they came across the river, and ever since then, they have remained there, more or less.

25,192. You mean from the Merthyr Mawr?—From the Merthyr Mawr.

25,193. Is that all your evidence-in-chief?—Yes, that is all.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,194. You were kind enough to put in as evidence on this point, a survey of the year 1637?—Yes.

25,195. The freehold belongs to the Duchy of Lancaster?—It does.

25,196. Then in 1637, according to this survey which you have put in, I find that one may summarise it to this extent, that the demesne land of the manor had been let on a long lease to 19 tenants, the lease expiring 19 years after the date of this?—Yes.

25,197. And the rental seems to be 1*s.* an acre. Then in addition to that, there were 46 free tenants who held by military service according to this survey, which service was very soon after, as we know, abolished by Act of Parliament. Then there were 134 customary tenants called nativi, who occupied small holdings with an average rent of 5*s.* each, which was in commutation of all services which are stated here at great length of all kinds, ploughing and reaping, the ordinary customary services belonging to a very long time ago. They were all commuted at this date, and the small rents were paid instead. Then there were 131 cottarelli, or cottiers, holding no doubt very little land with their cottages, and only paying rents of 1*d.* to 4*d.* as a rule. So that there were over 300 tenants of this manor of Ogmore?—Yes.

25,198. Do I understand that the evidence that you gave, includes the whole of the same area that this survey includes?—There is Llangeinor in that as well. You will see St. Bride's Major and St. Bride's Minor. You will see the cottagers of St. Bride's Major, North Downs, and Seaton or Sea Down and Monks' Hill, which is now called Craig-yr-eos and Slôn, and you will see also Southen Down.

25,199. So that your evidence only extends to half of this manor, does it not?—I am sure I do not know.

25,200. We cannot get exactly at the figures?—Of course it would not be fair to say that the 300 tenants were tenants upon that part you have mentioned?—I do not reckon those in Wick, by Nash, they do not belong to it.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

25,201. So that we clearly understand that the evidence you give, only applies to a part?—To a part of it; that is the portion that is in St. Bride's Major.

25,202. Then, I understand, that 45 years ago in this part, which contained about 1,000 acres of common land——?—It is 1,000 acres according to the last survey.

25,203. Not this old survey?—No; it is 2,000 acres, according to that.

25,204. That is in the whole of Ogmore?—That is in the whole of Ogmore.

25,205. The part with regard to which you are giving evidence only contains 1,000 acres?—It only contains 1,000 acres.

25,206. Then 45 years ago there were still remaining 30 of the small tenants, whether they were cottagers or copyholders—customary tenants—who did exercise the right of pasture?—Yes.

25,207. Some of them having 30, I think you said, some 60, some 80, and some 150 sheep each?—Yes, but 150 was the highest so far as I could find out.

25,208. Then it was about 30 years ago, as I understand, that the "brinkers," as you call them, that is to say, I suppose the copyholders holding land on the border, exercised their rights?—Yes, at least they are only tenants of the copyholders. The land was let with the rights of Ogmore's Down.

25,209. Then the copyholders who own the land, are not the same people as the people who are now brinkers?—No.

25,210. They are tenants of the copyholders?—Yes.

25,211. Then they have during the last 30 years practically ousted the little commoners?—They have.

25,212. Do you suppose that there was any other population in that part of the Ogmore village or hamlet, besides these 30 cottagers? Would they not be pretty nearly the whole population?—Nearly all of them kept sheep there.

25,213. So that your view is, that any inhabitant almost who takes a cottage there, has a right of common?—Well, they presumed that they had a right; I do not know whether they had a right or not.

25,214. As the successors of the old copyholders who let them; whose tenants they are?—Yes, they presumed they had a right.

25,215. This has been going on for 30 years?—Yes, it has.

25,216. Do you think that a sufficient number have kept up the rights of pasture to maintain the right? Do these farmers set up any legal right to exclude the others?—No, they do not set up any right, but they have such an effectual weapon in having the land in their own hands. As I say, they can nurse their land, and then they turn their flocks to the utmost capacity on the Down, and they graze the whole of it, so that when the autumn comes there is nothing left for the cottagers. If they kept sheep there, they would starve.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

25,217. Then apparently there is no legal question involved?—No, I do not think there is.

25,218. And what you propose is that the inhabitants of this village, having the right of pasturage over this considerable Down, should be, in some way or other, provided with an elective council, who should look after their rights?—Yes.

25,219. Now can you tell me, what has become of the court leets?—As to the court leets, the only legal one that has been held, was held about 16 years ago, I understand, in Ogmore. The others were informal ones, which were held in St. Bride's, which is not right, according to the survey; they are to be held in Ogmore Castle only—it distinctly states that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,220. Ogmore Castle is in ruins?—I know; but there is an exchequer house, and that is in ruins too, and inside this exchequer house there is an old square table like a tomb, which has not been kept up, and they all used to pay their rents there. It is the fault of the Duchy; it is where they get their rights from, and their rents.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,221. It seems that the Castle of Ogmore was let, according to this survey, with 65 acres of land, at the sum of 2*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* You do not know whether the right of holding these courts was in the hands of the tenant of the Castle?—No; there was a person there to look after these courts, and to look after the Castle—a sort of caretaker, I believe.

25,222. Appointed by the Duchy of Lancaster?—Yes, he was supposed to be appointed. There were bailiffs as well to look after it. I forget, but I think there were three bailiffs. You will see the whole of it in the survey.

25,223. That is perfectly true, but what I wanted to ascertain was, whether it was through the fault of the Duchy of Lancaster or of their tenant, that the court leets were not held?—It was the fault of the Duchy of Lancaster.

25,224. In case a copyholder now wants to transfer his holding to another person, how does he do it?—He comes here into Bridgend to do it now. The steward lives at Bridgend now.

25,225. So that the manor court is at Bridgend?—Yes, the steward lives here now.

25,226. Is not a court leet held here now?—No, nothing of the kind. It would not be legal, according to the survey, to hold it here.

25,227. It looks as if the Duchy of Lancaster had wofully neglected their duty to the old place?—Yes. In fact, the whole thing is a perfect wreck, and the boldest man takes the biggest bite.

Mr. Seebohm.

I do not wonder at your bringing the evidence forward if such is the case.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I think we ought to thank you very much for your attendance, especially in view of the trouble you must have gone to, to obtain the old survey which you have produced.

Lord Kenyon.

25,228. The following questions are handed in by Mr. S. H. Stockwood: "Who has allotted "the common amongst the farmers"?—They have allotted it themselves.

25,229. "Have the cottagers ever complained "of the farmers' monopoly to the Duchy"?—They cannot complain, because there is no leet court for them to complain to. That is the only place where they can vent their feelings and their grievances, and you cannot vent a grievance unless you have a place to vent it.

25,230. "Have any cottagers been prevented grazing"?—Yes, they have; they are persecuted in such a manner, that they are obliged to give it up.

25,231. "Have you not yourself applied, to "enclose a portion of the common for your own "use"?—Not to enclose it. I have applied for a portion of the common for a recreation ground for Southendown, and to provide a shelter for visitors who come there, and I can show you the correspondence, if you like.

25,232. "Have not all residents in the parish "of St. Bride's Major, rights of pasturage on "Ogmore Down and adjoining downs"?—The survey will answer that.

25,233. "Do you know how many customary "tenants are now on the court rolls of the "manor"?—No, I do not. I have not been able to attend a court leet. If I attended a court leet, I should be able to know. I know that a great many of them are in arrears.

25,234. "Has any complaint been made at "the court leet for the last 20 years of excessive pasturage by the farmers"?—I cannot tell.

25,235. You said there were no courts?—Yes, no courts. There were informal ones held; one of them was held three years ago for the purpose of enabling the volunteers to use the down for encamping. That was the last, I believe.

25,236. Do you call them informal, because they are not held in Ogmore Castle?—They are not held in the proper place. It says on the survey, that they are to be held there, and nowhere else.

25,237. "Have any cottagers complained to "the steward of the manor, whom they well "know"?—I do not know whether they have complained.

25,238. You do not know of any cases?—I do not know whether they have complained.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,239. Are these courts, which you call informal courts, held within the area of the manor?—They are held within the area of the manor but not at the place appointed. There is an exchequer room there. They used to take the books in there, and then adjourn to the public-house—take the books and open them at the ruin, and then adjourn to the public-house, and hold it there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,240. Is the exchequer room in ruins?—The exchequer room is in ruins.

25,241. Is it open to the air?—Yes, it is.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,242. Have you come across any documents or leases connected with this manor, besides this survey?—There is in existence a map, I believe, and there is a copy of it at the Cardiff Museum now, and at the Record Office there is a copy, showing all the cottages that were built at Southendown, Seaton, and St. Bride's, and the population at the time.

25,243. What is the date of that?—That is at the time when the survey was made, but it is rather of a crude nature, and it is rather impossible or difficult, it not being drawn to any scale, to define the area.

25,244. But it shows the position of the cottages one with regard to the other?—Yes, little dots.

25,245. And the different holdings with regard to each other?—Yes, it does.

25,246. Do you know, whether there are instances of leases for three lives?—Not that I am aware.

25,247. Straight from the Duchy to anyone of these tenants?—I do not. There was a lease of Fleming Down, and that was given to the Earl of Pembroke.

25,248. Was that from the Duchy to the Earl of Pembroke?—From the Duchy, I mean, for 31 years. That was the time when Arnold Butler claimed Fleming Down, which was a portion of the Ogmore's Down; that happened in the 5th year of the reign of Charles I., but he did not succeed in getting it; the Earl of Pembroke maintained his suit. He produced a lease at the time.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

25,249. Do you mean, that there was recent litigation, in which this old lease was produced?—Not a recent one, but it was in those days; that is the only lease that I know of—a long lease from the Duchy.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,250. Has the copyhold property got into few hands?—Very few hands.

25,251. Can you, at all, state how many?—I do not know; I cannot tell you—but very few hands.

25,252. Do the little copyholders hold much?—A few acres, not very many.

25,253. The rest of the copyhold land is in the hands of large holders?—It is in the hands of large holders.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,254. Ogmore Castle and its surroundings are remarkable for their antiquities, are they not?—They are.

25,255. But I understand you to say, that the Duchy has neglected keeping up the castle or even the exchequer room?—Yes, they have.

25,256. If they had kept the castle in proper repair, it would have been very handy, would it not, for the Prince of Wales when he came down to look at South Wales?—I daresay he might take an interest in the place; it is a very ancient place, I know.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM JENKINS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

25,257. You are Mr. William Jenkins, of the Rhoose farm, near Barry?—Yes, my Lord.

25,258. You have a statement?—Yes.

25,259. Will you read it?—I am a farmer, and of a farming family. I have occupied Rhoose farm 12 years, and the Llanbethery farm, 20 years previously. I have been invited by farmers in the Vale of Glamorgan, to give evidence on their behalf. I only give evidence because of my interest in farming, as I have no grievance against my landlord except such grievances as are common to all farmers. I may add that as far as my late landlord is concerned, in my opinion he was one of the most considerate and one of the most honourable of men.

25,260. May I ask who your landlord was?—My late landlord was Mr. Lewis Davies, of Ferndale. It is admitted by all practical men that tenant farmers, occupiers of arable holdings, have lost more than one-third of their income, by the depreciation in the value of farming stock and produce. A remedy for a class of people living under such altered conditions is indispensable, in justice to tenant farmers and their families. In the general interest of agriculture and of agricultural labourers, agriculture should be replaced upon a sound commercial basis. Rent, in my opinion, should have a direct relation to the net value of the produce obtainable from the soil, after all just expenses are paid, and interest upon tenant farmers invested capital provided. It is an indisputable fact that great hardships have been caused, and injustice done in many cases to tenant farmers, by land agents unreasonably advancing rents and otherwise causing much injury. If necessary, reliable particulars of such cases could be given to the Commission. As to remedies suggested from many sources, I am of opinion that a liberal instalment, in the shape of a permanent reduction in rent, should be made. This, however, could never be obtained without a land court. No reasonable person would expect the landlords to make up the whole of the loss suffered by tenants, on account of reduced values of farm produce. I think that ground rents and royalties should be taxed, to relieve agricultural burdens, and the duty replaced upon malt, while foreign meat should be labelled. Then as to the mismanagement of estates by land agents. In the year 1875, after 21 years' tenancy of a farm in a certain parish in the Vale of Glamorgan, a tenant farmer of advanced age made application to the agent to be allowed to transfer his farm to his son, at that time 38 years of age, about to marry, and who had rendered valuable assistance in labour on the farm. But on the agent refusing this unless an increased rent of 5*s.* an acre were paid (the farm was highly rented), the son decided to quit the place and seek another farm, finding one on the borders of another county. The agent, who was brother-in-law to the landlord and rector of the parish, got another tenant to pay the advanced rent; but this person, to the regret of many people, destroyed himself or committed suicide.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,261. The new tenant?—The new tenant, and his family afterwards left the farm penniless in seven years. The next tenant had to be allowed the sum of 100*l.* on account of dilapidations, broken fences, &c., and a reduction in rent of about the whole advance of 5*s.* per acre. After three years' tenancy, this farm and another two of the best farms in the district, were thrown on the hands of the landlord, and were unoccupied for years, only to be taken up again at a still further reduction. I believe this land is now about 23*s.* an acre, and the farmer who was turned out of it, paid about 32*s.* at the time. This is conclusive proof of how the landlords' interests are often put in jeopardy by his agent. Another instance. A farm of about 170 acres was advanced in rent 55*l.* per annum. Shortly after a new agent was appointed, whose first act was to still further increase the rent by 15*l.* He tried to get 30*l.* The tenant had only just before spent 500*l.* in making permanent improvements, by erecting farm buildings, grubbing woods, drawing hedges, converting a great number of small fields into large ones for facility and advantage in cultivation, levelling large quarries, and draining and otherwise improving the condition and appearance of the farm. For this kind of work, which I call unexhausted improvements, neither the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, nor the custom of the county, provides compensation, which it would be only fair and reasonable to expect. However, it is fair to say 140*l.*, or a yearly allowance of 20*l.*, of the sum mentioned above for seven years was refunded on account of the building. That is 140*l.* refunded in the course of seven years.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,262. That must have been some time ago, or it would have come under the custom of the county, would it not?—It is less than 20 years ago.

25,263. But now, I suppose, if there were a case of that sort, the compensation would be given under the custom of the county?—No, it would not.

25,264. You think not?—No. Referring to land agents, I believe cases, (I am sorry to say so too) can be proved and multiplied, of gross tyranny and injustice exercised by them. They bring about strained relationships between landlord and tenant, and are known in many cases to have made life intolerable. They are, as a rule, keenly alive to their own interests, a number of them, I am sorry to say, men who have received legal training, although unpractical in the details of farm work, they are well up in the knowledge of how to enrich themselves by impoverishing tenants, and injuring landlords in many cases.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,265. Those are the agents?—Yes, some particular agents.

At this point Sir JOHN LLEWELYN took the chair.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,266. You have now been farming some 32 years?—Yes.

25,267. And you say the farmers' capital has been taken away to the amount of one third?——Yes.

25,268. I suppose you hold some corn land?—Yes; I have got a chiefly arable farm now.

25,269. What did you get for your wheat when you commenced farming?—I got about 7*s.* a bushel when I commenced farming.

25,270. And what for the barley?—Well, I have got 5*s.* and I have got 6*s.*

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

25,271. For the oats?—I never sell oats; I give them to the horses.

25,272. What are the present prices?—Well, you are not sure of being able to sell them now. I was at Cardiff market last week; there was only one buyer there, he is just behind you, he is not a very liberal man, he offered me 3*s.* per bushel for it.

25,273. For the wheat?—Yes.

25,274. That is more than one third taken off, a good deal, is it not?—Yes; well I wanted to give you a margin.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

25,275. What would your barley sell for?—I sell barley for 3*s.* 9*d.* I have got a few loads going into Cardiff to-day.

25,276. That is not quite so much. Then you say you have not sold any oats?—No.

25,277. Those that have corn land, of course, must have their rent reduced very much to meet the times?—Well, I should say so. Those are my views, but I did say, I believe, that the deficiency ought to be made up from many sources. I do not want to be too hard on the landlord.

25,278. I quite understand that. You say there are many cases of hardship. Do you not think it arises from the fact that the agents do not really understand the position that the farmers are in?—It is quite possible in some cases, but as gentlemen of business I take it, they are keen in their own interest.

25,279. You say they have had legal training?—A few of them.

25,280. But they have not had the experience that they should have had in farming?—Well, take the cases I have just mentioned now. Would you not consider them very arbitrary?

25,281. Just so, I quite agree with you. Are there many such cases, as the one you have brought forward here, with regard to the son coming in after the father?—I do not think there are a great number, quite so bad.

25,282. Is it customary to raise the rent when a new tenant is appointed, as a rule?—I think in most cases it is. It has been in the past, however.

25,283. They do not aim at popularity with the tenants, then. They look more to the masters, do they?—Well, I should think so. It would be more to their interest to do so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,284. You say you are in favour of restoring the duty on malt?—Yes.

25,285. Why?—Because beer is not, in my opinion, one of the necessaries of life. As far as I am concerned we could afford to tax beer in any shape or form, either in malt or otherwise. I do not want to approach the question of protection, but supposing I had a thousand bushels of barley to sell, what a difference it would make—people that have had barley to sell have lost about 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* a bushel at an average, I think, since the duty was taken off malt.

25,286. But I suppose you know, that Mr. Gladstone repealed the duty on malt, in answer to the cry of the farmers in general?—Exactly; but I think the farmers were very much mistaken in asking him to do so.

25,287. I suppose you are setting your own opinion against that of the farmers as a class?—No.

25,288. It amounts to that?—I believe there are a great many farmers who are the same way of thinking.

25,289. Do they not use malt for feeding purposes?—No, they do not. They do not in our country at all events. I have known but very few instances indeed, where malt is used at all, for feeding purposes.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,290. You are aware that other ingredients are used now, instead of barley and hops, to make beer?—Well, I quite believe that.

25,291. It is very much stronger?—Yes.

25,292. Do you not think the Government should be a little more strict, with regard to such things?—Yes, I think so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN MATTHEWS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,293. You are Mr. John Matthews, of Kevan Cribbwr, Bridgend?—Yes.

me, "You had better give it up." That does not suit me. I want some authority to refer to, to put a right rent on it. It would not be necessary, I believe, to run to it on every complaint, but if there was such an authority in existence, I think it would be much easier for me and my class to get on right terms with the agents. In applying for a reduction about 12 months ago, or somewhere about that, I think I convinced the agent that my rent was too high—that is my impression—but he had not the power to reduce it; that is my impression again. He would not, any way, and he wanted me to give notice. Perhaps he would have let it to somebody else, but the result would be that I would lose it. That would not suit me. I had made preparations upon my farm. I had outbuildings and everything built on my farm, and I am in the right way of going on. Now, if I give up that land, there will be those buildings on my hands, without their being any good to me. They have not cost very much, but to me it is a good sum. I have had no advance. My rent is the same as when I took it, but it was too high then, and there is not a fair chance to get a piece at the right value with my class. For a farm of 150 or 200 acres, for every one that is trying for that farm there are 20 trying for a small bit. It was the same with myself. 15 or 20 years ago, when I took the land, I was working in the works, and I worked there to pay the rent of the farm, many times.

25,295. Would you mind telling the Commission how much land you hold, and what you pay for it?—I hold about 28 acres altogether, perhaps.

25,296. And what is your rent?—I pay 21*l.* 12*s.* It is only fair to say I know of several instances, many instances, of small bits the same as mine that are very reasonable, and not only reasonable, but are cheap. I will say, that that is only due to the other side, but it is not so in my own case and that of many others. I know instances among my neighbours. I can name one with a small bit—there is a tale hanging by it. He pays 2*l.* 15*s.* an acre for the land, only a few acres, and he is determined now to throw it up. I do not know that I have anything more to say on that. As to compensation, I do not understand what is the custom of the country, nor what is the Agricultural Holdings Act, but I believe I am right when I say, that suppose I drained, as I have 20 years ago, either by Act of Parliament, or by the custom of the country, if I were to leave the bit of land to-day, I would get nothing. That is my impression, and I think I am right. There are other cases. This poor bit of land that I got was a lot of it under wood. It was a regular Welsh place. It is almost all oak. Oak had been there some time, and the old roots are there now, and it is a very difficult place to clean as a rule. Sometimes, it will take me a day to clean a perch, and if I do two perches of such land in a day, I think I have done a very good day's work. By giving that plenty of manure, putting potatoes or turnips or something in it, in a few years it is clean, and then I turn it down green. I may as well say my land is pasturage. I only keep arable bits that I have cleaned here and there. After all my labour on that land in that way, it will never go back to the same state that it was in before, or not till a very long time at any rate, until the acorns grow again, which will never occur perhaps, but now if I leave it at once I get 10*s.* an acre for it as ploughed land: if it is seven or eight years in the future that I leave, I will not get a stiver for it, although the land is better, and always will be better. I want something to meet me there. What, I do not know. I think, though, if a Land Court is good for the Irish goose, it is good for the Welsh gander. That is my impression any way, whatever it is. I want something that will be accessible to me, without going through a lot of lawyers and making it too expensive, something I can go to and say, "My land is too dear; I "cannot agree with Mr. Knox, and I want you to "decide between us," without expense and trouble.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

25,297. You want a Land Court without any lawyers?—Just so. The less the better, any way—somebody who knows the farm. If the Land Court was only a good farmer who knew the land, that would be sufficient. Another thing—I do not know whether it is within the range of your Commission or not—about the leasehold business. When I was a child five years old, my father was in Australia. He died there before I was six. I remember carrying stones with my mother, to build a little house with money that my father had sent from Australia. I remember very well throwing the stones into the cart, although only a child with my mother.

25,298. Not on the land you have been speaking of?—No.

25,299. On different land?—On different land. At night, I remember, my mother was too tired to take her clothes off. I had to draw them by the sleeve to get them off. Now if she will live a few years longer than her mother did, which I hope she will, she will see that house going bodily to the landlord, and that makes my blood boil, sir, and I want an alteration of that. (Loud applause.)

Sir John Llewelyn.

Order, order. We cannot have any expression of feeling one way or another.

25,300. Will you tell me how long that lease was for?—60 years. When I will be 65 (I am not an old man, and I hope to live as long as that), it will go. I asked the owner of part of it, five eighths of it, and this is what occurred. "Grant "me a lease on the same condition." "Oh, no!" "I will give you 25 years' purchase for it." "No, "I cannot do that." "Give me a price on it." "No." The land is not of the value of 50*l.*, but I would give it willingly, rather than part with the old dwelling. But he will not. A neighbour of mine owned a lease on the same land close by, and he went and applied, when the lease was very nearly up. He was told, "No, but you "pull your house, when your lease expires, down "to the ground, and build a new one, and I "will give you a new lease." That house is a good house. That is equivalent to saying, that there is no renewal of the lease. I do not know what you call it, but I call it legal thievery, my property going to another. All landlords are not like that. I have a house of my own that I bought. I paid full value for it. It is a better house to-day, than when I paid for it 20 years ago. I have been living in it myself, and continually doing something to it, and there is more value in it to-day than when I bought it. I believe that if the owner, that is Earl Dunraven, by what I have seen of his speeches here and there, could sell it, or if he could grant a renewal of the lease, he would give it, but it would cost me more than I would pay in rent. I think the law ought to be altered in this way, not as Mr. Broadhurst says, to those leases that have 20 years to run, or else my neighbourhood altogether could not avail themselves of it, but if it is honest in 20 years, it is honest in 20 days. I want the law to say, "Now, landlord, you must "sell that piece of land that that man's house "stands on, for a fair price, or you must com- "pensate him for whatever value that land has "now, more than when he took the ground "for building." I do not care what you call that, or what authorities you bring about to do it, but I want it. I do not know that I have anything else. I may mention an instance as to that land of 2*l.* 15*s.* an acre. The man pays 2*l.* 15*s.* an acre for his land. He and his father and mother and grandfather, and so on, have lived there for over 100 years. The field, I am talking of, has been made entirely by that family. There was an old house belonging to it, and about 10 years ago, it was sold. This is some of the copyhold business in Cefn, that was talked of here to-day. They used to pay 6*l.* a year for it. All the improvement done on that land, was done by that man's ancestors. He would get a bill perhaps of a couple of shillings for manure for a year or two, but at any rate he took it. Instead of paying 6*l.* a year for the house and the field, he pays 6*l.* 10*s.* a year for the field alone, and instead of the compensation going to the pockets of the family who had improved the land, it has gone to the pocket of him, that sold the land. I do not know that I have anything else.

Mr. Seebohm.

25,301. I did not quite understand you about this copyhold. If a man expended money on his own copyhold, it is as good, pretty much, as freehold, is it not?—Yes; but this was a tenant of the copyholder, this very family.

25,302. Then you object to the principle of what is called a building lease?—Yes.

25,303. Or a lease, say for 60 years, at a lower rent than the value of the land, in order to recoup the tenant in the course of the 60 years, for what he may build. If you wanted to keep that for ever, you would have had to pay a higher rent from the beginning, would you not?—Yes, but——

25,304. You would rather do that?—I want the land at a fair value. When the lease is up it is a matter of bargain I know, but it is Hobson's choice. If you cannot agree with one landlord and you go to another landlord, you only get the same terms or worse. You are bound to go to some landlord, and they are all alike in this respect. There is the land, where my own house stands. I suppose, when that house was built, the land was let for half-a-crown an acre, and it was not worth more. Now when my lease will be up, that bit of land will be that much more in value—the value of my house together with what I have done there, but I shall not get a halfpenny of it. I know it is legal, but I want to alter the law, to compel those that will not, and enable those that are willing to sell.

25,305. But do you think anyone would have let that land at 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre, on a 60 years' lease, without any house at all?—No.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

25,306. You would have to pay more than half-a-crown if you had bought it permanently?—Yes. Well, I do pay 1*s.* 6*d.* a perch.

25,307. Are not you paying the same rent during the whole of the 60 years?—No. The land as it was before the house was built, was not fetching more than half-a-crown, may be, I cannot say exactly—say 5*s.* That is as high as it could possibly be. Now, when it is taken on a lease, even on a 60 years' lease, it is 1*s.* 6*d.* a perch, very nearly as much for a perch, as you used to pay for an acre.

25,308. The ordinary case is to have a lease at the value of the land itself, and then for the 60 years' occupation to be considered as sufficient to recoup for the building, and that you object to?—Yes. I hold that the landlord has been recouped over and over and over. Instead of getting half a crown an acre for it, he has had 1*s.* 6*d.* a perch for it all through.

25,309. Do you know that the Scotchman is very much cleverer, than we are on this side of the Tweed?—Some of them.

25,310. When he takes a building lease for 60 years, he insists that he has the reversion, and not the landlord?—Very well, but we are not in that state here; we cannot do it. It is like this. Suppose I want to build a house now, I can get a lease. There is plenty of building land to be let. What is it a perch? It is more now when the leases are 99 years. The price is much higher, up to 5*s.* I think in some cases in our neighbourhood. Well, the landlord would give me the conditions:—"You can have a lease of "99 years for 2*s.*, 3*s.*, or 4*s.* a perch." "Oh, "you are asking too much for that bit of land; "you do not get half a crown an acre for it now." "Well, there it is, you can take it or not, just as you like." I go to the next landlord, and he tells me just the same, so it is not a free bargain. All the advantage is on one side, it is a monopoly. It is not the same as a job; if I did not like to go to work in one place, I could go somewhere else and ask for a job, but I cannot do that here.

Mr. Richard Jones.

25,311. You say you have seen your landlord once, I think, and your landlady twice?—No, my landlord twice. I saw Lord Dunraven speaking in this hall, and I saw my landlady laying the foundation stone of a church.

25,312. You never saw them at your farm?—Oh, no.

25,313. Do you think it would be more satisfactory to you, if your landlord and landlady were more approachable, if you came into contact with them more?—Well, I do not know, I would like it, any way. Lord Dunraven is very considerate, I must say. Whatever we do any other day, he gives us a dinner twice a year, whatever we may have to look at for the other days. In seconding the vote of thanks at the dinner to him in the "Wyndham Arms" here, I suggested this. I could see that he could address a lot of workmen here and there and all over the country, and I did not think it was too much for him to go there, and thank us for the rent when it was in his hands, once in a year.

25,314. But do not the landlords generally give two dinners to their tenants in the year?—No. There is another point I forgot. As a small tenant there have been abatements on the Dunraven estates and on the Margam estate. I never participated in them, I am too small. On the Margam estate the abatement is given to those who pay 15*l.* and over. The first time they made an abatement only to those who paid 20*l.* Those who pay the lowest rent get the abatement, and we who pay the most rent proportionately get nothing.

25,315. And, of course, you consider that it is unjust?—Of course I do.

25,316. And yet, as you say, you have to submit to it, because probably you feel too weak to make a better bargain?—Well, there are half-a-dozen trying for the same land, yet the land is of no more value, and would not be if there were 20 applying for it. But what chance have I to fight when there are half-a-dozen more who would give the same money, and would give it now, if I was to leave it. But the land is no more value for that. It is for this reason. I was as foolish 20 years ago. I thought, to have a lot of land was a fine thing, but I am certain of this, if I had stuck to my trade, and worked at it from that day to this, I would have a lot more money in my pocket.

25,317. But you have a liking for the land?—I have a liking for the land. I have a delight in it, and I have laid out a lot of my money on it, which would be useless for me if I had to go.

25,318. You think, generally, people have a liking for the land?—Just so.

25,319. And you think the landlords profit by it to a certain extent?—Yes, and I think another thing, I think they make a great mistake for their own sake. The tendency is to make the farms bigger—to put two, or three or four together, whereas if they made them smaller, they would have much more rent, I believe.

25,320. But when they are adding farm to farm they save buildings?—I have not got an inch of building. I have no building at all.

25,321. How do you shelter your stock?—I have built myself.

25,322. Is this on the Margam Estate?—No, on my own lease, on Lord Dunraven's land, and on some outside on the land where there is no lease; but I have no fear of being turned out, or anything of that sort. It has been asked here once or twice, why do not tenants come and give evidence, and about Mr. Knox telling them not to give evidence. I do not know what he said in the ploughing match speech, I am sure, but I must tell you this much. My experience of land agents does not terrorise me in any way about coming and giving evidence, and I will tell you why. I have fought them before now, and licked them too, and I never have known any case where they revenge. I will give you an instance if you like.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

25,323. Yes, go on?—When the county council business came, Captain Bowles, whom we all thought to be the top agent on Lord Dunraven's estate—he was an agent of some kind, because he signed receipts—was a candidate for my district. Amongst others I was not nominated, but named a candidate in a public meeting. There was another fellow that had more votes at the public meeting than I had, but Captain Bowles had more than either of us; he had not got more than all the Liberals together; he was a Conservative and I was a Liberal, that is about it. I withdrew in favour of another candidate, and did all I could—perhaps it would be rather egotism in me to say it, but I think I did more to defeat Captain Bowles than any other man did. I did all I could, any way. Captain Bowles knew me before that, through my paying rent, but ever since that, if I met him in the street, whoever is with him, he will come across the street and speak to me, and I think if there was anything in his hands, I would have it as soon as anyone. Another case has been mentioned here. There was a school board in our district, and the late lamented Mr. Talbot was a member. He went in somehow by a side wind the first time. It grieved me. I thought it a very important thing then. When the first three years were up, I with a few others got three men nominated on my side. As to one, we were rather doubtful whether he would stand, and they agreed to nominate me. My sole qualification was, that that man would not stand. We had not much claim on him, and we did not know much of him. He was a comparative stranger. Very well, if one of us went in, it meant Mr. Talbot or somebody else going out. When the nominations came out Mr. Talbot's agent, then Mr. Felton, sent a messenger first to ask me to withdraw. I was the last man, he asked to withdraw. He had succeeded with the other three, and when I heard that, after taking all the trouble, I went mad, and I would not withdraw. It was on a Saturday night, and he tried everything. He told me—I think he went further than he had a right to—he said, "Mr. Talbot sends me to ask you, "if you will kindly withdraw in his favour." I said, "Will you tell Mr. Talbot, that I ask him "as a favour, if he will kindly withdraw in my "favour." On the Monday morning there was another messenger from Mr. Felton, but I said "I will not withdraw." I was not a tenant then, I was not on the Margam estate. Well, I have been fighting with him on different questions from that day to this, and not only did he not revenge—he had no chance of revenge then—but soon after I applied to him for the land I have now, and it was through him that I had it. I am not a friend of the land agents, but I have more confidence in them than that. I am not afraid of them, in that respect at all.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,324. You have put your case so well that I do not think any one of us can improve it much. There is one question I would like to ask you. Do you think that if men of your class, could get some money advanced by Government, to purchase their holdings at 20 years' purchase, they would be able to pay back that money in a few years?—I know for my own self.

25,325. At a low per-centage I mean?—I know for myself, I would jump at the offer.

25,326. And do you believe many others feel the same?—Yes, I do. And another thing: they have a stronger reason than I have, if I may give you a family secret. As I say, I would jump at it at 20 years' purchase—oh, dear, yes! with a middling interest, and I would not sleep very happy till I had paid it. Others would have a great deal stronger reason than I have. I have neither chick nor child, and, so far, I am not likely to get them.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,327. A question is sent up by Mr. Randall, "When did you become a tenant of Lord Dunraven"?—About 1876 or 1877; I cannot say exactly.

25,328. "Was not the land let to Mr. Thomas "Collier, and did not you ask as a favour to be "taken as joint tenant with him"?—Yes, that is right.

25,329. "Has the rent ever been increased "from that time"?—No.

25,330. "On the contrary, was it not lowered "on your becoming joint tenant with Mr. "Collier"?—Yes.

25,331. "Was not the land valued when you "took it, and you agreed to the rent"?—Well, I suppose it was. I think that was my statement at the commencement—that I had had no advance. I thought it only fair to say that.

The witness withdrew.

[Mr. THOMAS DAVID called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,332. Are you a tenant farmer on the Margam estate?—Yes.

25,333. What are your grievances?—Trespass of game, and absence of fixity of tenure.

25,334. Have you made any complaint of the trespass of game?—Yes.

25,335. Have you had any compensation?—No. May I ask to read my statement.

25,336. I am asking you questions from it. Then it goes on from that, "I have complained "of the trespass of game, but have not been "compensated." That is the ground on which I asked you that question. "My grievances "concerning the last matter may be accounted "for in a particular way, as follows." Will you check me if you do not agree with this. "I took the above-named farm 13 years ago." Is that right?—Yes.

25,337. "In the meantime I had invested "upwards of 1,000*l.* in drainage, and other "necessary improvements"?—Yes.

25,338. "Fearing that by giving evidence, I "should subject myself to the displeasure of the "esteemed lady I have the honour to hold "under,"——?—I would rather read my statement.

See 25,994. 25,339. Very well?—I am Thomas David, of Hafodheulog Farm, on the Margam estate. Unfortunately the above farm is situated as follows:—A large cover valley with a stream leads through the midst of the farm from north to south. My first grievance is extreme trespass of game, adding to the natural hatches hauled in waggon loads to the cover, so when I plant my grain they deal pitiful.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,340. Do you mean the game eats up your corn? What does the "deal pitiful" mean? "So when I plant my grain they deal pitiful."

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

25,341. Who "deal pitiful," the birds?—The birds.

25,342. Or the rabbits?—The pheasants.

25,343. You mean that they eat up your crops?—They eat the plant that I put in the ground, that I expect to reap from.

25,344. I only want to understand you?—Second, after it sprouts till it becomes ripe (what I mean by sprouting is for the leader to come out of the stem), I cannot estimate my loss. Third, it is my custom to keep my lattermath grass for the fat stock, at the fall of the year. They tread it and mess it badly.

25,345. That is the pheasants again?—Yes. Fourth, they are uncommonly fond of potatoes; they hide under the stalks and abuse them fearful. Fifth, as I formerly mentioned the cover, the hares lay by day and feed on my roots by night; then the pheasant by day picking holes in these marks, probably rain and frost, the roots affected, rot. My second grievance is the absence of fixity of tenure, which may be accounted for as follows: I took the farm 13 years ago. In the meantime I have invested upwards of 1,000*l.* in draining, and other necessary improvements. By doing so I have caused displeasure in my family by having no security for my outlay and my labour involved. I desire fixity of tenure or any other security, that I may hope for compensation for the money invested and labour involved, now or at any future date. That is all I have got to say.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

25,346. Did you give notice to the agent before you did the drainage?—No.

23,347. Do you not know that by the Agricultural Holdings Act, you can give notice that you intend to drain, and that then you would be entitled to compensation?—During our late Mr. Talbot's life, his statement to his tenant, was as a security itself.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

25,348. What amount of security of tenure are you asking for now ?—For an agreement between me and my agent, on behalf of my landlady that, if anything occurs by which I may displease them, I should be compensated for my outlay according to the custom which would be valued.

25,349. But that seems very much your position now. Take the drainage you have done; it appears that you have omitted to give your notice, but if you are going to do any more drainage, for instance, you have only to give notice of what you are going to do, and then you are entitled to compensation under the Act: and with regard to your other compensation, the custom of Glamorganshire applies, so that if the only fixity of tenure you want is security with regard to those classes of improvements, you have got it now ?—Do you mean if I was to leave this above farm that I should be compensated according to my outlay ?

25,350. No, I do not think you would, on the statement you make, because you admit that you did not give notice to the landlord that you intended to drain. If I remember rightly the custom allows you something for drainage ?—This is a copy of my agreement (handing).

25,351. This is dated 1880, before the Act ?—That is it.

25,352. But then the Act of 1883 cannot be contracted out of, except by a subsequent agreement for compensation ?—Does it mention anything in that agreement about the Holdings Act.

25,353. No, but the custom of Glamorgan as to compensation to the outgoing tenant, applies to that agreement. All that the agreement does is, to exclude the operation of the Act of 1875, which is a perfectly lawful thing. That would not exclude the operation of the custom, which is an incident of the tenancy. However, I think I see your point.

Professor Rhŷs.

He can claim under the custom of Glamorganshire.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Even now he can claim.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,354. What is the acreage of your farm ?—My takage altogether is 199 acres, barring 20 acres in forest, hedgerows, and quarries.

25,355. What is your rent ?—156*l*. What I have got of open land is 179 acres.

25,356. Then you have applied for damages done by the game ?—No.

25,357. You have never asked for compensation ?—No. I estimated the loss on one occasion.

25,358. But have you never complained to the agent ?—Oh, yes, I have complained of trespass verbally.

25,359. But you never sent him a bill ?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,360. Do you generally get things without asking for them, in this part of the country ?—No.

25,361. Then why do you not ask the agent; why do you not send him a bill ?—My feeling did not incline. I thought that my agent or my landlady would take it rather cross.

25,362. You do not like sending in a bill ?—No. I would rather make an improvement in the management of the game. That is my suggestion. I believe there are plenty of covers on the Margam Estate to send the pheasants, not to send them into the cover attached to my crops.

25,363. But then there would be some other farmer, who would be finding them troublesome?—No; there is no cultivation near where I suggest.

25,364. But you do not like sending in a bill ?—No; I should be very thankful to receive a cheque, though.

25,365. But you would not like to ask for one ?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock.

THIRTIETH DAY.

The Town Hall, Bridgend, Glamorganshire, Thursday, 2nd November 1893.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord KENYON.
Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.
Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ARTHUR J. WILLIAMS, M.P., called and examined.

Chairman.

See 25,171–256, 27,251–436.

25,366. Are you Member of Parliament for South Glamorgan?—I am.

25,367. You wish to give evidence before the Commission?—I wish to give some evidence with regard to the lordship of Ogmore, about which Mr. Verity gave some interesting evidence yesterday afternoon. The Commissioners are, no doubt, aware, that the lordship of Ogmore forms part of the private Crown property of the Duchy of Lancaster. Glamorganshire occupies a peculiar position with reference to the Crown property. All the other Welsh counties have a large quantity of property, which forms part of the public land revenues of the Crown. There is very little public Crown land in Glamorganshire. I think only about 1,000 acres, but there is a large amount of property, which belongs to the Duchy of Lancaster in Glamorganshire, of which the lordship of Ogmore, forms a very material part. It will, perhaps, explain the position I have taken up, if I mention that in the session of 1890–91, I was a member of a Select Committee in the House of Commons, which was appointed to examine into the land revenues of the Crown, the Woods and Forests Administration, and during our sittings the evidence brought before the Committee showed that this public Crown property, that is, Crown property the revenues of which form part of the national revenues, as distinguished from the Crown property of the Duchy of Lancaster, was extremely large. We found that manorial rights were vested in the Crown over 84,110 acres of waste land in Wales; that the Crown owns the minerals under this waste land; and we found that the Crown owns the minerals under 90,863 acres of enclosed land in Wales, land the surface of which, from the nature of things, must at some time have belonged to the Crown. The 90,863 is in addition to the 84,110, I observe in the note, which I took of the evidence, I put in parenthesis, "Where are the "proceeds of the sale?" because there must have been a sale, or, at all events, there must have been some method by which it was parted with. Where are the proceeds of the sale of the surface of these 90,000 acres? I understand, my Lord, this question has arisen in a previous part of the inquiry of the Commissioners; I do not propose to occupy time by dealing with it, but the minerals under these 90,000 acres were reserved to, and still belong to the Crown.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Grove.

25,368. Do you know whether any part is being worked?—I do not want to occupy unnecessarily the time of the Commission, and I do not think I had better go into that.

Chairman.

I may mention, that with all this enormous property of a certain kind in land, the Crown at present only owns 500 acres of freehold surface. We also found that it owns minerals under 189,828 acres of enclosed land which was formerly manorial, that is waste of manors, and in which it had never probably any surface ownership. I am speaking now of the counties of Wales. I will summarise the evidence, by stating that it owns the minerals under 364,000 acres of land in Wales. It exercises rights as lord of the manor over 84,110; that is the first figure I gave, you may remember. When the Select Committee of the House of Commons drew up their report, and it was presented for final consideration, I brought up and moved the following amendment, to which I wish particularly to draw the attention of this Commission:—"Now "that the affairs of each county in Wales and "Monmouthshire are managed by a representa- "tive local authority with a thoroughly or- "ganised and well-paid staff, the committee "think it would not only conduce greatly to "economy and efficiency in administration, but "that it is in every way desirable that the "Crown lands in each county of Wales and "Monmouthshire, should be locally managed by "its county council and the proceeds applied "for public purposes in the county." That amendment was not carried. Now I come to Glamorganshire and the Duchy. I have mentioned what took place in the Committee of the House of Commons upon the Woods and Forests Administration, in order that it might explain the position which I take up, with reference to the Duchy property in Glamorgan. Of course they stand upon a different footing in one respect. In 1837 an arrangement was made, upon the then demise of the Crown, upon which a fixed civil list was allotted for keeping up the state and dignity of Her Majesty's Crown of a very large amount, 382,000*l.* a year I think it was, and the public Crown revenues of the Crown were, as part of the arrangement, placed under public control and formed part of the Imperial revenue. But the Duchy of Lancaster, it is fair to observe, was not included in that, and it remains quasi private property of the reigning sovereign. Of course I do not suppose any one will dispute that it is national property, but until the demise of the Crown occurs, it is clear we can only expect the comptroller of the private property of the Crown to do anything with its assent. I have ventured, therefore, respectfully to submit to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, a proposal with reference to this beautiful country and important manorial waste, which we have in our immediate neighbourhood. I submitted to the Duchy of Lancaster a scheme for the management of that part of the lordship of Ogmore, which was described by Mr. Verity, in his evidence yesterday. I proposed that the necessary powers for doing this, should be conferred upon a committee of the county council of Glamorgan by a provisional order—of course, we must proceed only by the methods which the law allows—under the Enclosure Act, promoted, of course, if my scheme should be approved, by the Duchy. In this way, I said in my statement, I believed that this part of the lordship might be developed with due regard to all existing interests, so as to preserve its many natural attractions, and bring it within the convenient enjoyment of all classes. I do not think I need occupy the time of the Commission, by describing its natural attractions, because I understand the Commissioners or some of them are about to make a visit to the common. You will see it is a wide expanse of fine open common land on Ogmore Down, and the waste begins at Ogmore Village, and extends along the estuary of the Ogmore and the seashore, until it reaches Dunraven Bay. These common and waste lands, I point out in my statement, are mainly sandy or barren soil. Under these circumstances, there would be very little advantage in attempting, if it were thought desirable, to enclose them. I ventured to state in my statement to the Duchy, that it would be most desirable, if possible, not to interfere with the natural beauty of the scenery, and the attractions of this beautiful tract of open land, and I believe any proposal for enclosing any large portion of the common, would be strongly objected to, by the public feeling of the district. But although most of it is either poor or sandy soil, there are some parts of it adjoining the enclosed land near Ewenny, St. Brides Major, and Heol-y-Mynydd which might be converted into good agricultural land. These parts of the common are near villages, the labourers living in or near which (and I think this statement is confirmed by Mr. Verity's evidence) would gladly, if they could, obtain allotments of from 1 to 3 or 4 acres. I think it is due to Mr. Verity to say, that it is entirely through his efforts, that these attempts have assumed a definite form. Application has been made to Lord Dunraven, who owns most of the land in that immediate district, for these allotments. I understand, however, that there are difficulties, not raised by Lord Dunraven, who is most anxious, I believe, that the allotments should be obtained, but difficulties which landlords can appreciate, with reference to taking part of adjoining farms. These difficulties seem to stand in the way. But I pointed out to the Duchy, that if the provisional order gave the committee of the county council power to take a moderate acreage of the common at these parts and apply it for this purpose, I am confident, from what I have myself heard and seen, that the allotments would be accepted as a great blessing, by a large number of working men. The appropriation, if judiciously made, would scarcely be perceptible, and would not affect the scenery or the advantages of the open common.

Chairman—continued.

Then there was another matter to which I drew the attention of the Duchy. Rabbits are now allowed to breed all over the down and waste, and the right of shooting or otherwise destroying rabbits, is limited to the lessee of the sporting rights of the Duchy. The result has been, that the rabbits have become a serious source of loss to the tenants of farms adjoining or near the common. I was taken on Sunday afternoon about two years ago, by one of these farmers, through two or three fields, in which the crops had been almost completely eaten by rabbits, and he complained bitterly that he was unable to kill them except on his own ground. I have long felt, and I am glad to find that the opinion is largely extending, that rabbits should be treated as vermin outside of properly enclosed warrens. I state, in this proposal to the Duchy, that the department would be conferring a great boon, and be setting a very important example, if the provisional order empowered the committee of management to let a part of the common for a rabbit warren, or rabbit warrens properly enclosed by wire fencing, and if it allowed the rabbits to be destroyed in other parts of the common. Rabbits are such important articles of food, that I believe the letting of a part of the common in this way for rabbit warrens, because a great part of it is extremely appropriate for rabbit warrens, would afford a considerable return. But another great blessing I point out which would follow from such a change, would be that we should put an end to the irritation and the illfeeling and deplorable proceedings at the petty sessions, which are caused by trespass in order to destroy the rabbits on the common.

See 27,386.

Now I come to a much smaller but, from the public point of view, far more important and interesting part of the lordship which borders the sea. Although it is only a narrow strip of waste, as the Commission will see, it runs more than two miles along, and affords access to a beautiful bit of sea coast which is singularly striking in itself and its surroundings. Well, I have known this district since my boyhood, at a time when very few people used to go there, but in recent years it has become more widely known, and, although the limited number of houses allows very few people to come and stay there, daily through the summer and autumn crowds of people come down to this district in order to obtain the only access to the seashore, which the great mining valleys behind afford. The want of any convenience or accommodation of any kind is matter of general complaint. "I under- "stand that application has been made" (I told the Duchy) "to your department for leave to pro- "vide these conveniences and this accommoda- "tion." The difficulty in the way of entertaining these applications has been, that there is no local authority to whom the duty can be delegated; and I ventured to point out that if the Duchy could see its way, by a provisional order, to give these powers to a representative authority in the district, that that authority would be able to superintend and carry out and provide all the necessary conveniences, in order that this beautiful district should be made available for public. The committee might be given powers to enclose such part as might be useful for building purposes; it would be a very limited portion. There would be considerable objection to extensive building, I think, on the part of the district, and certainly to the building of large hotels or public-houses unless some restriction were placed upon the sale of drink, which would enable them to compete successfully with other licensed houses. Then the committee, of course, would have the power of making regulations. Of course the difficulty which presented itself to my mind, with reference to a scheme of this kind, was, that the county council would have no funds available for carrying out any improvements or alterations; but if the income derived from the letting of allotments, from the warrens, and from the ground rents were appropriated to the committee I think it would be quite sufficient to enable them to carry out the scheme.

See 27,380.

I do not think I need occupy the time of the Commission, by going into detail as to the accommodation, which should be provided, but perhaps I may indicate what were the general views held, I think, by those who were anxious that this accommodation should be provided. First of all, the managing committee would have to make two enclosures at the parts which adjoin the seashore, at the top of the Cwmdu and another at the mouth of the Ogmore. This would give accommodation for the daily pic-nicers to come down, and shelters might be provided, and we might have for the daily visits of the large number of people, who now come down every summer and autumn, something like decent accommodation which they now want. They have no means of tying up their horses now. I speak from my own experience; I drive down very frequently. There might be shelters provided for the people who come down. Well, in return for this accommodation, it would not be at all unreasonable, that the committee should have the power of making regulations, which are sadly wanted, for preventing this beautiful piece of sea coast being spoilt naturally, as it must be and as it is, by the crowds of people who come down there and find no accommodation for their convenience, and who consequently use the whole of the common in every direction, in a way which sadly interferes with the enjoyment of the public.

My Lord, I thought it my duty to bring the fact before the Commissioners' notice, that I had submitted—it may be a crude scheme, and open to criticism, and I would only suggest it tentatively—but I do believe it would be for the greatest benefit of the district, if this beautiful waste and common were, in some way, made available for the benefit, convenience, comfort, and enjoyment of all.

25,369. What is the whole size of the common?—I believe it is about 1,200 acres.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,370. Mr. Verity said 2,000 in all, you are only speaking of Ogmore?—That is all, only Ogmore.

Chairman.

25,371. There is this question handed in by Mr. T. J. Hughes:—"Did you, as suggested by "Mr. Knox yesterday, endorse the unfavourable "reference to the Labour Commission and the "Land Commission, expressed by him at the "Fat Stock Show dinner at Bridgend, in "December last, and reported in the public "press." That refers to the statement about a "capital speech" made yesterday by Mr. Knox? —Yes, it does. I think it is a little bit inconvenient, my Lord, to answer such a question. The position I occupied was, that of president of a Fat Stock Show, and my friend, Mr. Knox, came there and made a little speech. At the moment I do not exactly remember the words which he uttered. I have no doubt after it was over, I gave him an encouraging remark with reference to its being a good speech, but it does not by any means follow that because a speech is good, you entirely agree with all the expressions contained in it. If I may be allowed to say so, I think without suggesting that Mr. Knox had anything in his mind, but what he explains he had, and what I entirely agree with; it is most desirable in these inquiries not to import either political feeling or party feeling. I think anything which, for a moment, could suggest that it was not desirable to support the Commission in this inquiry, would be unfortunate. I give Mr. Knox, I am sure, credit for that explanation, that he really deprecated partisanship being imported into an inquiry of this importance. I entirely agree with him; it is impossible to separate political feeling from inquiries of this kind, but as much as possible, I think we should not introduce political partisanship. I say that, all the more confidently, because I hold very advanced views, which I hope I shall have an opportunity of explaining upon the question of the land, but which I will reserve, with your permission, for London, as I do not wish to interfere with the witnesses who are coming to give evidence to-day.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Alderman Gwilym Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

25,372. What are you, Mr. Jones?—I am a tenant farmer.

25,373. What is the acreage of your farm?—About 500 acres.

25,374. You are, I believe, an alderman of the county council of Glamorganshire, and have been so since its formation, and you have been a member of the Mountain Ash Local Board for the last 13 years, the chairman of that board for two years in succession, and you are a Land Tax Commissioner?—Yes, that is so.

25,375. For what part of Glamorganshire do you wish to give evidence particularly?—The parish of Llanwonno and the parish of Llanvabon, and part of the parish of Eglwysilian. My evidence applies chiefly to those parishes.

25,376. Can you tell us anything about the commons in the parish of Llanvabon?—The area of Craig Evan Leyshon is 525 acres, and we complain of a notice from Lord Bute's agent. I complain on behalf of the Glamorganshire County Council, that we have approached the agents of Lord Bute, and we have done all we can, in order to get the necessary land for doing away with the tollgate and its approaches, which I say, are perfect death traps. As you know, we have no power to promote an Act of Parliament. We must, therefore, get the land by some other means, and we have been unable by any means, to get the necessary land from Lord Bute's agents.

25,377. What do you want the land for?—For making better approaches and bridges at Aberdare Junction. This land was originally part of the common of Craig Evan Leyshon. It is now the property of the Glamorganshire Canal Company, but I believe that part of the Craig Evan Leyshon Common would be required for the purposes, for which we propose acquiring it. The other point is this, that there is upon Craig Evan Leyshon Common, an inn called the New Inn, which was built in 1843 or 1845, and they paid a fine, or something of that sort, of 10*s.* per annum. In 1890 the Marquis of Bute served a notice, to deliver these premises without any compensation whatever.

25,378. You say, in your statement in reference to ownership, that in the parish of Llanvabon a part of the common was taken by the local board, and used as a sewage farm?—Yes.

25,379. Now, we go on from that subject to squatters' cottages, and dwellings erected on the waste and unenclosed land?—Yes, my Lord.

25,380. Do you know of any houses erected on common land now where there is a dispute going on with regard to the title?—I do.

Chairman—continued.

25,381. Can you tell us anything about that?—That applies to this New Inn, which I have already told you about, and it applies to another inn upon the common; there is a dispute pending with regard to the title. I have tried to get this information; it was promised to me, but for some reason or other, the people did not supply me with it.

25,382. Let us go on to the next matter, if you have not got that information. With regard to the rights of pasture over sheep runs, what have you to state?—I consider it does increase the value of farms.

25,383. Did anything happen to a relative of yours, who owned a farm of 372 acres?—Yes.

25,384. Will you tell us what that was?—The agent of the Marquis of Bute made a claim to a part thereof; my relative was afraid to enter into litigation with such a powerful nobleman as the Marquis of Bute, and he cleared his sheep off the walk. Immediately that was done, the agents of the Marquis of Bute took possession, and they have got it to this day. I do not know that I can say much more.

25,385. Are there any landmarks on the run which bear the initials of your relative referred to?—Yes, my Lord.

25,386. Will you give us his name, if you have not any objection?—Thomas Evan.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,387. What was the acreage?—219 acres 35 perches of sheepwalk, and 372 acres of farm land, I think it is stated to be.

Chairman.

25,388. With regard to this common, what is the acreage of the common?—525 acres.

25,389. And how does the lord of the manor exercise his manorial rights over this common?—I think I should say, he has exercised them in a manner which cannot be generally approved of.

25,390. Who is the lord of the manor?—The Marquis of Bute, my Lord.

25,391. Can you tell us anything about the manorial rights exercised over another common?—Yes, my Lord, Eglwysilan Common. See 26,800.

25,392. What do you know about that?—From what I understand, I consider that the same thing applies to that, as I have described in reference to the other common; that is, that there is an abuse of the rights of the lord of the manor.

25,393. That is very general; can you tell us anything particular?—Yes, my Lord; for instance, one of the tenants had some sheep on the common; he would have the sheep coming down from the common to his farm, and he was charged something like 2*s.* 6*d.* a year for it.

25,394. What is the name of that tenant? Can you give us his name?—I have not the authority to give it, but I would not mind handing it in.

25,395. We do not take any names that are handed in; you can either mention it or not?—I can only say it is Thomas Evans, of Ffynnonringallt Farm, near Treforest. I have been authorised by the Pontypridd Local Board, to appear here on their behalf, more particularly with regard to that portion of the common of Eglwysilan, which was alloted originally to the overseers and churchwardens of Eglwysilan, but having gone through certain formulas, they handed it over to the Pontypridd Local Board. Now what they particularly complain of, is the encroachment made on such common by the lord of the manor, by quarrying operations.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,396. May I ask, if this is the common that we heard of, when we were at Pontypridd?—No doubt it is.

25,397. That was on May 24th?—What they particularly wish me to point out to the Commission, my Lord, is this, that it would not be to any purpose for the local board of Pontypridd to lay out money in making that into a recreation ground, because if the quarrying operations and other operations which are now taking place are continued, the money they may lay out will be for an utterly useless purpose. But what I wish to draw the attention of the Commission more particularly to is this, that they are now, that is, the lord of the manor or his agents are, within 30 yards of the rocking stone that has been there for many centuries, and if such quarrying operations are continued, it will be destroyed in a few years. On behalf of the Pontypridd Local Board, I wish to solemnly protest against the encroachments upon that portion of the common.

Chairman.

25,398. You say you do not consider that there is any difference made in the management of land, with regard to language or religion?—I know of nothing at all.

25,399. Then about occupation; what is the usual term of tenancy. I suppose it is a yearly one, as it is everywhere?—Yes, my Lord, I may say at this point, if you please, that my ancestors have held land from the Tyntes of Cefn Mably for 103 years. (Witness handed in an old agreement.)

25,400. You refer to your own family?—Yes.

25,401. That is very interesting. Do you think landlords give proper notices to tenants?—Yes, my Lord, I do.

25,402. And compensate them for damage done?—I have no knowledge that they have not done so.

Chairman—continued.

25,403. Do they compensate for timber hauling?—No, my Lord, the purchaser generally does that.

25,404. Could you produce a copy of your agreement?—Yes.

25,405. Do you complain of any of the clauses in that agreement?—I have marked them, my Lord. (Witness handed in agreement dated 29th December 1877.)

25,406. You complain of the haulage, and not selling off hay, straw, dung, swedes, and turnips, and so forth?—Yes, my Lord, I complain of that clause.

25,407. In fact, you complain of the whole of that section?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,408. They are what are called the restrictive clauses?—Yes.

Chairman.

25,409. Then you complain about the payment for cropping and manuring done previous to leaving?—Yes, my Lord.

25,410. You do not think that is fair, and you do not think it is fair, that he should leave one-fourth of the last year's produce of hay and fodder on the farm, on leaving?—I may say that I took this farm, and I never knew of the clause in that agreement, and I paid in full to the outgoing tenant.

25,411. Then you object to the reservation of timber and trees?—No, I do not object to that exactly, but I think that there is no compensation to be paid to the tenants, and that is what I complain of.

25,412. For damage done in taking them away?—Yes, for damage done in taking them away.

25,413. Then do you object to the right that the landlord reserves to himself or his lessees, to erect any houses, tenements, furnaces, buildings, and to sink pits, construct ponds, and watercourses, and so on?—No, my Lord, provided he compensates the tenant.

25,414. You have no objection to that if it is compensated for?—No.

25,415. What was the date of your agreement?—That is 1877, but that does not apply to me.

25,416. This is an agreement between Walter de Winton, Esquire, and Robert Evans, as tenant?—Yes, my Lord; the former tenant of the farm where I live. I only wish to point it out as an instance, where agreements may be oppressive.

Mr. Grove.

25,417. Are those the conditions under which you are now?—No, not at all. I never would accept such an agreement.

25,418. But is it a similar agreement to that used on that estate now?—I am under the county custom of Glamorgan on that very holding now.

Mr. Grove—continued.

25,419. This is only a specimen of an old agreement?—Yes.

25,420. That is not in force now?—No, it is not.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,421. You do not think this agreement is in force anywhere now?—I have no knowledge.

Chairman.

25,422. What is the average rent of land in your district?—From 7*s.* to 10*s.* an acre, my Lord.

25,423. Is there any service, other than the payment of rent rendered by the tenants?—No, my Lord. I know of no service.

25,424. Has any rent been raised during the last 17 years in your district?—Yes, my Lord, that applies to the holding to which that agreement applies. It was done under the circumstances stated in my evidence.

25,425. Would you state that please?—To my knowledge, there is one case in my district, where the rent has been raised during the last 17 years. The circumstances were as follows: Application had been made to the landlord by two separate parties for a certain farm. The landlord did not accept either, but the result was that he increased the rent from 23*l.* per annum to 35*l.* per annum. The tenant, of course, was not turned out, but he had to put up with the increased rental. That is all with regard to that, I think.

25,426. I understand that to mean, that application was made to the landlord by two separate parties for a certain farm, of which there was a tenant?—Yes, that is so.

25,427. In consequence of that application, they put the rent up 10*l.* a year?—12*l.*

25,428. Are there any permanent reductions?—No, my Lord, I know of no permanent reductions, but there have been temporary abatements for the last 10 to 15 years. I believe in the case of Lord Tredegar, he makes such abatements for a number of years in advance, but in the other cases the abatements are made when the rent is paid, and varies. I think when rents are raised, the change is made on a re-valuation, but this was very seldom done in my district, but when done, it is done by professional and independent valuers. I think the rent for the last 50 years has remained very nearly the same. On Colonel Tynte's estate rent falling due in February is paid in July, and falling due in August is paid in January. On the other estates it is very much the same.

25,429. Then with regard to rates, have they increased or not?—No, my Lord, I do not consider they have, by reason of a great number of collieries and railways being in our district, and that increases the rateable value to such an extent, that it practically takes off the burthen of the rates from the shoulders of the tenants of farms and householders, or rather owners of leaseholds.

25,430. What is the average size of farms in your district?—From 200 to 600 acres.

Chairman—continued.

25,431. Are they all as large as that. Are there no smaller farms?—Yes, my Lord, there are. There are some farms from 50 to 60 acres, but I take this as applying generally—200 to 600 acres.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,432. Inclusive of sheep run?—Yes, I think that is so.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,433. Do you say the farms would be, on an average, from 200 to 600 in that part?—The exceptions are 50 to 60, but they are very few indeed.

Chairman.

25,434. Are you in favour of small holdings?—Yes, my Lord, generally speaking, I am.

25,435. But you think, they are not able to provide through a period of depression for the occupier, as well as larger farms?—That is my impression, but the reason I am in favour of small holdings is this, that supposing Government were to advance the money at a low rate of interest, so as to enable the tenants to buy their holdings, there would be that impulse to make improvements, because of that certainty of tenure, which would make them do their utmost to improve their holdings.

25,436. As regards cultivation, have you a scarcity of labourers in your district?—I believe that is the case, but I do not find it so myself.

25,437. I suppose a good deal of arable land has been laid down to grass?—Yes, my Lord, that is so.

25,438. At whose expense?—At the expense of the tenants.

25,439. Who keeps the farm buildings in repair and rebuilds?—The landlords.

25,440. Do not the tenants do anything?—In some instances they do. I do a good deal myself, but I do not think it applies generally. I think in a few instances they do something.

25,441. Who does the laying down of grass and drainage, and maintaining the fences and walls?—The tenants.

25,442. Do they build walls?—Yes, my Lord. I should like to say on this point, if you please, that where I consider the county custom of Glamorganshire and the Agricultural Holdings Act at fault, is in the case of walling done by the tenants, in the case of drainage done by the tenants, and in the case of hauling to new buildings, because I understand that the tenants are not paid for walling, and with us in the hilly districts, that is the only permanent fence which we can possibly make.

25,443. That is to say, the walls?—Yes, the walls, and I consider it is a great hardship that the incoming tenant or the landlord should not pay the outgoing tenant for walls that are of service. I further consider that the allowance made for drainage should go this far, as long as the drains are in working order, and I further consider that it is a great hardship that the outgoing tenant should not be paid for the haulage that he has done to new buildings, or the repairs thereof.

25,444. The haulage in a hilly farm is, of course, very considerable?—Yes, my Lord, by reason that it is all against the collar.

25,445. With regard to the sale of sheep on sheep farms, what happens in those cases?—The incoming tenant generally buys them, and that now almost amounts to a custom. Failing that, I believe the tenant does sell.

25,446. Will you tell us a little about game-preserving. Have you any complaints about that?—I have no complaint to make, because immediately I complained to my landlord, that the keeper of an adjoining gentleman rode in front of me through my crops,—I made no complaint at the time, but I spoke to my landlord,—he said "you shall have the game yourself." Therefore I have no complaint to make.

25,447. Under whom do you farm?—I farm under Colonel Halswell, M. Kemeys-Tynte, Cefn Mably, and Mr. Walter de Winton. Colonel Tynte, you noticed, gave us the whole of the ground game, long before the Ground Game Act was passed by Parliament.

25,448. Is there much damage done to the crops by game in your district?—No, my Lord, I do not consider there is. There is practically no game preserved.

25,449. Do you see anything to complain of in the law of trespass?—No, my Lord, I do not, because I happen to be on the best of terms with workmen in the neighbourhood, and they never trouble me. I think that applies generally.

25,450. You do not complain of strangers coming over your farm?—Not particularly.

25,451. Do you pay any attention to poultry farming yourself?—Yes, my Lord, or rather I cannot say that I do personally, but my wife does pay considerable attention to poultry farming, and she tells me that it is a source of profit. I should like to put this document in now—offences against the Game Laws, as against property and the person.

25,452. This is a letter from the magistrate's clerk at Pontypridd?—Yes, my Lord.

25,453. The letter is as follows: "Dear Sir, "In answer to your request to be supplied "with the number of offences under the Game "Laws, and the number of offences against "property and the person in this division, I "beg to send you herewith the information "required. The period covered is from Sep-"tember 25th, 1892, to September 25th, 1893. "Number of offences under Game Laws, 28; "number of offences against property and "person, 701. Yours faithfully, Henry "Porcher." Then you know nothing about co-operation and combination in your district?—Not at all, with the exception of sheep shearing.

25,454. Do farmers insure or not?—Not as a rule.

Chairman—continued.

25,455. The buildings are of course insured by the landlord?—Yes, my Lord.

25,456. Do the farmers and agricultural labourers avail themselves of benefit societies?—I am afraid it is done to a very small extent indeed.

25,457. In your district are there many small freeholders, who have inherited their holdings?—There are a few. The number has but very slightly decreased, but I state here what I consider the difference between those freeholders.

25,458. Will you tell us what you think about that?—A small farm, close by to where I live, was sold.

25,459. What is its name?—Tir-y-gelli.

25,460. And part of what estate?—Part of the Miskin estate.

25,461. It was sold how many years ago?—I think it is about 46 years ago. The price realised was 1,330*l.* The value now, taking a fair average, would be about 1,000*l.* an acre, the farm being 58 acres, therefore I consider it is worth now 58,000*l.* I say so upon the authority of Lord Aberdare's agent, who is a mineral agent.

25,462. With reference to tenant farmers, of course the children work very hard?—In my own case I am sure I had to do so, and I think it is the case generally.

25,463. We have been told that by everybody, and also that they do not get wages?—I believe not.

25,464. Are the farmers able to provide for their children when they grow up?—It all depends upon circumstances. I think that years ago they may have been able to do so, but having regard to the depressed state of agriculture at the present time, I hardly think that they could do so. However, I consider that if farmers availed themselves of life insurance, so as to make proper provision for their children, that that is one of the means by which we can meet the present depressed state of agriculture, that is, with a view to making proper provision for our families.

25,465. I suppose, with regard to the labourers, they live on the farms just in the same way?—Yes, my Lord, that is so.

25,466. What do you pay your labourers, if I might ask that?—I pay my labourers from 35*l.* to 40*l.* a year, but I do this, I take every case on its merits.

25,467. What is the general wage?—I think it would be about 12*s.* per week, my Lord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,468. And their keep?—Yes.

Chairman.

25,469. Has there been an increase of wages in the last 50 years?—Yes, there has been.

25,470. The servants, male and female, take their meals with you and your family, I suppose?—Yes, my Lord.

Chairman—continued.

25,471. Is your bedroom accommodation pretty good?—It complies with the requirements of the local board, and I think they are pretty stringent.

25,472. Then you consider the standard of comfort, so far as you are concerned, in house accommodation and diet, to be good?—Yes, my Lord, I do.

25,473. You let your employés have books, and do what you can, to provide them with comforts?—Yes, my Lord, any books that they wish to have, they are at their service.

25,474. Has there been any great migration of farmers or labourers in your district?—There has been no great migration of farmers, neither has there been any great migration of labourers, but there has been a considerable influx of labourers from other counties into Glamorganshire. As you know, there are a large number of collieries and railways in the district, and they draw to those centres, because they work a less number of hours and are, to some extent, no doubt, paid better wages.

25,475. You do not think farmers keep accounts as a rule?—No, my Lord, I do not consider that, generally speaking, with us, they are capable of doing so. I know nothing about education here, in the Vale of Glamorgan, but, with us, I am sure they are not capable of keeping proper accounts.

25,476. What do you think is the principal cause of depression?—I consider that the principal cause is foreign competition.

25,477. Have you any remedy to suggest?—I consider this, that in order to meet this depression, we should give the rising generation the best agricultural education available that applies to dairy farming, agricultural chemistry, and so forth. In my own case I intend giving my son such education, and I consider that he will be far better able to meet the agricultural depression than myself. However, I consider this, that if the landlords did come a little bit nearer to us, so that we could consult them upon any grievances, I am sure that we could settle things in a very amicable manner. I will repeat what was said many years ago by Sir Charles Kemeys-Tynte, of Cefn Mably. I am sure the Commission will pardon me for taking up time with this. He always dined with his tenants at Cefn Mably House, and some of his friends said to him, "Why, Sir Charles, do you dine with your tenants," and he replied, "How can I live without them?" I am sure, if the landlords took that view to-day, we should be in a much better position.

25,478. You are in favour of security of tenure?—I am, but I have no complaint. It is impossible for me, in the face of the terms under which I hold, to make a complaint with regard to that; but I may say this, that the small landowners are the oppressors. I do not wish to say they are oppressors, but they do not treat their tenants as fairly as the large landowners, such as Lord Tredegar, Lord Windsor, and the Tyntes of Cefn Mably. I consider that there is no possible object in having a lease under the Tyntes of Cefn Mably, because when once the lease comes to a termination, there very likely will be a considerable loss to the tenant. However, in the case of the small freeholders I do not consider that they do treat their tenants nearly as well as the larger landowners, and I should myself like to see this, that it would be impossible to raise the rents on the tenants' improvements. That is the great complaint with a great many of the tenants in various parts of the district.

25,479. Then you would be in favour of some land court, or some arrangement of that sort, to make that an impossibility, would you?—No, my Lord, I cannot agree with a land court, for this reason, so far as I can see, that it would be the means of putting landlords and their tenants more apart, and thus creating friction, which does not now, in my opinion, exist. However, that is a question for the wisdom of Parliament, and I should hardly like to express an opinion upon that point.

25,480. You do not wish to express an opinion?—Well, generally, taking the view I do now, I cannot say that I am in favour of a land court.

25,481. You think the relationship existing between landlord and tenant is of a most friendly character?—Yes, my Lord, I have no knowledge to the contrary in our district.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,482. Would you kindly tell us who your landlord is, I did not catch his name?—Colonel Halswell, M. Kemeys-Tynte, of Cefn Mably, in Glamorganshire, and Mr. de Winton, of Maesllwch Castle, in Radnorshire.

25,483. I did not quite catch what you said, with regard to the landlord charging half-a-crown per yard for some fencing?—I will explain. It was in this way. He had some sheep on the Eglwysilan Common, and wishing to prevent the sheep coming down to his farm, that is, to the lower ground, he put hurdles across so as to prevent them; and what he particularly complained of was, that the lord of the manor should charge him half-a-crown a year for doing that.

25,484. For putting the wire on his own land?—For putting hurdles between the common and his own land.

25,485. Was it on his own fence or on the common?—Well, I should think it would be between the common and his holding, that is the farm.

25,486. And charging the tenant 2*s.* 6*d.* a yard for putting that?—No, 2*s.* 6*d.* per annum.

25,487. I understood you per yard?—No.

25,488. Then you spoke with regard to an encroachment about this quarry at Pontypridd. Is this Rocking Stone the place where I read sometimes of the colliers meeting?—Yes, that is so.

25,489. Well, it would be a pity, I think, to disturb that ground?—It would be an everlasting shame if it was done.

25,490. Is the Glamorgan custom adopted more in your neighbourhood now than it used to be. I see you state that on your own farm you have adopted the Glamorgan custom, on your own holding at the present time?—When I first took it, I objected to be under the agreement which I have handed in, and then the landlord agreed that I should be under the county custom of Glamorgan.

25,491. Is not that generally adopted now in the neighbourhood?—Oh, it is. This is an exception. We do not know of any such, I am sure, in the parish of Llanwonno.

25,492. There are not many under the same custom as you, in that district then?—Practically speaking, I think they are all under the county custom of Glamorgan. That is what they call the eastern custom.

25,493. But you are in the western division, are you not?—No, I am in the eastern.

25,494. I did not quite understand that. Then with regard to timber hauling, how do you settle that, you said that it was generally arranged, you were not paid by the landlord for any damage, but by the purchaser?—By the purchaser.

25,495. How is that settled. Do the landlords see you have your right?—No, I think it is left between the tenant and the purchaser. I will tell you how it is settled. In a case where timber hauling took place off my father's farm, the farm which I occupied, the purchaser came to it and said, "Look here, let us settle "this, I will give you a certain amount of "timber for gates, posts, and so forth;" not money, but he paid us in kind as it were. We did not complain particularly.

25,496. They do not fail to agree as a rule?—I have no knowledge that they fail to agree.

25,497. Are the rents often raised, because other surrounding tenants apply and offer more money for the farms?—I know of no instance excepting this, this is the only instance which I can point out.

25,498. I have heard so many of the landlords spoken so highly of, that they hardly take an offer of an outside tenant?—I am sure with regard to Lord Tredegar, and Lord Windsor, and the Tyntes of Cefn Mably, and with all honour to the Marquis of Bute, I think it would apply to him, that they would not take an offer from anybody outside of the sitting tenants.

25,499. I am glad to hear you say so. You say that there has been an abatement made for the last 10 years. Will you kindly tell us, have the rates been taken off in accordance with the reduction of rent?—No, not at all. The assessment committee at Pontypridd, although Colonel Tynte allowed me for three years, have actually refused to make me any reduction whatever.

25,500. But if they did give you permanent reduction you would have had the rates lowered?—Quite so.

25,501. Why do not the tenants as a rule apply to the landlord for it. If they could produce receipts for the full half-year's rent they could have their rates reduced?—I did so, but the assessment committee refused.

25,502. But was it not written on the receipt abatement so much?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

25,503. That is what I think it is. You ought to go in for a reduction and have the rates reduced. It is no benefit to the landlord nor to the tenant?—Not a bit.

25,504. You say that much of the land in your district has been laid down to grass?—Yes.

25,505. That is always done by the tenant?—Yes, it is.

25,506. The landlords never assist in the way of seed?—I do not believe there is any application made to them.

25,507. I think we have had an instance yesterday before us, where a tenant had the seed from the landlord?—That does not apply to our district.

25,508. No, it does not, but do you not think that the landlord should assist. Corn lands, as a rule, do not come very naturally to grass?—I believe that the landlords should assist in laying down such arable land to permanent pasture.

25,509. Does the arable land in your district come to good pasture in three or four years?—We did not follow the course that is followed in the Vale of Glamorgan. We broke up—we fallowed a field, and we took what we call three crops off it and then we laid it down again; we did not follow it up. Therefore there would not be that difficulty in laying it down to permanent pasture, that there is where land is fallowed up for a long period of years.

25,510. The land requires to be manured well, I should think, before it will come to good pasture?—Oh, yes, we require a lot of lime.

25,511. It is rather expensive work to lay down land thoroughly?—It is.

25,512. You say there is a decrease in the root crops. How do you account for that?—By reason of our land being of such a steep character, the haulage being so very expensive that it would not pay us to cultivate, because we are so near the colliery centres, that we find that dairy farming pays us better than anything else.

25,513. Do you not hurdle sheep upon this hilly ground. Would not the land suit?—No doubt it would, but we have not taken it up. I think we ought to take it up.

25,514. Then you say you have adopted dairying. What kind of dairies have you in that district. Have the landlords provided you with new dairies?—Oh, yes.

25,515. Roomy places?—Upon the Cefn Mabley estate, when I made application to Col. Tynte in order that I might comply with the requirements of the local authority, he built me a shed, a modern one, that complies with all the requirements of the local authorities.

25,516. Have you had any instruction in butter-making in the neighbourhood?—I am sorry to say we have not, but the county council of Glamorgan are giving such instruction in various centres, but there is not one centre within convenient reach of where I live.

25,517. But you should apply for it, I think, you and those in the neighbourhood?—Well, I think we will apply.

25,518. It is useless to build large dairies if you do not adopt the new system?—Exactly.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

25,519. I think dairying is one of the best things that pay at the present time?—No doubt. I quite agree with you.

25,520. I did not quite hear what you said with regard to the keeper riding through the corn?—It was not the corn. It was through the hay crop.

25,521. Whose keeper was it?—I should be sorry to say. It was a keeper under another gentleman, who rode through my farm.

25,522. You do not wish to name the gentleman. You are not bound to?—Well, I have a very good reason for not doing so.

25,523. But do keepers trespass in that way on the estate?—No. I have the whole of the shooting on the three farms; they do not trouble me.

25,524. I mean on the surrounding farms?—Not now, but they did. The gentleman whose keeper rode through the hay crop is dead, and I therefore would not care to allude to it.

25,525. I am pleased to hear you say that you have adopted poultry farming?—Yes.

25,526. It is generally the wife's pin money?—Well, that is so, I believe.

25,527. But it is one of those occupations, that do pay at the present time?—Yes, it does.

25,528. One of the best?—It is one of the best.

25,529. Have you suitable houses for the rearing of poultry?—I have erected some.

25,530. At your own expense or the landlord's?—At my own expense. I need not trouble the landlord.

25,531. In a wet climate like this, there should be rather a roomy place for fowls?—Yes, that is so. I am sure the landlord will help me if I apply to him.

25,532. You say there are a few freeholders in your district?—Yes.

25,533. How do they farm, as a rule?—They are inferior farmers, as a rule. They do not care for the surface; they get such a revenue from the minerals, that they do not care a pin for the surface.

25,534. You stated just now that the value of a farm had been raised to 58,000*l.* from 1,330*l.*?—1,330*l.* was the price paid 46 years ago. I have consulted a mineral agent, and he tells me that the value per acre of the farm is 1,000*l.* now.

25,535. It is the minerals?—It is the minerals, the coal being of such a good quality.

25,536. Then you consider labourers' wages have advanced?—Oh, yes, within the last 20 or 30 years.

25,537. At what rate, do you think?—There has been an advance, I daresay, of from 40 to 50 per cent.

25,538. You have given it here, I suppose; what is the acreage of your farm?—It is about 500 acres, more or less.

25,539. Do you employ many labourers?—I employ four or five, including myself.

25,540. Are the present labourers as well up in their work as they were many years ago, do you think?—I do not consider that they are.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

I consider that we get much less labour for the money we now pay, than when we paid very much less. I am sure that I had to work myself when I was from 14 to 24, much harder than I could get any one of them to do now.

25,541. Longer hours?—Longer hours.

25,542. And harder work?—Yes.

25,543. But still the pay is more?—The pay is more.

25,544. You said just now, something with regard to the landlords, that they should "come nearer to us"?—Yes, I consider that it should be so.

25,545. We have heard something of that in the north, that there is rather a gulf between the landlord and tenant?—Ah!

25,546. Is it the same here?—No, I do not think it is.

25,547. Not quite that?—I am sure the late Colonel Kemeys-Tynte of Cefn Mably was as approachable as any gentleman in the county of Glamorgan.

25,548. Still, they do not mix with you so freely as you would like to see them?—No, they do not.

25,549. Are the landlords practical, as a rule?—I have no knowledge.

25,550. Do you not think it would be very well for us, if the landlords of our districts had a little agricultural training?—Certainly.

25,551. So that they could really understand for themselves what goes on in the farms?—Certainly, I believe in that.

25,552. Then you said that as a remedy you wanted education?—Yes, that is one of the remedies.

25,553. I quite agree with you on that, but have you no other remedies?—Well, as I have already told my Lord, I consider that in the case of small freeholders where they hold two or three farms, some remedy ought to be provided. I would not take a farm under them upon any conditions, because in the first place they let too high, and they raise the rents on the tenants' improvements. Therefore I consider that anything that could be done by Parliament, so as to meet cases of that sort, should certainly be done. I do not complain of the large landowners at all, I have no right to, but I do complain of the small freeholders.

25,554. Then many of them are not able to give abatements, they cannot give abatements, because the land is in many cases encumbered?—But they are surely able where there are minerals. Take the case that I refer to, where every acre is worth 1,000*l.*, I think you will agree with me that they can afford it pretty well.

25,555. But I mean those that have no minerals?—Yes.

25,556. Your district is chiefly minerals, I suppose?—All minerals.

25,557. You do not seem to think that a land court would be of any use?—Well no, I do not think so. If the landlords came a little bit nearer to the tenants, so that the tenants could state the grievances that they have, I believe that we should do better without a land court than with it.

25,558. Do you think if there was a land court established you would be obliged to go to the land court with your case, as long as your landlord and you got on very well?—Never.

25,559. Then I do not think it could hurt you?—It would not hurt me, because I should make no use of it.

25,560. Quite so; but are there not some of your neighbours that are situated very differently under other landlords?—Under the small freeholders that is so. There is no doubt but that a land court would be useful in such cases.

25,561. There are cases then, in which you think there is necessity for some place to appeal to?—I do. I certainly believe that, but whether it should be a land court or some other court, is another matter.

25,562. Quite so; but somebody before whom you could put a case, and settle any dispute between landlord and tenant?—I believe that would be so, no doubt.

25,563. Something of that kind might be adopted, but you agree that we really do want something?—Yes, in the case of those small freeholders. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, I alluded to railway rates, and promised that I would state before the Commission in what way the railway rates have interfered with us, in the way of getting manure and so forth. I hope I do not take up the time of the Commission in reverting again to that.

Chairman.

25,564. Oh, no, we should like to hear that?—I bought some gas lime from the Mountain Ash Local Board. They charged me 9*d.* per ton on the truck loaded. The Taff Vale Railway Company charged me 16*d.* per ton for bringing it round to my place, something like five miles. Therefore they put me in this position, because of the high rates it is very questionable whether it will pay me to bring this stuff round on to my farm. In the case of manure, which I get from the Penrhiwceiber Colliery or from the Great Western Colliery in the Rhondda, they would charge me more for the manure in the shape of railway rates. Therefore, I wish to point this out to the Commission, that the Taff Vale Railway Company does deal with us most oppressively.

Mr. Grove.

25,565. You say the Taff Vale Railway?—Yes.

25,566. Do you know the rate that they could charge you legally for gas lime?—Well, I believe this is a special rate—this is under what they are entitled to charge. They charge me exactly the same for this short distance, as if the stuff was brought from Cardiff.

25,567. A long discussion took place on class A. (which is the lowest charge that they can make) when the classification was before Lord Balfour's Committee. I attended most of those meetings, and the agriculturists had a very strong fight on the question of gas lime, and it was brought into Class A. That was the lowest charge that they could give. Now, if you will tell us the exact distance, we will compare that for you. Perhaps you will leave that charge note which you have there?—Yes, I shall be very pleased to leave it. (Handing in document.)

25,568. What distance did they bring it?—Well, I should like to be correct when I state the distance. I will take it as six miles, that will be rather over than under.

25,569. Then who did the loading. Who loaded it into the truck at the railway station?—The local board's employés.

25,570. The local board did the loading?—Oh, yes.

25,571. The railway company did not do the loading?—No.

25,572. When it arrived at the station, who did the unloading?—It was done by my own employés.

25,573. So that the railway company neither loaded it nor unloaded it?—No.

25,574. And you think six miles is the distance?—About six miles.

25,575. We will refer to it. Gas lime is down on the lowest charge that you can get, Class A.?—Quite so.

25,576. As to this claim made by Lord Bute, to that sheep walk near to the farm occupied by your relative——?—It was not occupied—he was the owner—the occupier and owner.

25,577. But there was a claim made for a sheep walk of 219 acres?—Yes.

25,578. Was that claim made in writing or verbally?—It is so many years ago that I have no knowledge.

25,579. I was going to ask you that, how many years ago is it?—It is about, I will say, 50 or 60 years.

25,580. You do not know whether it was made in writing or verbally?—No, I do not, but it is quite possible it was made in writing.

25,581. Is it possible that that document might be found?—Well, I will do my best, and if I find it I will forward it to the Commission.

25,582. If you can, it would be very interesting to us to see a document of that character?—I have a document here now of a somewhat similar character, if I can find it.

25,583. It is similar, is it, to the other one, but a more modern transaction altogether?—It is more modern. This is the document (handing same).

25,584. Will you state briefly what that document is, so that it may get on to the short-hand notes, and then hand it to the secretary?—This is a notice served upon the tenant of a public-house called the New Inn, at Craig Evan Leyshon Common. This house was, I believe, built in 1843 or 1845. This notice was served in the year 1890. There is now a dispute pending with regard to this, and I think they are taking steps with a view to ejecting the tenant, that is, the person who paid the fine to the lord of the manor. That applies also (but I have not got any document with me) to another house called the Traveller's Rest, on Craig Evan Leyshon Common.

25,585. As far as you know, the same sort of document was served in that case, was it?—I think that in that case, they had granted a kind of a lease, but that now the district is increasing so very rapidly, the leaseholder wishes to rebuild the house, but for some reason or other the Marquis of Bute's agents objected, and took every means they could to prevent him providing better accommodation for the neighbourhood.

25,586. Just one further question. You say that the county council butter school has not been up in your district yet?—No.

25,587. Have the technical instruction committee of the county council, joined any outside agriculturist with the members of the council, do you know?—I can hardly answer that, I think.

25,588. I may say that in Monmouthshire we have joined several outside agriculturists with our county council on our committee?—It is a very desirable thing, of course.

25,589. Do you know whether the teaching as to butter-making is what you, as a farmer, would consider to be satisfactory?—I have no knowledge.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We got assistants from the Bath and West of England Society in our technical instruction at one time. We had an instructor (I forget his name at the moment) from Bath, and a very good instructor he was too.

Mr. Grove.

I would like just to say that in Monmouthshire, we have a director for our agricultural side. This very day we have 50 students competing in butter-making in Abergavenny. At the end of the peripatetic butter-teaching school, we give a gold medal, a silver medal, and a bronze medal, and those are being competed for yesterday and to-day. That is the way we finish up our butter-teaching, and we find the teaching to be most admirable in our county, and that it is doing a great deal of good.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We trained some of our own young women in the county to be instructors themselves in the county.

Mr. Grove.

I may add that we have had now close on 200 students. I have no further question to ask.

Witness.

I do not know whether it is within the scope of the Commission or not, but I would wish, my Lord, to read that statement (handing a paper to the Chairman).

Chairman.

25,590. Will you just read us that. It is an interesting statement about your family. I do not think we need go into the law of primogeniture, but if you will read us that, it will be very interesting?—"I disapprove of the law of "primogeniture and entail. I have been driven "to what I am by reason of the injustice of this "law for the following reason:—My grandfather "was the owner of 500 acres of mineral property "in the parish of Llanwonno. My mother, his "eldest daughter, had as her share 200*l.*, whereas "the whole of the real estate was left absolutely "for the brothers. Taking a fair average of the "value of this estate, it would be about 500,000*l.* "taking the income derived from leaseholds "upon this property and minerals."

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,591. The law of primogeniture will only operate where there is no will?—It was under the law of primogeniture and entail, and it was broken by him and his eldest son.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,592. You spoke just now about the Rocking Stone and about some of the quarrying getting nearer and nearer to it?—Yes.

25,593. You do not know whether that is under the protection of the Act for protecting ancient monuments?—Really I could not say.

25,594. I think you know it is an important feature in the neighbourhood, where workmen's meetings are held, and so on?—Yes, and where the Druids have worshipped for centuries.

25,595. The Druids worship in the open air, I think, do they not?—Yes, I believe so.

25,596. And the Rocking Stone is their central point?—Yes, that is so.

25,597. So that any interference with that would be like demolishing the chapel of another sect, would it not?—Yes, I think that would be so, no doubt.

25,598. Have you witnessed any of the ceremonies, with the Arch Druid officiating at the Rocking Stone?—I have.

25,599. Was it edifying?—Well, having regard to the ancient, what shall I say—how shall I put it, I mean, having regard to the fact that it has been in vogue for hundreds, if not thousands of years, I am sure I could not view it with disrespect.

25,600. Do you really think it has been in vogue for thousands of years. They say so, do they not?—Yes, they say so.

25,601. Now, with regard to the game. You have a free hand to deal with the game on your farms?—Yes.

25,602. Is the game entirely extinct on those farms?—Oh, no.

25,603. Would you approve of the game becoming extinct?—Oh, no, certainly not.

25,604. You would not?—I would not, surely.

25,605. But many of the tenants if they had a free hand with the game, would kill it entirely, would they not?—Well, I never took a gun in my hand, therefore I am sure I could not extinguish anything.

25,606. But that is not the feeling in your part, is it. I know in some parts of Wales they would make very short end of the game. There would be no rabbits for sale, or anything of the sort?—Well, particularly where it is strictly preserved, I have no doubt there will be a feeling of that sort. I will give you an instance. The late Colonel Tynte offered me a farm in the middle of the preserves of the Duke of Beaufort. I told him, "Colonel Tynte, I could not possibly "take this farm, unless you let me have the "shooting." He said, "Provided you undertake "that you will not sub-let it, you shall have it." I have no doubt there is that feeling in a great many parts.

25,607. Your landlord is very reasonable?—Very.

25,608. And you think the great landlords are all or very nearly all so?—I think so.

25,609. Do you think it would be an unreasonable thing, if their conduct towards their tenants were made the sort of outline of legislation, to compel the smaller landlords to act up to that kind of standard; would there be anything unreasonable in some legislation in that direction?—I do not think it would apply to the large landlords at all.

25,610. I mean to compel the smaller landlords to act up to the standard of the bigger landlords?—I have no doubt it is very desirable.

25,611. That would be desirable?—Very desirable, I think.

25,612. Now with regard to the labourers, do you say that their pay has been going up of late?—Oh, yes.

25,613. It has not come down the last year or two in your district?—Not in my case.

25,614. We have heard in North Wales that foreign competition tells against the labourers; do you find it so?—Well, I do not take any advantage of my labourers, I pay them just the same as I paid three or four years ago.

25,615. Do you think they are worse or better paid now than they used to be?—Say 20 years ago?

25,616. Yes?—Oh, there has been an increase of 40 per cent.

25,617. Do you think the labourer is much better off than he used to be?—The farm labourer is certainly.

25,618. Much better off?—I think so.

25,619. You do not think he has ever been better off than he is now?—Well, I think he is much better off than he was, say, 20, 30, or 40 years ago.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,620. Do you think there are many changes of tenancy on the farms in your neighbourhood?—A few.

25,621. And where there are changes of tenancy, do the arbitration clause and the custom of the county come into operation?—Well, I have never heard of a case of arbitration, excepting this. The tenant and the incoming tenant agree to this, to appoint an arbitrator each, and an umpire is fixed upon, in case they fail to agree.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

25,622. That is what I meant. I take your answer that although it goes to arbitration it does not go to the umpire?—Yes, in my case it did.

25,623. It went to the umpire?—Yes, it went to the umpire, and it was an unjust award.

25,624. That is from your point of view?—Well, I should like to be honest.

25,625. I do not want to go into the question of whether you are satisfied with it or not. I want to know whether it was expensive?—Yes, having regard to the solicitor's charges and everything else, it was expensive.

25,626. That is rather unusual, you think?—Well, it was unusual. I can hardly point out another case.

25,627. When there is a change of tenancy, I hope it is usually settled without much expense under the custom?—Yes, I think it is.

25,628. How far do you think the custom of the county applies satisfactorily to your district?—It applies thus far. When you come to deal with walling, drainage, and haulage to buildings, I say there that the custom is not fair.

25,629. Those are precisely the points that I took down in your evidence?—Yes.

25,630. Do you go any further than those three items, walling, drainage, and haulage to buildings?—No, I am not prepared to go further than that now.

25,631. I think you told us, if I followed you rightly in that, that you thought the period during which the compensation for specific improvements should run, ought to be extended in point of time?—Yes.

25,632. For how long; for any definite period, or for ever?—Well, I would give you an instance, if I may be allowed to do so. My father drained a farm called the Gellywrgan Farm 30 or 35 years ago, and the drains to-day are in good order, and the field is as valuable as it was a year or two after the draining was done, if not more so. Therefore, I say that the tenants ought to be entitled to payment or to some allowance so long as the drains are in good working order.

25,633. That is exactly the point I wanted to get at. Now, I will come to the question of sales. Have there been any sales of the surface in you neighbourhood; have farms come into the market?—No, with the exception of Monachdy Farm, which my mother's grandfather owned. I know of no other case of late. Many, many years ago there were a great many farms sold there, by the Tyntes of Cefn Mably, but that is beyond my memory.

25,634. Assuming that there was a sale of the same nature, a considerable amount of land sold in the district, do you think there would be much competition for that land?—Well, I think there would, very probably.

25,635. And if in Wales we had a Purchase Act on the lines of the Irish Act, by which the Government advanced the money, do you think it would be taken much advantage of?—Well, it all depends upon this: If the tenants should be obliged to pay more per acre for that land than the average rentals now paid by them, I say it is better to be as they are, than even if they purchased their own holdings.

25,636. You consider that a tenant farmer under a large landowner is better off than a small freeholder?—Well, I say this, that if I was offered a freehold farm to-morrow, and I had the means of buying it, I would prefer being a tenant under Colonel Tynte.

25,637. Is that because your landlord would have to do the permanent repairs?—No, not at all, but having regard to the fact that my forefathers have lived on the estate, for I cannot say how much, further back than 103 years.

25,638. That is the home feeling?—Yes.

25,639. I think you said that it should not be possible that rents should be raised upon tenants' improvements?—Yes.

25,640. I suppose that is the general feeling in your district?—Yes, that is the most important point of all.

Mr. Grove.

25,641. About the matter of the railway rates, as you have actually put in the receipts, let me ask who found the trucks; the railway company?—The railway company.

25,642. Was it in one truck or two trucks, because that makes all the difference?—One truck.

25,643. Then I make the charge to be this: 6 miles at $\frac{7}{8}d.$, $5\frac{1}{4}d.$, two terminals of 3*d.* per ton, one at each end, 6*d.*, $11\frac{1}{4}d.$; the trucks $4\frac{1}{2}d.$ per ton ($4\frac{1}{2}d.$ for a distance of under 20 miles), making 1*s.* $3\frac{3}{4}d.$, and they are entitled by law to charge you 1*s.* 4*d.*, which they appear to have done, so that that is their full maximum charge?—Quite so.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,644. Have you game on your farm?—Oh, yes.

25,645. Does your landlord ever come to shoot?—No, never.

25,646. Neither the landlord nor the agent ever come to disturb you?—No, never.

25,647. I suppose you would welcome them if they came?—Certainly, I would.

25,648. Do you think if the game was left to the tenants altogether, and the keepers were done away with, there would be any game left in the country. I mean if the tenants were put to be the keepers?—I will give you an instance. The shooting of the farms in the Clydach Valley was in the hands of the Honourable Lord Aberdare; for some reason or other a keeper was sent there; soon after the keeper went there, the game were very much scarcer.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

25,649. How do you account for that? Did the keeper kill the game or what?—I think the conclusion arrived at by his employer after a time was that he killed the game himself.

25,650. Then with regard to the agricultural labourer, do you think it is possible that the wages of the agricultural labourer could be reduced, while the wages are high in other industries or not?—Impossible.

25,651. Then we cannot possibly get any redress in that way?—Not at all.

25,652. And you do consider, I suppose, that labourers are paid too well now, do you?—Yes, I do, because I look upon it in this way: I take each case upon its own merits, and pay wages accordingly.

Chairman.

25,653. A question is sent up by Mr. John Williams:—"Has Colonel Tynte raised his rents recently"?—No.

25,654. Then some questions by Mr. Vincent:—"With reference to the questions put to you by "Mr. Griffiths, do you know that some of the "assessment committees in Glamorganshire, "refuse to accept the rent as the basis of the "rateable value"?—That is rentals, I suppose?

25,655. I suppose so?—No, I have no knowledge, not in our district.

25,656. "Do not the committees send their own valuers." Can you answer that question?—I believe they employ an independent valuer.

25,657. "With regard to the case of rent "raising you mention, do you know more than "that the applications were made and the rent "was raised"?—I know the whole circumstances. The facts are these——

25,658. I think you told us the facts. Two people applied for the farm, and the rent was raised 50 per cent. and more?—Yes, my Lord.

25,659. "Was the landlord a large or a small one?"—Well, I believe he owns a large estate.

25,660. What is or was his name?—Mr. Walter de Winton, but I wish to say, I do not find fault with Mr. de Winton.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward John recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

1-158. 25,661. You were kind enough to come before us, and you gave your evidence at some considerable length. We shall be very glad to hear you, if there is anything fresh you want to say?—My Lord, I am not going to give a repetition.

Chairman—continued.

25,662. No, if you please?—Not one word.

25,663. You have told us a great deal about the cottages, and I understand now you are going to tell us some more about cottage accommodation?—I think, my Lord, I am entitled to give you what I may call evidence upon what was told you by Mr. Corbett, in London, in July.

25,664. We are very glad to get any evidence, but we are getting rather short of time, and we must ask you please to confine yourself entirely and as shortly as you can, to fresh matter. You want to speak upon the labourers' question upon which you spoke before. Now what have you to say?—If you will allow me, I think I am entitled to an explanation of a question I put to Mr. Knox yesterday. I think it ought to be cleared up.

25,665. What was that question?—It was a question I put to Mr. Knox.

25,666. Then you are coming forward to give rebutting evidence?—Yes, for the moment.

See 24,760–1, 25,748.

25,667. Then we will keep entirely to your rebutting evidence. We have all your evidence on the labour question about cottage accommodation, about allotments, and remedies, so that, if you please, we will keep entirely to the rebutting evidence. Now what is it that you wish to say?—I will at once refer to what was contained in my question yesterday to Mr. Knox. I think this Commission is entitled to the explanation, I am going to give you. I mentioned the fact in my question yesterday, that I wanted to prove that I lost an order for seeds for the East Glamorganshire estates of Miss Talbot, owing to my being the chairman of a meeting of farmers at Cowbridge. My position as chairman of that meeting was this, it was to get independent evidence from the farmers' point of view without being at all aggressive. It was to assist the farmers in coming to a conclusion. Following that, a tenant of Miss Talbot's came to me and told me: "I have an order for some permanent "pasture seeds for my son's farm."

25,668. What was the name of that gentleman?—Mr. Watts.—"He will not require "the seeds for three weeks." A few weeks elapsed, and he called upon me one Tuesday morning. On that Tuesday morning Mr. Knox was in Cowbridge. He called in the morning and informed me; "You are not to have "the order for seeds." I wish you to bear in mind that I am not assuming this order was given. I am assuming nothing. I could not assume that Mr. Watts wanted the seeds at all. I would not know the fact unless Mr. Watts told me. That must be thoroughly understood, nor do I wish to make any capital out of this at all, but I wish to be very clear upon this point. In conversation with Mr. Knox on that day,—there was a meeting of the Cowbridge Farmers' Club—I mentioned this fact to Mr. Knox. Mr. Knox very distinctly told me, that it was owing to my action in connexion with my being chairman of the Cowbridge Farmers' Association, of which I am honorary secretary. I then argued the point with Mr. Knox. I said that our meeting was by no means aggressive. It was simply to put the tenant farmers in a position to come forward and give evidence before the Commissioners. After that explanation, Mr. Knox and myself had a friendly conversation, and it ended in a shaking of hands, and Mr. Knox said he was sorry the thing had occurred. Those are the real facts that I wish to put before the Commission.

25,669. Then what do you wish us to understand?—Mr. Knox gave us a denial to it yesterday, and I have simply given the facts.

25,670. But do you wish to state, that Mr. Knox told you that he did not give you the order for the seeds, on account of your connexion with the Cowbridge Farmers' Association?—He withdrew the order—the order was withdrawn owing to my action in connexion with the Farmers' Association.

25,671. You distinctly state, that Mr. Knox told you that the order for seeds was withdrawn, on account of your having been secretary of the Farmers' Association?—That is so distinctly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,672. Mr. Knox said something more than that yesterday. He said that the Margam estate had been in the habit of dealing with someone else?—Mr. Knox gave what I consider an evasive reply. He said this, that the order was given to Messrs. Webb & Sons.

Sir John Llewelyn.

He stated further than that, that they were always in the habit of giving them orders for seeds.

Chairman.

25,673. Is that all you wish to say?—The other evidence I have to tender is of as much importance as what I gave before. It is not a repetition. I may tell you that to be very clear over this matter, I wrote to Mr. Corbett on Monday last to tell him I was going to give rebutting evidence with regard to the evidence that he gave on the 7th of July; I thought I would give him an opportunity of coming here. I want to refer particularly to the question and answer of Mr. Corbett, No. 5747. I say again emphatically that in no case of these waste lands sold by Lord Bute on May 29th, 1888, was he justified by ownership or title. Since then I have been endeavouring to put the matter honestly and rightly before your Commissioners. I think it is important, and in giving evidence before you, I do not think anybody would be justified in saying what is not correct, or without proving what he asserts. I am going to call particular attention, my Lord, to lot 25 of this particular sale of 1888.

See 5747, 26,734.

25,674. Did you mention that in your former evidence?—No, I did not.

Mr. Grove.

25,675. Was that the special lot that was mentioned?—No, it is not; it is another lot entirely. It is the lot, "Garden at Down Cross, "adjoining land of Lord Dunraven," then in the occupation of William Sweeting—an old Welsh name. The peculiarity of that is this: In the year 1867, or in the spring of 1868 neither Lord Bute nor his agents knew that this property was actually in existence. This Wm. Sweeting mentioned this fact to the then clergyman of Llanfihangel, that Lord Bute had no title to this strip of land, only that his grandfather had enclosed it, and his father had it, and he held it after his father. The then rector of Llanfihangel, advised Mr. Sweeting "for the "purpose of getting a title, you had better enter "this in the Court Leet; it will be on here in "Llanmaes in a very short time." Mr. Sweeting unfortunately took the clergyman's advice, and entered this in the court. Then Lord Bute's agents at the time gave him a receipt. I produce this receipt—this is on the 7th May 1868—to show you that the statement is correct. This receipt has no number. It is taken out of the official books. On this day, the Court Leet met at Llanmaes, on the 7th May 1868. Then following, in 1869, it gets an official number. I produce the receipt of 1869.

25,676. What date in 1869?—6th May 1869. There they produce an official number. Then following, up to 1887, when the last rent was paid, this Wm. Sweeting had an official number. Now, this land was sold at this public sale for the sum of 10*l.*

Chairman.

25,677. Who bought it?—It was bought by Llewellyn Thomas, a dealer, of Lisworney.

25,678. What became of Sweeting?—Sweeting lost the property, that had been in his grandfather's possession and his own possession down to 1887.

25,679. Did Sweeting get any compensation?—Not a farthing. I think it is right after my statement to you at Cowbridge, that I should put very clearly before you the position of these tenants, and prove to you, that Lord Bute had no right to sell a single perch of the land.

Mr. Grove.

25,680. May I ask how long it was in the possession of that family?—About 70 years.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,681. Without paying any rent?—Without paying any rent.

25,682. Absolutely?—Absolutely.

Chairman.

25,683. Was any right of pre-emption given to Wm. Sweeting by the Marquess of Bute?—I think not; in fact, this property was not known to Lord Bute in 1867.

25,684. When was the sale?—The sale was in 1888.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,685. But at the sale, was there any right of pre-emption given then to the sitting tenants?—No, I think not. I am sure there was not.

Chairman.

25,686. Is there anything else on that?—I have finished with that. I think again that I am entitled to rebut Mr. Corbett's evidence, in reference to his statement of the generosity and liberality of Lord Bute in giving these people the opportunity to buy their holdings by private treaty. I am dealing now with Mr. Corbett's answer to question 5748.

25,687. There is nothing about liberality there, is there?—He says, "It was the general "impression and opinion at that time that there "was a great hardship inflicted on these people." Then, further on, Mr. Corbett distinctly states that Lord Bute was anxious that these people should buy the freeholds at a reasonable time.

25,688. There is this at Q. 5856: "Lord Bute "is not a grasping landlord, who wants to get "the uttermost farthing for every bit of his "property; he would let these old tenants have "them on better terms than he would let "strangers have them"?—That is it.

25,689. And in the next question, 5857, he says: "We let them have them at what we "considered were very moderate prices, but not "fairly to be called nominal prices"?—That is so. That is the very point that I am emphatic about.

25,690. Now what do you want to say?—I have the whole of this sale book here. I will be as brief as possible, but I think this is a matter of importance.

25,691. Yes, it is of importance?—I will take the case, first of all, of lot 66 in this sale. This property was owned by the grandfather and the father. It was two gardens situated in Aberthin, and part of the common land of which Lord Bute is lord of the manor. The grandfather builds a house, the father again repairs the house, it was a common ordinary thatched cottage with a garden attached to it; following that, in the case of another large garden opposite the house, for each of which they paid 2*s.* 6*d.* a year, that is 5*s.* a year.

25,692. They paid it from the commencement?—They paid this 5*s.* a year from the commencement.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,693. For the garden?—For the two gardens, of course, the house they built themselves. In 1887 the present tenant built a stable at considerable expense on this property. He had not the slightest intimation that Lord Bute was going to sell this property at that particular time, notwithstanding the fact that he had spent this money upon this stable. Now I want to point out this. This tenant was particularly anxious to retain what he considered his birthright, and was afraid of how the market might go. He meets Mr. Corbett and buys it by private treaty. That is on the morning of the sale, May 29th, 1888.

Chairman.

25,694. He bought it by private treaty before the open sale?—Yes, quite so. Now I want to point out the extraordinary liberality of Lord Bute in this case. This poor man was a man with a large family of children living entirely on their labour; and, assuming that for this number of years Lord Bute got the value of that land, which was 5*s.* a year, he gets out of this man 60*l.* for 60 perches. You will find these are lots 66 and 67. It was 61 perches.

25,695. "Garden, Richd. Hugh, yearly, sold "by private treaty, 60*l.*, 39 perches"?—39 and 22 inclusive, that would be the cottage and garden. Assuming that 5*s.* a year would be the value of land that did not belong to Lord Bute, because this is part of common land, and I maintain that it did not belong to Lord Bute, but assuming that it did, 5*s.* was the value, and I want to put a question to you, gentlemen, was it a fair and average price to be got out of a farm, 60*l.* for 60 perches of common land, which this man had tilled, to make it of value?

25,696. I think we are getting rather near now to the question of title?—I am quite in your hands.

25,697. Mr. Richard Hugh paid this money from the commencement?—Yes, and unfortunately he was obliged to borrow the money to pay for it.

25,698. But I mean he paid 2*s.* 6*d.* a year for each of these plots, 22 and 39 perches, from the very beginning?—From the very beginning.

25,699. We had better not go into the question of title, but take it on its merits?—I have made that statement, and I think it proves a hardship.

25,700. We will not go into that. Let us take the case exactly on its merits, as it is?—Well, those are the facts of the case, 60*l.* for 60 perches of this waste land.

25,701. And your contention is, that that 60*l.* was entirely owing to the house and stable and other buildings, that the man had put on the land, and the cultivation he had given to the soil?—Exactly so. Then lot 45.

25,702. That is 1 rood and 20 perches, "Cottage, shed, and garden," tenant, "David Thomas;" nature of tenancy, "Lease for 60 years from May 1st, 1838," rent, 2*s.* 6*d.*; and that was sold by private treaty for 55*l.* Is that right?—That is right.

25,703. What do you say about that?—In that case David Thomas was unfortunately executor of his father-in-law. He bought this property assuming that his father-in-law was the real owner, and paid the Marquis of Bute this sum; that is about nine years ago. He paid his relation 66*l.*, retaining his share. Then again, this very house was sold at this very sale.

25,704. He had already given 66*l.* to his relation for this house, and then he had to buy it again for 55*l.*, if I understand it rightly, from the Marquis of Bute afterwards?—That is so. These are the facts, and I think they should be known. Then there is another, lot 70.

25,705. That is 2 roods and 29 perches, two cottages and gardens; present tenant, Richard Morgan; nature of tenancy, yearly; purchase money, 40*l.*—That is so.

Chairman—continued.

25,706. What yearly rent was paid for that? 2*s.* 6*d.* a year.

25,707. The same as before?—The same as before. This had been rather a wet bit of ground, but in this case Richard Morgan's father built these houses in the year 1887, that is a year before the sale; he spent 22*l.* in putting a new bedroom floor in each cottage; he had no notion at this period, although he built the house, that his father had taken 52 years ago,—his own age is now 75—he built the two cottages at an expense of 127*l.*, and he spent 22*l.* in 1887; still this property was sold in 1888. The selling of that property, I say, is another hardship. If you wished it, I could enumerate a great many more cases, but I think that for the purpose of my contention, that will be quite sufficient. I could give you the cases of a dozen others, but it would be only a repetition of what I have given you; I think it would be advisable to finish there. I want to be very clear again. I have finished now upon the question of Lord Bute. I have another question noted here. It is a question to my mind, that I should like to answer, but I do not suppose you intend to answer it. I should like to know by what process has Lord Bute made these properties his freehold, and what right Lord Bute had, to confiscate the property of these poor people in the manner that he has done. That is a question I intend to bring forward at the earliest possible period.

25,708. Your contention is that it ought to to have been a perpetual ground rent?—A perpetual ground rent.

25,709. And as I understand your contention is, that it was a perpetual ground rent of 2*s.* 6*d.* a year, for each plot?—Exactly so.

25,710. And that the tenants have built on these plots, on the understanding, that that was to go on for ever?—Exactly so. I quoted just now one lot, and it is applicable to the whole of the lots, I mean the lot sold to Mr. Higginson, lot 25.

25,711. That is 35 perches, garden at Down Cross adjoining land of Lord Dunraven, the present tenant is Mr. William Sweeting. Is that the same man?—That is the man I referred to. What strikes me as peculiar is this. As that is land adjoining the road, and abutting on land of the Earl Dunraven, by what possible chance could Lord Bute, who does not own one single acre in that neighbourhood—by what possible act could he get that property?

25,712. It is land lying between the road and Lord Dunraven's property, and abutting on waste land?—Exactly. No doubt it was taken from the road—filched by him, I should say, as many did do in those days. To my mind, I think it is almost impossible that this property ever belonged to Lord Bute. He was simply protecting it, as lord of the manor. That is my contention.

25,713. You do not expect us to go into the question of title?—Oh, no, not for a moment.

25,714. You are perfectly at liberty, of course, to express your own opinion?—Thank you.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,715. Just to understand you, what you contend is this, that this was manorial property, and has been treated as though it were private property?—Exactly so. There are the receipts (handing).

Chairman.

25,716. Is that the first receipt without a number to it?—Without a number.

25,717. That was for 1*s.* a year?—One shilling a year.

25,718. The first has no number; then the next year it is No. 491?—Yes.

25,719. Is there anything further?—I do not know that I made myself clear about two matters. It will not occupy your time more than two minutes, if you will allow me to read this: "I think the farm labourers are in a better "position in this part, than in any part of the "Kingdom at present, but the cottage accommo- "dation is bad; and I think the system of la- "bourers' cottages attached to farms, is most "pernicious and demoralising. I think la- "bourers should have yearly tenancies of the "cottages and gardens. We will then have a "better class of labourers; and I am of opinion "it would be better for farmers, and for "many reasons, especially in getting skilled "labourers, as the best labourers are aware "that there are only attached cottages for "them." I am very pleased to think that I can give testimony now, that Miss Talbot is now doing, what I am pressing in the few words I have just read to you. In the villages close by Cowbridge, she is making splendid detached cottages for the labourers, and that principle, I am told, the agents are going to adopt, that the labourers should have detached cottages as yearly tenants. I am told, up to the present time, Miss Talbot has spent from 6,000*l.* to 7,000*l.* in building detached cottages. I am very glad that the agent has seen the principle of fairness to the labourer, as well as fairness to the farmers. I am afraid most of my customers do not agree with me there; they think that the cottages ought to be attached to the farms, but I do not agree with that. I think the labourer is entitled to the same protection as the farmer, and that he should be subject to six or even 12 months' notice, for the reasons I have given in that short paragraph.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,720. What do you say is the present position—that the labourers live in the farm-houses?—In some instances the cottages are attached to the farms.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,721. Let with the farms?—Let with the farms, part and parcel of the farm; the farm labourers are attached on those cottages.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,722. Then the farmer has the control of the letting?—That is so, and the labourers are generally weekly or fortnightly tenants.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

25,723. And you do not think that is satisfactory?—I do not think so, for a moment.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,724. You do not object to the cottages being on the farms do you?—I have strong proofs about it, but I have taken the advice of the Chairman, that the time is short. My experience is this; that if the labourers are independent of the farmhouses, there is a greater possibility of getting better labourers and retaining them, than there is with the system of having cottages on the farm, buildings connected with the farmhouses.

25,725. Then if a labourer has to walk two or three miles to the farm, you think that would be better?—I have done it myself. I have walked three miles night and morning many times.

25,726. And got wet before going back?—Yes, and obliged to work all the day after.

Mr. Grove.

25,727. Did you walk that because you were obliged to, and could not get proper accommodation nearer?—That would not apply in these days; it suited me to walk just then.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,728. But you do not think that the cottagers being far off, is a recommendation?—Oh, no, I have not said so. I know what I have said is not agreeable to some of the tenant farmers. With respect to that, it is only my opinion.

25,729. They like to have them on the farm?—I say that the cottages should be detached from the farm, and there should be gardens attached to those cottages, so that it will be worth the while of the labourers to remain there; and if they have a few words with the farmers they might be reconciled in a fortnight's time, whereas if the labourer is subject to a week or a fortnight's notice to leave the house and garden, and it is attached to the farm, the man will be turned right out into the road in consequence of some disagreement, and perhaps will have to leave the garden behind him, stocked with garden stuff. I say it is as unfair for the labourer to be turned out of his cottage at a week's or a fortnight's notice, as it is for the farmer to be forced to leave his farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,730. That only refers to the notice; why not give him the same notice, as he would have in the village or in the town?—That is my contention.

25,731. You do not object to that?—No, certainly not.

25,732. Do you not think the labourer would be better off still if he had a cow, say, and lived on the farm?—Yes, if he is subject to 12 months' notice, decidedly.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,733. So your point is not that he should live in the village?—No, my point is this, that he should be subject to six or 12 months' notice, not a fortnight's notice. Then a few words as to consolidation of farms. In my experience in the business I am now in, and have been in for the last 25 years, I contend strongly that the consolidation of farms is the worst thing that can happen to the country, from two standpoints which I will touch on very briefly. I think that taking the increase of the farming population, farmers' sons and daughters would acquire farms themselves. We know already, that if there is a farm to be let, there are 20 or 30 applicants for it. The reason is this, that the farmers' sons and daughters brought up to farm purposes, have no other occupation to fall back upon but farming. Owing to the consolidation of farms, the number of farms is not so great as it was years ago. My contention is this. I think this is pernicious, and does a great deal of harm to the country. I contend again, that from the landlord's point of view, it is decidedly better for him to let the farms in small allotments, than in larger ones. You might want a reason for that, and my reason is this: that the small farms have not participated in the reductions given to large farms. My contention is, again, that landlords might get better rents for farms, say, from 120 to 160 acres, to what they get for larger farms. So that, I think, it would pay landlords not to consolidate the farms into large takings, for the sake of the farming population, for the sake of themselves, and for the sake of the country. I think I have finished.

25,734. Do you think they do consolidate farms now? Is not that a thing of the past, rather? Have not the landlords ceased to do it?—Well, it has been done very recently.

25,735. Has it?—Oh, yes.

25,736. Could you name instances?—Oh, yes, I could.

Mr. Grove.

25,737. Could you give any probable reason why farms have been consolidated?—The argument is this: it saves expense in the management of estates and buildings.

Mr. Grove—continued.

25,738. And keeping up buildings and repairs?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,739. I fail to see the temptation for the landlords to consolidate now, and I should not think they would do it to any large extent?—But, unfortunately, it has been done.

25,740. Do you think it is going on?—I think not.

25,741. I should imagine that a landlord, who consulted his own interests now, would not consolidate very much?—I think that opinion is growing among the large landowners.

25,742. It has been done in the past, no doubt?—Yes.

Chairman.

25,743. A question is handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Mr. Corbett said at Q. 5748, 'These "'pieces of land were at the time, or had been, "'held upon leases which distinctly showed "'that they would have to give them up at "'the expiration of the leases, all but two "'cases.'" Do you deny this?—I deny it; of course I do.

25,744. But you mentioned some leases just now?—Out of the 70 odd lots that were sold at that sale, there were but 21 leases; about 49 were without.

25,745. Then this statement by Mr. Corbett that there were but two cases, is not correct?—Certainly not.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,746. All but 49?—All but 49. There were 71 lots sold, and about 21 of those were leaseholds.

Chairman.

25,747. Mr. Corbett's statement was not correct?—Not correct; that is my contention, any way.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 25,762.

Mr. EDWARD KNOX recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

See 24,760, 25,667.

25,748. You heard Mr. John's statement, that you spoke to him, and told him about those seeds, and said the seeds would not be required. Have you anything to say about that?—I think it will save time, if I simply tell you that I went over this farm with Mr. Watts, either in December or January, and there was a field that we thought was not worth ploughing, and had better be laid down, and I said to him, "I will give "you the seeds, if you will lay it down, and we will put it down grass in the agreement." I thereupon wrote to Webb's a short time after and described the nature of the soil, and told them I should want some seeds, but I would let them know later on, when I wanted them. After a short time, a few months afterwards, I heard from Watts. He said, "I am ready for the seeds.' I wrote to Messrs. Webb's, and they sent the seeds direct to Mr. Watts. I had no intention whatever, as Miss Talbot paid for the seeds, that Watts should buy them, and it would be only natural that we should get them from Messrs. Webb's. We have always dealt with Messrs. Webb's, and to a very large extent, for the home farm. I do not remember purchasing anything from Mr. Edward John, except that he bought a threshing machine for me at Sir Joseph Spearman's sale.

Chairman—continued.

25,749. I do not think that touches the question. Will you listen to the account Mr. John gave us. (The shorthand writer read the evidence of the previous witness relating to this incident.) Is that correct?—I do not think I ever mentioned, in fact I am certain that I never mentioned, the seeds to Mr. John at that meeting. We simply talked upon general subjects, and I asked him what grievances he himself had to complain of. I remember one of his grievances was, that Miss Talbot employed so many Scotchmen on the estate. I said, "At any "rate, I am an Irishman, I am not a Scotch-"man." I cannot help thinking that the misconception has occurred, through Mr. Edward John misunderstanding what Mr. Watts said to him. I never gave him the order. If I had given Mr. John the order, it would have been written. We had a general conversation, and I am sure Mr. Edward John is entirely under a misconception.

25,750. But do I understand you distinctly to deny the statement, that you told Mr. John that the order for seeds would not be given, on account of his connexion with the Farmers' Association?—I distinctly deny it, and I do not think, I should be such a fool as to say so.

25,751. I only want to know; you distinctly deny that?—I distinctly deny that.

Mr. Grove.

25,752. In the conversation with Mr. John, was the Farmers' Association in any way alluded to?—There was no Farmers' Association, I think, formed at that time. I think there would be a farmers' meeting, and we were talking about farmers' grievances generally; and that was the reason I asked Mr. John, what his grievance was. I said, "You are not a farmer, "what is your grievance?"

25,753. Then you had a conversation with him, as to this meeting of farmers?—Oh, yes, it was mentioned during the conversation.

Mr. Grove—continued.

25,754. The meeting of farmers, I suppose, was, if I gathered that rightly, I do not wish to assume anything at all, was it in consequence of the Land Commission wanting evidence; was that so?—I believe it was a meeting of the farmers, which was going on at the same time as the meeting of the Cowbridge Farmers' Club, because I am a member of the Cowbridge Farmers' Club, and we heard then, that there was a meeting going on at the same time of other farmers.

25,755. A meeting of tenant farmers?—Of tenant farmers.

25,756. With the view of preparing evidence for the Commission?—Yes.

25,757. You did have a conversation, then, about that gathering of farmers?—It was mentioned in conversation, certainly.

25,758. And generally as to the grievances of farmers?—Yes, generally as to farmers' grievances.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,759. You just now told us that you buy your seeds of Messrs. Webb's. (I do the same.) Do you never buy any local seeds?—I do not remember having bought any local seeds; I should not like to answer straight off; but as a rule we buy all our seeds either from Scotland or from Messrs. Webb's; a great many from Drummond, but principally from Messrs. Webbs; and whenever I supply farmers with seeds for laying down grass land, they always come from Messrs. Webb's.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,760. Did you give Mr. Watts any authority to order seeds from anybody?—None whatever.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,761. So that if he talked of it to Mr. John, it must have been on his own impulse?—I think that is where the misconception arose. He thought that, very likely, he was going to order the seeds himself, and he misunderstood me, when I said that I would order them.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward John re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

e above. 25,762. You wish to deny the statement of Mr. Knox absolutely?—My plain answer is this. You could never imagine that I assumed that Mr. Watts wanted seeds. I want to put myself in this position: how was I to know the fact that there was so much seed wanted, if I was not told so?

Chairman—continued.

25,763. I do not want to know that?—But I want to clear myself to the Commissioners. Mr. Knox did not order the seeds of me.

Chairman—continued.

25,764. But you stand to your statement, that Mr. Knox told you that he did not order the seeds of you, because you were a member of this Cowbridge Farmers' Association?—Mr. Knox did not, in the first instance, order the seeds of me.

25,765. But he told you that?—Mr. Watts told me, I was to have an order for the seeds.

25,766. Mr. Knox told you?—No, Mr. Knox did not, he never told me that Mr. Watts was to buy seeds of me, but Mr. Watts did.

25,767. I want to be quite clear about this. In your conversation with Mr. Knox did he tell you, "I have not ordered the seeds of you, "because you belong to the Farmers' Associ-"ation"?—No. What he said distinctly was this, "The reason why you have not had to "supply the seeds, was because of your con-"nexion with the Cowbridge Farmers' Associ-"ation."

25,768. That is what I wanted to know?—I have given his reply as exact as possible.

25,769. What did Mr. Knox say to you exactly?—I may say, my Lord, that I put the question to Mr. Knox distinctly and clearly.

Chairman—continued.

25,770. What was it?—I asked him the reason why he stopped Mr. Watts buying the seeds of me. Mr. Knox's reply was immediate and emphatic. He said, "For this reason, for "the action you have taken with reference to "the Farmers' Association." I then very clearly put my position——

25,771. That is all we want. You assert that positively?—That is what did pass, word for word.

25,772. That is what you say passed, word for word?—I say so.

25,773. Mr. Knox says that not one word of that conversation passed?—I do not think he can say that, if he says the truth.

25,774. That is what he says. You say that conversation did take place?—I do say so.

25,775. And Mr. Knox says it did not?—If Mr. Knox remembers the conversation, he will be satisfied that I am telling the truth. Perhaps you might examine Mr. Watts. I can get Mr. Watts, and no doubt he will tell the truth.

The witness withdrew

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. DAVID WALTER SAVOURS called and examined.

Chairman.

25,776. Where do you live?—Fontygary.

25,777. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am a tenant farmer.

25,778. What is the size of your holding?—The size of my holding at Fontygary is 160 acres, but I also manage a farm of 400 acres for my mother, in the neighbourhood.

25,779. Have you any objection to state the rent of the 160 acres?—210*l.*, including tithes.

25,780. And your mother's farm?—370*l.* A large portion of the 400 acres, is rough land. The rent is 370*l.*, but that does not include the tithe.

25,781. Are you commissioned to speak by any body of persons, or do you speak for yourself?—I speak for the Farmers' Association. I think I ought to explain, that we met at different times, and took a great deal of care in preparing evidence. Part of the evidence has been already given, and the evidence I should like to give now is generally upon cultivation, and those subjects that have been rather lightly touched upon, at the previous sittings of the Commission.

The first point that I would wish to call your attention to, is the reduced circumstances the farmers find themselves in. We have passed through a period of very serious depression, and it has had a very serious effect upon farmers, so far as their circumstances are concerned. That is a matter of course. The only suggestion I should make is, that there should be a sum of money available for farmers to borrow; for instance, that the Government should advance sums of money upon a very moderate rate of interest. It is very important that every farmer should have sufficient money to carry his farm on properly.

25,782. Do you mean for farming purposes, or for the purchase of the farm?—For farming purposes. As to cultivation, it is absolutely necessary that expenses should be curtailed, as much as possible. In considering labour, it is hardly possible to reduce our labourers' wages at present, as they are paid high wages in other parts, and in other undertakings, and it is impracticable and out of all question, to reduce the cost of labour. It is almost impossible to reduce the rates, but I wish to point out that it is very desirable, that every ratepayer should take a great interest in parish matters, so as to assist the guardians and officials in spending money as judiciously as possible. As a rule ratepayers take very small interest in public matters.

The purchase of seeds and manures forms a very important item in checking expenditure. There are societies, through which manure and seeds can be obtained, but the rule is, that the cost of such seeds and manure should be paid for at the time of ordering. I do not think there is any great or particular advantage in joining, those societies. I think in the open market, provided you have a sufficient supply of money, you could buy fairly good and fairly cheap seeds. The great and important matter is, that the farmer should have sufficient money to carry on the business properly.

So far as the rent is concerned, and that is one item of expenditure, abatements have been made in a great many instances, but it is very desirable that permanent reductions should take the place of abatements, so that a reduction on rateable value should be taken advantage of, which is impossible at present.

Then it would be a great advantage to the tenant farmers, if there was some really good method, by which the tenants might secure compensation for permanent improvements. It is of the utmost importance, that he should keep his farm in as good and strong condition as possible. The cost of the management of a farm in good condition, is really less than managing a farm in a weak or poor condition; and it is of the greatest importance that the farmers should be induced, as far as possible, to lay out money on farms and to get them into a thorough state of efficiency. A farmer takes a number of years to get a farm in first-rate condition; it is the work very often of generations; and it is very desirable that a system should be in vogue by which a tenant should be able to claim full compensation, for all the money which he has expended on the farm, in the way of permanent improvements.

Then owing to the altered conditions in which we find ourselves, it is necessary to use a very much larger quantity of machinery, and machinery of rather a costly character. It is necessary to go to some expense to lay down this machinery, for the purpose of feeding stock. I do not know whether, in claiming compensation, a tenant would be able to claim for the improvements he would be thus making, according to the custom of the country. It is really necessary, in large farms, at all events now, that steam should be utilised.

Then it was thought desirable to encourage the growth of other crops besides wheat crops, and to turn out a number of small things, such as fruit and vegetables, and poultry farming. There are some spots, even in the vale of Glamorgan, where such things could be carried on to advantage, but only very small spots, I am afraid. Then it was felt as to the law of trespass, that under the law of trespass a great many farmers, especially near large towns, are very much annoyed by persons going over their land, for picking black berries or mushrooms, and causing great damage. We, ourselves, are at a great loss on that account, through persons going through our land, and treading down corn and doing a great deal of damage.

One of the witnesses said there are no accounts kept. We have kept our accounts regularly during the past 30 or 40 years, and we do still. I forgot to mention, that it would be a great advantage, if farmers were induced to lay down arable land to grass. If there was some arrangement made between landlord and tenant, whereby arable land should be laid down to grass, it would be a great advantage to the tenant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,783. You say it should be laid down to grass, by arrangement between the landlord and tenant. Do you mean that sufficient time should be given to a tenant to recoup himself for the outlay?—That is just it. I attach no importance to the first outlay of buying the seeds, but some arrangement should be made, whereby the rents and rates might be borne partly by the landlord.

25,784. I suppose the benefits would not be reaped in the first or second years, but over a period of time?—About 15 or 20 years.

25,785. You were speaking about the depression being serious. When do you consider that the present depression began?—In the year 1879 or 1878.

25,786. It has been coming, in your opinion, for the last 13 years?—Yes.

25,787. Two or three witnesses have spoken of what I should call the present depression, as having begun about three years ago?—I should not say so.

25,788. You are now speaking of the corn depression?—Yes.

25,789. Is that in consequence of the depression in the price of corn?—No doubt it is in a great measure.

25,790. Do you grow much wheat?—Yes.

25,791. Do you consider the depression has existed in the price of cattle and sheep, so long as that?—Oh, no.

25,792. How long should you say the depression, from a farmer's point of view, has existed?—That is, during the last three or four years. It has got very low this year.

25,793. Do you know the reason of the depression in the prices at present?—I should say a great deal more land is put down to grass, and a great deal more sheep and cattle raised in the Kingdom.

25,794. Do you do much in the way of dairy produce?—Not much.

25,795. Merely grow corn and fatten animals?—That is all.

25,796. You say the depression for corn commenced when—?—1878 or 1879.

25,797. And the other?—About three or four years ago.

25,798. What are the points on which you wish to say that the custom requires reform?—A very serious matter, is the laying down arable land to grass, in our neighbourhood. It takes quite 25 to 30 years to get a good face on the ground, and in some cases, it hardly pays the rates and taxes.

25,799. Does it require reform in any other respect?—There are some points I could mention, but I unfortunately have mislaid my paper just now.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

25,800. Mr. Alderman Gwilym Jones spoke about walls in the hilly districts. Have you made any walls?—Yes, a great many walls.

25,801. At present the custom would give you compensation, I think, extending over a period of 14 years?—I do not know.

25,802. If it was so, would you consider that adequate?—Oh, no.

25,803. Have you done much drainage?—We have done a great deal of drainage. I quite agree that the drains should be paid for, as long as they were in thorough good order—as long as they were useful to the land.

25,804. That compensation would only come into operation, in the case of a change of tenancy?—I should think so.

25,805. Have there been many cases of change of tenancy in your neighbourhood?—Yes, several.

25,806. And in those cases, has it been referred to arbitration by the incoming and outgoing tenants?—In nearly every case.

25,807. Do you consider that that form of arriving at a fair price, between the outgoing and incoming tenant, is an expensive form of procedure?—I do not think it is so very expensive. No doubt there is some money paid. The two umpires are paid, and some time is lost on the part of the tenant.

25,808. Do they usually agree amongst themselves, or is it necessary to call in an umpire as a rule?—I believe an umpire is called in, as a rule.

Professor Rhŷs.

25,809. You hold a farm for which you pay 210*l.* rent, and your mother pays 370*l.* for her farm. Those are pretty good sized farms. You must have a good many men servants on those farms?—Only one man servant.

25,810. Are they day labourers?—All workmen.

25,811. Where do they live; have they cottages?—On the Rhoose Farm, we have 10 cottages.

25,812. Have they gardens?—They have gardens, and very excellent gardens.

25,813. Of good size?—Quite sufficient. They have very good gardens.

25,814. Do any of the workmen keep a cow?—No.

25,815. On the other farm how many have you?—One only.

25,816. Then the question of accommodation for farm servant men does not arise so much in your case?—No.

25,817. Do you know if any of your neighbours have a large number of farm servants, or is it generally day workmen?—I think there are very few servants kept now, compared with what there were a good many years ago.

25,818. I was going to ask you, how they were accommodated so far as regards sleeping accommodation?—I could not tell you that.

25,819. I understand you to say, that it would be a good thing, if the Government would lend money to help the farmers to work their farms?—Yes, to help the farmers.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

25,820. The farming interest is a very important one, but we could not get on, for instance, without shopkeepers and people of that sort?—No, I suppose not.

25,821. Would not they, do you think, say that they would like to borrow money from the Government at low interest?—I daresay they would make that remark, but farming is such a very important industry. It does not affect one person; it affects every single person in the Kingdom.

25,822. Would not the butcher, the grocer, and the baker be able to make a case as to their own importance?—I do not think so.

25,823. I am afraid that we should be met by this sort of parallel demand?—The only person I would be afraid of, would be the taxpayer—the general public.

25,824. The general public would have something to say, before that sort of thing could be got I should think, and they would be very likely to start that sort of argument, would they not?—I think they would.

25,825. I think you would find, every class of the community would like to borrow money in that way, and I am not sure that some of us Commissioners would not like to do so. Do you not think an argument of that sort would be fatal?—They would consider in time, that this money would assist in filling their own pockets.

25,826. I am only calling your attention to the sort of thing that might be urged against that idea?—There would be a greater amount of money in circulation. Provided each farmer farmed thoroughly well, and got the land into first-rate order, there would be a greater quantity of money in circulation, and more labourers employed.

25,827. Would it repay the money put on; do you think?—There would be no loss to the Government; they would pay interest.

25,828. Then you consider that they would be able to make the farms pay?—Yes, and refund the money.

25,829. Suppose they failed to make the farms pay, how would the Government get this money back?—There must be an arrangement, of course.

25,830. I have little imagination, and I am sorry to say, I do not quite see how it would work?—It is proposed, that the Irish farmers should have money from the Government to buy the farms, and why should not the Welsh?

25,831. That is to buy the farms; this is to work the farms?—Yes, this is to work.

25,832. Some people even object to the suggestion, that the Government should lend money to buy farms, but this is going still further. Has this thing been seriously thought out by your association?—No, it has not come before the association. We came to an arrangement, that we should each choose the subjects that had been lightly thought of or not sufficiently brought before the Commissioners, as we wished it to be.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,833. Are you a relation of Mr. Jenkins of Rhoose?—No; I did live in Rhoose, for a number of years—my whole lifetime really.

Mr. Grove.

25,834. Do you agree with what has been stated by several witnesses, that if the tenant farmer can buy his own land, that the land would be more attended to and made to yield better?—Yes, I quite agree with that.

25,835. In speaking of the low price of meat you did not mention foreign competition. Surely the enormous quantity of foreign meat that is brought into the country, is a very serious element, is it not, in having reduced the price of English meat?—Yes, no doubt.

25,836. Then you have not mentioned the question of a land court. Have you a witness coming who could take up that point, or will you give shortly your views. Are you in favour of a land court?—It is such a very important matter, it wants a lot of thinking out. No doubt there is a grievance on small estates, I daresay it would be very useful for the landlord and tenant to go to, in case of a disagreement between them, rather than the tenant should lose the farm.

25,837. Whatever was done in that direction, you would like the tenant and landlord, first of all, to have an opportunity of conferring together and trying to get over all their difficulties, and you would only resort to the court in the case of absolute failure of other methods?—Yes.

25,838. You spoke of fruit culture. Do you think it could be utilised largely in the county of Glamorgan?—Not largely.

25,839. What fruit do you suppose would answer best?—It all depends upon the situation of the spot, and the town it borders upon. For instance, it is no use to grow many strawberries near collieries, but near a town like Cardiff, it would be useful to grow strawberries.

25,840. We have had evidence that there is large profit from strawberries in some cases, and it appears to me desirable to cultivate them. You speak of the use of steam machinery, and you think steam machinery becomes necessary on large farms?—Almost on every farm of any size a steam engine is kept.

25,841. You would treat the expenditure on steam machinery, as a matter which ought to be compensated for, in the event of giving up the farm?—Yes, I would, fixed machinery.

25,842. And buildings necessary for them?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

25,843. Do you consider it would be well for landlords, to pay part of the rates?—We have had that before us.

25,844. There are some cases, where the landlords do now pay the tithe and the rates?—I do not think it is a matter of very great importance who pays it. I think at present, at all events, it is desirable that the tenants should pay the rates, so as to induce them to take a part, and take an interest in parish matters. What

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

I am afraid of is, if the landlords paid the rates, there would be a lack of public life; they would take less interest in public matters.

25,845. It would be one way of paying the rents?—Yes.

25,846. Then, with regard to the money to be advanced by Government, is it not owing to this exceeding depression we are labouring under, that you want this advance. You do not want it generally?—Of course every tenant would pay back to the Government, as soon as possible.

25,847. Is it not the extreme depression that we have come to, which calls for this?—Yes, undoubtedly.

25,848. You consider that we are in a deeper state of depression than we have been at all heretofore as farmers?—Oh, yes.

25,849. Then with regard to compensation for improvements, do you not think that the improvements should be valued as they stand, whether it is in buildings, or walls, or planting thorns against walls, and the drains. A man may lay out a lot of money upon drains, and he neglects them, and they are all choked, which is often the case?—You mean payment by results?

25,850. Yes?—No doubt, but it is so difficult to make a valuation. Supposing, for instance, a quarry was levelled and a valuer was brought to the spot and the quarry shown him; and supposing the ground was made quite even and nice, how would you ask the valuer to value? What material has he to work upon? How can he tell what labour and skill has been expended upon it?

25,851. He cannot correctly estimate that sort of thing, but a man used to that kind of work would calculate nearly?—It may be two days for a labourer, and it may be 100 days for a labourer.

25,852. It depends upon the quantity of soil taken away, and you may judge by that?—Quite so.

25,853. Then the implements used on a farm now, are far more expensive than they were?—Yes.

25,854. When we had the old Welsh plough and harrow, you could carry all the implements nearly on your back, but it is not the case now?—No, it is not.

25,855. It is chiefly arable land now?—Chiefly arable land.

25,856. Have not the tenants lost much by this change of bringing the land into pasture, in the way of implements? Their implements have become useless, have they not?—Yes, but I do not think their loss has been very much on that score, because new implements are coming out continuously, and it is necessary to keep pace with the times, and have new implements.

25,857. The farmer must have had implements before?—It is a great loss no doubt to him that there is so much land put down to pasture, and it is a great loss also to the public, no doubt.

25,858. With regard to the trespasses, do you consider that the blackberries and mushrooms should be left to drop to the ground? How would you improve the law of trespass? Do you think the tenants should gather them themselves, and be paid for them?—Yes, I think so, as they pay rates and taxes, and pay for the land they should gather them, if they wish. At present we cannot get a mushroom; other people get them all.

25,859. You spoke with regard to accounts. Can you produce accounts for the last 30 or 40 years?—I believe I can.

25,860. Can you furnish the Commissioners with an abstract of your accounts?—Yes, I can produce all the accounts I have got.

25,861. I think it would be a most useful thing. We have not been able to obtain anything like it; at any rate not a full estimate of the expenses of the farm. You say that the land is rather slow coming to pasture; it would take some time?—Yes, a very long time.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

25,862. What is the nature of your soil?—Clay.

25,863. On the limestone?—Yes, on the limestone, and the limestone is very near the surface.

25,864. Do you consider a farmer can keep more stock upon an arable farm than he can upon a pasture farm? On which farm do you think he can keep the most stock, on arable or pasture?—I should say on good pasture; pasture well laid down.

25,865. In the summer he may, certainly. Then you admit, that we are under very severe depression at the present time?—Oh, yes, terrible.

25,866. Do you not think that rents should be generally lowered?—Oh, yes.

The witness withdrew

Mr. Thomas Morgan called and examined.

Chairman.

See 808.

25,867. Where do you live?—Colhugh Villa, Llantwit Major.

25,868. You gave evidence before the Commission at Cowbridge?—Yes, I did.

25,869. Have you anything further you wish to say?—Yes, something quite different. I was asked to appear here to-day. I did not think of appearing. I objected to it, because all I had to say concerning myself I said at Cowbridge, but the farmers met at Cowbridge, and knowing that I knew a great deal about the country for the last 30 years, especially with respect to 10 or 12 miles round Cowbridge. They thought that I ought to give my evidence for the public, and they asked me to do so, as they were not prepared to come, although they promised to come for themselves, but when the time came near, they found, for some reason best known to themselves, that they could not come. I, consequently, have consented to give evidence.

25,870. What further evidence have you?—What I have to say is this, first as to the over-preservation of game, and its effect on growing crops, and the ruinous devastation caused by the game. The game devour the crops, which are grown at great expense. When there is over-preservation of rabbits especially, and pheasants, they go into the crops, and cause the devastation, which has been ruinous to some tenants I know. I am prepared to give the names of two or three, who have just asked me what is to become of them in the present situation.

25,871. Kindly name them?—The first I shall name is Mrs. Thomas, who lived formerly at Herbert's Farm, under Mr. Talbot, I believe, about 13 years ago, or somewhere about that time, she had to leave that place, after being there 20 or 30 years. I was very much acquainted with her, and had dealings with her, and knew her perfectly well; I lived close to her, within a few miles, and I knew her testimony was perfectly true.

Chairman—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,872. When did she leave the farm?—About 13 years ago.

25,873. That was in Mr. Talbot's lifetime?—Yes. She had to leave her farm on account of the over-preservation of game on the Margam estate. The person who rented the game from Mr. Talbot was Mr. Stacey.

25,874. Was it near Llandough?—Yes, between Llandough and St. Mary's Church. She had to leave that place penniless—I will not say anything more about her—and the place was let to another man called Evans, who is working now on the railway, as a porter at Cowbridge Station. He came also to the same end as the first tenant, about two years ago, I should think now.

Chairman.

25,875. What is the other case?—The case of Mrs. Gwyn, now living at a farm at St. Mary's Church.

25,876. On what estate is that?—On the Talbot estate again.

25,877. But it is another farm?—Yes.

25,878. Why is she leaving now?—I cannot tell you exactly on what account, she has refused to keep it up, but she has told me nine days ago that she lost some years ago in this way; that she had a field of wheat, and it was looking as if it was corning right, and she went out one evening to see when she could cut this field of wheat, and to her great astonishment, when she walked round she found patches the size of this table, about three or four yards square, where the heads of the wheat had been cut into within 8 inches or so of the ground, and the heads laying on the ground. She knew who had done it, or fancied so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,879. Do you mean cut with a sickle?—Yes, with a sharp instrument, whatever it was; it was not done by the rabbits or anything of that kind, but by an instrument. She went round the field, and found several places in the same way. She called Mr. David J. Jenkins, of Great Frampton, to come and see it, and after that, I believe, he called Mr. Jenkins, of Llanmihangel, who was very well known, to accompany him to the place; he did accompany him to the place, and they valued the damage done in the field, if I remember right, at about 12*l.* to 15*l.* She took a bill to Mrs. Stacey, to ask her to pay that amount for damage which was done by somebody at all events, and she told her who she believed they were, that they were her keepers. Mrs. Stacey said, "You cannot prove it." She said, "No, because I did not see them do it, but," she said, "some one must do it, and for a purpose too."

Chairman.

25,880. When was this?—About seven years ago, or it may be five years ago, something of that sort. This is her own story to me. I thought Mr. Jenkins was coming to give evidence, but I have not seen him; he is very unwell. He went to Mrs. Stacey, who would not deny that it had been done, but she was asking by whom. Well, Mrs. Gwyn could not prove by whom; she knew it was done. However, Mrs. Stacey did not pay her a farthing; she left her alone without anything. This year again, she tells me she has lost very nearly 10 acres of barley. It is not exactly what they eat, and tread down, but when corn is coming pretty near ready, then they tread it down, and it grows and it mixes with the other, and ruins the whole crop, and makes it worse in comparison to what it ought to be, if it was in a sound state. If you tread anything down, it will grow when it is wet, in a bad condition, and ruin all the other crop. She says she has lost by that 10 acres pretty near this year, owing to the game, that is the rabbits and the pheasants.

25,881. Is that farm let to a shooting tenant?—Yes, the advertisement has been now in the papers for I do not know how many months, "Llandough Castle and 15 acres of ground." It is offered month by month to the public, to be let with the game on the farms altogether, which means the parish of Llandough mostly, I should think, and also the parish of St. Mary's Church. I consider that one of the most unfair and scandalous things that a landlord can do, is to let his land to two tenants. He has two tenants and they are both interested in opposite directions to each other, as they possibly can be. A good farmer farms to the best of his ability. It costs him a great deal of money, and he expects to have some benefit by it, but if the landlord will let it again the second time, he has two tenants, and two opposite workmen, one workman looking for the employment of the farmer, and the other for the shooting tenant and breeding as much game as possible. They only care for themselves. The fact is that they will walk into the middle of your corn, or the middle of your seed, or whatever it is, whenever they like. Mrs. Gwyn found a keeper or two, before she actually mowed a field of clover, the second crop, with the dogs practising, and teaching them. I call it a scandalous thing, and it ought not to be. Whoever takes the farm ought to have the game as well, and I have not the least doubt by doing so, there would be plenty of game at all events to the landlord, but not to the outsider. Why should it be like it is now? I do not think it is fair that it should be so. If they want more money for the farm by letting the farm, let them pay for it, and have it, but I say it is unfair and dishonest for them to let their land to two tenants and two opposite workmen, fighting one another as to who can do the best for their masters. Those keepers are very much interested, of course, in whomsoever pays them, and with the workmen on the farm there is a great temptation that they after all will quarrel with one another and go fighting. I think the game laws should be done away with entirely, and that it should be left to the tenant and the landlord to settle the matter. Then I could name another estate, the estate of old Councillor Carne, of Nash Manor. He had a couple of greyhounds. He never failed to have plenty of game at all events; the tenants, for their own interests, and the pleasure of the landlords, were doing their best out of jealousness to one another, for fear one would have more game than the other for the landlord. When his brother came they put two keepers there, and in less than three years there was not a hare on the land.

Sir John Llewelyn.

25,882. Has Mrs. Gwyn made any claim for damage done by the game?—Yes, but I do not think she would make any now. She told me it was useless to do it, she knew Mr. Talbot, and I suppose Miss Talbot as well, and she knew it was no use to make it, and she did not make any claim.

25,883. The first instance, 13 years ago, was in Mr. Talbot's time?—Yes.

25,884. And Mrs. Stacey is now dead?—Yes.

25,885. And you say fresh damage has been done this year, and she has made no claim for compensation?—I cannot say. I have another instance, of Allan Bruce Pryce, Clawdd manach. The game was rented to Mr. Crawshay, and there was damage constantly, but there was no compensation. They say you can take the Ground Game Act in your hand; but what do they do? Mrs. Gwyn did this. She hired a man from Penlline, who was a Welshman, of the name of Benjamin Mady, to put traps down to try and catch the rabbits. He did so, and went there the next day, and found every trap broken to pieces. He said, "It is no use my coming "here; I cannot find the traps. They are only "breaking them"; and it was left. I passed the place often enough, and I saw the ground, and the damage which they had done.

25,886. So far as Miss Talbot is concerned, do you not think it would be a fair thing, to give her a chance of giving compensation?—I do not say anything against that. I do not believe in giving compensation for the tenant. When a man is a tenant on a farm, he ought to have the game for himself, and let it be between him and his landlord. I believe there is no tenant farmer to be found in Wales, who would not certainly do his best; he would be sharp and keep off poachers, and those people who had no right to go over his land for the pleasure of his landlord. I say, if the shooting is rented to another person, it is a disgraceful act, because if the fact that you have two tenants on the same land, two pair of workmen, and that they are working against one another in their—gelyniaeth is the Welsh word, I cannot think of the English.

25,887. It is, in their enmity or bad feeling?—Yes.

Chairman.

25,888. We understand you to say, that the Welsh farmers are glad to see the landlord, but they will not stand a shooting tenant?—Yes, that is so, and I am always glad to help them in that.

25,889. Is there any remedy that you have to propose?—I have a remedy to propose, namely, to give the tenants the right to the game entirely. I think the farmer should also have freedom of cultivation, as to cropping and sale of his crops, and what he is doing outside what he grows upon the land. I think he ought to have a free sale, instead of having an agreement under penalties. I do not say that the landlord should not protect himself by agreement from a bad tenant; I agree that he should have some clauses to prevent their robbing and ruining the land.

25,890. You advocate what is generally called free sale?—Yes, I do; I advocate as well that it ought to be a fair rent, and that there should be a good Land Bill, providing full compensation for all permanent improvements made during the last 20 years. Let it go to arbitration, according to the value at the time of leaving, if it be the case that the tenant is leaving. It would be a matter for the tenant to go to the landlord and ask him if he would do it himself, and if he would not do it himself, he should be paid for it, if he ever had to leave the farm, at what was its value at the time. I have no doubt, providing such a thing took place, there would be a great deal better farming, and they could do more with the farms than at present. Another thing I should like to recommend is fixity of tenure, with a land court cheap to appeal to, if they cannot
